'The King's Sovereign power and Prerogative is alwaies able to save it self, and if it were not, we must, without this Addition, save it to our utmost powers, if we will save our Oath, and save our selves. The true state of the cause thus standing between your Lordships and us, the House of Commons doth not a little marvel upon what grounds your Lordships are so earnest to urge upon them this addition to be inserted into their Petition, they nothing doubt, but the same proceeded out of a sollicitude and fear which your Lordships have, lest otherwise the simple and absolute passage of this petition might be construed hereafter in prejudice of his Majesties Sovereign power: And this your Lordships sollicitude and fear, proceedeth from your love, as the Poet saith,

Res est solliciti plena timoris Amor.

'But I humbly pray your Lordships to examine with us, the grounds of this your sollicitude and fear, which grounds must needs be laid either upon the words of the Petition, or the intention of the Petitioners.

'Upon the words there is no possibility to lay them, for therein is no mention made of the Sovereign power; and were the words doubtful, as thus, We pray the like things be not done hereafter, under pretext of your Majesties Sovereign power; yet in respect of the protestations preceding,

Anno 1628 ceding, concomitant and subsequent to the Petition, such doubtful words ought reasonably to be interpreted only of such Sovereign Power as was not applicable to the Cases wherein it was exercised; and of such Sovereign Power as should be justly practised: but there are no such doubtful words, and therefore it followeth, that your Lordships fear and sollicitude must be grounded upon the intention of the Petitioners. Now your Lordships well know, that the House of Commons is not ignorant, that in a Session of Parliament, though it continue so many weeks, as this hath done daies, yet there is nothing prins & posterius, but all things are held and taken as done at one time; if so, what a strange Collection was this, that at the same time the House of Commons should oblige themselves, by a fearful adjuration, to assist and defend all Priviledges and Prerogatives belonging to the King, and at the same time by a Petition (cautiously conveyed) endeavour or intend to divest and deprive the King of some Prerogatives belonging to his Crown? If therefore such fear and sollicitude can neither be grounded upon the words of the Petition, nor intention of the Petitioners, I humbly pray your Lordships to lay them aside: as we do believe that the Proposition of this Addition from your Lordships, was not only excusable, but commendable, as proceeding from your love: So now having heard our Reasons, your Lordships would rest satisfied, that our refusal to admit them into our Petition, proceedeth from the conscience of the integrity and uprightness of our own hearts, that we in all this Petition have no such end to abate or diminish the King's just Prerogative. And so much in reply to that Rational part, whereby my Lord Keeper laboured to perswade the entertainment of this Addition.

This being done, it pleased the House of Commons to instruct and furnish me with certain Reasons which I should use to your Lordships, to procure your absolute conjunction with us in presenting this Petition; which albeit I cannot set forth according to their worth, and the Instructions given me by the House; yet, I hope, their own weight will so press down into your Lordships Consciences and Judgments, that without further scruple, you will chearfully vouchsafe to accompany this Petition with your right noble presence.

A personis. The first Argument wherewith I was commanded to move your Lordships, was drawn from the consideration of the Persons which are Petitioners, the House of Commons; a House, whose temper, mildness, and moderation in this Parliament hath been such, as we should be unthankful and injurious to Almighty God, if we should not acknowledge his good hand upon our tongues, upon our hearts, procured, no doubt, by our late solemn and publick Humiliation and Prayers.

This moderation will the better appear, if, in the first place, we may be remembered, in what passion and distemper many Members of this House arrived thither, what bosoms, what pockets full of complaints and lamentable grievances the most part brought thither, and those every day renewed by Letters and Packets from all parts and quarters: You know the old Proverb, Ubi dolor ibi digitus, ubi amor ibi oculus; it is hard to keep our fingers from often handling the parts ill affected; but yet our Moderation overcame our Passion, our Discretion overcame our Affection.

This Moderation also will the better appear, if in the second place it be not forgotten, how our Ancestors and Predecessors carried themselves in Parliaments, when upon lighter provocations, less would not serve their turns, but new severe Commissions to hear & determine offences against their Liberties, publick Ecclesiastical Curses, or Excommunications against the Authors or Actors of such violations, accusations, condemnations, executions, banishments. But what have we said all this Parliament? we only look forward, not backward: we desire amendment hereafter, no man's punishment for ought done heretofore; nothing written by us in blood, nay, not one word spoken against any man's person in displeasure. The conclusion of our Petition is, that we may be better intreated in time to come: And doth not this moderate Petition deserve your Lordships chearful conjunction, ex congruo & condigno? If a Worm being trodden upon, could speak, a Worm would say, Tread upon me no more, I pray you: Higher we rise not, lower we cannot descend; and thus much we think in modesty may well be spoken in our own commendation, thence to move your Lordships to vouchsafe us your noble company in this Petition, without surcharging it with this Addition.

A tempore. Our next Argument is drawn à tempore, from the unseasonableness of the time. The Wise man saith, There is a time for all things under the Sun. Tempus suum; and if, in the wise man's judgment, a word spoken in its due time be precious as Gold and Silver, then an unseasonable time detracts as much from the thing or word, done or spoken: We hold (under your favours) that the time is not seasonable now for this Addition; it is true, that of it self, Sovereign power is a thing alwaies so Sacred, that to handle it otherwise than tenderly, is a kind of Sacrilege, and to speak of it otherwise than reverently, is a kind of Blasphemy; but every vulgar capacity is not so affected, the most part of men; nay, almost all men, judge and esteem all things, not according to their own intrinsic vertue and quality, but according to their immediate effects and operations, which the same things have upon them: Hence it is, that Religion it self receiveth more or less credit or approbation, as the Teachers or Professors are worse or better; yea, if God himself send a very wet Harvest or Seed-time, men are apt enough to censure Divine Power: The Sovereign power hath not now, for the present, the antient amiable aspect in respect of some late sad influences, but by God's Grace it will soon recover.

To intermix with this Petition any mention of Sovereign power, rebus sic stantibus, when angry men say, Sovereign power hath been abused, and the most moderate wish it had not been so used, we hold it not seasonable, under your Lordships correction.

A loco. Our next Argument is drawn à loco: we think the place where your Lordships would have this Addition inserted (viz.) in the Petition, no convenient or seasonable place; your Lordships will easily believe, that this Petition will run through many hands, every man will be desirous to see and to read, what their Knights and their Burgeses have done in Parliament upon their complaints, what they have brought home

1628. home for their five Subsidies; If, in perusing of this Petition, they fall upon the mention of Sovereign power, they presently fall to arguing and reasoning, and descanting, what Sovereign power is, what is the Latitude, whence the Original, and where the Bounds? with many such curious and captious questions; by which course, Sovereign power is little advanced or advantaged; for I have ever been of opinion, that it is then best with Sovereign power, when it is had in reverence, not when it is profaned by publick hearings or examinations.

Our last Argument is drawn from our Duty and Loyalty to his Majesty, in consideration whereof, we are fearful at this time to take this Addition into our Petition, lest we should do his Majesty herein some disservice: with your Lordships we make the great Council of the King and Kingdom; and though your Lordships, having the happiness to be near his Majesty, know other things better, yet certainly the state and condition of the several parts for which we serve, their dispositions and inclinations, their apprehensions, their fears and jealousies, are best known unto us: and here I pray your Lordships to give me leave to use the Figure called Retentia, that is, to insinuate and intimate more than I mean to speak: Our chief and principal end in this Parliament is, to make up all Rents and Breaches between the King and his Subjects, to draw them, and knit them together, from that distance, whereof the World abroad takes too much notice, to work a perfect union and reconciliation: how improperly and unapt at this time this Addition will be in respect of this end, we cannot but foresee, and therefore shun it, and do resolve, that it is neither agreeable to the persons of such Counsellors, of whom we are, nor answerable to that Loye and Duty which we owe to his Majesty, to hazard an end of such unspeakable consequence, upon the admittance of this Addition into our Petition, whereof (as we have shewed) the omission at this time can by no means harm the King's Prerogative, the expression may produce manifold inconveniences: and therefore since the admittance of your Lordships Addition into our Petition, is incoherent and incompatible with the body of the same; since there is no necessary use of it for the saving of the King's Prerogative; since the moderation of our Petition deserveth your Lordships cheerful conjunction with us; since this Addition is unreasonable for the time, and inconvenient in respect of the place where your Lordships would have it inserted; and lastly, may prove a disservice to his Majesty: I conclude with a most affectionate prayer to your Lordships, to conclude with the House of Commons, in presenting this Petition to his Sacred Majesty, as it is, without this Addition.

Monday 26. of May, the Lord Keeper at a Conference of both Houses said as followeth:

Gentlemen,

The Lords and Commons agree touching the Petition of Right.

YE that are Knights, Citizens, and Burgessees of the House of Commons, I have many times this Parliament by command from my Lords, declared the great zeal and affection which my Lords have to maintain and nourish the good concurrence and correspondency which hath hitherto continued between both Houses, that there might be a happy issue in this great business, for the common good of the King and Kingdom. Now that which I have to say this day from my Lords, is, to let you know, this fair proceeding is not a profession of words only, but really and indeed concerning the Petition, which hath been long in agitation, as the weight of the cause required: since the last Conference, my Lords have taken it into their serious and instant consideration, and at length are fallen upon a Resolution, which I am to acquaint you with.

The Lords have unanimously agreed with you in omnibus, and have voted, that they will joyn with you in your Petition, with the only alteration of the word [means] to be put instead of the word [pretext] and for the word [unlawful] to be put out, and in place thereof to add [not warrantable by the Laws and Statutes of the Realm.] Which two alterations your selves consented unto.

So that concerning this business there remains nothing now, but that having the Petition in your hands, ye will (if ye have not already) vote it as they have done, and so prepare it for his Majesty; and my Lords will take order, that the King be moved for a speedy access to present the same to his Majesty.

And, after some pause, he said, 'There rests one thing which my Lords have commanded me to add, that in regard this Petition toucheth upon certain Charges raised by the Lords Lieutenants, and other Persons, many times for good use, for the service and safety of the Kingdom; That ye take it into your care and consideration, and to provide a Law for Assessing of such Charges, as the occasion of the time shall require.'

The Lords and Commons at last agreed, and the Petition was passed in the Lower-House, and a Conference had with the Lords about the manner of delivery, wherein his Majesties answer thereto was desired in full Parliament.

About this time Mr. Rouse brought in a Charge against Dr. Edward Manwaring, which some daies after was seconded with a Declaration; this Charge is here fully set down (not in the least to justify Dr. Manwaring) but to give you a taste of the Speakers temper, a notorious Member of the late Rump Parliament.

Mr. Speaker,

I Am to deliver from the Committee a Charge against Mr. Manwaring, a Preacher in Divinity; but against Dr. a man so criminous, that he hath turned his Tules into Accusation; for the better they are, the worse is he that dishonours them.

Here is a great Charge that lies upon him, it is great in it self, and great, because it hath many great Charges in it; Serpens qui serpentem devorat fit draco, his Charge having digested many Charges into it, becomes a Monster of Charges.

The main and great one in this Plot and Practise, to alter and subvert the Frame and Fabrick of this Estate and Common-wealth.

This is the great one, and it hath others in it that give it more light. To this end,

1. He labours to infuse into the Conscience of his Majesty, the persuasion of a Power not bounding it self with Laws, which King James of famous memory, calls, in his Speech to the Parliament, Tyranny, yea, Anno Tyranny accompanied with Perjury.

Car. 4.

2. He endeavours to perswade the Conscience of the Subjects, that they are bound to obey Commands illegal; yea, he damns them for not obeying them.

3. He robs the Subjects of the Propriety of their Goods.

4. He brands them that will not lose this Propriety with most scandalous Speech, and odious Titles, to make them both hateful to Prince and People; so to set a division between the Head and the Members, and between the Members themselves.

5. To the same end, not much unlike to Faux and his Fellows, he seeks to blow up Parliaments, and Parliamentary Powers.

'The Fifth being duly viewed, will appear to be so many Charges, and they make up all the great and main Charge, a mischievous Plot to alter and subvert the Frame and Government of this State and Common-wealth.

'And now, though you may be sure, that Mr. Manwaring leaves us no propriety in our goods, yet he hath an absolute propriety in this Charge; here himself making up his own Charge. Here he read several passages out of his Book, and then proceeded and said; 'You have heard his Charge made up by his own words, and withal I doubt not but you seem to hear the voice of that wicked one [Quid dabitur?] what will you give me, and I will betray this State, Kingdom, and Common-wealth?

'But there are two Observations (I might add a third, which is like unto a three-fold Cord, which cannot easily be broken) will draw the Charge more violently upon him.

'The first is of the Time when this Doctrine of destruction was set forth; it was preached in the heart of the Loan, and it was Printed in the beginning of that Term which ended in a Remission: So that you might guess there might be a double Plot, by the Law and Conscience, to set on fire the frame and estate of this Common-wealth: And one of these entailed Foxes was Mr. Manwaring.

'Another note may be taken of the time, that is, the unseasonableness of it; for this Doctrine of the Loan (in case of necessity) was the year after an assent in Parliament to Four Subsidies and Three Fifteens, which might serve for a sufficient stopple for the Doctors mouth, to keep in his Doctrine of Necessity.

'A second observation may be of the means by which he seeks to destroy this Common-wealth; his means are Divinity, yea, by his Divinity he would destroy both King and Kingdom.

'The King: for there can be no greater mischief to a Prince, than to put the opinion of Deity into his ears; for if from his ears it should have passed to his heart, it had been mortal: You know how Herod perished. Now this man gives a participation of Divine Omnipotence to Kings; and though a part may seem to qualify, yet all doth seem again to fill up that qualification, and very dangerously, if we remember that God saith of himself, I am a jealous God.

'He goes about to destroy the Kingdom and Common-wealth by his Divinity; but do we find in Scripture such a destroying Divinity? Surely I find there, that God is a God of order, and not of confusion: and that the Son of God came to save, and not to destroy. By which it seems he hath not his Divinity from God, nor from the Son of God: And that we may be sure he went to Hell for Divinity, he names sundry Jesuites and Fryars, with whom he consulted and traded for his Divinity. But not to bely Hell it self, the Jesuites are honestier than he: for if he had not brought more Hell unto them than he found with them, he had not found this Divinity in them which he hath brought forth; yea, in his quotations he hath used those shifts and fallhoods, for which Boys are to be whipt in Schools, and yet by them he thinks to carry the Cause of a Kingdom.

'But, for a conclusion, to give the true Character of this man, whom I never saw, I will shew it you by one whom I know to be contrary to him: Samuel we know all to be a true Prophet; now we read of Samuel, that he writ the Law of the Kingdom in a Book, and laid it up before the Lord. And this he did, as one of Mr. Manwaring's own Authors affirms, that the King may know what to command, and the People what to obey; but Mr. Manwaring, finding the Law of this Kingdom written in Books, tears it in pieces, and that in the presence of the Lord in a Pulpit, that the King may not know what to command, nor the People what to obey.

'Thus Mr. Manwaring being contrary to a true Prophet, must needs be a false one, and the Judgment of a false Prophet belongs to him.

'I have shewed you an evil Tree, that bringeth forth evil fruit; and now it rests with you to determine, whether the following Sentence shall follow, Cut it down, and cast it into the fire.

Monday 2. June, at the passing the Petition of Right, the King came to the Parliament, and spake thus in brief to both Houses.

Gentlemen,

'I Am come hither to perform my duty, I think no man can think it long, since I have not taken so many daies in answering the Petition, as ye spent weeks in framing it: And I am come hither to shew you, that as well in formal things as in essential, I desire to give you as much content as in me lies.

After this, the Lord Keeper spake as followeth.

'MY Lords, and ye the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of the House of Commons, his Majesty hath commanded me to say unto you, That he takes it in good part, that in consideration of settling your own Liberties, ye have generally professed in both Houses, that ye have no intention to lessen or diminish his Majesties Prerogative; wherein as ye have cleared your own intentions, so now his Majesty comes to clear his, and to subscribe a firm League with his People, which is ever likely to be most constant and perpetual, when the Conditions are equal, and known to be so: These cannot be in a more happy estate, than when your Liberties shall be an ornament and a strength to his Majesties Prerogative, and his Prerogative a defence of your Liberties; in which his Majesty doubts not, but both he and you shall take a mutual comfort hereafter; and, for his part, he is resolved resolved to give an example, in the using of his power for the preservation of your Liberties, that hereafter ye shall have no cause to complain. This is the sum of that which I am to say to you from his Majesty: And that which farther remains, is, That you hear read your own Petition, and his Majesties gracious Answer.

The Petition exhibited to his Majesty by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, concerning divers Rights and Liberties of the Subjects, with the King's Majesties Royal Answer thereunto in full Parliament.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.

Humbly shew unto our Sovereign Lord the King, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament Assembled, That whereas it is Declared and Enacted by a Statute made in the time of the Reign of King Edward the First, commonly called, Statutum de Tallagio non concedendo, That no Tallage or Aid shall be laid or levied, by the King or his Heirs, in this Realm, without the good will and assent of the Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, Barons, Knights, Burgesses, and other the Framen of the Commonalty of this Realm: And by Authority of Parliament holden in the Fife and twentieth year of the Reign of King Edward the Third, it is Declared and Enacted, That from thenceforth no person shall be compelled to make any Loans to the King against his will, because such Loans were against Reason, and the Franchise of the Land; and by other Laws of this Realm it is provided, That none should be charged by any Charge or Imposition, called a Benevolence, nor by such like Charge, by which the Statutes before-mentioned, and other the good Laws and Statutes of this Realm, your Subjects have inherited this freedom, That they should not be compelled to contribute to any Tax, Tallage, Aid, or other like Charge, not set by common consent in Parliament.

Yet nevertheless, of late, divers Commissions, directed to sundry Commissioners in several Counties, with instructions, have issued, by means whereof, your people have ben in divers places assembled, and required to lend certain sums of money unto your Majesty, and many of them, upon their refusal so to do, have had an Oath administered unto them, not warrantable by the Laws or Statutes of this Realm, and have ben constrained to become bound to make appearance, and give attendance before your Privy Council, and in other places, and others of them have ben therfore imprisoned, confined, and sundry other waies molested and disquieted: And divers other Charges have ben laid and levied upon your people in several Counties, by Lords Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Commissioners for Musters, Justices of Peace, and others, by command and direction from your Majesty, or your Privy Council, against the Laws and free Customs of this Realm.

And where also by the Statute called, The great Charter of the Liberties of England, it is Declared and Enacted, That no Freeman may be taken or imprisoned, or be disseised of his Freehold or Liberties, or his free Customs, or be Out-lawed or Exiled, or in any manner destroyed, but by the lawful Judgment of his Peers, or by the Law of the Land.

And in the eight and twentieth year of the Reign of King Edward the Third, it was Declared and Enacted by Authority of Parliament, That no man, of what estate or condition that he be, should be put out of his Lands or Tenements, nor taken, nor imprisoned, nor disseised, nor put to death, without being brought to answer by due process of Law.

Nevertheless, against the tenor of the said Statutes, and other the good Laws and Statutes of your Realm, to that end provided, divers of your Subjects have of late ben imprisoned, without any cause shewed; and when for their deliverance they were brought before your Justices, by your Majesties Writs of Habeas Corpus, there to undergo and receive as the Court should order, and their Keepers commanded to certify the causes of their detainer; no cause was certified, but that they were detained by your Majesties Special Command, signified by the Lords of your Privy Council, and yet were returned back to several Prisons, without being charged with any thing to which they might make answer according to the Law.

And whereas of late great Companies of Souldiers and Harriners have been dispersed into divers Counties of the Realm, and the Inhabitants against their wills have been compelled to receive them into their Houses, and there to suffer them to sojourn, against the Laws and Customs of this Realm, and to the great grievance and vexation of the people.

And whereas also by Authority of Parliament, in the 24th year of the Reign of King Edward the Third, it is Declared and Enacted, That no man shall be fore-judged of life or limb against the form of the great Charter, and the Law of the Land; and by the said great Charter, and other the Laws and Statutes of this your Realm, no man ought to be adjudged to death, but by the Laws established in this your Realm, either by the Customs of the same Realm, or by Acts of Parliament: And whereas no offender of what kind soever, is exempted from the proceedings to be used, and punishments to be inflicted by the Laws and Statutes of this your Realm; Nevertheless of late, divers Commissions under your Majesties Great Seal have issued forth, by which, certain persons have been assigned and appointed Commissioners with Power and Authority to proceed within the Land, according to the Justice of Martial Law against such Souldiers and Harriners, or other dissolute persons joining with them, as should commit any Murder, Robbery, Felony, Mutiny, or other Out-rage or Misdemeanor whatsoever; and by such summary Course and Order, as is agreeable to Martial Law, and is used in Armies in time of War, to proceed to the trial and condemnation of such offenders, and them to cause to be executed and put to death, according to the Law Martial.

Anno 1628. By pretext whereof, some of your Majesties Subjects have been by some of the said Commissioners put to death, when and where, if by the Laws and Statutes of the Land they had deserved death, by the same Laws and Statutes also they might, and by no other ought to have been, adjudged and executed.

And also sundry grievous offenders by colour thereof, claiming an exemption, have escaped the punishments due to them by the Laws and Statutes of this your Realm, by reason that divers of your Officers and Ministers of Justice have unjustly refused, or forbore to proceed against such offenders according to the same Laws and Statutes, upon pretence, that the said offenders were punishable only by Martial Law, and by Authority of such Commissions as aforesaid; which Commissions, and all others of like nature, are wholly and directly contrary to the said Laws and Statutes of this your Realm.

The Petition.

They do therefore humbly pray your most excellent Majesty, That no man hereafter be compelled to make or yield any Gift, Loan, Benevolence, Tax, or such like charge, without common consent by Act of Parliament; and that none be called to make answer, or take such Oath, or to give attendance, or be confined, or otherwise molested or disquieted concerning the same, or for refusal thereof: And that no Freeman, in any such manner as is before-mentioned, be imprisoned or detained: And that your Majesty will be pleased to remove the said Soldiers and Barriners, and that your People may not be so burdened in time to come: And that the foresaid Commissions for proceeding by Martial Law, may be revoked and annulled; And that hereafter no Commissions of like nature may issue forth to any person or persons whatsoever, to be executed as aforesaid, lest by colour of them, any of your Majesties Subjects be destroyed or put to death, contrary to the Laws and Franchise of the Land.

All which they most humbly pray of your most excellent Majesty, as their Rights and Liberties, according to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm: And that your Majesty would also vouchsafe to declare, That the awards, doings, and proceedings, to the prejudice of your People, in any of the premises, shall not be drawn hereafter into consequence or example: And that your Majesty would be also graciously pleased, for the farther comfort and safety of your People, to declare your Royal will and pleasure, That in the things aforesaid, all your Officers and Ministers shall serve you, according to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, as they tender the Honour of your Majesty, and the Prosperity of this Kingdom.

Which Petition being read the 2 of June, 1628. the King's Answer was thus delivered unto it.

The King willeth, that Right be done according to the Laws and Customs of the Realm; and that the Statutes be put in due execution, that his Subjects may have no cause to complain of any wrong or oppressions, contrary to their just Rights and Liberties, to the preservation whereof, he holds himself in conscience as well obliged, as of his Prerogative.

The King's Answer how full soever (as we shall afterward find) satisfied not the Commons; before therefore we come to entreat any further concerning the Petition, I think it may be very material to give our Reader a more perfect account of Mr. Littleton's Argument at the free Conference of both Houses than is yet extant, together with the Objections made by the Attorney General on the Kings part to the Commons Arguments made at that Conference; and also the Answers and Replies of the Commons thereto.

The Argument made by Command of the House of Commons out of the Acts of Parliament and Authorities of Law, expounding the same at the first Conference with the Lords concerning the Liberty of the Person of every Freeman.

My Lords,

UPON the Occasions delivered by the Gentlemen, your Lordships have heard the Commons have taken into their serious consideration the matter of personal Liberty; and after long Debate thereof on divers days, as well by solemn Arguments as single Propositions of Doubts and Answers; To the end no scruple might remain in any man's breast unsatisfied, they have upon a full search and clear understanding of all things pertinent to the Question, unanimously declared, That no Freeman ought to be committed or detained in Prison, or otherwise restrained by the Command of the King or the Privy Council, or any other, unless some cause of the Commitment, Detainer, or Restraint be expressed, for which by Law he ought to be committed, detained, or restrained. And they have sent me with others of their Members, to represent unto your Lordships the true grounds of such their Resolutions, and have charged me particularly (leaving the Reasons of Law and Presidents for others) to give your Lordships satisfaction that this Liberty is established and confirmed by the whole State, the King, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons, by several Acts of Parliament, the Authority whereof is so great, that it can receive no Answer save by Interpretation or Repeal by future Statutes. And those that I shall mind your Lordships of, are so direct to the point, that they can bear no other Exposition at all, and sure I am, they are still in force. The first of them is, the grand Charter of the Liberties of England, first granted in the Seventeenth year of King John, and renewed in the Nineteenth year of Henry the Third, and since confirmed in Parliament above thirty times: the words are these, cap. 29. Nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur, aut disseisetur de libera tenimento suo, vel libertatibus, vel liberis consuetudinibus suis, aut utlagetur aut exulet, aut aliquo modo destruetur, nec super eum ibimus, nec super eum missemus, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum, vel per legem terra. These words, Nullus liber homo, &c. are expressed enough, yet it is remarkable that Matthew Paris, an Author of special credit, doth observe fol. 432. that the Charter of 19 H. 3. was the very same as that of the Seventeenth of King John, in multis dissimilis, are his words; and that of King John be-

Anno 1628. setteth down verbatim, fol. 343. and there the words are directly, nec enim in Carcerem mittimus, and such a corruption as is now in the present, might easily happen betwixt the 9 H. 3. and 21 E. 1. when this Charter was first exemplified. But certainly there is sufficient in that which is extant, to decide this Question: for the words are, That no Freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, but by the lawful Judgment of his Peers; which is, by a Jury of Peers, for Peers; ordinary Jurors for others, who are their Peers: or by the Law of the Land must of necessity be understood, in this notion, to be by due Process of Law, and not the Law of the Land generally; or otherwise it would comprehend Bondmen (whom we call Villains) who are excluded by the word (liber) for the general Law of the Land doth allow their Lords to imprison them at their pleasure, without cause, wherein they only differ from the Freeman in respect of their persons, who cannot be imprisoned without a Cause. And that this is the true understanding of the words, per Legem terra, will more plainly appear by divers other Statutes that I shall use, which do expound the same accordingly. And though the words in this grand Charter be spoken in the third person, yet they are not to be understood betwixt party and party, at least not of them alone, but even of the King's Suits against his Subjects, as well appears by the occasion of getting that Charter, which was by reason of the differences betwixt those Kings and their People, and therefore properly to be applied to their power over them, and not to ordinary questions betwixt Subject and Subject. Secondly, the words per legale iudicium parium suorum, immediately preceeding the other of per legem terra, are meant of Trials at the King's Suit, and not at the prosecution of a Subject. And therefore if a Peer of the Realm be Arreigned at the Suit of the King, upon an Indictment of Murther, he shall be tried by his Peers, that is, his Nobles; but if he be appealed of Murther by a Subject, his Trial shall be by an ordinary Jury of Twelve Freeholders, as appears in 10 E. 4. 6. 33 H. 6. Brooke title Trials, 142. Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, lib. 3. cap. fol. 152. And in 10 E. 4. it is said such is the meaning of Magna Charta. By the same reason therefore as Parium suorum extends to the King's Suit, so shall these words per Legem terra. And in 8 E. 2. Parliament, membr. 7. there is a Petition, That a Writ under the Privy Seal went to the Guardians of the Great Seal, to cause Lands to be seized into the King's hands, by force of which there went a Writ out of the Chancery to the Escheator to seize against the form of the great Charter, That the King nor his Minister shall out any man out of his Freehold, without reasonable Judgment; and the party was restored to his Land: which sheweth the Statute did extend to the King. There was no invasion upon this personal liberty until the time of King Edward the Third, which was afterwards revented by the Subject; for in 5 E. 3. cap. 9. it is ordained in these words, It is enacted that no man from thenceforth shall be attached by any Accusation, nor foringed of Life or Limb, or his Lands, Tenements, Goods, nor Chattels seized into the King's hands against the form of the great Charter and the Law of the Land. 25 E. 3. cap. 4. is more full, and doth expound the words of the grand Charter; which is thus.

Whereas it is contained in the Grand Charter of the Franchises of England, that none shall be imprisoned or put out of his Freehold, nor of his Franchise or Free custom; unless it be by the Law of the Land it is awarded, assented, established, that from henceforth none shall be taken by Petition or Suggestion made to our Lord the King, or to his Council, unless it be by Indictment or Presentment of his good and lawful people of the same Neighbourhood; where such Deeds be done in due manner, or by Process made by Writ Original at the Common Law; nor that none be outed of his Franchises, nor of his Freeholds, unless he be duly brought in answer and foringed of the same, by the course of the Law; and if any thing be done against the form of the same, it shall be redressed and holden for none.

Out of this Statute I observe, that what in Magna Charta; and the Preamble of this Statute, is termed the Law of the Land, is in the Body of this Act expounded to be by Process made by Writ Original, at the Common Law, which is a plain interpretation of the words, Law of the Land, in the Grand Charter. And I note, that this Law was made upon the Commitment of divers to the Tower, no man yet knoweth for what.

28 Edw. 3. ca. 3. is yet more direct; this liberty being followed with fresh suit by the Subject, where the words are not many, but very full and significant. That no man of what Condition or Estate that he be, shall be put out of his Lands or Tenements, nor taken or imprisoned; nor disinherited, nor done to death, without he be brought in answer by due Process of Law.

Here your Lordships see the usual words of the Law of the Land, are rendred by due Process of the Law.

36 E. 3. Roll¹ pl¹ no. 9. amongst the Petitions of the Commons, one of them being translated out of French into English, is thus, First, that the great Charter, and the Charter of the Forest, and the other Statutes made in his time, and in the time of his Progenitors, for the profit of him, and his Commonalty, be well and firmly kept, and put in due execution, without putting disturbance, or making arrest contrary to them, by special Command, or in any other manner.

The Answer to the Petition, which makes it an Act of Parliament, is,

Our Lord the King, by assent of the Prelates, Bishops, Earls, Barons, and the Commonalty, hath ordained and established that the Statutes and Charters be held, and put in execution according to the said Petition.

It is observable, that the Statutes were to be put in execution according to the said Petition; which is, that no Arrests should be made contrary to the said Statutes, not by special Command: this concludes as much, as if it were printed; for the Parliament Roll is the true Warrant of an Act; and many are omitted out of the Books which are extant.

36 Ed. 3. Roll¹ Parl¹ no. 12. explaineth it further; for there the Petition is, Item as it is contained in the Grand Charter, and other Statutes, that no person be taken or imprisoned by special Command without Indictment, or other Process made by the Law upon them, as well of things done out of the Forest of the King, as for other things; That it would please our Lord to command those to be delivered that are so taken against the form of the Charters and Statutes as fore said.

The Answer is,

The King is well pleased, that if any man find himself grieved, he come and make his complaint, and right shall be done unto him.

37 E. 3. chap. 18. agreeth in substance, when it saith, Though, that it be contained in the Great Charter, that no man be taken nor imprisoned, nor put out of his Freehold, without Process of the Law; Nevertheless divers people make false suggestions to the King himself, as well for malice as otherwise, whereof the King is often grieved, and divers of the Realm put in damage, against the form of the same Charter, wherefore it is ordained, That all they that make suggestion, shall be sent with the same suggestion before the Chancellor, Treasurer, and his Grand Council: And that they there find Sureties to pursue their suggestions, and incur the same pain that the other should have had, in case that the suggestion be found evil; and that then Process of the Law be made against them without being taken and imprisoned against the form of the said Charter, and other Statutes. Here the Law of the Land in the Grand Charter, is explained to be without Process of the Law.

42 E. 3. cap. 3. at the Request of the Commons by their Petition, put forth in this Parliament divers of the Commons, by false Accusers, which oftentimes have made their Accusations more for revenge and singular profit, than for the profit of the King, or of his people; which accused persons some have been taken, and caused to come before the King's Council, by Writ and otherwise, upon grievous pains against the Law. It is assented to, and accorded for the good Government of the Commons, that no man be put to answer without Presentment before Justices, or matter of Record, or by due Process or Writ Original, according to the old Law of the Land. And if anything from henceforth be done to the contrary, it shall be void in the Law, and holden for Error.

But this is better in the Parliament Roll, where the Petition and Answer, which make the Act, are set down at large. 42 E. 3. Roll^d Parl^o no. 12.

The Petition.

Item, Because that many of your Commons are hurt and destroyed by false Accusers, who make their Accusations, more for revenge and particular gain, than for the profit of the King or his People; and those that are accused by them, some have been taken, and others are made to come before the King's Council, by Writ or other Commandment of the King, upon grievous pains, contrary to the Law, That it would please the Lord our King, and his good Council, for the just government, to ordain, That if hereafter any Accuser purpose any matter for the profit of the King, that the same matter be sent to the Justices of the one Bench or the other, or the Assizes, to be enquired and determined according to the Law. And if it concern the Accuser or Party, that he take his Suit at the Common Law, and that no man be put to Answer without Presentment before Justices, or matter of Record, and by due Writ, according to the ancient Law of the Land. And if anything henceforward be done to the contrary, that it be void in Law, and held for Error.

Here by due Process and Original Writ, according to the ancient Law of the Land, is meant the same thing as per Legem terræ in Magna Charta. And the like abuse was, that they were put to answer to the Commandment of the King.

The Kings Answer is thus:

Because that this Article is an Article of the Grand Charter, the King wills that this be done, as the Petition doth Demand.

By this appeareth, that per Legem terræ in Magna Charta, is meant by due Process of the Law.

Thus your Lordships have heard Acts of Parliament in the point, but the Statute of Westminster, cap. 15. is urged to disprove this Opinion, where it is expressly said, That a man is not repleviable, who is committed by the command of the King. Therefore the Command of the King, without any Cause shewed, is sufficient to commit a man to Prison. And because the strength of the Argument may appear, and the Answer be better understood, I shall read the words of the Statute, which are thus;

And forasmuch as Sheriffs and others, which have taken and kept in Prison persons detested for Felony, and oftentimes have left out by Replevin such as were not repleviable, and kept in Prison such as were repleviable, because they would gain by the one, and grieve the other: And forasmuch as before this time, it was not certainly determined what persons were repleviable, and what not, but only those that were taken for the death of a man, or by the commandment of the King, or of his Justices, or for the Forest, it is provided, and by the King commanded, That such persons as were before outlawed, and they which have abjured the Realm, Provers and such as be taken with the Manner; and those which have broken the King's Prison, Thieves openly defamed and known, and such as be appealed by Provers, so long as the Provers be living, if they be not of good name; and such as be taken for burning of Houses, feloniously done; or for false Money, or for counterfeiting the King's Seal; or persons excommunicate taken at the request of the Bishop, or for manifest Offences, or for Treason, or for Treason touching the King himself, shall be in no wise repleviable, by the Common Writ, or without Writ, but such as be Indicted of Larcenie, by Inquests taken before Sheriffs or Bailiffs by their Office, or of light suspicion, or for petty Larcenie, that amounteth not above the value of Twelve pence, if they were not guilty of some Larcenie beforetime, or guilty of receipt of Felons, or of Commandment, or of Force, or of Aid in Felony done, or guilty of some other Trespass, for which one ought to lose life or member, and a man appealed by a Prover, after the death of the Prover, if he be no common Thief nor defamed, shall from henceforth be let out by sufficient Surety, whereof the Sheriff will be answerable, and that without giving any of their Goods; and if the Sheriff, or any other, let any go at large by Surety that is not repleviable, if he be Sheriff or Constable, or any other Bailiff, or such as have Fee, which hath keeping of Prisons, and thereof be attained, he shall lose his Office and Fee for ever.

And if the Under-Sheriff, Constable or Bailiff, or such as have Fee for keeping of Prisons, do it contrary to the will of his Lord, or any other Bailiff being not of Fee, they shall have three years Imprisonment, and make a Fine at the King's pleasure. And if any withheld Prisoners repleviable, after they have offered sufficient Surety, he shall pay a grievous Amercement to the King; and if he take any Reward for the deliv-

ance of such, he shall pay double to the Prisoner, and also shall be in the great mercy of the King.

The Answer.

IT must be acknowledged, that a man taken by the Command of the King, is not repleviable, for so are the express words of this Statute. But this maketh nothing against the Declaration of the House of Commons: for they say not, That the Sheriff may reprieve such a man (scilicet Mancaptors) but that he isailable by the King's Courts of Justice; for the better apprehending whereof it is to be known, that there is a difference betwixt Repleviable, which is alwaies by the Sheriff, upon Pledges or Sureties given, andailable, which is by a Court of Record, where the Prisoner is delivered to his Bail, and they are his Gaolers and may imprison him, and shall suffer for him, Body for Body, as appeareth 33 and 36 Edw. 3. in the Title of Mainprise, placita 12, 13. where the difference between Bail and Mainprise is expressly taken. And if the words of the Statutes themselves be observed, it will appear plainly, that it extends to the Sheriff, and other inferiour Officers, and doth not bind the hands of the Judges. The Preamble, which is the Key that openeth the entrance into the meaning of the makers of the Law, is, [Forasmuch as Sheriffs, and others, which have taken and kept in Prisons, persons detected of Felony.] Out of these words, I observe that it nominateth Sheriffs. And then if the Judges should be included, it must be under the word (other) which doth not use to extend to those of a higher rank, but to inferiours; for the best, by all course is first to be named; and therefore, if a man bring a Writ of Customs and Services, and name Rents, and other things, the general shall not include Homage, which is a personal Service, and of an higher nature. But it shall extend to ordinary annual Services, 31 E. 1. droit 67. see the Statute of Eliz. 13. cap. 10. which beginneth with Colledges, Deans and Chapters, Parsons, Vicars, and concludes with these words, and others, having Spiritual Promotions shall not comprehend Bishops that are of an higher degree. As appears in the Arch-bishop of Canterbury's Case reported by Sir Edward Cook, lib. 2. fol. 46. B. and thus much is explained in this very Statute, towards the end, when he doth enumerate those who were meant by the word other, namely, Under-Sheriffs, Constables, Bailiffs. Again, the words are [Sheriffs, and others, which have taken and kept in Prison.] Now every man knoweth Judges do neither Arrest, or keep men in Prison, That is the Office of Sheriffs, and other inferiour Ministers: Therefore this Statute meant such only and not Judges. The words are further, That they let out by Replevin, such as were not Repleviable. This is the proper language for a Sheriff; nay, more express in the Body of the Statute afterwards, that such as is there mentioned, shall be in no wise repleviable by the common Writ (which is the Honorem replegiando) and is directed to the Sheriff, nor without Writ which is by the Sheriff Ex Officio: but that which receives no answer is this, that the Command of Justices, who derive their Authority from the Crown, is there equalled, as to this purpose with the Command of their King, and therefore by all reasonable Construction, it must relate to Officers that be subordinate to both, as Sheriffs, Under-Sheriffs, Constables, Bailiffs, and the like; and it were an harsh exposition to say, That the Justices might not discharge their own Command, and yet that reason would conclude as much, that this was meant of the Sheriffs, and other Ministers of Justice; by the recital, 27 E. 1. Cap. 3. And likewise by Fleta, a Manuscript so called, because he lay in the Fleet when he made the Book, for he lib. 2. Cap. 52. in his Chapter of Terms, and the Views of the Hundred Courts in the Country, setteth down the Articles of the Charges that are there to be enquired of; amongst which, one of them is De Replegiabilibus injuste detentis, & irreplegiabilibus dimissis. which cannot be meant of not Bailing by the Justices, for what have the inferiour Courts of the Country, to do with the Acts of the Justices? and to make that more plain, he setteth down in this Chapter that concerns Sheriffs only, the very Statute of Westminster, Cap. 15. which he translates verbatim out of the French into Latin, saving, that he renders [taken by the Command of the Justices,] Per Judicium Justiciariorum. And his Preface to the Statute plainly sheweth that he understood it of Replevine by Sheriffs, for he saith, Qui debet per plegios dimitti qui non declarat hoc Statutum. And per plegios is before the Sheriff: But for direct Authority, it is the Opinion of Newton, the Chief Justice in 22 H. 6. 46. where his words are these, It cannot be intended that the Sheriff did suffer him to go at large, by Mainprise, for where one is taken by the Writ of the King, or the Commandment of the King, he is irrepleviable, but in such Cases his Friends may come to the Justices for him, if he be Arrested and purchase a Superfedeas. This Judge concludes, that the Sheriff cannot deliver him, that is taken by the Command of the King, for that he is irrepleviable, which is the very word of the Statute. But (saith he) his Friends may come to the Justices and purchase a Superfedeas; so he declares the very Question, that the Sheriff had no power, but that the Justices had power to deliver him that is Committed by the King's Command. And both the antient and modern practise manifests as much, for he that is taken for the Death of a man, or for the Forest, is not Repleviable by the Sheriff, yet they are ordinarily Bailed by the Justices, and were by the King's Writs directed to the Sheriff in the times of Edward the First, and Edward the Second, as appears in the close Rolls, which could not be done if they were notailable, and it is every daies experience, that the Justices of the King's Bench do Bail for Murder, and for offences done in the Forest, which they could not do if they were Irrepleviable. In Westminster the 1. were meant as well of the Justices, as the Sheriff, for the Authorities that have been offered to prove the contrary, are in number Three; the First is, 21 E. 1. Roi 2. in suo, which also is in the Book of Pleas in Parliament at the Tower, fol. 44. It is not an Act of Parliament, but a Resolution in Parliament, upon an Action there brought, which was usual in those times: and the Case is, That Stephen Rabar, the Sheriff of the Counties of Leicester and Warwick, was questioned, for that he had let at large by Sureties, amongst others, one William, the Son of Walter le Parsons, against the Command of the King, whenas the King had Commanded him by Letters under the Privy-Seal, that he should do no favour to any man that was Committed by Command of the Earl of War, as that man was: whereunto the Sheriff answered, that he did it at the request of some upon their Letters. And because the Sheriff did acknowledge the Receipt of the King's Letters, thereupon

Car. 4.

Anno 1628. on he was Committed. To this I Answer, That the Sheriff was justly punished, for that he is expressly bound by the Statute of Westminster 1. which was agreed from the beginning; but this is no proof, that the Judges had not power to Bail this man.

The next Authority is 33 H. 6. in the Court of Common-Pleas, fol. 28. 6. 29. where Robert Poyneings, Esquire, was brought to the Bar upon a Capias, and was Returned, that he was Committed Per Dominos de Consilio (I believe) it is misprinted, for Dominos, id est, Dominos de Consilio (which is strongest against what I maintain) pro diversis Causis Regem tangentibus; and he made an Attorney in the Action, whence is inferred, That the Return was good, and the party could not be delivered. To this the Answer is plain one way or other upon the Return; neither is there any Testimony whether he were delivered, or Bailed or not.

Secondly, It appears directly, that he was brought thither, to be charged in an Action of Debt, at another man's Suit, and no desire of his own to be delivered or Bailed. And then if he were remanded, it is no waies material to the question in hand. But that which is most relied upon, is the opinion of Stamford in his Book of Pleas of the Crown, Lib. 2. Cap. 18. fol. 72, 73. in his Chapter of Mainprise, where he citeth the Statute of Westminster the 1. Cap. 15. and saith thus; By this Statute it appears, that in four Cases at the Common-Law, a man was not Replevisable, to wit, those that were taken for the Death of a man, by the Command of the King or of his Justices, or for the Forest. Thus far he is most right. Then he goeth on and saith, As to the Command of the King, that is understood of the Command of his own mouth, or his Counsel which is incorporate to him, and speak with his mouth, or otherwise every Writ or Capias to take a man, which is the King's Command, would be as much; and as to the Command of the Justices, that is meant their absolute Commandment, for if it be their ordinary Commandment, he is Replevisable by the Sheriff, if it be not in some of the Cases prohibited by the Statute.

The Answer that I give unto this, is, that Stamford had said nothing, whether a man may be Committed without cause by the King's Command, or whether the Judges ought not to Bail him in such Cases. But only that such a man is not Replevisable, which is agreed for that belongs to the Sheriffs, and because no man should think, he meant any such thing, he concludes his whole sentence touching the Command of the King and the Justices, that one Committed by the Justices ordinary Command, is Replevisable by the Sheriff, so either he meant all by the Sheriff, or at least, it appears not that he meant, that a man Committed by the King or Privy-Council without cause, is notailable by the Justices. And then he hath given no opinion in this Cause. What he would have said if he had been asked the Question, cannot be known, neither doth it appear by any thing he hath said, that he meant any such thing as would be enforced out of him.

My Lords, I have performed the Command of the Commons; and as I conceive shall leave the Declaration of personal Liberty an ancient and undoubted truth, fortified with seven Acts of Parliament; and not opposed by any Statute or Authority of Law whatsoever.

The Objections of the King's Council, with the Answers thereto at the other two Conferences touching the same matters.

It was agreed by Mr. Attorney General, That the seven Statutes urged by the Commons, were in force, and that Magna Charta did extend most properly to the King; But he said, First, That some of them are in general words, and therefore conclude nothing, but are to be expounded by the Presidents; and others, that be more particular, are applied to the suggestions of Subjects, and not to the King's Command simply of it self.

Hereunto was Answered, that the Statutes were as direct as could be, which appeareth by the reading of them, and though they speak of suggestions of the Subjects, yet they are in equal reason to a Commitment by Command of the King, and are as effectual, for that they are in equal reason a Commitment by the Command of the King, being of as great force when it moveth by a suggestion from a Subject, as when the King taketh notice of the cause himself; The rather, for that Kings seldom intermeddle with matters of this nature, but by Information from some of their People.

Secondly, Mr. Attorney Objected, That Per Legem Terre in Magna Charta (which is the foundation of this Question) cannot be understood for Process of the Law, and original Writs, for that in all Criminal proceedings, no original Writ is used at all. But every Constable either for Felony or breach of the Peace, or to prevent the breach of Peace, may Arrest without Process or original Writ; it is used, and it were hard the King should not have the power of a Constable; and the Statute cited by the Commons, makes Process and Original Writ to be all one.

The Answer of the Commons to this Objection.

That they do not intend Original Writs only by the Law of the Land, but all other legal Process, which comprehends the whole proceedings of Law upon Causes other than the Trial by Jury, Judicium Parium, unto which it is opposed; thus much is imported Ex vi Termini, out of the word (Process.) And by the true acceptation thereof in the Statutes, which have been urged by the Commons to maintain their Declaration, and most especially the Statutes of 25 E. 1. Cap. 4. where it appeareth, That a man ought to be brought in to answer by the Course of the Law, having former mention of Process made by Original Writ. And in 28 E. 3. Cap. 3. by the course of Law, is rendred by due process of the Law. And 36 E. 3. Roi^r parl^r no. 20. The Petition of the Commons saith, that no man ought to be imprisoned by special Command, without Indictment, or other due Process to be made by the Law. 37 E. 3. cap. 18. calleth the same thing Process of the Law; and 42 E. 3. cap. 3. stileth it by due Process and Writ Original, where the Conjunctive must be taken for a Dis-junctive (which change is ordinary in Exposition of Statutes and Deeds, to avoid inconveniencies) to make make it stand with the rest, and with reason. And it may be collected, that by Law of the Land in Magna Charta, by the course of the Law in 25 E. 3. by due process of the Law in 28 E. 3. other due process to be made by the Law, in 36 E. 3. process of the Law 37 E. 3. and by process and Writ Original in 42 E. 3. are one and the same thing; the latter of these Statutes alwaies referring to the former; and that all of them import any due and regular proceedings of Law upon a cause other than the Trial by a Jury; and this appeareth, Cook 10. 99. James Bagg's Case, where it is understood of giving Jurisdiction by Charter, or Prescription, which is the ground of our proceeding by course of Law. And in Selden's Notes on Forreſcote, fol. 29. where it is expounded for Law-wager, which is likewise a Trial by Law, by the Oath of the Parties, differing from that by Jury, and it doth truly comprehend these and all other regular proceedings in Law upon Cause, which gives Authority to Constables to Arrest upon Cause, and if this be not the true Exposition of these words, Per Legem terra, the King's Council were desired to declare their meanings, which they never offered to do. And yet certainly these words were not put into the Statute, without some intention of consequence, and thereupon Mr. Serjeant Ashley offered an Interpretation of them thus; namely, that there were divers Laws of this Realm, as the Common Law, the Law of the Chancery, the Ecclesiastical Law, the Law of the Admiralty, or Marine Law, the law of Merchants, the Marshal Law, and the Law of State; and these words per legem terra do extend to all these Laws. To this it was answered, That we read of no Law of State, and that none of these can be meant there, save the Common-Law, which is the principal and general Law, and is alwaies understood by the way of Excellency, when mention is made of the Law of the Land generally; and that though each of the other Laws which are admitted into this Kingdom by Custom or Act of Parliament, may justly be called a Law of the Land, yet none of them can have that preheminance to be stiled the Law of the Land. And no Statute Law, Book or other Authority Printed or unprinted, could be shewed to prove that the Law of the Land being generally mentioned, was ever intended of any other than the Common-Law; and yet even by these other Laws a man may not be Committed without a Cause expressed, but it standeth with the Rule of other legal expositions, that per legem terra, must be meant the Common-Law, which is the general and universal Law, by which men hold their Inheritances: and therefore, if a man speak of Escuage generally, it is understood, as Littleton observeth, pl. 99. of the incertain Escuage, which is a Knights Service tenure for the defence of the Realm, by the Body of the Tenant in time of War, and not of the certain Escuage, which giveth only Contribution in Money, and no personal service. And if a Statute speaks of the King's Courts of Record, it is meant only of the Four at Westminster, by way of excellency. Cook 6. 20. Gregories Case; so the Canonists, by the Excommunication simply spoken, do intend the greater Excommunication. And the Emperour in his Instructions saith, That the Civil Law, being spoken generally, is meant of the Civil Law of Rome, though the Law of every City be a Civil Law: As when a man names the Poet, the Græcians understand Homer; the Latines, Virgil. Secondly, Admit that per legem terra extends to all the Laws of the Land, yet a man must not be Committed by any of them, but by the due proceedings that are exercised by these Laws, and upon a Cause declared. Again, it was urged, that the King was not bound to express a Cause of Imprisonment, because there may be in it matter of State, not fit to be revealed for a time, lest the Confederates thereupon make means to escape the hands of Justice, and therefore the Statutes cannot be intended to restrain all Commitments, unless a Cause be expressed; for that it would be very inconvenient and dangerous to the State, to publish the Cause at the very first. Hereunto it was Replied by the Commons, that all danger and inconvenience may be avoided, by declaring a general Cause, as for Treason, Suspicion of Treason, Misprision of Treason or Felony, without specifying the particular, which can give no greater light to a Confederate, than will be conjectured upon the very apprehension, upon the imprisonment, if nothing at all was expressed. It was further alledged, that there was a kind of contradiction in the Position of the Commons, when they say, The Party Committed without a Cause shewed, ought to be Delivered or Bailed. Bailing being a kind of Imprisonment, Delivery a total freeing. To this it was answered, That it hath alwaies been the discretion of the Judges to give so much respect to a Commitment, by the Command of the King, or the Privy-Council (which are ever intended to be done upon just and weighty Causes) that they will not presently let him free, but Bail him, to answer what shall be objected against him, on his Majesties behalf. But if any inferior Officer Commit a man without Cause shewed, they do instantly deliver him, as having no Cause to expect their pleasure; so the Delivery is applied to an Imprisonment, by the command of some mean Minister of Justice; Bailing, when it is done by the Command of the King, or his Council. It was urged by Mr. Attorney, That Bailing is a grace and favour of a Court of Justice, and that they may refuse to do it. This was agreed to be true in divers Cases, as where the Cause appeareth to be for Felony, or other Crime expressed, for that there is another way to discharge them in convenient time by their Trial; (and yet in these Cases the constant practise hath been constantly and moderately to Bail men:) But where no cause of the imprisonment is returned, but the Command of the King, there is no way to deliver such Persons by Trial or otherwise, but that of the Habeas Corpus. And if they should be then remanded, they may be perpetually Imprisoned without any remedy at all. And consequently, a man that had committed no offence, might be in a worse case than a great Offender; for the latter should have an ordinary Trial to discharge him; the other should never be delivered. It was farther said, That though the Statute, Westminster 1. Cap. 15. is a Statute by way of Provision, and did extend only to the Sheriff; yet the recital in that Statute touching the Four Causes, wherein a man was not Replevisable at the Common-Law; namely, those that were Committed for the Death of a man by the Command of the King, or of his Justices, or for the Forest, did declare, that the Justices could not Bail such a one; and that Replevisable andailable were Synonymes all one; and that Stamford a Judge of great authority doth expound it accordingly, and that neither the Statute, nor the said Replevisable by the Sheriff, but generally without restraint; and that if the Chief Justice Commit a man, he is not to be enlarged by another Court, as appeareth in the Register.

To

Anno 1628. To this it was answered, First, That the recital and Body of the Statute, relate only to the Sheriff, as appeareth by the very words.

Secondly, That Replevisable is not restrained to the Sheriff, for that the words import no more, but that a man Committed by the Chief Justice, is Bailable by the Court of Kings Bench.

Thirdly, That Stamford meaneth all of the Sheriff; or at least he hath not sufficiently expressed, that he intended the Justices.

Fourthly, It was denied that Replevisable and Bailable is the same, for they differ in respect of the place where they are used; Bail being in the King's Courts of Record; Replevisable before the Sheriff, and they are of several natures; Replevisable being a letting at large upon Sureties; Bailing, when one 'Tradit' in Ballium, and the Bail are his Gaolers, and shall suffer Body for Body, which is not true of Replevying by Sureties; and Bail differeth from Mainprize in this, that Mainprize is an undertaking in a form certain; Bailing to answer the Condemnation in Civil Causes; and in Criminal, Body for Body; and the reasons in the first Conference, were then renewed, and no exception taken to any, save that in 22 H. 6. it doth not appear, that the Command of the King was by his mouth, which must be intended, or by his Council, (which is all one) as is observed by Stamford, for the words are, That a man is not Replevisable by the Sheriff, who is Committed by the Writ or Commandment of the King. 21 E. 1. Rot. 2. dorso, was cited by the King's Counsel. But it was answered, That it concerned the Sheriff of Leicestershire only, and not the power of the Judges, 33 H. 6. The King's Attorney confessed, That was nothing to the purpose, and yet that Book hath been usually cited, by those that maintain the contrary to the Declaration of the Commons, and therefore such suddain opinions, as have been given thereupon, are not to be regarded, the Foundation failing. And where it was said, That the French of 36 E. 3. Rot. Parl. no. 9. (which can receive no answer) did not warrant what was inferred thence, but that these words, Sans disturbance metre ou arrest faire, & le Contre per special mandement ou en autre manere, must be understood that the Statutes should be put in execution, without putting disturbance, or making Arrest to the contrary, by special Command, or in any other manner. The Commons did utterly deny the Interpretation given by the King's Council; and to justifie their own, did appeal to all men that understood French; and upon the several Statutes did conclude their Declaration remained an undoubted truth, not controlled by anything to the contrary.

The substance of the Objections made by Mr. Attorney General before a Committee of both Houses, to the Argument that was made by the Commons at the first Conference with the Lords out of Presidents of Records, and Resolutions of Judges in former times, touching the Liberty of the Person of every Freeman. And the Answers and Replies then presently made by the House of Commons to those Objections.

After the first Conference, which was desired by the Lords, and had by a Committee of both Houses in the Painted Chamber, touching the Reason, Laws, Acts of Parliament, and Presidents of Records, concerning the Liberties of the Person of every Freeman, Mr. Attorney General being heard before the Committee of both Houses, (as it was assented by the House of Commons, that he might be, before they went up to the Conference) after some Preamble made, wherein he declined the answering all Reasons of Law, and Acts of Parliament, came only to the Presidents, used in the Arguments before delivered, and so endeavoured to weaken the strength of them that had been brought in behalf of the Subject; and to shew, that some other were directly contrary to the Law comprehended in the Resolutions of the House of Commons, touching the Bailing of Prisoners, returned upon the Writ of Habeas Corpus, to be Committed by the Special Command of the King, or the Counsel without any cause shewed. And the course which was taken (which it pleased the Committees of both Houses to allow of) was that Mr. Attorney should make his Objections to every particular President, and that the Gentlemen appointed and trusted herein by the House of Commons, by several Replies, should satisfy the Lords touching the Objections made by him against or upon every particular, as the Order of the Presidents should lead them.

He begun with the first Twelve Presidents that were used by the House of Commons, at the Conference desired by them, to prove that persons returned to stand so Committed, were delivered upon Bail, by the Court of Kings Bench. The First was that of Bildeston's Case in 18 E. 3. Rot. 33. Rex. To this he Objected, That in the Return of him into the Court, it did not appear, that this Baldeston was Committed by the King's command. And Secondly, That in the Record it did appear that he had been Committed for counterfeiting the Great Seal, and so by consequence was Bailable in the Law, in regard there appeared a cause why he was Committed; in which Case it was granted by him (as indeed it is plain and agreed of all hands) that the Prisoner is Bailable though Committed by the command of the King. And he said, That this part of the Record, by which it appeared, he had been Committed for this Suspicion of Treason, was not observed to the Lords in their Argument before used, and he also shewed to the Lords, that their three several kinds of Records, by which the full truth of every Award or Bailing by Habeas Corpus, is known, First, in the Remembrance-Roll, wherein the Award is given. Secondly, The file of the Writ and the Return. And Thirdly, The Scrut Roll, or Scrut Finium, wherein the Bail is entred. And that only the Remembrance-Roll of this Case was to be found. And that if the other two were extant, he doubted not but it would appear also, That upon the return it self, the cause of the Commitment had been expressed.

And so he concluded that this proved not for the Resolution of the House of Commons touching a matter of Bail, where a Prisoner was Committed by the King's Special Command without cause shewed.

To these Objections, the Reply was first, That it was plain that Bildeston was Committed by the Kings express Command, for so are the very words of the Writ to the Constable of the Tower, Quod cum teneri & Custodiri facias, &c. than which nothing can more fully express a Commitment by the King's Command. Secondly, Howsoever it be true that in the latter end of the Record, it doth

Anno 1628. doth appear that Bildeston had been Committed for that Suspicion of Treason; yet if the times of the proceeding, expressed in the Record, were observed, it would be plain that the Objection was of no force; for this one ground both of this Case and all the rest is infallible, and never to be doubted of in the Law, that the Justices of every Court adjudge of the force or strength of a Return out of the body it self only; and according as it therein appears to them. Now in Easter Term, 18 E. 3. he was returned and brought before them, as Committed only by that Writ, wherein no cause is expressed; and the Lieutenant or Constable of the Tower, that brought him into the Court, said, He had no other Warrant to detain him, Nisi b're predict. wherein there was no mention of any cause; and the Court thereupon adjudged that b're predict. (or that special cause) was not sufficiens causa to detain him in Prison, and therefore he is by Indictment of the Court in Easter Term, let to Mainprife; but that part of the Record, wherein it appears that he had indeed been Committed for Suspicion of Treason, is of Trinity Term following, when the King, after letting him to Mainprife, sent to the Judges that they should discharge him of his Mainprife, because no man prosecuted him, and at that time it appears (but not before) that he had been in for Suspicion of Treason; so that he was Returned to stand Committed by the King's special Command only, without cause shewed in Easter Term, and then by Judgment of the Court let to Mainprife which (to this purpose) is but the same with Bail, though otherwise it differ. And in the Term following upon another occasion, the Court knew that he was Committed for Suspicion of Treason, which hath no relation at all to the letting of him to Mainprife, nor to the Judgment of the Court then given, when they did not, nor could possibly know any cause for which the King had Committed. And it was said in behalf of the House of Commons, that they had not indeed, in their Argument, expressly used the latter part of the Record of Bildeston's Case, because it being only of Trinity Term following, it could not concern the Reasons of an Award, given by the Court in Easter Term next before, yet notwithstanding that they had most faithfully at the time of their Argument delivered in to the Lords (as indeed they had) a perfect Copy at large of the whole Record of this Case, as they had done also of all other Records whatsoever used by them, in so much as in truth there was not one President of Record of either side, the Copy whereof they had not delivered in likewise; nor did Mr. Attorney mention any one besides those that were so delivered in by them. And as touching those three kinds of Record, the Remembrance Roll, the Return and File of the Writ, and the Scrivets, it was answered by the Gentlemen employed by the House of Commons, That it was true, that the Scrivets, and the Return of this Case of Bildeston's, was not to be found; but that did not lessen the weight of the President, because alwaies in the Award or Judgment drawn up in the Remembrance Roll (the cause, whatever it be, when any is shewed) upon the Return is alwaies expressed, as it appears clearly by the constant Entries of the Court of the King's Bench, so that if any cause at all had appeared unto the Court, it must have appeared plainly in that part of the Roll which belongs to Easter Term, wherein the Judgment was given; But the Return of the Commitment by the King's Command, without a cause shewed, and the Judgment of the Court, that the Prisoner was to be let to Mainprife, appears therein only. And so notwithstanding any Objection made by Mr. Attorney, the Cause was maintained to be a clear proof (among many others) touching that Resolution of the House of Commons.

Car. 4.

To the Second of these Twelve, which is Parker's Case, in 22 H. 8. Rot. 37. his Objections were two, First, That it is true, he was Returned to be Committed, Per mandat' Domini Regis, but that it appeared, That this Command was certified to the Sheriffs of London by one Robert Pecke, Gent. and in regard that Command came no otherwise, the Return was held to be insufficient, and that therefore he was Bailed. Secondly, That it appears also in the Record, that he was Committed pro suspicione Felonie ac per mandat' Domini Regis; so that in regard that in the expression of the Causes of his Majesties Commitment, Suspicion of Felony preceeds the Command of the King, therefore it must be intended that the Court took the cause why the King Committed him to be of less moment than Felony, and therefore Bailed him; For he Objected that even the House of Commons themselves in some Arguments by them used, touching the Interpretation of the Statute of Westminster the 1. Cap. 15. about this point had affirmed, that in enumeration of particulars, those of greatest nature were first mentioned; and that it was supposed, that such as followed were usually of less nature or moment.

But the Reply was to the first Objection, That the Addition of certifying the King's Command by Robert Pecke, altered not the Case:

First, Because the Sheriffs in their Return, take notice of the Command, as what they were assured of, and then howsoever it came to them it was of equal force, as if it had been mentioned without Pecke.

Secondly, As divers Patents pass the Great Seal by Writ of Privy Seal, and are subscribed per b're de privai' Sigil', so divers per ipsum Regem, and are so subscribed, and oftentimes in the Rolls of former times, to the Records per ipsum Regem, are added Nuntiant A. B. so that the King's Command generally, and the King's Command related, are certified by such a man, is to this purpose of like nature.

Thirdly, In the late general Case of the Habeas Corpus, where the Return of the Commitment, was per speciale mandat' Domini Regis mihi significat' per Dominos de privai' Consilio, the Court of King's Bench did agree, that it was the same, and of the like force, as if mihi significat', &c. had not followed, and that these words were void; according whereunto here also per mandat' Domini Regis nunciat' per Robertum Pecke had been wholly omitted, and void likewise in truth in that late Case.

This Case of Parker was cited both at the Barr and Bench; and at the Bench it was Interpreted by the Judges no otherwise than if it had been only per mandat' Domini Regis in this place of it. But the Objection there was made of another kind, as was delivered in the first Argument made out of Presidents in behalf of the House of Commons.

Then for the Second Objection touching the course of Enumeration of the Causes in the Return, it was said, That howsoever in some Acts of Parliament, and elsewhere in the Felony (expression used in the Law) things of greater nature preceed, and the less follow; yet in the Case the

Anno 1678. contrary was most plain, for in the Return it appears there were three Causes of detaining the Prisoner, Surety of the Peace, Suspicion of Felony, and the King's Command; and Surety of the Peace is first mentioned, which is plainly less than Felony, therefore it is as plain if any force of Argument be here to be taken from this Enumeration) that the contrary to that which Mr. Attorney inferred, is to be concluded (that is) that as Felony is a greater Cause than Surety of the Peace, So the matter whereupon the King's Command was grounded, was greater than the Felony. But in truth, this kind of Argument holds neither way here, and whatsoever the cause was why the King Committed him, it was impossible for the Court to know it; and might also have been of very high moment in matter of State, and yet of far less nature than Felony; all which shews, that this President hath its full force also, according as it was first used in Argument by the House of Commons.

To the Third of those which is Binck's Case, in 35 H. 8. Rot. 35. the Objection was, That there was a Cause expressed, pro suspicione Felonix, and though pro aliis causis illos moventibus were added in the Return, yet because in the course of Enumeration the general name of (Alia) coming after particulars, includes things of less nature than the particular death; therefore in this Case, Suspicion of Felony being the first, the other Causes afterwards generally mentioned, must be intended of less nature, for which the Prisoner was Bailable, because he was Bailable for the greater, which was Suspicion of Felony.

Hereunto it was Replied, That the Argument of Enumeration in those Cases, is of no moment, as it is next before shewed. And that although it were of any moment, yet the alie Cause, though less than Felony, might be of greater consequence in matter of State, which is pretended usually upon general Returns of Command without cause shewed. And it is most plain, that the Court could not know the Reasons why the Prisoner here was Committed; and yet they Bailed him without looking further after any unknown thing, under that Title of matter of State, which might as well have been in this Cause as in any other whatsoever.

To the Fourth, which is Overton's Case, in Pasch. 2, & 3. P. & Mary, Rot. 58. And to the Fifth, which is Newport's Case, Pasch. 4, & 5. P. & M. Rot. 45. only these Objections were said over again by Mr. Attorney, which were moved in the Argument made out of Presidents in behalf of the House of Commons at the first Conference, and in the same Argument are fully and clearly satisfied, as they were now again in like manner.

To the Sixth of these, which is Lawrence's Case, in 9 Eliz. Rot. 35. And the Seventh, which is Constable's Case, Pasch. 9 Eliz. Rot. 68. the same Objections were likewise said over again by Mr. Attorney that are moved, and clearly and fully answered in the Argument, made at the first Conference out of Presidents in behalf of the House of Commons. The force of the Objection being only, That it appeared in the Margent of the Roll that the word Pardon was written; but it is plain that the word there hath no Reference to the Reason why they are Bailed, nor could have Reference to the cause why they were Committed, is utterly unknown, and was misshewed.

To the Eighth, which is Browning's Case, in Pasch. 20 Eliz. Rot. 72. it was said by Mr. Attorney, That he was Bailed by a Letter from the Lords of the Council, directed to the Judges of the Court, but being asked for that Letter, or any Testimony of it, he could produce none at all, but said he thought the testimony of it was burnt amongst many other things of the Council Table, at the burning of the Banqueting House.

To the Ninth, being Harecourt's Case, Pasch. 40 Eliz. Rot. 62. the self same Objection was made by him, but no Warrant was shewed to maintain the Objection.

To the Tenth, which is Catesbie's Case, in Vac. Hill. 43 Eliz. he said, That it was by direction of a Privy Seal from the Queen, and to that purpose he shewed the Privy Seal of 43 Eliz. which is at large amongst the Transcripts of Records, concerning Bails taken in Cases, where the King or Lords of the Council assented.

But it was Replied, That the Privy Seal was made only for some particular Gentlemen, mentioned in it, and for none other (as indeed appears in it) and then he said, that it was likely, that Catesbie here had a Privy Seal in his behalf, because those other had so, which was all the force of the Objection.

To the Eleventh of these, which is Beckwith's Case, in Hill. 12 Jac. Rot. 183. he said, The Lords of the Council sent a Letter to the Court of Kings Bench to Bail him, and indeed he produced a Letter, which could not by any means be found when the Arguments were made at the first Conference, and this Letter, and the Copy of an obscure report, made by a young Student, which was brought to another purpose (as hereafter shall be shewed) were the only things written of any kind that Mr. Attorney did produce, besides the particulars shewed by the House of Commons at the first Conference.

To this it was Replied, That the Letter was of no moment, being only a direction to the Chief Justice, and no matter of Record, nor any way concerning the rest of the Judges. And besides, either the Prisoner was Bailable by Law, or not Bailable; if Bailable by Law, then was he to be Bailed without any such Letter; if not Bailable by the Law, then plainly the Judges could not have Bailed him upon the Letter without breach of their Oaths, which is, that they are to do Justice, according to the Law, without having respect to any Command whatsoever, so that the Letter in this, or the like in any other Case, is for point of Law to no purpose, nor hath any weight at all by way of Objection, against what the Record and Judgment of the House shewed us.

To the Twelfth and last of these, which is Sir Thomas Manson's Case, in 4 Jac. Rot. 147. the same Objection only was said over by him, which was moved and clearly answered in the Argument at the first Conference, and that one ground which is infallible, That the Judgment upon a Return is to be made only out of what appears in the Body of the Return itself, was again insisted upon in this Case, as it was also in most of the rest. And indeed that alone (which is more clear in Law) satisfies almost all kind of Objections that have been made to any of these Presidents, Anno 1628. dents, which thus rightly understood, are many ample Testimonies of the Judgment of the Court of Kings Bench, touch this great Point in the several Reigns of the several Princes under which they fall.

After his Objections to these Twelve, and the Replies and Satisfaction given to those Objections, he came next to those, wherein the assent of the King, or the Privy-Council appears to have been upon the enlargement. But he made not to any of those, any other kind of Objections whatsoever than such as are moved and clearly answered (as they were now again) in the Argument made at the first Conference. And forasmuch as it concerns Letters of assent or direction; the same was said here again by way of Reply to him, as is before touching the Letter in Beckwith's Case.

After these were dispatched, he came to urge the Eight Presidents, which seemed to make for the other side, against the Resolution of the House of Commons, which Eight were used, and Copies of them given unto the Lords at the first Conference.

Of these Eight the first four were urged by him, as being of one kind; the difference of them being only such that save only in the names of Prisons, and Persons, they are but the self same.

Therefore of these Four he Objected thus, That Richard Everard (for the purpose) in the first of them, which is 5 H. 7. Rot. 18. Roger Cherrie in the Second of them, which is 8 H. 7. Rot. 12. Christopher Burton in the Third, which is in 9 H. 7. Rot. 14. And George Urswicke in the Fourth of them, which is 19 H. 7. Rot. 33. were Returned into the King's Bench upon several Writs of Habeas Corpus, to have been Committed and detained in the several Prisons whence they came per mandatum Domini Regis, and that upon that Return they were Committed to the Marshalsey of the King's Bench; and that howsoever it had been Objected against those Presidents that this kind of Commitment, was, by the course of that Court alwaies done before the Bailing of the Prisoner, yet that it did not appear that they were Bailed.

The Reply to those Objections, was, That by the constant course of the King's Bench, whatsoever came in upon Habeas Corpus, or otherwise, upon any Writ into that Court cannot be Bailed until he first be Committed to the Marshal of that Court, and thence it was that all these Four were Committed to the Marshal, as appears by the Entry Marescallo, &c. which is the usual Entry in such a Case, and that the Clerks of that Court acknowledge this Course and Entry to be most constant; so that all the Inference that can be made out of these Four is, but that four Prisoners being brought from four several Prisons by Habeas Corpus into the King's Bench, and Returned to stand Committed per mandatum Domini Regis, were so far from being to be remanded by the Law; that in all these four Cases, they were presently first taken from their several Prisons, wherein they had been detained by such a general Command, which could not have been, if they had not been adjudged in every of the Cases, to have been Bailable by the Court. And that this Commitment of them to the Marshal of the King's Bench, was the first step towards the Bailing of them, as in all other Cases. But that it appears not that either they ever demanded to be Bailed, or that they were able to find sufficient Bail; and if they did not the one, or could not do the other, it may follow indeed that they were not Bailed. But this Commitment to the King's Bench being the first step to the Bailing of them (as by constant course it is) shews most plainly that they were Bailable by Law, which is the only thing in Question, so that although these Presidents were ranked among them that may seem to make against the Resolutions of the House of Commons, which was done both because they have this small colour in them for the other side to any man that is not acquainted with the nature and reason of the Entries and Courses of the Court of the King's Bench, as Presidents that make against the Liberty (claimed by the Subject) yet, in truth, all four of them do fully prove this resolution, that is, they plainly shew that the Court of King's Bench, in every of them, resolved, That the Prisoners so Committed were Bailable, otherwise they had been remanded, and not Committed to the Marshal of the King's Bench. And this was the answer to the Objection made by Mr. Attorney upon these four Presidents being all of the time of King H. 7.

The Fifth of these being Edward Page's Case, in 7 H. 8. Rot. 23. Mr. Attorney Objected this, he said, That Edward Page, was Committed to the Marshalsey of the Household, per mandatum Domini Regis ibidem salvo Custodiend, &c. qui Committitur Marr' hospitij Domini Regis, by which it appears (as he said) that Court remanded to the Prison of the Marshalsey of the Household. And he said, That whereas it had been objected at the first Conference, that there was some mistaking in the Entry, he said, That he conceived indeed that there was some mistaking, but the mistaking was, that the Clerk had Entered Committitur for a Remittitur, and that it should have been qui remittitur Marr' hospitij Domini Regis, for when ever they remand the Prisoner, Remittitur, and not Committitur should be Entered, and that mistaking being so rectified and understood, he conceived it was a direct President against the Resolution of the House of Commons.

To this it was answered, by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, That there was no doubt indeed but that a mistaking was in the Entry by the Clerk: but that the mistaking was quite of another nature. The Addition of these words hospitij Domini Regis was the mistaking, and the Entry should have been qui Committitur Marr. &c. only, that is, he was Committed to the Marshal of the King's Bench, and so indeed the force of this President should be but just the same with the first Four: But the ignorance of the Clerk that Entered it, who knew not how to distinguish between the Marshal of the Household, and the Marshal of the King's Bench, was the cause of adding of these words, hospitij Domini Regis. And to confirm fully this kind of Interpretation of that President, and of the mistaking in it, it was observed by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, that there is in the Margent of the Roll, an infallible Character that justifies as much, for the course of that Court, whensoever a Prisoner is Committed to the Marshal of the King's Bench, and not remanded; the word Marescall is written in the Margent short, by Marr. &c. turned up, and that is never written there. But when the meaning and sense of the Entry is, That the Prisoner is Committed to the Prison of the same Court; now in this Case in the Margent, Marr. is likewise written, which most clearly shews, that the truth of the Case was, that this Page was Committed to the Marshal of the King's Bench, and not remanded; which if it had been, neither could the Entry have been Committitur, nor should the Margent of the the Roll had Marr. written in it. And thus they answered Mr. Attorneys Objections, touching this President; and concluded, that now besides the first Four of the Eight, they had another, and so Five to prove that a Prisoner Committed per mandatum Domini Regis, generally wasailable by the Judgment of the Court, however it appears not in these particulars that they were Bailed, which perhaps they were not, or because they could not find a sufficient Bail.

The Sixth of the Eight being Thomas Caesar's Case, in 8 Jac. Regis Rot. 99. Mr. Attorney Objected it thus, That Cæsar being Committed per mandatum Domini Regis, to the Marshalsey of the Household was Returned upon Habeas Corpus to be so Committed, and therefore detained in Prison. And that the Entry is Qui remittitur Prison' Marr' predict', by which it appears clearly, that he was commanded again to the same Prison from whence he came.

To this the Gentlemen of the House of Commons gave this answer, they said, That the usual Entry of a Remittitur, when it is to shew that the Court by way of Judgment, or Award, upon Resolution or Debate, do remand the Prisoner, is remittitur quousq; &c. which is remittitur quousq; secundum legem deliberatus fuerit; but when they give day to the Keeper of the Prison to amend his Return, or the like, then the Entry is only remittitur generally, or remittitur Prison' predict'. but it was affirmed by Mr. Keeling, a Clerk of experience in that Court, that the Entry of remittitur generally, or remittitur Prison' predict'. was indifferently used for the same, that is, remittitur quousq; &c. yet it was expressly shewed by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, that there was sometimes a difference. And that it might well be in this Case, for in the last of these Eight Presidents, which is Saltenstall's Case, they observed that remittitur Prison' predict'. is often used, and in that Case it is plain, that twice it is used only for a remanding, during the time that the Court gave leave to the Warden of the Fleet, to amend the Return; which shews plainly, that though sometimes remittitur generally, and remittitur quousque may mean but the same, yet sometimes also it doth not mean the same. And that of this Case of Cæsar, is meant only but so much as it doth twice in that of Saltenstall's Case, which was proved also by a Rule of the Court, which was cited out of the Rule-Book of the Court of King's Bench, by which Rule the Court expressly Ordered, That unless the Steward and Marshal of the Household did sufficiently return the Habeas Corpus, for Cæsar, that he should be discharged, the words of the Rule are, Nisi predict'. Senescall' & Marscall' hospicii Domini Regis sufficienter Retornaverint b're de Habeas Corpus Thomæ Cæsar die Mercurij prox' post quinden' Sancti Martini, defendens exonerabitur. And this was the opinion of the Court, which shews that the Court was so far from remanding him upon the Return; that they resolved, unless some better Return was made, the Prisoner should be discharged of his Imprisonment, although it appeared unto them out of the Body of the Return (upon which they are only to judge) that he was Committed per mandatum Domini Regis only. And the Rule not only shews the opinion of the Court then to have been agreeable with the Resolution of the House of Commons, but also proves that Remittitur generally, or remittitur Prison' predict'. doth not alwaies imply a remanding upon Judgment or Debate. And this Answer was given to this of Cæsar's Case.

The Seventh is the Case of James Demetrius, it was in 12 Jac. Rot. 153. Mr. Attorney objected, That this Demetrius, and divers others being Brewers, were Committed per Consilium Domini Regis to the Marshalsey of the Household, and that upon the Commitment being so generally Returned, they were demanded, and that the Entry was, immediate remittitur prefat' Marr' hospitii predict'. where he observed that immediate shews, that the Judges of that time were so resolved of this Question, that they remanded him presently, as men that well knew what the Law was herein.

Hereunto the Gentlemen of the House of Commons gave these Answers, First, That the remittitur in this Case, is but as in that of Cæsar's, and so proves nothing against them. Secondly, That immediate being added to it, shews plainly that it was due without Debate or any Argument or consideration had of it, which makes the Authority of the President to be of no force in point of Law, for Judgments and Awards given upon deliberation only and debate, are proof of arguments of weight; and not any suddain Act of the Court, without debate or deliberation, and the Entry of immediate being proposed to Mr. Keeling, it was confirmed by him; that by that Entry it appears by their course, that the remanding of them was the self same day they were brought; which, as it was said, by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, might be at the rising of the Court, or upon advisement, or the like, and this Answer was given to this President of the Brewers.

The last of these Eight which Mr. Attorney objected, is, Saltenstall's Case, in 12 Jac. Regis, he was Committed per mandatum à Dominis Regis de privato Consilio, and being returned by the Warden of the Fleet to be so, remittitur Prison' predict'. and in the 13 Jac. in the same Case there is remittitur generally in the Roll, and these two make but one Case, and as one President.

To this the Gentlemen of the House of Commons answered, That it is true the Rolls have such Entries, of Remittitur in them generally, but that proves nothing, upon the reason before used by them upon Cæsar's Case, but also Saltenstall was Committed for another cause, besides per mandatum Dominorum Consilii for a Contempt against an Order in Chancery, and that was in the Return also; and besides the Court, as it appears in the Record, gave several daies to the Warden of the Fleet to amend his Return, which they would not have done if they had conceived it sufficient, because that which is sufficient, needs not amendment.

To this Mr. Attorney Replied, That they gave him day to amend his Return, in respect of that part of it, which concerns the Order in Chancery, and not in respect of that which was per mandatum Dominorum Consilii.

But the Gentlemen of the Commons House answered that, that appeared not any where, nor indeed is it likely at all, nor can be so understood, because if the other Return per mandatum Consilii had been sufficient by it self, then doubtless they would have returned him upon that alone, for then they needed not to have stood at all upon the other part of the Return in this Case, so that out of the Record it self, it appears fully that the Court conceived the Return to be insufficient, and so the Gentlemen of the House of Commons concluded, that they had a great number of Presidents, besides the Acts of Parliament, and reasons of Common-Law, agreeable to their resolution; and that there was not one President at all that made against them,

Anno 1628. them, but indeed that (almost) all that were brought as well against them as for them (if rightly considered) made fully for the maintenance of their resolution, and that there was not one Example or President of a remitter in any kind upon this point, before that of Cesar's Case, which is before cleared with the rest, and is but of late time, and of no moment against the resolution of the House of Commons. And thus for so much as concerned the Presidents of Records, the first day of the Conference desired by the Lords ended.

The next day they desired another Conference with the House of Commons, at which it pleased the Committee of both Houses to hear Mr. Attorney make what Objections he could, against other parts of the Argument, formerly delivered by the House of Commons, he then Objected against the Acts of Parliament, and against the reasons of the Law. And his Objections to those parts were answered, as it appears in the Answers by Order given in to the House of Commons by the Gentlemen that made them. He Objected also upon the second day against that second kind of Presidents, which are Resolutions of Judges in former times, and not of Record; and brought also some other Testimonies of the Opinions of Judges in former times touching this point.

First, For that Resolution of all the Judges of England, in 34 Eliz. mentioned and read in the Arguments made at the first Conference, he said, That it was directly against the Resolution of the House of Commons: and observed the words of it to be in one place, that Persons so Committed by the King or the Council, may not be delivered by any of the Courts. And that in another place, if the cause were expressed either in generality or speciality it was sufficient; and he said, That the expressing of the Cause in generality, was to shew the King and the Councils Command. And to this purpose he read the whole words of that Resolution of the Judges. Then he Objected also that in a Report of one Reynold's Case in the King's Bench, in 13 Jac. he found that the Opinion of some Judges of that Court (Sir Edward Cook being then Chief Justice, and one of them) was that a Prisoner Committed per mandat. Domini Regis, or presat. Consil. without cause shewed, and so Returned, could not be Bailed, because it might be matter of State, or Arcanum Imperii, for which he stood Committed. And to this also, he added an Opinion, that he found in a Journal in the House of Commons of 18 Jac. wherein Sir Edward Cook, speaking to a Bill, preferred for Explanation of Magna Charta, touching Imprisonment, said in the House, That one so Committed could not be enlarged by the Law, because it might be matter of State, for which he was Committed. And amongst these Objections, as his Objections of other nature; also he spake of the Confidence that was shewed in behalf of the House of Commons; and he said, it was not Confidence of either part, could add any thing to the Determination of the Question, for if it could, he had as much reason of Confidence for the other side against the Resolution of the House of Commons, grounding himself upon the force of his Objections, which (as he conceived) had so weakned the Arguments of the Commons House.

To this a Reply was made, and first it was said to the Lords in behalf of the House of Commons, That notwithstanding any thing yet objected, they were upon clear reason, still confident of the truth of their first resolutions, grounded upon so just examination and deliberation, taken by them.

And it was observed to the Lords also, that their Confidence was of an other nature, and far greater weight than any Confidence that could be expressed by Mr. Attorney, or whomsoever being of his Majesties Council Learned.

To which purpose the Lords were desired to take into their memories the difference between the present qualities of the Gentlemen that spake in behalf of the House of Commons, and of the King's Learned Council, in their speaking there, howsoever accidentally, they were both men of the same Profession, for the King's Council spake as Council perpetually retained by Fee, and if they made Glosses, or advantageous Interpretations soever for their own part, they did but what belonged to their place and quality, as Mr. Attorney had done; but the Gentlemen that spake in behalf of the House of Commons came there, bound on the one side by the trust reposed in them, by their Country that sent them; and on the other, bound by an Oath taken by every of them, before he sit in the House, to maintain and defend the Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown: for even in the point of Confidence alone, that of them, that speak as retained Council by perpetual Fee, and might by their place (being permitted to speak) say what they would; and that of them that spake, as bound to nothing; but truth both by such a Trust, and such an Oath, were no way to be so compared, or counterpoised, as if the one were of no more weight than the other: and then the Objections before mentioned, were also answered.

For that of the resolution of all the Judges of England, in 34 Eliz. it was shewed that it plainly agreed with the resolution of the House of Commons; for although indeed it might have been expressed with more perspicuity, yet the words of it as they are, sufficiently shew, that the meaning of it is no otherwise. To that purpose besides the words, the whole frame of this resolution of the Judges, as it is Transcribed out of the Lord Chief Justice Anderson's Book, written with his own Hand (which Book also was there offered to be shewed in behalf of the House of Commons) it was observed that the words of the first part of it, shew plainly that all the Judges of England, then resolved that the Prisoners spoken of in that first part of their resolution were only Prisoners Committed with cause shewed, for they only say they might not be delivered by any of the Courts without due Tryal by Law and Judgment of Acquittal, but it is clear no Trial or Acquittal can be had, where there is not some cause laid to their charge, for which they ought to stand Committed, therefore in that of the resolution such Prisoners are only meant as are Committed with cause shewed, which also the Judges in that resolution also, thought necessary (as appeareth in the second part of the resolution) wherein they have these words.

If upon the Return of the Habeas Corpus, the Cause of their Commitment be certified to the Judges (as it ought to be) &c. by which words they shew plainly, that every Return of a Commitment is insufficient, that bath not the cause shewed in it.

And to that Mr. Attorney said, as if the Cause were sufficiently expressed in generality, if the King's Command, or Councils were expressed in it, and as if that were meant in the resolution for a sufficient general Cause. To this it was said, That it was never heard of in Law, that the power or person that Committed the Prisoner, was understood for the Causa Captionis, or Causa detentionis, but only the reason why that power or person Committed the Prisoner, as also in Common Speech, if any man ask why or for what cause a man stands Committed; but his offence or some other cause is understood in the Question, and is to be shewed in the answer; but to say that such a one Committed the Prisoner, is an Answer only to the Question, who Committed him, and not why or for what cause he stands so Committed.

Then for that of the Copy of the Report of 13 Jac. shewed forth by Mr. Attorney, it was answered by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, That the Report it self (which had been before seen and perused among many other things at a Committee made by the House) was of slight or no Authority, for that it was taken by one that was at that time but a young Student only, and a Reporter in the King's Bench; and there was not any other Report found to agree with it.

Secondly, Although the Reports of young Students, when they take the words of Judges as they fall from their mouths at the Bench, and in the same person and form that they have spoken, may not be of good credit; yet in this Case there is not one word so reported, but in truth there being three Causes of a time in the King's Bench, one Ruswell's Case, one Allen's Case, and one Saltenstall's Case, every of which had something of like nature in it, the Student having been present in the Court, made up the frame of one Report or Case out of all three in his own words, and so put it into his Book; so that there is not a word in the Report, but it is framed according to the Students fancy (as it is written) and nothing is expressed in it, as it came from the mouth of the Judges, otherwise than as his fancy directed him.

Thirdly, There are in the Report plain falsehoods of matters of fact, which are to be attributed either to the Judges, or to the Reporter. It is most likely, by all reason, that they proceeded from the Reporters faults: But howsoever these matters of falsehood shew sufficiently, that the credit of the rest is of slight value. It is said in the Report, that Harecourt being Committed by the Council, was Bailed in 40 Eliz. upon a Privy-Seal, whereas there was no such thing in truth. And it is said there, That such kind of Letters are Filed in the Crown-Office, whereas in truth, there was never any such kind of Letters Filed there in any Case whatsoever. That Resolution of the Judges in 34 is mis-cited there, and made in 36 of Queen Elizabeth, and it is said there by that Resolution, a Prisoner Returned to be Committed by Command of the Council might not be at all delivered by the Court, whereas no such thing is comprehended in that Resolution. But that which is of most moment is, that howsoever the truth of the Report were, yet the opinion of the Judges being sudden, and without any debate had of the Case, is of slight moment: for in difficult points especially, the gravest and wisest men living, may on the sudden let fall (and that without any disparagement to them) such opinions, as they may, will, and ought to change upon full debate had before them, a mature deliberation taken by them. Now plainly in that of 13 Jac. there is not so much as a pretence of any debate at the Barr. All that is reported to have been, is reported as spoken on the sudden; and can any man take such an opinion to be of value, against such Debates, and mature deliberation since had of the point; and indeed this great point, and all circumstances belonging to it, hath within this half year been so fully examined, and searched into, that it may well be affirmed, that the Learnedest man whatsoever, that now considered of it, hath within that time (or might have) learned more reason of satisfaction in it, than ever before he met with, therefore the sudden opinion of any Judges whatsoever to the contrary, is of no value here, which also is to be said of that opinion obliviously delivered in the House in 18 Jac. as Mr. Attorney objected out of the Journal of the House; but besides, neither was the truth of that report of that opinion in the Journal any way acknowledged, for it was said on behalf of the House of Commons, that their Journals were, for matter of Orders and Resolutions of the House, of such Authority as that they were, as their Records: But for any mans particular opinion noted in any of them, it was so far from their being of any Authority with them, that in truth, no particular opinion is at all to be entred in them. And that their Clerk offends when er'e he doth to the contrary. And to conclude, no such opinion whatsoever, can be sufficient to weaken the clear Law, comprehended in those Resolutions of the House of Commons, grounded upon so many Acts of Parliament, so much reason of Common-Law, and so many Presidents of Record, and the Resolution also of all the Judges of England, and against which not one Law written or unwritten, not one President, not one Reason hath been brought, that makes any thing to the contrary. And thus to this purpose, ended the next day of the Conference, desired by the Lords, and had by a Committee of both Houses.

I Am to put your Lordships in mind, that you have the greatest Cause in hand that ever came in the Hall at Westminster, or indeed in any Parliament.

My Lords, Your Noble Predecessors (whose places you hold) were Parties to Magna Charta, so called for weight and substance, for otherwise many Statutes are greater in Bulk, as Alexander a little man, called Magnus for his great courage.

And you, my Lords the Bishops, are Comfulminare to thunder out your Excommunications against all infringers of Magna Charta, sententia latæ super Chartas. All worthy Judges, that were worthy of their places, had Magna Charta in great estimation.

Now as Justice hath a Sword, so it hath a Ballance, Ponderat hæc Causas, percutit illa reos, put therefore (my Noble Lords) in the one Scale seven Acts of Parliament, Records, Presidents, Reasons, all that we speak, and that of 18 E. 3. whereof I found no Answer: and in God's Name put into the other Ballance Mr. Attorney his Wit, Learning, and great Endowments of Nature; and if he be weight, let him have it; if we, then conclude with us. And therefore we desire you, in the name of the Commonalty of England, represented in us, that we may have cause to give God and the King thanks for your Justice in complying with us.

The Answer debated.

On Tuesday, June 3. the King's Answer was read in the House of Commons, and seemed too scant, in regard of so much expence of time and labour, as had been employed in contriving the Petition: Whereupon Sir John Elliot stood up, and made a long Speech about Grievances, which followeth:

Sir John Elliot's Speech in the laying open of Grievances.

HE reduced the cause of all our Evils to five Heads: Our insincerity and doubling in Religion, which he exemplified by the freedom and increase of Papists; by the composition with them in the North; the flightiness of those payments, and the easiness in them; by the hopes, presumptions, and reports of all the Papists generally; by the disposition of Commanders, the trust of Officers, the confidence of secrecies of employments in this Kingdom, in Ireland, and elsewhere.

2. Our want of Counsel, which sacrificed our Honour and our Men sent to the Palatinate, stopping those greater Supplies appointed for that Service, by which it might have been made defensible; this gave direction to that late Expedition to Rhee, whose wounds are yet bleeding, by means whereof, the Protestants of France, and their King, by a necessary consequence, are divided, and that Countrey so prepared against us, that we have nothing to promise our Neighbours, hardly for our selves; insomuch as by the issue and success, it may rather be thought a conception of Spain, than begotten here by us.

3. The insufficiency and unfaithfulness of our Generals: Witness first, the Expedition to Calais, where we arrived, and found a Conquest ready, (viz.) the Spanish Ships, fit for the satisfaction of a Voyage, either in point of Honour, or in point of Profit: Why was it neglected? why was it not atchieved, it being granted on all hands feasible? When the whole Army landed, why was there nothing attempted? If nothing were intended, wherefore did they land? If there were a Service, why were they shipt again? Witness, secondly, that to Rhee, where the whole Action was carried against the judgment and opinion of the Officers, (viz.) those that were of the Council; was not the first, was not the last, was not all, at land in the intrenching, in the continuance there, in the assault, in the retreat, without their assent? To say nothing of leaving the Wines and the Salt, which were in our possession, and of a value, as they say, to answer much of our Expence; nor of that wonder, which no Alexander or Caesar ever did know, the enriching of an Enemy by courtesies, when the Soldiers want help, nor of the private Enterprises and Parleys with the Fort, which continually we held; what they intended, may be read in the Success.

4. Witness the last Voyage to Rochel, which needs no observation, and is fresh in memory.

5. The ignorance and corruption of our Ministers. Survey the Court, survey the Countrey, the Church, the City, the Bar, the Bench, the Courts, the Shipping, the Land, the Seas, all will yield variety of proofs: The Exchequer is empty, the reputation thereof gone, the ancient Lands are sold, the Jewels pawn'd, the Plate engag'd, the Debt still great, almost all Charges both extraordinary and ordinary by Projects.

6. The oppression of the Subject; it needs no demonstration, the whole Kingdom is a proof, and that oppression speaks the exhausting of our Treasures; what waste of our Provisions, what consumption of our Ships, what destruction of our Men have been? witness the Voyage to Algier, witness that of Mansfield, with that to Calais, witness the next, witness that to Rhee, witness the last, witness the Palatinate, witness the Turks, witness the Dunkirkers, witness all: We were never so much weakned, nor had less hopes how to be restored.

These, Mr. Speaker, are our dangers, these are they do threaten us, and these are like that Trojan Horse, brought in cunningly to surprise us; in these do lurk the strongest of our Enemies ready to issue on us, and if we do not now the more speedily expel them, these are the sign, the invitation to others.

These will prepare their entrance, that we shall have no means left of refuge or defence; for if we have these Enemies at home, how can we strive with those that are abroad? if we be free from these, no other can impeach us: Our ancient English vertue, that old Spartan valour, cleared from these disorders, being in sincerity of Religion once made friends with Heaven, having maturity of Counsels, sufficiency of Generals, incorruption of Officers, opulency in the King, Liberty in the People, repletion in Treasures, restitution of Provisions, reparation of Ships, preservation of Men.

Our ancient English vertue thus rectified, I say, will secure us; and unless there be a speedy Reformation in these, I know not what hopes or expectations we may have.

These things, Sir, I shall desire to have taken into consideration, that as we are the great Council of the Kingdom, and have the apprehension of these dangers, we may truly represent them unto the King, wherein, I conceive, we are bound by a treble Obligation, of duty unto God, of duty to his Majesty, and of duty to our Countrey.

And therefore I wish it may so stand with the Wisdom and Judgment of the House, that they may be drawn into the Body of a Remonstrance, and therein all humbly expressed with a Prayer unto his Majesty, for the safety of himself, and for the safety of the Kingdom, and for the safety of Religion, that he will be pleased to give us time to make perfect inquisition thereof, or to take them into his own wisdom, and there give them such timely Reformation, as the necessity of the Cause, and his Justice doth import.

And thus, Sir, with a large affection and loyalty to his Majesty, and with a firm duty and fidelity to my Countrey, I have suddenly, and, it may be, with some disorder, expressed the weak apprehension I have; wherein if I have erred, I humbly crave your pardon, and so submit to the Censure of the House.

Grievances.*

It seemed to others not suitable to the Wisdom of the House, in that Conjunction, to begin to recapitulate those Misfortunes which were now obvious to all, accounting it more discretion not to look back, but forward: and since the King was so near, to meet him, that the happiness expected might not be lost: and these were for petitioning his Majesty for a fuller Answer.

Speech.*

It was intimated by Sir Henry Martin, that the Speech of Sir John Elliot was suggested from disaffection to his Majesty; and there wanted not some who said, It was made out of some distrust of his Majesties Answer to the Petition; but Sir John Elliot protested the contrary, and that himself and others had a resolution to open these last mentioned Grievances, to satisfy his Majesty therein, only they stayed for an opportunity: Which averment of Sir John Elliot's was attested by Sir Thomas Wentworth and Sir Robert Philips.

Sir Edward Cook.

In this Debate Sir Edward Cook propounded, That an humble Remonstrance be presented to his Majesty, touching the dangers and means of safety of King and Kingdom: which Resolution was taken by the House, and thereupon they turned themselves into a Grand Committee, and the Committee for the Bill of Subsidies was ordered to expedite the said Remonstrance.

A Message
King to the House of Commons to
Sessions.

That his Majesty having, upon the Petition, exhibited by both Houses, given an Answer full of Justice and Grace, for which we and our Posterity have just cause to bless his Majesty, it is now time to grow to a conclusion of the Session; and therefore his Majesty thinks fit to let you know, That as he doth resolve to abide by that Answer, without further change or alteration, so he will Royally and Really perform unto you what he hath thereby promised: and further, That he resolves to end this Session upon Wednesday the 11. of this Month; and therefore wisheth, that the House will seriously attend those businels which may best bring the Session to a happy conclusion, without entertaining new matters, and so husband the time, that his Majesty may with the more comfort bring us speedily together again: at which time, if there be any further Grievances not contained, or expressed in the Petition, they may be more maturely considered than the time will now permit.

Mr. Pym, by order of the House, presents the Declaration following to the Lords at a Conference of both Houses.

Dr. Manwaring, Clerk and Doctor in Divinity.*

For the more effectual prevention of the apparent ruine and destruction of this Kingdom, which must necessarily ensue, if the good & fundamental Laws and Customs therein established, should be brought into contempt, and violated, and that form of Government thereby altered, by which it hath been so long maintained in peace and happiness; and to the Honour of our Sovereign Lord the King, and for the preservation of his Crown and Dignity: The Commons in this present Parliament assembled, do, by this their Bill shew, and declare against Roger Manwaring, Clerk, Doctor in Divinity, That whereas by the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, the free Subjects of England do undoubtedly inherit this Right and Liberty, not to be compelled to contribute any Tax, Tollage, Aid, or to make any Laws, not set or imposed by common consent, by Act of Parliament. And divers of his Majesties loving Subjects, relying upon the said Laws and Customs, did, in all humility, refuse to lend such sums of Monies, without Authority of Parliament, as were lately required of them.

Nevertheless, he the said Roger Manwaring, in contempt, and contrary to the Laws of this Realm, hath lately preached in his Majesties presence, two several Sermons, that is to say, the fourth day of July last one of the said Sermons, and upon the nine and twentieth of the same Month the other of the said Sermons; both which Sermons he hath since published in print, in a Book intituled, Religion and Allegiance; and with a wicked and malicious intention, to seduce and misguide the Conscience of the Kings most excellent Majesty, touching the observation of the Laws and Customs of this Kingdom, and of the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects, to incense his Royal displeasure against his good Subjects so refusing, to scandalize, subvert, and impeach the good Laws and Government of this Realm, and the Authority of the High Court of Parliament, to alienate his Royal heart from his People, and to cause jealousies, sedition, and division in the Kingdom. He the said Roger Manwaring doth in the said Sermons and Book persuade the Kings most excellent Majesty,

First, That his Majesty is not bound to keep and observe the good Laws and Customs of this Realm, concerning the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects aforesaid: And that his Royal Will and Command in imposing Loans, Taxes, and other Aids upon his People, without common consent in Parliament, doth so far bind the Consciences of the Subjects of this Kingdom, that they cannot refuse the same without peril of eternal damnation.

Secondly, That those of his Majesties loving Subjects, which refused the Loan aforesaid, in such manner as is before cited, did therein offend against the Law of God, against his Majesties Supream Authority, rity, and by so doing became guilty of Impiety, Disloyalty, Rebellion, and Disobedience, and liable to many other Taxes and Censures, which he in the several parts of his Book doth most falsly and maliciously lay upon them.

Thirdly, That Authority of Parliament is not necessary for the raising of Aids and Subsidies; that the slow proceeding of such Assemblies are no fit for the supply of the urgent necessities of the State, but rather apt to produce sundry impediments, to the just designs of Princes, and to give them occasion of displeasure and discontent.

All which the Commons are ready to prove, not only by the general scope of the same Sermons and Book, but likewise by several Clauses, Assertions, & Sentences therein contained; and that he the said Roger Manwaring, by preaching and publishing the Sermons and Book aforesaid, did most unlawfully abuse his holy function, instituted by God in his Church for the guiding of the Consciences of all his Servants; and chiefly of Sovereign Princes and Magistrates, and for the maintenance of the peace and concord betwixt all men, especially betwixt the King and his People, and hath thereby most grievously offended against the Crown and Dignity of his Majesty, and against the prosperity and good Government of this State and Commonwealth. And the said Commons, by protestation saving to themselves the liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter, on any other occasion or impeachment against the said Roger Manwaring, and also of replying to the Answers which he the said Roger shall make unto any of the matters contained in this present Bill of Complaint, and of offering further proof of the premises, or any of them, as the cause, according to the course of Parliament, shall require, do pray, that the said Roger Manwaring may be put to answer to all and every the premises; and that such proceeding, examination, trial, judgment, and exemplary punishment, may be thereupon had and executed, as is agreeable to Law and Justice.

This Declaration, ingross'd in Parliament, being read, Mr. Pym addressed himself to the Lords in this manner.

Mr. Pym's Speech at the delivery of the Charge against Dr. Manwaring.
 That he should speak to this Cause with more confidence, because he saw nothing out of himself that might discourage him: If he considered the matter, the offences were of an high nature, of easie proof; if he considered their Lordships, who were the Judges of their own Interest, their own Honour, the example of their Ancestors, the care of their Posterity, would all be Advocates with him in this cause on the behalf of the Commonwealth; if he considered the King our Sovereign (the pretence of whose Service and Prerogative might perchance be sought unto as a Defence and Shelter for this Delinquent) he could not but remember that Right of both Houses, that he held himself bound in Conscience to preserve those Liberties: which this man would perswade him to impeach,

Car. 4.
 He said further, That he could not but remember his Majesties Love to Piety and Justice, manifested upon all occasions; and he knew Love to be the root and spring of all other passions and affections. A man therefore hates, because he sees somewhat in that which he hates contrary to that which he loves; a man therefore is angry, because he sees somewhat in that wherewith he is angry, that gives impediment and interruption to the accomplishment of that which he loves.

If this be so, by the same Act of his Apprehension, by which he believes his Majesties love to Piety and Justice, he must needs believe his hate and detestation of this man, who went about to withdraw him from the exercise of both.

Then he proceeded to that which, he said, was the Task enjoynd him, to make good every Clause of that which had been read unto them: which that he might the more clearly perform, he propounded to observe that order of parts, unto which the said Declaration was naturally dissolved.

1. Of the Preamble.
2. The Body of the Charge.
3. The Conclusion, or Prayer of the Commons.

The Preamble consisted altogether of recital; First, of the Inducements upon which the Commons undertook this complaint.

The second, of those Laws and Liberties, against which the offence was committed.

The third, of the violation of those Laws which have relation to that offence.

From the connexion of all those recitals (he said) there did result three Positions, which he was to maintain as the ground-work and foundation of the whole Cause.

The first, That the form of Government in any State could not be altered without apparent danger of ruin to that State.

The second, the Law of England, whereby the Subject was exempted from Taxes and Loans, not granted by common consent of Parliament, was not introduced by any Statute, or by any Charter or Sanction of Princes, but was the ancient and fundamental Law, issuing from the first frame and constitution of the Kingdom.

The third, that this Liberty of the Subject is not only most convenient and profitable for the People, but most honourable, most necessary for the King; yea, in that point of Supply for which it was endeavoured to be broken.

The form of Government is that which doth actuate and dispose every part and member of a State to the common good; and as those parts give strength and ornament to the whole, so they receive from it again strength and protection in their several stations and degrees.

If this mutual relation and intercourse be broken, the whole frame will quickly be dissolved, and fall in pieces, and instead of this concord and interchange of support, whilst one part seeks to uphold the old form of Government, and the other part to introduce a new, they will miserably consume and devour one another. Histories are full of the calamities of whole States and Nations in such cases. It is true, that time must needs bring some alterations, and every alteration is a step and degree towards a dissolution; those things only are eternal which are constant and uniform: Therefore it is observed by the best Writers upon this Subject, that those Commonwealths have been most durable and perpetual, which

Anno 1628. which have often reformed and recomposed themselves according to their first Institution and Ordinance; for by this means they repair the breaches, and counterwork the ordinary and natural effects of time.

The second question is as manifest, there are plain footsteps of those Laws in the Government of the Saxons, they were of that vigour and force, as to over-live the Conquest, nay, to give bounds and limits to the Conqueror, whose Victory gave him first hope; but the assurance and possession of the Crown he obtained by composition, in which he bound himself to observe these, and the other ancient Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, which afterwards he likewise confirmed by Oath at his Coronation: from him the said Obligation descended to his Successors. It is true, they have been often broken, they have been often confirmed by Charters of Kings, by Acts of Parliaments; but the Petitions of the Subjects, upon which those Charters and Acts were founded, were ever Petitions of Right, demanding their ancient and due Liberties, not suing for any new.

To clear the third Position (he said) may seem to some men more a Paradox, That those Liberties of the Subject should be so Honourable, so profitable for the King, and most necessary for the supply of his Majesty. It hath been upon another occasion declared, that if those Liberties were taken away, there should remain no more industry, no more justice, no more courage; who will contend, who will endanger himself for that which is not his own?

But, he said, he would not insist upon any of those points, nor yet upon others very important; he said, that if those Liberties were taken away, there would remain no means for the Subjects, by any Act of Bounty or Benevolence, to ingratiate themselves to their Sovereign.

And he desired their Lordships to remember what profitable Prerogatives the Laws had appointed for the support of Sovereignty; as Wardships, Treasures-trove, Felons goods, Fines, Amercements, and other Issues of Courts, Wrecks, Escheats, and many more, too long to be enumerated; which for the most part are now by Charters and Grants of several Princes dispersed into the hands of private persons; and that besides the ancient Demesns of the Crown of England, William the Conqueror did annex, for the better maintenance of his Estate, great proportions of those Lands, which were confiscated from those English which persisted to withstand him; and of these, very few remain at this day in the King's possession: And that since that time, the Revenue of the Crown had been supplied and augmented by Attainders, and other Casualties, in the Age of our Fathers, by the dissolution of Monasteries and Chantries near a third part of the whole Land being come into the King's possession. He remembered further, that constant and profitable Grant of the Subjects in the Act of Tunnage and Poundage. And all these, he said, were so alienated, anticipated, over-charged with Annuities and Assignments, that no means were left for the pressing and important occasions of this time, but the voluntary and free gift of the Subjects in Parliament.

The hearts of the People, and their bounty in Parliament, is the only constant Treasure and Revenue of the Crown, which cannot be exhausted, alienated, anticipated, or otherwise charged and incumbered.

In his entrance into the second part, he propounded these steps, by which he meant to proceed.

1. To shew the state of the Cause, as it stood both in the Charge and in the Proof, that so their Lordships might the better compare them both together.

2. To take away the pretensions of mitigations and limitations of his opinions, which the Doctor had provided for his own defence.

3. To observe those circumstances of Aggravation, which might properly be annexed to his Charge.

4. To propound some Precedents of former times, wherein, though he could not match the offence now in question (for he thought the like before had never been committed) yet he should produce such as should sufficiently declare, how forward our Ancestors would have been in the prosecution and condemning of such offences, if they had been then committed.

The Offence was prescribed in a double manner; First, by the general scope and intention, and by the matter and particulars of the Fact, whereby that intention was expressed.

In the description of the intention he observed six points, every one of which was a character of extream malice and wickedness.

1. His attempt to misguide and seduce the Conscience of the King.

2. To incense his Royal displeasure against his Subjects.

3. To scandalize, impeach, and subvert the good Laws and Government of the Kingdom, and authority of Parliaments.

4. To avert his Majesties mind from calling of Parliaments.

5. To alienate his Royal Heart from his People.

6. To cause Jealousies, Sedition, and Division in the Kingdom.

Of these Particulars (he said) he would forbear to speak further, till he should come to those parts of the Fact, to which they were most properly to be applied.

The Materials of the Charge were contrived into three distinct Articles; the first of these comprehended two Clauses.

1. That his Majesty is not bound to keep and observe the good Laws and Customs of the Realm, concerning the Right and Liberty of the Subject to be exempted from all Loans, Taxes, and other Aids laid upon them, without common consent in Parliament.

That his Majesties Will and Command in imposing any Charges upon his Subjects without such consent, doth so far bind them in their Consciences, that they cannot refuse the same without peril of eternal damnation.

Two kinds of proof were produced upon this Article.

The first was from some assertions of the Doctors, concerning the Power of Kings in general, but by the necessary consequence to be applied to the King of England.

The next kind of Proof was from his Censures, and determinations upon the particular Case of the late Loan, which by necessity and parity of reason, were likewise applicable to all Cases of the like nature. And lest by frailty of memory he might mistake the words, or invert the sense, he desired leave to resort to his Paper, wherein the places were carefully extracted out of the Book it self. And then he read each particular Clause

Clause by it self, pointing to the page for proof, which we here forbear to mention, referring the Reader to the Book it self.

Then he proceeded and said, That from this Evidence of the Fact doth issue a clear evidence of his wicked intention to misguide and seduce the King's Conscience, touching the observation of the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, to scandalize and impeach the good Laws and Government of the Realm, and the Authority of Parliaments, which are two of those Characters of Malice which he formerly noted, and now enforced thus: If to give the King ill Council, in some one particular Action, hath heretofore been heavily punished in this high Court; how much more heinous must it needs be thought, by ill Counsel to pervert and seduce his Majesties Conscience, which is the Sovereign Principle of all moral actions, from which they are to receive Warrant for their direction before they be acted, and Judgment for their reformation afterwards? If Scandalum Magnatum, Slander and Infamy cast upon great Lords and Officers of the Kingdom, have been always most severely censured, how much more tender ought we to be of that Slander and Infamy which is here cast upon the Laws and Government, from whence is derived all the Honour and Reverence due to those great Lords and Magistrates?

All men (and so the greatest and highest Magistrates) are subject to passions and partialities, whereby they may be transported into over-hard injurious crosses: Which considerations may sometimes excuse, though never justify the railing and evil speeches of men, who have been so provoked; it being a true rule, That whatsoever gives strength and inforcement to the temptation in any sin, doth necessarily imply an abatement and diminution of guilt in that sin. But to slander and disgrace the Laws and Government, is without possibility of any such excuse, it being a simple act of a Malignant Will, not induced nor excited by any outward provocation: the Laws carrying an equal and constant respect to all, ought to be revered equally by all. And thus he derived the proofs and Inforcements, upon the first Article of the Charge.

The second Article he said contained three Clauses:

1. That these Refusers had offended against the Law of God.

2. Against the Supream Authority.

3. By so doing, were become guilty of Impiety, Disloyalty, Rebellion, Disobedience, and liable to many other Taxes.

For proof of all these (he said) he needed no other evidence than what might be easily drawn from those places which he had read already; for what impiety can be greater, than to contemn the Law of God, and to prefer human Laws before it? what greater Disloyalty, Rebellion, and Disobedience, than to deprecate Supream Authority, to tie the hands and clip the wings of Sovereign Princes? yet he desired their Lordships patience in hearing some few other places, wherein the Stains and Taint, which the Doctor endeavoured to lay upon the Refusers, might appear by the odiousness of their comparisons, in which he doth labour to rank them.

The first Comparison is with Popish Recusants; yet he makes them the worst of the two, and for the better resemblance, gives them a new name of Temporal Recusants.

For this he alledgeth the first Sermon, pag. 31, 32.

and part of the fifth Consideration, by which he would persuade them to yield to this Loan.

Fifthly, If they would consider what advantage this their Recusancy in Temporals, gives to the common Adversary, who for disobedience in Spirituals, have hitherto alone inherited that name: for that which we our selves condemn in them for so doing, and profess to hate that Religion which teacheth them so to do; that is, to refuse subjection unto Princes in Spirituals; the same, if not worse, some of our side now (if ours they be) dare to practise.

We must needs be argued of less Conscience, and more Ingratitude, both to God and the King, if in Temporal things we obey not: They in Spirituals deny subjection, wherein they may perhaps frame unto themselves some reasons of probability, that the offence is not so heinous: if we in Temporals shall be so refractory, what colour of reason can we possibly find to make our defence withal, without the utter shaming of our selves, and laying a stain which cannot easily be washed out, upon that Religion which his Majesty doth so graciously maintain, and our selves profess?

The second comparison is with Turks and Jews, in the second Sermon, pag. 47. What a Paradox is, &c. What a Turk will do for a Christian, and a Christian for a Turk, and a Jew for both, &c. the same, and much less Christian men, should deny to a Christian King.

The third comparison is with Corah, Dathan and Abiram, Thendras and Judas, which is taken out of the second Sermon, pag. 49. where he labours to deprive those Refusers of all merit in the sufferings for this Cause.

Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, whom for their murmurings God suddenly sunk into Hell-fire, might as well alledge their sufferings had some resemblance with that of the three Children in the Babylonian Furnace; and Thendras and Judas, the two Incendiaries of the People, in the days of Cesar's Tribute, might as well pretend their Cause to be like the Maccabees.

Thus he ended the second Article of the Charge, upon which, he said, were imprinted other two of these six Characters of Malice formerly vented: That is, a wicked intention to increase his Majesties displeasure against his good Subjects so refusing, and to alienate his heart from the rest of his People: Both which were points so odious, that he needed not to add any further inforcement or illustration.

The third Article contained three Clauses.

1. That Authority of Parliament is not necessary for the raising of Aids and Subsidies.

2. That the slow proceedings of such Assemblies, are not fit to supply the urgent necessity of the State.

3. That Parliaments are apt to produce sundry impediments to the just designs of Princes, and give them occasion of displeasure and discontent.

For proof of all which he alledged two places, containing the two first of those six Considerations, which are propounded by the Doctor, to induce the refusers to yield to the Loan, in the first Sermon, page 26, 27.

First, If they would please to consider, that though such Assemblies as are the highest and greatest Representations of a Kingdom, be most Sacred and Honourable, and necessary also to those ends to which they were at first instituted; yet know we must, that ordained they were not to this end, to contribute any Right to Kings, where-whereby to challenge tributary Aids and subsidiary Helps; but for the more equal imposing, and more easie exacting of that which unto Kings doth appertain by natural and original Law and Justice, as their proper Inheritance annexed to their Imperial Crowns from their Birth. And therefore if by a Magistrate that is Supream, if upon necessity, extream and urgent, such Subsidiary helps be required, a proportion being held respectively to the ability of the persons charged, and the sum and quantity so required surmount not too remarkably the use and charge for which it was levied, very hard would it be for any man in the world, that should not accordingly satisfie such demands, to defend his Conscience from that heavy prejudice of resisting the Ordinance of God, and receiving to himself damnation; though every of those Circumstances be not observed, which by the Municipal Law is required.

Secondly, If they would consider the importunities that often may be urgent, and pressing necessities of State, that cannot stay without certain and apparent danger, for the motion and revolution of so great and vast a Body as such Assemblies are, nor yet abide their long and pausing deliberation when they are assembled, nor stand upon the answering of those jealous and overwary Cautions and Objections made by some, who wedded over-much to the love of epidemical and popular Errors, and bent to cross the most just and lawful designs of their wise and gracious Sovereign; and that under the plausible shews of singular liberty and freedom, which, if their Conscience might speak, would appear nothing more than the satisfying either of private humours, passions, or purposes.

He said, he needed not draw any Arguments or Conclusions from these places; the substance of the Charge appeared sufficiently in the words themselves: and to this third Article he fixed two other of these six Characters of Malice, That it is his wicked intention to avert his Majesties mind from calling of Parliaments, and to cause Jealousies, Seditions, and Divisions in the Kingdom; which he shortly enforced thus: If Parliaments be taken away, mischiefs and disorders must needs abound, without any possibility of good Laws to reform them; Grievances will daily increase, without opportunities or means to redress them; and what readier way can there be to distractions betwixt the King and People, to tumults and distempers in the State, than this?

And so he concluded this third Article of the Charge.

The Limitations whereby the Doctor had provided to justifie (or at least to excuse) himself, were propounded to be three.

That he did not attribute to the King any such absolute Power as might be exercised at all times, or upon all occasions, according to his own pleasure, but only upon necessity, extream and urgent.

2. That the sum required, must be proportionable to the ability of the party, and to the use and occasion.

3. That he did not say, That the substance of the Municipal or National Laws might be omitted or neglected, but the Circumstances only.

To these were offered three Answers, the first general, the other two particular. The general Answer was this, That it is all one to leave the Power absolute, and to leave the Judgment arbitrary, when to execute that Power; for although these limitations should be admitted, yet it is left to the King alone to determine, what is an urgent and pressing necessity, what is a just proportion, both in respect of the ability, and of the use and occasion; and what shall be said to be a Circumstance, and what of the substance of the Law; and the Subject is left without remedy: the Legal bounds being taken away, no private person shall be allowed to oppose his own particular opinion in any of these points to the King's resolution; so that all these limitations, though specious in shew, are in effect fruitless and vain.

The first particular Answer applied to that limitation of urgent necessity, was taken from the case of Normandy, as it appears in the Commentaries of Guilme Jeremie, upon the customary Laws of that Dutchy: they having been oppressed with some Grievances, contrary to this Franchise, made their complaint to Lewis the Tenth, which by his Charter, in the year 1314. acknowledging the Right and Custom of the Countrey, and that they had been unjustly grieved, did grant and provide, that from thenceforward they should be free from all Subsidies and Exactions to be imposed by him and his Successors; yet with this Clause, Si necessitas grand ne le requirer: Which small Exception hath devoured all these Immunities; for though these States meet every year, yet they have little or no power left, but to agree to such Levies as the King will please to make upon them.

The second particular Answer applied to the limitation and diminution of this Power, which may be pretended to be made by this word, Circumstance, as if he did acknowledge the King to be bound to the substance of the Law, and free only in regard of the manner; whereas, if the places be observed, it will appear, that he intends by that word, The Assembly of Parliaments, and Assent of the People, such Contribution, which is the very substance of the Right and Liberty now in question.

The Circumstances of Aggravation observed to be annexed to this Cause, were these:

The first from the place where these Sermons were preached; the Court, the King's own Family, where such Doctrine was before so well believed, that no man needed to be converted. Of this there could be no end, but either Simonical, by flattery and soothing to make way for his own preferment, or else extream malicious, to add new afflictions to those who lay under his Majesties wrath, disgraced and imprisoned, and to enlarge the wound which had been given to the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom.

The second was from the consideration of his holy Function: He is a Preacher of Gods Word; and yet he had endeavoured to make that which was the only Rule of Justice and Goodness, to be the Warrant for violence and oppression. He is a Messenger of Peace, but he had endeavoured to sow strife and dissention, not only amongst private persons, but even betwixt the King and his People, to the disturbance and danger of the whole State: He is a Spiritual Father, but like that evil Father in the Gospel, he hath given his Children Stones instead of Bread; instead of Flesh he hath given them Scorpions. Lastly, he is a Minister of the Church of England, but he hath acted the part of a Romish Jesuite; they labour our destruction, by dissolving the Oath of Allegiance taken by the People; he doth the same work, by dissolving the Oath of Protection and Justice taken by the King.

A third point of Aggravation was drawn from the quality of these Authors, upon whose Authority he doth principally rely, being for the most part Friars and Jesuits, and from his fraud and shifting in citing those Authors to purposes quite different from their own meanings.

Touching which it was performed, that most of his places are such as were intended by the Authors concerning absolute Monarchies, not regulated by Laws or Contracts betwixt the King and his People; and in Answer to all Authorities of this kind, were alledged certain passages of a Speech from our late Sovereign King James, to the Lords and Commons in Parliament, 1609.

In these our times we are to distinguish betwixt the state of Kings in their first Original, and between the state of settled Kings and Monarchs that do at this time govern in Civil Kingdoms, &c.

Every just King in a settled Kingdom is bound to observe the Paction made to his People by his Laws, in framing his Government agreeable thereunto, &c.

All Kings, that are not Tyrants or perjured, will be glad to bound themselves within the limits of their Laws; and they that perswade them to the contrary are Vipers and Pests, both against them and the Commonwealth.

It was secondly observed, that in the 27 page of his first Sermon, he cites these words, Suarez de legibus, lib. 5. cap. 17. Acceptationem populi non esse conditionem necessariam ex vi Juris naturalis aut gentium, neque ex Jure communi: The Jesuit adds, Neque ex Antiquo Jure Hispania; which words are left out by the Doctor, lest the Reader might be invited to inquire what was Antiquum Jus Hispania; and it might have been learned from the same Author in another place of that Work, that about two hundred years since, this liberty was granted to the People by one of the Kings, that no Tribute should be imposed without their consent. And the Author adds further, That after the Law is introduced and confirmed by Custom, the King is bound to observe it. From this place he took occasion to make this short digression, That the Kings of Spain being powerful and wise Princes, would never have parted with such a mark of absolute Royalty, if they had not found in this course more advantage than in the other, and the success and prosperity of that Kingdom, through the valour and industry of the Spanish Nation, so much advanced since that time, do manifest the wisdom of that change.

The third observation of fraud, in perverting his Authors, was this. In the twentieth page of the first Sermon, he cites these words out of the same Suarez, de legibus, lib. 5. cap. 15. fol. 300. Tributa esse maxime naturalia, & præ se ferre Justitiam, qui exiguntur de rebus propriis; this he produceth in proof of the just Right of Kings to lay Tributes. And no man that reads it doubts, but that in Suarez his opinion, the King's Interest and Propriety in the Goods of his Subjects, is the ground of that Justice; but the truth is, that Suarez in that Chapter had distributed Tributes into divers kinds, of which he calls one sort, Tributum reale, and describes it thus, Solent ita vocari pensiones quadam que penduntur regibus & principibus exteris & agris, que à principio ad sustentationem illis applicata fuerunt, ipsi vero in foedum in aliis ea donarunt sub certa pensione annua, que jure civili Canon appellari solet, quia certa regula & lege prescripta erat; So that the issue is, this which Suarez affirms for justification of one kind of Tribute, which is no more than a Fee-farm of Rent due by reservation in the Grant of Kings own Lands; the Doctor herein, worse than a Jesuit, doth wrest to the justification of all kinds of Tribute exacted by Imposition upon the Goods of the Subjects, wherein the King had no interest or propriety at all.

4. The last aggravation was drawn from his behaviour since these Sermons preached, whereby he did continue still to multiply and increase his offence, yea, even since the sitting of the Parliament, and his being questioned in Parliament; upon the Fourth of May last, he was so bold, as to publish the same Doctrine in his own Parish-Church of St. Giles's; the Points of which Sermons are these:

That the King had right to order all, as to him him should seem good, without any man's consent.

That the King might require, in time of necessity, Aid; and if the Subjects did not supply, the King might justly avenge it.

That the Propriety of Estates and Goods was ordinarily in the Subject; but extraordinarily (that is, in case of the King's need) the King hath right to dispose them.

These Assertions in that Sermon, he said, would be proved by very good testimony, and therefore desired the Lords that it might be carefully examined, because the Commons held it to be a great contempt to the Parliament for him to maintain that so publicly, which was here questioned.

They held it a great presumption for a private Divine to Debate the Right and Power of the King, which is a matter of such a nature, as to be handled only in this High Court, and that with moderation and tenderness. And so he concluded that point of Aggravation.

In the last place he produced some such Precedents as might testify what the opinion of our Ancestors would have been, if this Case had fallen out in their time; and herein, he said, he would confine himself to the Reigns of the first Three Edwards, two of them Princes of great glory: He began with the Eldest, Westm. 1. ca. 33.

By this Statute, 3 Edw. 1. provision was made against those who should tell any false news or device, by which any discord or scandal may arise betwixt the King, his People, and great Men of the Kingdom.

27 Edw. 3. Rot. Par. nu. 20. It was declared by the King's Proclamation, sent into all the Counties of England, That they that reported that he would not observe the great Charter, were malicious people, who desired to put trouble and debate betwixt the King and his Subjects, and to disturb the peace and good estate of the King, the People, and the Realm.

5 Edw. 2. Inter novas ordinationes, Henry de Beaumont, for giving the King ill counsel against his Oath, was put from the Council, and restrained from coming into the presence of the King, under pain of Confiscation and Banishment.

19 Edw. 2. Clause Minidors. Commissions were granted to inquire upon the Statute of W. 1. touching the spreading of News, whereby discord and scandal might grow betwixt the King and his People.

10 Edw. Clause M. 26. Proclamation went out to arrest all them who had presumed to report, that the King would lay upon the Wools certain Sums, besides the ancient and due Customs, where where the King calls these Reports, Exquisita Anno 1628. mendacia, &c. qua non tantum in publicam laesionem, sed in nostrum cedunt damnum, & dedecus manifestum.

12. Edw. 3. Rot. Almania. The King writes to the Archbishop of Canterbury, excusing himself for some Impositions which he had laid, professing his great sorrow for it, desires the Archbishop by Indulgences and other ways to stir up the People to pray for him, hoping that God would enable him by some satisfactory benefit to make amends, and comfort his Subjects for those pressures.

To these temporal Precedents of ancient times which were alledged, he added an Ecclesiastical Precedent out of a Book called Pupilla Oculi, being published for the Instruction of Confessors, in the Title de participantibus cum excommunicatis, fol. 59. All the Articles of Magna Charta are inserted with this direction, Hos articulos ignorare non debent quibus incumbit confessiones audire infra provinciam Cantuariensem.

He likewise remembered the Proclamation 8 Jac. for the calling in and burning of Dr. Cowel's Book, for which these reasons are given: For mistaking the true state of the Parliament of the Kingdom, and fundamental Constitution and Privileges thereof: For speaking irreverently of the Common Law, it being a thing utterly unlawful for any Subject to speak or write against that under which he liveth, and which we are sworn and resolved to maintain.

From these Precedents he collected, that if former Parliaments were so careful of false rumors and news, they would have been much more tender of such Doctrines as these, which might produce true occasions of discord betwixt the King and his People.

If those who reported the King would lay Impositions, and break his Laws, were thought such heinous Offenders, how much more should the man be condemned, who persuaded the King he is not bound to keep those Laws? If that great King was so far from challenging any right in this kind, that he professed his own sorrow and repentance for grieving his Subjects, with unlawful Charges: If Confessors were enjoined to frame the Consciences of the People to the observances of these Laws, certainly such Doctrine, and such a Preacher as this, would have been held most strange and abominable in all these times.

The third general part was the Conclusion or Prayer of the Commons, which consisted of three Clauses.

First, They reserved to themselves liberty of any other accusation, and for this, he said, there was great reason, that as the Doctor multiplied his Offences, so they may renew their Accusations.

Secondly, They save to themselves liberty of replying to his Answer; for they had great cause to think that he who would shift so much in offending, would shift much more in answering.

Thirdly, They desire he might be brought to examination and judgment; this they thought would be very important for the comfort of the present Age, for the security of the future against such wicked and malicious practices; and so he concluded, that seeing the cause had strength enough to maintain it self, his humble suit to their Lordships was, That they would not observe his infirmities and defects, to the diminution or prejudice of that strength.

Upon the Commons demand of Justice from the Lords to be done against Dr. Manwaring, their Lordships did award;

1. That Dr. Manwaring, Doctor in Divinity, Judgment shall be imprisoned during the pleasure of the given House.

2. That he be fined One thousand pounds to the King.

3. That he shall make such submission and acknowledgment of his offences, as shall be set down by a Committee in writing, both at the Barr, and in the House of Commons.

4. That he shall be suspended for the term of Three years, from the exercise of the Ministry, and in the mean time a sufficient preaching Minister shall be provided out of his Livings to serve the Cure: This Suspension and Provision to be done by the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction.

5. That he shall be hereafter disabled to have any Ecclesiastical Dignity, or Secular Office.

6. That he shall be for ever disabled to preach at the Court hereafter.

7. That his said Book is worthy to be burnt, and that for the better effecting of this, his Majesty may be moved to grant a Proclamation to call in the said Books, that they may be all burnt accordingly in London, and both the Universities, and for the inhibiting the printing thereof, upon a great Penalty.

Doctor Manwaring's submission was in these words.

My it please this Honourable House, I do here in all sorrow of heart, and true repentance, acknowledge the many Errors and Indiscretions which I have committed, in preaching and publishing those two Sermons of mine, which I called Religion and Allegiance; and my great fault in falling upon this Theme again, and handling the same rashly and unadvisedly in my own Parish Church of St. Giles's in the Fields, the Fourth of May last past. I do fully acknowledge those three Sermons to have been full of many dangerous Passages, Inferences, and scandalous Aspersions in most part of the same: And I do humbly acknowledge the Justice of this Honourable House, in that Judgment and Sentence passed upon me for my great offence: And I do from the bottom of my heart crave pardon of God, the King, and this Honourable House, and the Church, and this Commonwealth in general, and those worthy Persons adjudged to be reflected upon by me, in particular, for these great Errors and Offences.

Roger Manwaring.

Another Message was brought from his Majesty by the Speaker, Tuesday the Fifth of June.

His Majesty wished them to remember the Message he last sent them, by which he set a day for the end of this Session, and he commanded the Speaker to let them know, that he will certainly hold that day prefix'd without alteration; and because that cannot be, if the House entertain more business of length, he requires them, that they enter not into, or proceed with 1628. with any new business, which may spend greater time, or which may lay any scandal or aspersion upon the State-government, or Ministers thereof.

Anno

Sir Robert Philips.

Sir Robert Philips, upon this occasion, expressed himself thus: 'I perceive, that towards God, and towards Man, there is little hope, after our humble and careful endeavours, seeing our sins are many and so great: I consider my own infirmities, and if ever my Passions were wrought upon, then now, this Message stirs me up especially; when I remember with what moderation we have proceeded, I cannot but wonder to see the miserable strait we are now in: What have we not done to have merited? Former times have given wounds enough to the Peoples Liberty, we came hither full of wounds, and we have cured what we could, and what is the return of all, but misery and desolation? What did we aim at, but to have served his Majesty, and to have done that that would have made him Great and Glorious? If this be a fault, then we are all criminous: What shall we do, since our humble purposes are thus prevented, which were not to have laid any aspersion on the Government, since it tended to no other end, but to give his Majesty true information of his and our danger? And to this we are enforced out of a necessity of duty to the King, our Countrey, and to Posterity; but we being stopped, and stopped in such manner, as we are enjoined; so we must now leave to be a Council. I hear this with that grief, as the saddest Message of the greatest loss in the World. But let us still be wise, be humble, let us make a fair Declaration to the King.

Sir John Elliot.

Our sins are so exceeding great (said Sir John Elliot) that unless we speedily return to God; God will remove himself further from us; ye know with what affection and integrity we have proceeded hitherto, to have gained his Majesties heart, and out of a necessity of our duty, were brought to that course we were in: I doubt, a misrepresentation to his Majesty hath drawn this mark of his displeasure upon us: I observe in the Message, amongst other sad Particulars, it is conceived, that we are about to lay some aspersions on the Government; give me leave to protest, That so clear were our intentions, that we desire only to vindicate those dishonours to our King and Countrey, &c. It is said also, as if we cast some aspersions on his Majesties Ministers, I am confident no Minister, how dear soever, can—

Here the Speaker started up from the seat of the Chair, apprehending Sir John Elliot intended to fall upon the Duke, and some of the Ministers of State; and said, There is a command laid upon me, that I must command you not to proceed: whereupon Sir John Elliot sat down.

Sir Dudley Diggs.

I Am as much grieved as ever, said Sir Dudley Diggs; Must we not proceed? let us sit in silence, we are miserable, we know not what to do.

Hereupon there was a sad silence in the House for a while, which was broken by Sir Nathaniel Rich, in these words:

WE must now speak, or for ever hold our peace; for us to be silent when King and Kingdom are in this Calamity, is not fit. The question is, whether we shall secure our selves by silence, yea or no? I know it is more for our own security, but it is not for the security of those for whom we serve; let us think on them: some Instruments desire a change, we fear his Majesties safety, and the safety of the Kingdom, I do not say we now see it; and shall we now sit still and do nothing, and so be scattered? Let us go together to the Lords, and shew our dangers, that we may then go to the King together.

Others said, That the Speech lately spoken by Sir John Elliot, had given offence (as they feared) to his Majesty.

Whereupon the House declared, That every Member of the House is free from any undutiful Speech, from the beginning of the Parliament to that day; and Ordered, That the House be turned into a Committee, to consider what is fit to be done for the safety of the Kingdom; and that no man go out upon pain of going to the Tower. But before the Speaker left the Chair, he desired leave to go forth; and the House ordered that he may go forth, if he please. And the House was hereupon turned into a Grand Committee. Mr. Whitby in the Chair.

Mr. Wandesford.

I Am as full of grief as others, said Mr. Wandesford; let us recollect our English hearts, and not sit still, but do our duties: Two ways are propounded, To go to the Lords, or to the King; I think it is fit we go to the King, for this doth concern our Liberties, and let us not fear to make a Remonstrance of our Rights; we re his Counsellors: There are some men which call evil good, and good evil, and bitter sweet: Justice is now called Popularity and Faction.

Then Sir Edward Cook spake freely; 'We have dealt with that duty and moderation that never was the like, Rebus sic stantibus, after such a violation of the Liberties of the Subject; let us take this to heart. In 30 E. 3. were they then in doubt in Parliament to name men that misled the King? They accused John de Gaunt, the King's Son, the Lord Latimer, and Lord Nevil, for misadvising the King, and they went to the Tower for it; now when there is such a downfall of the State, shall we hold our tongues? how shall we answer our duties to God and Men? 7 H. 4. Parl. Rot. Numb. 31 & 32. 11 H. 4. numb. 13. there the Council are complained of, and are removed from the King; they mewed up the King, and disswaded him from the common good; and why are we now retired from that way we were in? why may we not name those that are the cause of all our evils? In 4 H. 3. and 27 E. 3. and 13 R. 2. the Parliament moderateth the King's Prerogative, and nothing grows to abuse, but this House hath power to treat of it: What shall we do? let us palliate no longer; if we do, God will not prosper us. I think the Duke of Buckingham is the cause of all our miseries; and till the King be informed thereof, we shall never go out with honour, nor sit with honour here; that man is the Grievance of Grievances: let us set down the causes of all our disasters, and all will reflect upon him.

Sir Edm. Cook declares the Duke the cause of all our miseries.

him. As for going to the Lords, that is not via Anno Regia; our Liberties are now impeached, we are 1628. concerned; it is not via Regia, the Lords are not participant with our Liberties.

Mr. Selden's advice for a Declaration against the Duke.

MR. Selden advised, 'That a Declaration be drawn under four Heads. 1. To express the Houses dutiful carriage towards his Majesty. 2. To tender their Liberties that are violated. 3. To present what the purpose of the House was to have dealt in. 4. That that great person, viz. the Duke, fearing himself to be questioned, did interpose and cause this distraction. All this time (said he) we have cast a Mantle on what was done last Parliament; but now being driven again to look on that man, let us proceed with that which was then well begun, and let the Charge be renewed that was last Parliament against him, to which he made an Answer, but the Particulars were sufficient, that we might demand Judgment on that Answer only.

IN conclusion, the House agreed upon several Heads concerning Innovation in Religion, the safety of the King and Kingdom, misgovernment, misfortune of our late designs, with the causes of them: And whilst it was moving to be put to the question, that the Duke of Buckingham shall be instanced to be the chief and principal cause of all those evils, the Speaker (who after he had leave to go forth, went privately to the King) brought this Message:

That his Majesty commands for the present they adjourn the House till to morrow morning, and that all Committees cease in the mean time. And the House was accordingly adjourned: and the King signified his pleasure to the Lord Keeper, that the House of Peers, and all the Committees thereof, should be adjourned till the morrow morning.

Friday the Sixth of June.

Mr. Speaker brings another Message from the King the day following.

Another Message from the King to the Commons.

IN my service to this House I have had many undeserved favours from you, which I shall ever with all humbleness acknowledge, but none can be greater than that testimony of your confidence yesterday shewed unto me, whereby I hope I have done nothing, or made any representation to his Majesty, but what is for the honour and service of this House; and I will have my tongue cleave to my mouth, before I will speak to the disadvantage of any Member thereof: I have now a Message to deliver unto you.

Whereas his Majesty understanding, that ye did conceive his last Message to restrain you in your just Privileges, to complain of any of his Ministers; these are to declare his intentions,

That he had no meaning of barring you from what hath been your Right, but only to avoid all scandals on his Council and Actions past, and that his Ministers might not be, nor himself, under their names, taxed for their Counsel unto his Majesty, and that no such particulars should be taken in hand; as would ask a longer time of consideration than what he hath prefixed, and still resolves to hold, that so, for this time, all Christendom might take notice of a sweet parting between him and his People: Which if it fall out, his Majesty will not be long from another Meeting, when such (if there be any) at their leisure and conveniency may be considered.

Mr. Speaker proceeded.

I will observe somewhat out of this Message; Ye may observe a great inclination in his Majesty to meet in this House. I was bold yesterday to take notice of that liberty ye gave me to go to his Majesty; I know there are none here but did imagine whither I went, and but that I knew ye were desirous and content that I should leave you, I would not have desired it. Give me leave to say, This Message bars you not of your Right in matter, nay, not in manner, but it reacheth to his Counsels past, and for giving him counsel in those things which he commanded. It is not his Majesties intentions to protect any Abettor of Spain. The end of this was, that we might meet again sweetly and happily.

The House of Lords likewise received this Message by the Lord Keeper.

MY Lords, his Majesty takes notice, to your great advantage, of the proceedings of this House upon the hearing of his Majesties Message yesterday; he accounts it a fair respect, that ye would neither agree of any Committee, nor send any Message to his Majesty, though it were in your own hearts, but yield your selves to his Majesties Message, and defer your own resolutions till you meet again at the time appointed by his Majesty. Yet his Majesty takes it in extream good part to hear what was in your heart, and especially that you were so sensible of the inconvenience that might ensue upon the breach of this Parliament: which if it had hapned, or shall hereafter happen, his Majesty assures himself, that he shall stand clear before God and Men of the occasion.

But his Majesty saith, Ye had just cause to be sensible of the danger, considering how the state of Christendom now stands in respect of the multitude and strength of our Enemies, and weakness on our part. All which his Majesty knows very exactly, and, in respect thereof, called this Parliament; the Particulars his Majesty holds it needful to recite, especially to your Lordships, since they are apparent to all men: Neither will it be needful to reiterate them to his Majesty, whose cares are most attentive upon them, and the best remedy that can be thought on therein, is, if his Subjects do their parts. Therefore his Majesty gives you hearty thanks, and bade me tell you, That nothing hath been more acceptable to him all the time of this Parliament, than this dutiful and discreet carriage of your Lordships, which, he professeth, hath been a chief motive to his Majesty, to suspend those intentions that were not far from a resolution.

Sir Robert Philips assumed the Debate upon the Message delivered by the Speaker, and said;

The King's Message gives the Commons more hope than formerly.

I Rise up with a disposition, somewhat in more hope of comfort than yesterday; yet in regard of the uncertainty of Counsels, I shall not change much: In the first place I must be bold without flattering, a thing not incident to me, to tell you (Mr. Speaker) you have not only at all times discharged the duty of a good Speaker, but of a good man, for which I render you many thanks.

Another respect touching his Majesties Answer to our Petition; First, if that Answer fall out to be short, I free his Majesty, and I believe his resolution was, to give that that we all expected: But in that, as in others, we have suffered, by reason of interposed persons between his Majesty and us; but this day is by intervenient accidents diverted from that, but so, as in time we go to his Majesty: therefore let us remove those jealousies in his Majesty of our Proceedings, that by some men over-grown, have been misrepresented: we have proceeded with temper in confidence of his Majesties goodness to us, and our fidelity to him, and if any have construed that what we have done hath been out of fear, let him know, we came hither Free-men, and will ever resolve to endure the worst; and they are poor men that make such interpretations of Parliaments; in this way and method we proceeded, and if any thing fall out unhappily, it is not King Charles that advised himself, but King Charles misadvised by others, and misled by misordered Counsel; it becomes us to consider what we were doing, and now to advise what is fit to be done. We were taking consideration of the State of the Kingdom, and to present to his Majesty the danger he and we are in, if since any man hath been named in particular (though I love to speak of my betters with humility) let him thank himself and his Counsels, but those necessary Jealousies give us occasion to name him; I assure my self we shall proceed with temper, and give his Majesty satisfaction, if we proceed in that way. His Majesties Message is now explanatory in point of our Liberties, that he intends not to barr us of our Rights, and that he would not have any aspersion cast on the Counsels past; let us present to his Majesty shortly and faithfully, and declare our intentions, that we intend not to lay any aspersions upon him, but out of necessity to prevent imminent dangers we are surrounded with, and to present to him the Affairs at home and abroad, and to desire his Majesty, that no interposition or misinformation of men in fault may prevail, but to expect the issue that shall be full of duty and loyalty.

The Commons sent a Message to the Lords, that they would joyn in an humble request to the King, that a clear and satisfactory Answer be given by his Majesty in full Parliament to the Petition of Right; whereunto the Lords did agree.

Afterward the House was turned again into a Committee, and considered of some more Heads to be inserted into the Declaration or Remonstrance, as the design to bring into this Nation Foreign Forces, under the command of Dolbier: And Burlemack was called into the House, who confessed, he received thirty thousand pound by Privy Seal for the buying of Horses, that one thousand of them are levied, that those Horse and their Riders are to come over, and Arms are provided for them in Holland; but he hears a Countermmand is gone to stay them.

Car. 4.

The Privy Seal is in these words.

CHARLES by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the faith, &c. to the Treasurer, and Under-Treasurer for our Exchequer for the time being, Greeting: We do hereby will and command you, out of our Treasury remaining in the Receipt of our said Exchequer, forthwith to pay, or cause to be paid unto Philip Burlemack of London, Merchant, the sum of Thirty thousand pounds, to be paid by him over by Bill of Exchange into the Low-Countries and Germany, unto our Trusty and Well-beloved Sir William Balfoure Kt. and John Dolbier Esquire, or either of them, for levying and providing certain numbers of Horses, with Arms for Horse and Foot, to be brought over into this Kingdom for our service, viz. for the levying and transporting of one thousand Horse, fifteen thousand pounds; for five thousand Muskets, five thousand Coxlets, and five thousand Pikes, ten thousand five hundred pounds; and for one thousand Curasars compleat, two hundred Coxlets and Carbines, four thousand five hundred pounds, amounting in the whole to the said sum of Thirty thousand pounds. And this our Letter shall be your sufficient Warrant, and discharge in this behalf. Given under our Privy Seal, at our Palace of Westminster, the Thirtieth of January, in the third year of our Reign.

June the seventh, the King came to the Lords House, and the House of Commons were sent for. And the Lord Keeper presented the humble Petition of both Houses, and said,

May it please your most excellent Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled, taking into consideration that the good intelligence between your Majesty and your People doth much depend upon your Majesties Answer unto their Petition of Right formerly presented; with unanimous consent do now become most humble Suitors unto your Majesty, that you would be pleased to give a clear and satisfactory Answer thereunto in full Parliament.

The Petition of both Houses to his Majesty for a further Answer to the Petition of Right.

Whereunto the King replied,

The Answer I have already given you was made with so good deliberation, and approved by the judgments of so many wise men, that I could not have imagined but it should have given you full satisfaction; But to avoid all ambiguous interpretations, and to shew you there is no doubleness in my meaning, I am willing to pleasure you as well in words as in substance, read your Petition, and you shall have an Answer that I am sure will please you.

The Petition was read, and this Answer was returned: Soit droit fais come il est desire.

C. R.

This

the House.

Anno 1628. This I am sure (said his Majesty) is full, yet no more than I granted you in my first Answer, for the meaning of that was to confirm your Liberties, knowing according to your own Protestations, that ye neither mean nor can hurt my Prerogative. And I assure you my Maxim is, That the Peoples Liberties strengthen the Kings Prerogative, and the Kings Prerogative is to defend the Peoples Liberties.

You see how ready I have shewed my self to satisfy your Demands, so that I have done my part; Wherefore if this Parliament have not a happy conclusion, the sin is yours, I am free from it.

At which the Commons were at last satisfied, and ordered all the grand Committees to cease, and that the House only proceed in the Grievances of most moment, and so they fell upon the Commission for Excise, which ran thus:

CHARLES, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To Sir Thomas Coventry Knight, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England; To James Earl of Malburg, Lord High Treasurer of England, Henry Earl of Manchester, Lord President of our Council, Edward Earl of Worcester, Lord Keeper of our Privy Seal, George Duke of Buckingham, Lord High Admiral of England, William Earl of Pembroke, Lord Steward of our Household, Philip Earl of Montgomery, Lord Chamberlain of our Household, Theophilus Earl of Suffolk, Edward Earl of Dorset, William Earl of Salisbury, Thomas Earl of Exeter, John Earl of Bridgewater, James Earl of Carlisle, Henry Earl of Holland, William Earl of Denbigh, George Earl of Totnes, Sir George Hay Knight, Lord Chancellor of Scotland, William Earl of Morton, Thomas Earl of Kelley, Thomas Earl of Mellers, Edward Viscount Conway, one of our principal Secretaries of State, Edward Viscount Wimpleton, Oliver Viscount Grandison, Henry Falkland Lord Deputy of Ireland; To the Lord Bishop of Winchester, William Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, Fulk Lord Brook, Dudley Ash Lord Carleton, Vice-Chamberlain of our Household, Sir Thomas Edmonds Treasurer of our Household, Sir John Savil Comptroller of our Household, Sir Robert Nanton Master of the Court of Wards, Sir John Cook one of the principal Secretaries of State, Sir Richard Weston Chancellor and under Treasurer of our Exchequer, Julius Caesar Master of the Rolls, and Sir Humphrey May Knight, Chancellor of our Duchy of Lancaster, Greeting. Whereas the present Conjuncture of the general Affairs of Christendom, and our own particular interest, in giving assistance unto our oppressed Allies, and for providing for the defence and safety of our own Dominions and People, do call upon us to neglect nothing that may conduce to those good ends: And because Monies (the principal Sinews of War, and one of the first and chiefest movers in all great Preparations and Actions) are necessary to be provided in the first place, and we are careful the same may be raised by such ways as may best stand with the State of our Kingdoms, and Subjects, and yet may answer the pressing occasions of the present times: We therefore, out of the experience we have had, and for the Trust

we repose in your Wisdoms, Fidelities, and dutiful Care of your Service; And for the experience we have of all great Causes concerning us, and our State, both as they have relation to foreign parts abroad, and as to our Commonwealth, and People at home (ye being persons called by us to be of our Privy Council) have thought fit amongst those great and important matters, which so much concern us, in the first and chiefest place, to recommend this to your special care and diligence.

And we do hereby Authorise and Appoint, and strictly Will and Require you, that speedily and seriously you enter into consideration of all the best and speediest ways and means ye can for raising of Monies for the most important occasions aforesaid: Which without extreamest hazard to us, our Dominions, and People, and to our friends and Allies, can admit of no long delay, the same to be done by Impositions, or otherwise, as in your wisdoms and best Judgments ye shall find to be most convenient in a case of this inevitable necessity, wherein form and Circumstance must be dispensed with, rather than the Substance be lost, and hazarded. And herein our will and pleasure is, that you, or as many of you, from time to time as can be spared from attendance upon Our Person, or other Our necessary Services, do use all diligence by your frequent meetings, and serious considerations. And when ye have brought any thing to maturity, ye make report thereof unto us, for the advancement of this great service, which with the greatest affection we can, we recommend to your best care and judgment, whereof ye must not fail, as ye tender Our Honour and Safety of our Dominions and People: And for doing hereof, these Presents shall be to you, and every of you, a sufficient Warrant and Discharge in that behalf: In witness whereof we have caused these Our Letters to be made Letters Patents; Witness Our Self at Westminster the last day of February in the third year of Our Reign.

Sir Edward Cook observed some Circumstances in the Commission.

First, It was after the Summons to the Parliament. Sure, some thought the Parliament should not be. 2. There is a Pudor in it, was kept secret, some great Lords never knew it. 3. The end of it was Excises, for they are Impositions, and to be sure he would have the word (otherwise) wherefore his advice was to go up to the Lords, and desire a Conference, to complain of the Commission, and desire it may be Cancelled, and if there be any Inrolment of it, to cancel that also, and that the Projector may be found out and punished.

A Conference with the Lords was desired by the Commons, which was managed by Sir Edward Cook.

My Lords,

Sir Edm.
Cook man-ageth the Conference between both Houses concerning
mission.

The Subject of this Conference is a Commission, therefore we shall desire your Lordships to hear it read, which was done accordingly. That which I shall deliver is certain Observations out of the Patent. First, The Persons to whom it is directed. 2. The Authority that is committed. 3. The great Penalty laid on them if they do it not. 4. The Time.

1. The Persons to whom it is directed are twenty three Lords, and other of his Majesties Council. 2. The Authority committed unto them, is to consider how Money may be levied by Impositions, or otherwise: It is true, it is but a power to levy Money by Imposition; We do not find any thing raised (that is left to your Lordships) but a Commission to levy Money by Imposition or otherwise; give us leave to fear that Excise, and whatever is comprehended in it, was intended. Sure I am, it is against the Law, it is a very high breach of your Lordships, and our the poor Commons Liberties, and yet this being ill in it self, may produce a happy effect: the King and both Houses have given a Judgment, the greatest that ever was against this in the Petition of Right, and when this Judgment is given, see how Gods goodness hath brought it to pass, that this Patent shall be part of Execution of that Judgment, to damn it for the punishment.

I do utterly dislike that Clause, as you tender the King's Honour; That that must come to a thing of this nature, and it is strange to me, I cannot dive into it, I leave it to your Lordships, for the time; it came out seven days after the Summons of Parliament; all knew the Parliament would decry this, but I hope it will now turn to good: I will not say it was kept secret.

That which I am to demand of your Lordships first, is, That as we having considered of this Commission, finding it ex diametro against the late Judgment in the Petition of Right, have condemned it; So your Lordships would concur with us as hitherto you have done.

2. That this Commission as a thing against Law, may be cancelled.

3. That if it be inrolled, A Vote may be made of it, and if not, that Order be taken that it be not inrolled.

4. That the Warrant may be damned and destroyed.

5. That it would please your Lordships in your wisdoms to take into consideration who is the Projector of this advice, and if he could be found out, that some exemplary punishment may be according to Justice inflicted on him.

The Lords accepted the motion, and promised to present the same to his Majesty.

This done, the House of Commons Voted that the Commission, the not guarding the narrow Seas, the decay of Trade, and other particulars be inserted in the Remonstrance.

And now they come to name the Duke of Buckingham, and his power with the King, to be their greatest grievance, and the cause of all the evil the Kingdom laboured under; these were said to be, not guarding the Seas, decay of Trade, disasters of our Armies, &c. and as to Religion, that he too much favoured the Papists and the Arminians, for that his Mother was a Papist, and that Montague and others usually resorted to Tork-house, several Members of that House, severally expressed themselves in this matter.

Car. 4.

Sir Robert Philips.

Sir Robert Philips was of Opinion to have the Declaration run thus, We conceive the greatness and power of the Duke of Buckingham is the chief cause of all these Evils. We are not in a way of Charge, but of a Remonstrance.

Sir John Elliot, &c.

Sir John Elliot, Sir Edward Cook, and Mr. Selden, were positively to name the Duke as the cause of our evils, for so said they, he had been already declared in the last Parliament, since when the causes are multiplied, and he hath deserved nothing better of the Commonwealth.

In this Debate Sir Humphrey May put them again in mind of the King's desire, that all personal aspersions might be forborn, that his Majesty will take it as an argument of their moderation and judgment, if they forbear in this Affair which would so nearly reflect upon him.

Sir Henry Martin.

Sir Henry Martin advised that the Remonstrance be so framed, as to make it passible to his Majesties judgment and affection: Let him be perswaded that it comes from a publick sense; and not from private ends. And he vindicated the Duke in point of Religion. 'Tis true, said he, his Mother is a Recusant, but never any thing more grieved him, and never did a Son use more means than he to convert her, and he hath no power over her; and for his own Lady, whom he found not firm in his Religion, he hath used means to confirm her. As for Arminians, I have often heard him protest, and vow against these Opinions. It is true, many that have skill therein, may have some credit with him, and make use of his noble nature for their own ends. One particular I know well, that some Gentlemen and Preachers of great esteem were questioned for a matter, wherein there was some error in the manner, of which they were presented; I told him of them, and that they were questioned; and he answered me, he would do the best he could for to countenance them.

Sir Benjamin Rudyard.

Sir Benjamin Rudyard gave his judgment, That if the matter be urged home, it will proclaim the man louder than we can in words. If we name excess of Power, and abuse of Power, it will reach to the Duke, and all others in future times: and to a Gentleman of honour, nothing is so dear as sense of Honour. I am witness, and do know that he did many great and good Offices to this House. If the forfeiture of my life could breed an Opinion, that ye should have no occasion to complain at your next meeting, I would pawn it to you. Nor let any man say, it is fear makes us desist, we have shewed already what we dare do.

Sir Thomas Jermin.

And because the employment of Dalbert had given much offence, Sir Thomas Jermin stood up in his defence, and said, He had given great evidence of his Trust and Fidelity. When the Count Palmere retired himself, and the Council agreed to send a party under Count

Mansfield

Mansfield to make a head, and the King sent word to the Palatine to be present in person, Dalbeer went along with him, with one more, and being in a Village in Germany, a Troop of fifty Horse met them, Dalbeer went to the Captain and said, We are in a Service, I will give you so many Crowns to conduct us; which was done, and Dalbeer went along with him.

In conclusion, June the Thirteenth, they came to this Resolve, That the excessive Power of the Duke of Buckingham, is the cause of the Evils and Dangers to the King and Kingdom; and that this be added to the Remonstrance.

And how the People were enraged by the Commons Resolve, may be seen; for the Rabble murdered one Lamb, commonly called Dr. Lamb, whom they called the Duke's Conjuror, publicly in the Streets of London, for which outrage the City was fined, and the Letter following, that the Actors and Abettors might be detected, and receive condign punishment, was directed to the City Magistrates.

A Letter to the City about Doctor Lamb's Death.

Whereas we are given to understand, That by the fury and outrage of divers dissolute and disorderly persons assembled together in great numbers without any resistance made, or course taken to suppress them (by the Magistrates to whom it appertained) one Lamb was in a barbarous manner slain and murdered, wherewith his Majesty having been likewise made acquainted, as he is very sensible of the scandal that may hereby be cast upon the Peace and Government of this Realm in general, when the chief City hereof, and where his own Person is resident, should by the remissness and neglect of Magistrates, in the execution of his Laws, suffer a fact and misdemeanour of so high a nature to be committed, and to pass unpunished: So he is very highly displeased thereat, and hath therefore commanded us in his name hereby streightly to charge and require your Lordship, &c. that with all care and diligence you do forthwith inquire out the principal Actors and Abettors therein, and to cause them to be apprehended and committed to Prison, and to be proceeded with, and punished in the severest manner that by the Laws of the Realm is provided against Offenders in so high a nature. And so, &c.

and Dr.
Laud suspected for Arminians.

Dr. Neal Bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Laud Bishop of Bath and Wells, were named by the Commons to be those near about the King who are suspected to be Arminians, and that they are justly suspected to be unsound in their Opinions that way; and the House proceeded in the Remonstrance against the Duke.

Mr. Selden.

And Mr. Selden proposed, That to the excessive Power of the Duke should be added the abuse of that Power, and since that abuse is the cause of these evils, that it be presented to his Majesty to consider, whether it be safe for the King and Commonwealth, that a man of his Power should be so near his Majesty, and it was ordered accordingly. The Remonstrance being agreed unto, it was appointed to be presented to the King, being as followeth.

The Commons Remonstrance against the Duke.

Most Dread Sovereign,

With humble thankfulness we pour dutiful Commons now Assembled in Parliament, do acknowledge the great comfort which we have in your Majesties pious and gracious disposition, so we think it a met and most necessary Duty, being called by your Majesty, to consult and advise of the great and urgent affairs of this Church, and Commonwealth, finding them at this time in apparent danger of ruin and destruction, faithfully, and dutiful to inform your Majesty thereof, and with bleeding hearts and bended knees, to crave your speedy redress therein, as to your own wisdom (unto which we most humbly submit our selves and our desires) shall seem most meet and convenient. What the multitude and potency of your Majesties Enemies are abroad; What be their malicious and ambitious ends; and how vigilant and constantly industrious they are in pursuing the same, is well known to your Majesty; Together with the dangers threatened thereby to your Sacred Person, and your Kingdoms, and the Calamities which have already fallen, and do daily increase upon your Friends and Allies, of which we are well assured your Majesty is most sensible, and will accordingly in your great wisdom, and with the gravest and most mature Counsel, according to the exigency of the times and occasions, provide to prevent and help the same.

To which end we most humbly intreat your Majesty first, and especially to cast your eyes upon the miserable condition of this your own Kingdom, of late so strangely weakened, and dejected, that unless through your Majesties most gracious Wisdom, Goodness, and Justice, it be speedily raised to a better condition, it is in no little danger to become a sudden prey to the Enemies thereof; and of the most happy and flourishing, to be the most miserable and contemptible Nation in the world. In the discoveries of which dangers, mischiefs, and inconveniences lying upon us, we do freely protest that it is far from our thoughts to lay the least aspersion upon your Sacred Person, or the least scandal upon your Government; for we do in all sincerity of our hearts, not only for our selves, but in the Name of all the Commons of the Realm (whom we present) ascribe as much duty, as a most loyal and affectionate people can do, unto the best King, (for so you are, and so have been pleased abundantly to express your self this present Parliament by your Majesties clear and satisfactory answer to our Petition of Right: For which both our selves and our posterity shall bless God for you, and ever preserve a thankful memory of your great goodness and justice therein,) and we do verily believe, that all or most of these things which we shall now present unto your Majesty, are either unknown unto you, or else by some of your Majesties Ministers offered under such specious pretences as may hide their own ill intentions, and ill consequences of them, from your Majesty. But we assure our selves according to the good good example of your Majesties Predecessors, nothing can make your Majesty (being a wise and judicious Prince, and above all things desirous of the Welfare of your People) more in love with Parliaments than this, which is one of the principal ends of calling them, that therein your Majesty may be truly informed of the state of all the several parts of your Kingdom, and how your Officers and Ministers do behave themselves in the trust reposed in them by your Majesty, which is scarce able to be made known unto you, but in Parliament, as was declared by your blessed Father, when he was pleased to put the Commons in Parliament assembled in mind, That it would be the greatest unfaithfulness, and breach of Duty to his Majesty, and of the trust committed to them by the Country that could be, if in setting forth the Grievances of the People, and the condition of all the parts of this Kingdom from whence they come, they did not deal clearly with him, without fearing any how near and dear soever they were unto him, if they were hurtful or dangerous to the Commonwealth.

In confidence therefore of your Majesties gracious acceptation in a matter of so high importance, and in faithful discharge of our Duties; We do first of all most humbly beseech your Majesty to take notice that howsoever we know your Majesty doth with your soul abhor, that any such thing should be imagined or attempted; Yet there is a general fear conceived in your people of secret working and combination to introduce into their Kingdom innovation and change of our holy Religion, more precious unto us than our lives, and whatever this world can afford. And our fears and jealousies herein are not merely conjectural, but arising out of such certain and visible effects, as may demonstrate a true and real Cause; For notwithstanding the many good and wholesome Laws, and the Provisions made to prevent the increase of Popery within this Kingdom, and notwithstanding your Majesties most gracious and satisfactory Answer to the Petition of both Houses in that behalf, presented to your Majesty at Oxford; We find there hath followed no good execution nor effect, but on the contrary (at which your Majesty out of the quick sense of your own Religious heart cannot but be in the highest measure displeased) those of that Religion do find extraordinary favours and respect in Court from persons of great quality and power, whom they continually resort unto, and in particular to the Countess of Buckingham, who her self openly professing that Religion is a known favourer and supporter of them that do the same, which we well hoped upon your Majesties Answer to the aforesaid Petition at Oxford, should not have been permitted, nor that any of your Majesties Subjects of that Religion, justly to be suspected, should be entertained in the service of your Majesty, or your Royal Consort the Queen. Some likewise of that Religion have had Honours, Offices, and places of Command and Authority lately conferred upon them. But that which striketh the greatest terror into the hearts of your Royal Subjects concerning this, is, that Letters of Stay of Legal proceedings against them have been procured from your Majesty (by what indirect means we know not.) And Commissions under the Great Seal, granted and executed for composition to be made with Popish Recusants, with Inhibitions and Restraint both to the Ecclesiastical and Temporal Courts and Officers, to intermeddle with them, which is conceived to amount to no less than a Toleration, odious to God, full of dishonour, and extreme disprofit to your Majesty, of extreme scandal and grief to your good People, and of apparent danger to the present state of your Majesty, and of this Kingdom, their numbers, power, and insolency daily increasing in all parts of your Kingdom, and especially about London, and the Suburbs thereof, where exceeding many Families do make their abode, publickly frequent Masques at Denmark-house, and other places, and by their often meetings and conferences, have opportunities of combining their Counsels and Strength together, to the hazard of your Majesties safety, and the State, and most especially in these doubtful and calamitous times. And as our fear concerning change or subversion of Religion is grounded upon the daily increase of Papists, the open and professed Enemies thereof, for the Reasons formerly mentioned; So are the hearts of your good Subjects no less perplexed, when with sorrow they behold a daily growth and spreading of the Faction of the Arminians, that being, as your Majesty well knows, but a cunning way to bring in Popery, and the professors of those Opinions, the common disturbers of the Protestant Churches, and Incendiaries in those States wherein they have gotten any Head, being Protestants in shew, but Jesuits in Opinion; which caused your Royal Father, with so much pious wisdom, and ardent zeal, to endeavour the suppressing of them, as well at home as in the Neighbour Countreys. And your gracious Majesty, imitating his most worthy Example, hath openly, and by your Proclamation declared your dislike of those persons, and of their opinions; who notwithstanding are much favoured and advanced, not wanting friends even of the Clergy, near to your Majesty; namely, Doctor Neal Bishop of Winchester, and Doctor Laud Bishop of Bath and Wells, who are justly suspected to be unsound in their Opinions that way. And it being now generally held the way to preferment and promotion in the Church, many Scholars do bend the course of their Studies to maintain those Errors; their Books and Opinions are suffered to be printed and published; and on the other side, the imprinting of such as are written against them, and in defence of the Orthodox Church, are hindered and prohibited; and (which is a boldness almost incredible) this restraint of Orthodox Books, is made under colour of your Majesties formerly mentioned Proclamation, the intent and meaning whereof we know was quite contrary. And further, to increase our fears concerning Innovation of Religion, we find, that there hath been no small labouring to remove that which is the most powerful means to strengthen and increase our own Religion, and to oppose both those, which is the diligent teaching and instruction of the people in the true knowledge and worship of Almighty God. And there-

force means hath been sought out to depresse and discountenance pious, and painful, and Orthodox Preachers, and how conformable soever, and peaceable in their disposition and carriage they be, yet the preferment of such is opposed, and instead of being encouraged, they are molested with vexatious courses, and pursuits, and hardly permitted to Lecture. And in those places where are no constant preaching Ministers, whereby many of your good people (whose Souls, in this case, we beseech your Majesty to commiserate) are kept in ignorance, and are apt to be easily seduced to error and superstition: It doth not a little also increase our dangers and fears this way, to understand the miserable condition of your Kingdom of Ireland, where, without controul, the Popish Religion is openly professed and practised in every part thereof, Popish Jurisdiction being there generally exercised and avowed, Monasteries, Pinneries, and other superstitious Houses newly created, re-edified, and replenished with men and women of several Orders, in a plentiful manner maintained at Dublin, and most of the great Towns, and divers other places of the Kingdom; which, of what ill consequence it may prove, if not seasonably repressed, we leave to your Majesties wisdom to judge: But most humbly beseech you (as we assure our selves you will) to lay the serious consideration thereof to your royal and pious Heart, and that some speedy course may be taken for redress therein.

And if now to all these your Majesty will be pleased to add the consideration of the Circumstances of time, wherein these courses, tending to the destruction of true Religion, within these your Kingdoms, have been taken here, even then when the same is with open force and violence prosecuted in other Countreys, and all the Reformed Churches in Christendom, either depressed, or miserably distressed: We do humbly appeal unto your Majesties Princely Judgment, whether there be not just ground of fear that there is some secret and strong co-operating here with the Enemies of our Religion abroad, for the utter extirpation thereof? and whether, if those courses be not speedily redressed, and the profession of true Religion more encouraged, we can expect any other but misery and ruin speedily to fall upon us? especially, if besides the visible and apparent dangers wherewith we are compassed about, you would be pleased to remember the displeasure of Almighty God, always bent against the neglect of his holy Religion, the strokes of whose Divine Justice we have already felt, and do still feel with smart and sorrow in great measure.

And besides this fear of Innovation in Religion, we do in like faithful discharge of our Duties, most humbly declare to your Majesty, that the hearts of your People are full of fear of Innovation and Change of Government, and accordingly possessed with extreme grief and sorrow; yet in this point by your Majesties late Answer to our Petition of Right touching our Liberties much comforted, and raised again out of that sadness and discontent, which they generally had conceived throughout the whole Kingdom, for the undue courses which were the last year taken for raising of Monies by Loans, (than which (whatever your Majesty hath been informed to the contrary) there were never any Monies demanded nor paid with greater grief, and general dislike of all your faithful Subjects; though many, partly out of fear, and partly out of other respects (yet most unwillingly) were drawn to yield to what was required.

The Billeting of Soldiers did much augment both their fears and grief, wherein likewise they find much comfort upon your gracious Answer to our Petition of Right, and to that we presented to your Majesty concerning this particular. Yet we most humbly beseech your Majesty, that we may inform you, that the still continuance, and late re-enforcing of those Soldiers, the conditions of their persons (many of them not being Natives of this Kingdom, nor of the same, but of an opposite Religion) the placing them upon the Sea-coast, where making head amongst themselves, they may unite with the Popish Party at home, if occasion serve, and joyn with an invading Enemy to do extreme mischief; and that they are not yet dismissed, both still minister cause of jealousy in your loving Subjects; for that the Soldiers cannot be continued without exceeding great danger of the peace and safety of your Kingdom.

The report of the strange and dangerous purpose of bringing in German Hozle and Riders, would have turned our doubts into despair, and our fears into a certainty of confusion, had not your Majesties gracious Message (for which we humbly give you thanks) comforted us by the assurance of your Royal Word, that they neither are, nor were intended by your Majesty, for any service in England, but that they were designed for some other Foreign Imployment. Yet the sight of the Privy Seal, by which, it seemeth, they were to be levied; the great sums of Money, which, upon examinations, we found to be paid for that purpose, gave us just cause of fear, That much about the same time there was a Commission under the Great Seal granted unto the Lords, and others of the Privy Council, to consider of other ways for raising of Monies, so particularly by Impositions, gave us just cause to suspect, that whatsoever was your Majesties gracious intention, yet there wanted not those, that under some colourable pretence, might secretly by this, as by other ways, contrive to change the frame both of Religion and Government, and thereby undermine the safety of your Majesty, and your Kingdoms.

These men could not be ignorant, that the bringing in of Strangers for aid, hath been pernicious to most States, where they have been admitted, but to England fatal. We do bless God that hath given your Majesty a wise understanding heart to discern of those courses, and that such power produceth nothing but weakness and calamity. And we beseech your Majesty to pardon the vehemency of our expression, if in the Royal and Zealous affections we bear to your Majesty and your Service, we are bold to declare to your Majesty, and the whole whole World, that we hold it far beneath the heart of any free English-man to think, that this victorious Nation should now stand in need of German Soldiers to defend their now King and Kingdom.

But when we consider the course formerly mentioned, and these things tending to an apparent change of Government, the often breaches of Parliament, whereby your Majesty hath been deprived of the faithful Counsel, and free Aids of your People, by taking of Tunnage and Poundage, without grant thereof by Act of Parliament, ever since the beginning of your Majesties Reign to this present, The standing Commission granted to the Duke of Buckingham to be General of an Army in the Land in the time of Peace, the discharging of faithful and sufficient Officers and Ministers, some from Judicial places, and others from the Offices and Authorities which they formerly held in the Commonwealth: We cannot but at the sight of such an apparent desolation as must necessarily follow these courses, out of the depth of sorrow, lift up our cries to Heaven for help, and next, under God, apply our selves unto your Sacred Majesty, who, if you could hear so many thousand speaking together, do joyntly implore speedy help and Reformation.

And if your Majesty would be pleased to take a further view of the present state of your Realm, we do humbly pray you to consider, Whether the miserable Disasters, and ill success that hath accompanied all your late designs and actions, particularly that of Calés, and the Isle of Rhee, and the last Expedition to Rochel, have not extreemly wasted that Stock of Honour that was left unto this Kingdom, sometimes terrible to all other Nations, and now declining to contempt beneath the meanest.

Together with our Honours, we there lost those (and that not a few) who had they lived, we might have some better hope of recovering it again, our valiant and expert Colonels, Captains, and Commanders, and many thousand common Soldiers and Mariners: Though we have some cause to think, that your Majesty is not as yet rightly informed thereof; and that of six or seven thousand of your Subjects lost at the Isle of Rhee, your Majesty received information but of a few hundreds. And this dishonour and loss hath been purchased with the consumption of above a million of Treasure.

Many of the Forts are exceeding weak, and decayed, and want both Men and Munition. And here we cannot but with grief consider, and complain of a strange providence (we think your Majesty will rather call it Treachery) That your Store of Powder, which, by Order of your Privy Council, dated the Tenth of December, 1625. should be constantly Three hundred Last, besides a continual Supply of Twenty Last a Month for ordinary Expences, and were now fit (as we conceive) to be double the proportion, is at this time in the Tower (the present Warrants being served) but Nine Lasts and forty eight pounds in all; which we tremble to think of. And that notwithstanding this extreame scarcity of Powder, great quantities have been permitted to be sold out of your Majesties Store, to particular persons for private gain; whereof we have seen a Certificate, six Last sold thence the fourteenth of January last, and your Majesties Store being unfurnished of Powder, which by a contract made with Mr. Evelyn by advice of your Lords in Parliament, ought to be supplied monthly with Twenty Last, at the rate of Three pound ten shillings ten pence a Barrel; your Majesty hath been forced to pay above Seven pound a Barrel for Powder, to be brought in from beyond Seas; for which purpose, Twelve thousand four hundred pounds was impressed to Mr. Burlemack the last year, and that Powder not so good as that by Contract your Majesty should have, by one third part: All which are most fearful and dangerous abuses. But what the poverty, weakness, and misery of our Kingdom is now grown unto by decay of Trade, and destruction and loss of Ships and Mariners, within these three years, we are almost afraid to declare; And could we by any other means have been sure, that your Majesty should any other way have had a true information thereof, we should have been doubtful to have made our weakness, and extremity of misfortune in this kind, to appear: But the inopportune and most pitiful complaints from all parts of the Kingdom near adjoining to the Sea in this kind, would rend, as we think, the stoneiest heart in the world with sorrow, and the sense we have of the miserable condition your Kingdom is in by reason thereof, especially, for that we see no possible means (being now shortly to end this Session) how to help the same, adds such a weight of grief unto our sad thoughts, as we have not words to express it: But for your Majesties more exact information therein, we beseech you be pleased to peruse the Calendar of particulars, which, with the Remonstrance, we most humbly present unto your Majesty.

One reason amongst many of this decay of Trade, and loss of Ships and Mariners, is, the not guarding of the Narrow Seas, the Regality whereof, your Majesty hath now in a manner wholly lost, being that wherein a principal part of the Honour and Safety of this Kingdom heretofore consisted; and now having absolutely neglected it, the Town of Dunkirk doth so continually rob and spoil your Subjects, that we can assure your Majesty (if some present and effectual remedy be not forthwith provided) the whole Trade of this Kingdom, the Shipping, Mariners, and all belonging thereunto, will be utterly lost and consumed. The principal cause of which evils and dangers we conceive to be the excessive power of the Duke of Buckingham, and the abuse of that power: And we humbly submit unto your Majesties excellent wisdom, whether it be safe for your Self or your Kingdoms, that so great power as rests in him by Sea and Land, should be in the hands of any one Subject whatsoever.

And as it is not safe, so sure we are, it cannot be so for your service, it being impossible for one man to manage so many and weighty Affairs of the Kingdom as he hath undertaken, besides the ordinary Duties of those Officers

Anno 1628. Offices which he holds, some of which well performed, would require the time and industry of the ablest men both of Counsel and Action, that your whole Kingdom will afford, especially in these times of common danger.

And our humble desire is further, That your most excellent Majesty will be pleased to take into your most Princely consideration, whether, in respect the said Duke hath so abused his Power, it be safe for your Majesty and your Kingdom, to continue him either in his great Offices, or in his place of nearness and Counsel about your Sacred Person.

And this in all humility, aiming at nothing but the Honour of Almighty God, and the maintenance of his true Religion, the safety and happiness of your most excellent Majesty, and the preservation and prosperity of this Church and Commonwealth; we have endeavoured, with faithful hearts and intentions, and in discharge of the duty we owe to your Majesty and our Countrey, to give your Majesty a true representation of our present danger, and pressing calamities, which we humbly beseech your Majesty graciously to accept, and to take the same to heart, accounting the safety and prosperity of your People, your greatest happiness, and their love, your richest Treasure. A rueful and lamentable spectacle, we confess, it must needs be, to behold those ruins in so fair an House, so many Diseases, and almost every one of them deadly, in so strong and well tempered a Body as this Kingdom lately was. But yet we will not doubt, but that God hath reserved this Honour for your Majesty, to restore the safety and happiness thereof, as a work worthy so excellent a Prince, for whose long life and true felicity we daily pray, and that your fame and never-dying Glorie may be continued to all succeeding Generations.

Hereupon a Message was sent to his Majesty, desiring access to his Person with the Remonstrance, and the Speaker was appointed to deliver it; who much desired to be excused, but the House would not give way thereunto. The House also sent up the Bill of Subsidy unto the Lords. Soon after the King sends a Message by Sir Humphrey May, that he means to end this Session on the 26. of June: Whereupon the Commons fall upon the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage. In the mean time, this ensuing Order concerning the Duke was made in the Star-chamber, upon the signification of his Majesties pleasure, viz. That his Majesty of his own certain knowledge, as well as by other proofs, being certified of the Dukes Innocency, that all the proceedings be in that Court taken off the File.

ON the Sixteenth of June the Duke desired leave of the House of Peers to vindicate himself in the House of Commons for some words falsely charged upon (as spoken by) him, by Mr. Leveson, a Member of the Commons House; and he had leave by the House given him so to do, and they ordered that the Duke shall be left to himself to do herein what he thinks best in the House of Commons: Whereupon the Duke gave their Lordships thanks, and protested upon his Honour, that he never had those words so much as in his thoughts. The which Protestation the Lords commanded to be entered, that the Duke may make use thereof as need shall be.

At the same time the Duke also charged one Mr. Melvin for speaking words against him to this purpose.

First, That Melvin said, That the Duke's Plot was, that the Parliament should be dissolved, and that the Duke and the King, with a great Army of Horse and Foot, would war against the Commonalty, and that Scotland should assist him; so that when War was amongst our selves, the Enemy should come in; for this Kingdom is already sold to the Enemy by the Duke.

2. That the Duke had a stronger Counsel than the King, of which were certain Jesuits, Scotch-men, and that they did sit in Counsel every night, from one of the Clock till three.

3. That when the King had a purpose to do any thing of what consequence soever, the Duke could alter it.

4. That when the Ordnance was ship'd at St. Martin's, the Duke caused the Soldiers to go on, that they might be destroyed.

5. That the Duke said, he had an Army of 16000 Foot, and 1200 Horse.

6. That King James's blood, and Marquis Hamilton's, with others, cries out for vengeance to Heaven.

7. That he could not expect any thing but ruine of this Kingdom.

8. That Prince Henry was poisoned by Sir Thomas Overbury, and he himself served with the same sauce, and that the Earl of Somerset and others could say much to this.

9. That he himself had a Cardinal to his Uncle, or near Kinsman, whereby he had great intelligence.

About the same time the Lord Keeper reported to the House of Lords what his Majesty said, touching the Commission of Excise: viz.

That their Lordships had reason to be satisfied with what was truly and rightly told them by the Lords of the Council, that the Commission for Excise before mentioned, was no more but a Warrant of Advice, which his Majesty knew to be agreeable to the time, and the manifold occasions then in hand; but now having a Supply from the loves of his People, he esteems the Commission useles; and therefore though he knows no cause why any jealousy should have risen thereby, yet, at their desires, he is content it be cancelled; and he hath commanded me to bring both the Commission and Warrant to him, and it shall be cancelled in his own presence.

The day following he reported, that his Majesty had cancelled the Commission, and the Warrant for putting the Seal thereunto, and did there openly shew it; and a Message was sent to the Commons to shew them the said cancelled Commission and Warrant.

The Commons resume again the Debate upon the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage; whereupon Mr. Selden said, Whereas the King's Council objected that 1 Eliz. saith, It was granted time out of mind to the King, I fear his Majesty is told so, and some body doth ascertain him so: But we may clear that, for not only 1 Eliz. but also in the Statute of 1 Jac. the word Time out of Mind is, That whereas H. 7. and other his Majesties Progenitors, have had some Subsidy for the guarding of the Seas; and there was never a King but had some Subsidy, in that sense it is indeed time out of mind; yet is it a matter of free gift: For publick Bills, the King saith, Le Roy veult, for Petitions of Right, Soit droit fait come est desire.

For the Bill of Subsidies, it is thus, The King heartily thanking the Subjects for their good wills; In all the Bills of Tonnage and Poundage is the very same Answer, save one, which was 1 Eliz. and but for that only mistake of the Clerk, it hath ever the same assent as the Bill of Subsidy.

Upon the Debate the Commons order a Remonstrance against the undue taking of Tonnage and Poundage and Impositions without Act of Parliament, which Remonstrance followeth.

The Commons Remonstrance of Tonnage and Poundage.

Most gracious Sovereign,

The Commons Remonstrance of Tonnage and Poundage.

Your Majesties most Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, being in nothing more careful, than of the Honour and Prosperity of your Majesty, and the Kingdom, which they know do much depend upon that happy union and relation betwixt your Majesty and your People; do, with much sorrow, apprehend, that by reason of the incertainty of their continuance together, the unexpected interruptions which have been cast upon them, and the shortness of time in which your Majesty hath determined to end this Session, they cannot bring to maturity and perfection, divers businesses of weight, which they have taken into their consideration and resolution, as most important for the common good: Amongst other things, they have taken into especial care the preparing of a Bill, for the granting of your Majesty such a Subsidy of Tonnage and Poundage, as might uphold your Profit and Revenue in as ample a manner, as their just care, and respect of Trade (wherein not only the Prosperity, but even the Life of the Kingdom doth consist) would permit: But being a Work which will require much time, and preparation by Conference with your Majesties Officers, and with the Merchants, not only of London, but of other remote parts, they find it not possible to be accomplished at this time: Wherefore considering it will be much more prejudicial to the Right of the Subject, if your Majesty should continue to receive the same, without Authority of Law, after the determination of a Session, than if there had been a Recess by Adjournment only, in which case, that intended Grant would have related to the first day of the Parliament; and assuring themselves, that your Majesty is resolved to observe that your Royal Answer, which you have lately made to the Petition of Right of both Houses of Parliament; Yet doubting lest your Majesty may be misinformed concerning this particular case, as if you might continue to take those Subsidies of Tonnage and Poundage, and other Impositions upon Merchants, without breaking that Answer, they are forced, by that duty which they owe to your Majesty, and to those whom they represent, to declare, That there ought not any Imposition to be laid upon the Goods of Merchants, Exported or Imported, without common consent by Act of Parliament, which is the Right and Inheritance of your Subjects, founded not only upon the most Ancient and Original Constitution of this Kingdom, but often confirmed and declared in divers Statute Laws.

And for the better manifestation thereof, may it please your Majesty to understand, That although your Royal Predecessors, the Kings of this Realm, have often had such Subsidies and Impositions granted unto them, upon divers occasions, especially for the guarding of the Seas, and safeguard of Merchants: Yet the Subjects have been ever careful to use such Cautions and Limitations in those Grants, as might prevent any Claim to be made, that such Subsidies do proceed from Duty, and not from the free Gift of the Subjects. And that they have heretofore used to limit a time in such Grants, and for the most part but short, as for a year or two, and if it were continued longer, they have sometimes directed a certain space of Cessation or Intermission, that so the Right of the Subject might be more evident. At other times it hath been granted upon occasion of War, for a certain number of years, with proviso, That if the War were ended in the mean time, then the Grant should cease: And of course it hath been sequestered into the hands of some Subjects, to be employed for the guarding of the Seas. And it is acknowledged by the ordinary Answers of your Majesties Predecessors, in their Assent to the Bills of Subsidies of Tonnage and Poundage, that it is of the nature of other Subsidies, proceeding from the good will of the Subject: Very few of your Predecessors had it for life, until the Reign of Henry the Seventh, who was so far from conceiving he had any right thereunto, that although he granted Commissions for collecting certain Duties and Customs due by Law, yet he made no Commissions for receiving the Subsidy of Tonnage and Poundage, until the same was granted unto him in Parliament. Since his time, all the Kings and Queens of this Realm have had the like Grants for life, by the free love and good will of the Subjects. And whensoever the people have been grieved, by laying any Impositions or other Charges upon their Goods and Merchandizes, without Authority of Law (which hath been very seldom) Yet upon complaint in Parliament, they have been forthwith relieved; saving in the time of your Royal Father, who having, through ill Counsel, raised the Rates and Charges upon Merchandizes to that height at which they now are, yet he was pleased so far forth to yield to the Complaint of his people, as to offer, That if the value of those Impositions which he had set might be made good unto him, he would bind himself and his Heirs, by Act of Parliament, never to lay any other: Which offer, the Commons at that time, in regard of the great burden, did not think fit to yield unto. Nevertheless, your Loyal Commons in this Parliament, out of their especial zeal to your Service, and especial regard of

Car. 4.

Anno 1628. of your pressing occasions, have taken into their consideration, so to frame a Grant of Subsidy of Tonnage or Poundage to your Majesty, that both you might have been the better enabled for the defence of your Realm, and your Subjects, by being secure from all undue Charges, be the more encouraged cheerfully to proceed in their course of Trade; by the increase whereof, your Majesties profit, and likewise the strength of the Kingdom, would be very much augmented.

But not being now able to accomplish this their desire, there is no course left unto them, without manifest breach of their duty, both to your Majesty and their Countrey, save only to make this humble Declaration. That the receiving of Tonnage and Poundage, and other Impositions, not granted by Parliament, is a breach of the Fundamental Liberties of this Kingdom, and contrary to your Majesties Royal Answer to the said Petition of Right. And therefore they do most humbly beseech your Majesty, to forbear any further receiving of the same; and not to take it in ill part from those of your Majesties loving Subjects, who shall refuse to make payment of any such Charges, without warrant of Law demanded.

And as by this forbearance, your most Excellent Majesty shall manifest unto the World your Royal Justice, in the observation of your Laws: So they doubt not, but hereafter, at the time appointed for their coming again, they shall have occasion to express their great desire to advance your Majesties Honour and Profit.

June 26. The Speaker being sent for to the King at Whitehall, came not into the House till about Nine a Clock. The Remonstrance concerning Tonnage and Poundage being ingrossed, was then a reading in the House: the King sent for the Speaker, and the whole House to attend him at the House of Peers, and made the Speech following.

The King ends this Session in Person, and declares the reason.

'T may seem strange, that I came so suddenly to end this Session, before I give my assent to the Bills; I will tell you the cause, though I must avow, that I owe the account of my actions to God alone. It is known to every one, that a while ago the House of Commons gave me a Remonstrance, how acceptable every man may judge; and for the merit of it, I will not call that in question, for I am sure no wise man can justify it.

Now since I am truly informed, That a second Remonstrance is preparing for me to take away the profit of my Tonnage and Poundage, one of the chief maintenances of my Crown, by alledging, I have given away my Right thereto by my Answer to your Petition:

This is so prejudicial unto me, that I am forced to end this Session some few hours before I meant, being not willing to receive any more Remonstrances, to which I must give a harsh Answer. And since I see, that even the House of Commons begins already to make false constructions of what I granted in your Petition, lest it be worse interpreted in the Countrey, I will now make a Declaration

The profession of both Houses in the time of hammering this Petition, was no way to trench upon my Prerogative, saying, they had neither intention or power to hurt it. Therefore it must needs be conceived, that I have granted no new, but only confirmed the ancient Liberties of my Subjects. Yet to shew the clearness of my Intentions, that I neither repent, nor mean to recede from any thing I have promised you, I do here declare my self, That those things which have been done, whereby many have had some cause to expect the Liberties of the Subjects to be trenched upon, which indeed was the first and true ground of the Petition, shall not hereafter be drawn in to example for your prejudice, and from time to time, in the word of a King, ye shall not have the like cause to complain. But as for Tonnage and Poundage, it is a thing I cannot want, and was never intended by you to ask, nor meant by me, I am sure to grant.

To conclude, I command you all that are here to take notice of what I have spoken at this time, to be the true intent and meaning of what I granted you in your Petition; but especially you, my Lords, the Judges, for to you only, under me, belongs the interpretation of Laws, for none of the Houses of Parliament, either joyned or separate, (what new Doctrine soever may be raised) have any power either to make or declare a Law without my consent.

After the King had ended, the Bill of Subsidy was delivered to the Speaker, standing at the Bar in the Lords House, who made a short Speech, and shewed, that it was the greatest gift that ever was given in so short a time. And so craving pardon for the errors of the House, and his own, he craved the King's Royal Assent to the Bills, which his Majesty did accordingly.

And the Lord Keeper after said, It is his Majesties pleasure that this Session now end, and that the Parliament be Prorogued till the Twentieth of October next.

After the Prorogation of the Parliament, Dr. Manwaring's Sermon was suppressed by Proclamation; and also a Commission was ordered by his Majesty to several Gentlemen, whom his Majesty named his Commissioners to compound with Recusants for the two parts of three of their Estates due to the King, as forfeited by them for their Recusancy; and they were said to come off at very easie rates: and farther, that some of them had Letters of Grace and Protection, but how truly, I know not; and this was followed by a Proclamation against Richard Smith Bishop of Calcedon, &c. and that diligent search should be made for all Priests and Jesuits, and others that have taken Orders from the See of Rome, that they should be apprehended and committed in order to their Trials, and if then convicted, they should be committed to the Castle of Wisbitch, and be under close restraint, that they might not exercise their Function, or spread any their Errors: and hereupon a Letter was writ by the Privy Council to the Bishop of Ely, as followeth:

Wherewith

1628.

With Priests be sent to Witch.

Whereas his Majesty hath been informed, that the Romish Priests, Jesuites, and Seminaries lurking in this Kingdom, do obstinately and maliciously continue their wonted practices to supplant the true Religion established, and to seduce his People from obedience, stir up Sedition, and subvert the State and Government so far as it lyeth in their power: His Majesty therefore hath commanded us to signifie unto your Lordships, that it is his express will and pleasure, according to his Declaration in Parliament, and his Royal Proclamation since published, you shall forthwith prepare and make ready the Castle of Wisbitch, in the Isle of Ely, to receive and lodge all such Priests, Jesuites, and Seminaries, and other Prisoners, as shall be hereafter sent thither, and there treat and govern them according to such instructions and directions, as shall be prescribed by this Board.

The Jesuites taken at Clerkenwell, and mentioned before, were ordered to Newgate, and if upon Trial they were Convicted, were to be sent to Wisbitch; and upon Information of a great resort of Papists to London, Orders were sent to the Lord Mayor to cause diligent search to be made to find out how many were Inhabitants, Inmates or Lodgers, with their Names and Qualities, and to certifie to the Board.

In this Interval of Parliament, Sir Richard Weston was preferred from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to be Lord Treasurer of England; and at the same time Bishop Laud was translated from the See of Bath and Wells to that of London. And Mr. Montague was designed Bishop of Chichester; nevertheless his Book Entituled, Appello Casarem, was by publick Order called in, his Majesty declaring, That out of his care to maintain the Church in the unity of true Religion, and the bond of Peace, to prevent unnecessary disputes, he had lately caused the Articles of Religion to be re-printed, as a rule for avoiding diversities of opinions; and considering that a Book written by Richard Montague, now Bishop of Chichester, intituled, Appello Casarem, was the first cause of those disputes and differences, which since have much troubled the quiet of the Church, he would take away occasion, by commanding all persons that had any of those Books in their hands, to deliver them to the Bishop of the Diocess; or, if it be in either Universities, to the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor thereof, who were commanded to suppress them. And if any by Preaching, Reading, or making of Books pro and contra, concerning those unnecessary questions, shall revive the difference, he was resolved to take such order with them, and those Books, as they shall wish they had never thought upon those needless Controversies.

Notwithstanding this Proclamation, both that Book, and also the several answers to it of Dr. Fealy, Dr. Goad, Mr. Yard, Mr. Yates, Mr. Wor-ton, and Mr. Rouse came all abroad, and neither party did refrain, though some were hereafter questioned for it; But Dr. Montague, and Dr. Manwaring procured their Pardons from his Majesty, and the later was preferred afterwards to the Rectory of Stamford-Rivers in Essex.

And now again was a Naval Royal Equipped for the relief of Rochel, under the Duke of Buckingham, who being at Portsmouth in order to his Embarquation, and to the giving the necessary Orders, he was on the 23 of August, in his own Lodging, sitting himself to wait on the King; he hastily called for Breakfast, his Servants attending the Sewer to bring in the Meat, the Duke came down Stairs from his upper Chamber to eat in a lower Parlour, turning in at the foot of the Stairs in a narrow Entry, and Sir Thomas Friar, one of his Colonels, following him to the Parlour door, stooping to take his leave, the Duke declining, embraced Friar with these words, Honest Tom, and so turning into the Room, one John Felton at that Instant, shaddowed behind them, Stabbed him to the Heart with a back-blow of a Coustel-knife, which stuck in his Body till the Duke dragg'd it out, and so enlarged the Orifice that it streamed with the effusion of so much Blood and Spirit that instantly he died, not able (it seems) to utter a Syllable; and certainly no Soul there present, for he fell backward into the Parlour, and the Assassinate fled: nor could any creature discern the Murderer, but by several suppositions of those that were left last above with the Duke: and therefore some cried out upon Soukier, the French-man, Friar, whilst Felton having no power to fly far, uncertain what to do, stepped aside into the Kitchen, near at hand; hither the Uproar and search followed, some cried out, Where's the Villain? Felton mistaking the words, for, Here's the Villain, suddenly started, and said, I am he, whom they seized, and with much ado to preserve alive from the fury of the Servants, Mr. Stamford, the Duke's follower, tilting at him with a Rapier, which others put by, that missed but little of his intent, to repay him to the full.

Many Messengers posted to Court with this ill news, more hasty than able to satisfie the particulars thereof; and as passionately the Courtiers Posted to Portsmouth: there was one had command to inquire of the fact; to see the man, and to search out somewhat to satisfie the King, and with his Warrant to the Governour, was put into the Prisoner, a Little, Timber, Meagre, Ghastly, Frightful faced Fellow, already clapt into a small Centry-House upon the Guard, horribly laden with manacled Irons, neither able to sit, nor to lie down, but to be crippled against the Wall; with him thus in private, and to sweeten his Devilish Conditions, the party pretended, that in affection to some of his friends he came of this Visi- fit, to administer comfort with his Prayers, the best effects of Charity to him; but he answers, that he was not so ignorant to believe, that a man in his condition should be admitted such comforts; but I rather receive you an Examiner (said he) impowered to make inquisition of me and this action of mine.

And after some discourse, Sir (said he) I shall be brief, I killed him for the Cause of God and my Country. Nay (said the other) there may be hope of his life, the Surgeons say so; It is impossible (he replied) I had the force of forty men, assisted by him that guarded my hand. And being interrogated to several Questions, he made these answers, That he was named John Felton, heretofore Lieutenant to a Foot Company under Sir James Ramsey: that he had endeavoured for a Commission to be Captain in this Expedition, and failed therein, but without any regret upon the Duke (from whom he had found respect) nor for any private interest whatsoever; that the late Remonstrance of Parliament published the Duke so odious, that he appeared to him deserving Death, which no Justice durst execute, that it was not many daies since he resolved to kill him, but finding the Duke so closely attended, that it should be his business to pass a Volunteer, and do it in this Forage. Somewhat he said of a Sermon at St. Faiths Church

Church under Paul's, where the Preacher spake in justification of every man in a Good Cause to be Judge and Executioner of Sin, which he interpreted to be him. That passing out at the Postern-Gate upon Tower-hill, he espied that fatal Knife in a Cutlers Glass-Case, which he bought for sixteen pence; it was the point end of a Cuff-blade, struck into a cross Haft, the whole length, Handle, and all not twelve Inches, fastened to his right Pocket, and from that time he resolved therewith to Stabb him. That some daies after he followed the Train to Portsmouth, and coming by a Cross Erected in the High-way, he sharpened the point thereof upon the Stone, believing it more proper in Justice to advantage his design than for the Idolatrous intent it was first Erect. That he found continual trouble and disquiet in mind until he should perform this fact, and came to Town but that Morning. That no Soul living was accessory with him by any waies or means, of the Duke's Execution. That he was assured his Fact was justified, and he the Redeemer of the Peoples sufferings, under the power of the Duke's Usurpations, &c. and his Paper tacked in the Crown of his Hat, seemed to satisfie his Conscience that he was thereof well pleased.

Concerning the Duke's Interment, and the Malefactors Confession, after Judgment had passed on him: I find that his Bowels were Interred in Portsmouth by his dear and only Sister the Countess of Denbigh, and a handsome Memorial of him Erected there, his Body brought to York-House, where his Effigies lay sometime in an illustrious manner upon a Hearse, and after was sumptuously Intombed at Westminster in St. Edward's Chapel, without any such stir, as some Historian would infer concerning his Funeral, for his Executors paid for all, and it cost not the King a Penny, and a Stately Monument was Erected over his Grave for his lasting Memory.

Felton was found Guilty at the King's-Bench-Bar, was Hanged at Tyburn, against which time he was taught so much Charity to his own Soul, as with remorse to acknowledge his Fact Damnable, without God's great Mercy; laying the guilt directly upon the Parliaments Remonstrance, the immediate motive to his Devilish design.

In regard of the strangeness of the Fact of Assassination of this Noble Person by so mean and obscure a hand, there were not wanting some who perswaded he should be put to the Rack; and hereupon the Judges were consulted of the legality of this proceeding, who met accordingly at Sergeants-Inn in Chancery-Lane, and did all agree that he could not by our Law be tortured by the Rack, for that no such punishment is now allowed by our Law.

Rochel afterward was, notwithstanding, after this, designed to be relieved by his Majesty, and accordingly the Fleet put to Sea with Provision and Fireships for the relief of it; but all in vain, for they found the Barricado so strong, and so well contrived, that it was impossible to enter the Port; which the English perceiving, gave over any farther attempt, and return; which the Rochellers perceived, they Capitulated, and had what Conditions the King their Sovereign gave them: great was the misery they had endured, for it is related that they had lived long upon Horse-flesh, Hides and Leather, Dogs and Cats, hardly leaving a Horse alive, still in hopes, that the relief promised from England would prove effectual to them; they held it so long, till they were but about four thousand left alive of fifteen thousand Souls, most of them died with Famine, and when they begun to be pinched with the extremity of hunger, they died so fast, that they usually carried their Coffins into the Church-yard, and other places, and there laid themselves in and died; great numbers of them being unburied, when the Forces of the King of France entred the Town, and many Corpie eaten with Vermine, Ravens and Birds.

Our Fleet which was sent for the relief of Rochel was defective both in Victuals, and its Tackling, the defects and defaults whereof should be considered of by a Committee of Lords select, and they to report to the Board, which was done accordingly. In the meantime, great Complaints (matter for the Session of Parliament ensuing) came from the Isle of Wight, and other Maritime places, of the disorders of the Souldiers that Quartered there; whereupon the Council required the Justices to chuse a Provost Marshal to correct the Souldiers for those disorders. And now the King of Denmark requires our King's assistance against the Emperour, to whom a Supply was sent under the conduct of Sir Charles Morgan, drawn out by him out of our Veterane Regiments in the States Service in the Low-Countries; and because the King had no occasion for the German Horse raised by Dalbeer, he was licensed by our King to transmit them over into the Service either of the King of Sweden or the Duke of Savoy, then Alliesto his Majesties.

Dr. Harsnet Bishop of Norwich is translated to York, and Dr. Corbet made Bishop of Oxon about this time. Also the new Statutes of the University of Oxon, about the Election of Proctors, afterwards called Statuta Carolina were compiled by Direction of Dr. Lund Bishop of London, to the great content and satisfaction of that University.

The Parliament, as before is said, being Prorogued to the 20 of October, is now by Proclamation Prorogued farther till the 20 of January following. But in this interval, several Merchants of London were Committed for Non-payment of Customs, which the King in open Council demands as a duty paid both in Queen Elizabeth's and his Fathers times, and that there was in the Exchequer a solemn and legal judgement for the King for the payment of such Customs; however these Merchants Land their Goods, and forcibly take them away from the Custom-house Key, and were thereupon Summoned to the Board, and for a Riot there committed on that account; and for words spoken at the Council, Alderman Chambers of London was Committed the 28 of Sept. who brought his Habeas Corpus the 16 of October following, and on the 28 it was allowed; he was Bailed and Bound in a Recognizance to appear Craftino Animarum, and in the interim be of good behaviour; at which Action of the Judges the Lords of the Council were offended; but being satisfied, that what was done was according to Law and Justice, matters were easily comprized. The like occasion happened afterwards the same Term, for that Vassals of London, Merchant, refused to pay the said Imposition conceiving it to be illegal, for which Mr. Attorney, by the King's Command preferred an Information against him in the Exchequer, to which he appears and Pleads the Statutes of Magna Charta, and de Talagio non concedendo, that the duty of Tonnage and Poundage was not aniqua & recta consuetudo, and that it was imposed without assent of Parliament, to which Plea the King's Attorney Demurred in Law, and Vassal joyns in Demurrer, &c. At the hearing of this Cause, Anno 1628. Cause, Judgment was given for the King by the Barons of the Exchequer, who said this Case was the same with Botel's Case, and therefore the Duty ought to be paid. And therefore upon Vassal's refusal to pay the said Duty, he was by Order of Court Imprisoned; and his Goods detained till payment made. And at the same time the said Chambers his Goods was again seized by the Officers of the Custom-House, for Non-payment of the said Duty, who Sues out his Replevin, which by Order of the Court of Exchequer was Superfeded by an Injunction directed to the Sheriffs of London, not to Execute the said Writ of Replevin, or like Writs of Replevin; and the same course of proceedings were observed by the Barons of the Exchequer in the Case of Mr. Kolls, a Member of Parliament, whose Goods were detain'd, the Officers of the Custom-House telling him, That if all the Parliament were in you, we would seize your Goods; this Controversie, which after gave cause to the Dissolution of this Parliament, may a little be enquired into, as to the rise and Antiquity of this Custom, which is said by one to be as followeth:

It is a Fundamental Truth, essential to the Constitution and Government of this Kingdom, and Hereditary Privilege of the Subject, that no Tax, Tallage, or other Charge might be laid without consent in Parliament: this was ratified by the Contract of this Nation with the Conquerour, upon his admittance, and declared and confirmed in the Laws which he published; and yet afterwards broken by King John, and Henry the Third: then Confirmed by Magna Charta, and other succeeding Laws; but then attempted to be broken by the two succeeding Edwards. When the Subject pursued those breaches by the opportunity of frequent Parliaments, and found relief, procuring the right of the Subjects to be fortified by new Statutes. And it may be observed, That those Kings in the very Acts, whereby they did break the Law, did really affirm the Subjects Liberty, and disclaimed that Right of him. A thing which hath since been challenged by successive Sovereigns, the Merchants in those times usually giving consent to such Taxes, but limited to a time, to the Ratification of the next following Parliament to be Cancelled or Confirmed.

But mostly these upon Merchandise, were taken by Parliament six or twelve per pound for time, and years, as they saw cause, for defence of the Sea: sometimes also granted unto Noble men or Merchants, but for chance; and afterwards they were granted to the King for life, and so continued for divers Descents.

Between the time of Edward the Third, and Queen Mary, never any Prince (some say) demanded any Imposition but by Parliament: Queen Mary indeed laid a Charge upon Cloth by the Equity of Tonnage and Poundage; because the Rate set upon Wool was much more than that upon Cloth, and little Wool being Transported unwrought, She had reason to impose so much more, as brought them to an equality, but that there still continued a less charge upon Wool wrought into Cloth, than upon Wool Landed out unwrought, untill King James his time; when upon Nicholson's advice, there was a further addition of Charge, which is that we call the pretermitted Custom.

In Queen Elizabeth's time some Impositions, nay many increased; the general prosperity of her Reign, in the conjuncture of time, and Foreign Affairs over-shadowing, and her power and will Commanding; without regret or complaint that of Currants was one; for the Venetians having Taxed a charge upon our English Cloth, he raised that of the Currants, with pretence to be even with them, the sooner to take off the other. And this came to be denied to King James by Bates a Merchant, and a Sute in the Exchequer adjudged it for the King: the three Judges (then no more) distinguished their several Opinions.

The First; That the King might Impose upon Foreign Commodities, but not upon Native to be Transported, or necessary to be Imported for the use of the Kingdom.

The Second Judge was of Opinion, he might impose upon all Foreign Merchandize, whether superfluous or no, but not upon Native.

The Third was absolute, seeing the King had the Custody of the Ports, and Guard of the Seas, and might shut up or open the Ports as he pleased, he had a Prerogative to impose upon all Merchandize Exported or Imported.

Afterwards King James laid Charges upon all Commodities outward and Inward, not limited to time or occasion: this Judgment, and the right of Imposing was a Question in 7 and 12 Jan. and in 18 and 21 Jan. it was declined by the Commons House; but in 1 Car. it was renewed by the King's Propositions, and then rather Confirmed than Abolished.

Upon Tuesday the 20 of January, the Parliament according to the Prorogation Asssembled, and the first Enquiry by them made, was, Whether the Petition of Right was Enrolled or not in the Courts at Westminster. And they finding that some Additions were Printed, together with the said Petition, they seemed concerned thereat till the King's Printer told them he had his Majesties Warrant for his so doing, and so the matter passed. Next Enquiry; What violations of the Subjects Liberty was made since the last Session; and now the matter of Mr. Kolls the Merchant, a Member of the Commons House, came to the subject of their Debate, whereupon Sir Robert Philips leads the Van, and spake as followeth:

By this Information you see how unfortunate these times are, and how full time it was for this Assembly to meet to serve his Majesty, and to serve their Country, and I am confident, that coming hither with fulness of affection, to our King and Country, all will conduce to a happy Conclusion and the King's Honour: Indeed our own great and weighty Affairs wound deep; cast your eyes which way you please, you shall see Violations on all sides; look on the Liberty of the Subject, look on the Privilege of this House, let any say if ever he saw or read the like Violations by inferiour Ministers that over-do their Command; they knew the Parry was a Parliament man, nay, they say if all the Parliament were in you, this we would do and justify it. If we suffer the Privilege of Parliament and Liberty of Subjects to be thus violated, for fear of complaint, we give a wound to the happiness of the Kingdom. The course of Justice is interrupted, and an Order in the Exchequer made for the stay of the Goods, and since there is a seizure, upon the approach of Parliament, of Goods amounting to five thousand pounds, for a pretended duty of two hundred pounds Custom, it's time to look about us.

In the first year of King James, by reason of the sickness that there was, the Parliament was Prorogued; and then there were some so bold as to take this Tonnage and Poundage, and then we questioned the men that demanded it. Let us proceed with affection of duty, and make up breaches; let a Committee be appointed for the examination of these proceedings.

The matter being referred to a Committee whilst they were in Debate thereon, a Message came from his Majesty, Commanding the House to defer the Debate thereof till the next day in the afternoon, at which time he required them to attend him at the Banqueting House at White-Hall; where he spake to them as followeth:

The Kings Speech to both Houses in the Banqueting House.

THe care I have to remove all Obstacles that may hinder the good correspondency between me and this Parliament, is the cause I have called you together at this time, the particular occasion being a complaint made in the Lower House. And for you, my Lords, I am glad to take this, and all other occasions whereby you may clearly understand both my words and actions, for as you are nearest in Degree, so you are the fittest Witnesses unto Kings.

The Complaint I speak of is for staying mens Goods that denied Tonnage and Poundage, this may have an easie and short conclusion, if my words and actions be rightly understood: for by passing the Bill as my Ancestors have had it, my by-past actions will be included, and my future proceedings authorized, which certainly would not have been stuck on, if men had not imagined that I had taken these duties as appertaining to my Hereditary Prerogative, in which they are much deceived, for it ever was and still is my meaning, by the gift of my People to enjoy it, and my intencion in my Speech at the ending of the last Session concerning this point, was not to challenge Tonnage and Poundage as of right, but de bene esse, shewing you the necessity, not the right by which I was to take it, until you had granted it to me, assuring my self, according to your general professions, you wanted time, not will, to give it me.

Wherefore now having opportunity, I expect that without loss of time, you make good your professions, and so by passing of a Bill, put an end to all the Questions arising from this Subject: especially since I have cleared the only Scruple that can trouble you in this business; to conclude, let us not be jealous one of the others actions, for if I had been easily moved at every occasion, the Order you made on Wednesday last might have made me startle, there being some shew to suspect that you had given your selves the liberty to be the Inquisitors after Complaints (the words of your Order being somewhat too largely penn'd) but looking into your actions, I find you only hear Complainers, not seeking Complaints: for I am certain you neither pretend, nor desire the liberty to be Inquisitors of mens actions before particular complaint be made.

This I have spoken to shew you how slow I am to believe harshly of your proceedings; likewise to assure you, that the Houses Resolutions, nor particular mens Speeches, shall make me judge well or ill, nor doubting, but according to my example, you will be deaf to ill reports concerning me, till my words and actions speak for themselves, that so this Session beginning with confidence one towards another, it may end with a perfect good understanding between us: Which God grant.

ON Monday, Jan. 26. Mr. Secretary Cook delivered a Message from the King to the House of Commons, that the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage might be speedily taken into consideration, and that time might not be slipt; and and did very much press (in his Majesties name) the reading thereof, as a matter of weight and importance; and said, That he spake it for their service, and that moderation in their proceedings would be of great advantage to them.

But the House must not be prescribed unto by his Majesty, but were resolved to pass by the matter of Tonnage and Poundage; and first settle what they termed matters of Religion (viz.) the Arminian Controversies, which truly had they done, they might have been the longest Parliament that ever sate in England; and his Majesty, for ought we know, might have been without Supply or Subsidy till this day. Whereupon the Debate growing pretty hot in that House, the Zeal of Mr. Rouse against the Popery of the fore-mentioned Tenents prompted him to speak as followeth:

Mr. Speaker,

WE have of late entred into consideration of the Petition of Right, and the violation of it, and upon good reason; for it concerns our Goods, Liberties, and Laws: but there is a Right of higher nature, that preserves for us far greater things, Eternal life, our Souls, yea, our God himself: a Religion derived to us from the King of Kings, confirmed upon us by the Kings of this Kingdom, Enacted by Laws in this place, streaming down to us in the blood of Martyrs, witnessed from Heaven by Miracles, even miraculous deliverances; and this Right, in the name of this Nation, I this day require and claim, that there may be a deep and serious consideration of the violation of it; I desire it may be considered, what new paintings are laid on the old face of the Whore of Babylon, to make her shew more lovely, and to draw so many Suitors to her. I desire that it may be considered, how the See of Rome, doth eat into our Religion, and fret into the Banks and Walls of it, the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, especially since those Laws have been made in a manner by themselves, even by their own Treasons, and bloody Designs: And since that Popery is a confused heap of Errors, casting down Kings before Popes, the Precepts of God before the Traditions of men (living and reasonable men) before dead and senseless stocks and stones; I desire that we may consider the increase of Arminianism, an Error that makes the Grace of God Lackey it after the will of man, that makes the Sheep to keep the Shepherd, and makes a mortal seed of an immortal God. Yea, I desire that we may look into the very belly and bowels of this Trojan Horse, to see if there be not men in it ready to open the Gates to Romish Tyranny, and Spanish Monarchy: for an Arminian is the Spawn of a Papist, and if there come the warmth of favour upon him, you shall see him turn into one of those Frogs that rise out of the bottomless Pit; and if you mark it well, you shall see an Arminian reaching out his hand to a Papist, a Papist to a Jesuite, a Jesuite gives one hand to the Pope, another to the King of Spain, and these men having kindled a fire in our Neighbour-Country, now they have brought over some of it hither, to set on flame this Kingdom also; Yea, let us further search and consider, whether these be not the men, that break in upon the Goods and Liberties of this Commonwealth; for by this means they make way for the taking away of our Religion: It was an old trick of the Devil, when he meant to take away Job's Religion, he begun at his Goods, saying, Lay thy hand on all he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face. Either they think thereby to set a distaste

Mr. Rouse's Speech concerning Religion.

Anno 1628. Car. 4.
 'state between Prince and People, or else to find 'some other way of Supply, to avoid or break
 'Parliaments; that so they may break in upon our 'Religion, and bring in their errors. But let us
 'do as Job did, who being constant against tempta'tion, held fast his Religion, and his Goods 'were restored to him with advantage; so if we 'hold fast God and our Religion, these things
 'shall be added unto us: Let us consider the times
 'past now, how this Nation flourished in honour
 'and abundance, when Religion flourished amongst 'us; but as Religion decayed, so the honour and 'strength of this Nation decayed also; When
 'the Soul of a Commonwealth is dead, the Body
 'cannot longer over-live it. If a man meet a Dog
 'alone, the Dog is fearful, though never so fierce
 'by nature; but if that Dog have his Master by 'him, he will set upon that man, from whence he 'fled before. This shews, that lower natures be'ing backt with the higher, increase in courage
 'and strength; and certainly man being backt with 'Omnipotency, is a kind of Omnipotency. All 'things are possible to him that believeth, and
 'where all things are possible, there is a kind of 'Omnipotence. Wherefore let us now by unani'mous consent and resolution of us all, make 'a vow and covenant, henceforth to hold 'fast, I say, to hold fast our God, and our 'Religion; and then may we from henceforth cer'tainly expect prosperity on this Kingdom and 'Nation: And to this Covenant let every man
 'say, Amen.

But on what account these Opinions are called Popery, we are yet to seek, notwithstanding these or any of these Votes of the House of Commons: for these Opinions are Disputed in the Church of Rome, both one way and the other; the Dominicans are Calvinists, and the Jesuite disputes on the side of Arminius; so that by this Logick, the Calvinian Doctrines may be call'd Popish as well as those of the adverse Party: for that it is most certain (as hath been lately since observed) that our first Reformers were neither influenced in their Reformation by either the Lutheran or Calvinian Doctrines, but by the constant current of Antiquity. And the way of Melancton (thought by some) most consonant thereto, was approved not only by Bishop Hooper on the Decalogue, and by Bishop Latimer in his Sermons, but also (say they) by the Compiler of the Book of Articles, and the Book of Homilies, which are the publick Monuments of this Church in points of Doctrine; but the Calvinists entering the same way, there arose a difference in particular Judgments of their Debates, the matter controverted Pro and Con, by some Confessors in Prison, in the time of Queen Mary. She Dead, and our exiled Divines returning from Geneva, Basil, and Frankford (where Calvin's Dictates became Oracles) brought with them his Opinions of Predestination, Grace and Perseverance, which they scattered over all the Church: by whose Authority and double diligence of the Presbyterian Party, to advance their holy discipline; it became universally received as the only true Orthodox Doctrine, and so maintained in the School at Cambridge: insomuch that when Peter Baro, a French-man, Professor for the Lady Margaret there, reviving Melancton's way in his publick Lectures, and drawing others to the same persuasion, he was complained of by Dr.
Whitaker, Dr. Wilke, Mr. Chaerton, Mr. Perkins, and such like, unto the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Whigist, to suppress that Faction; who Assembling at Lambeth, Dr. Richard Fletcher, Bishop of London, and Dr. Richard Vaughan elect of Ran- gor, with the advice of Dr. Whitaker, Dr. Tindal, and others, all Partys to the Sute, agree on the Nine Articles to be sent to Cambridge, for composing their present Controversie, the 26 of November 1595.

Dr. Baro was discouraged at the end of his first three years, quits his Reading, and retires home to France, leaving the University in much disorder, for lack of such his abilities. Amongst his followers, was one Mr. Barret, who in his Sermon at St. Maries, not only defended Baro, but offended the Opinions of Calvin, Beza, and such others of the Reformators, of which he was convented before the Heads, and by them May 5. next following, he was prescribed his Recantation, and did so, yet the contentions were disputed higher, the Nine Articles of Lambeth came down, heartened upon this occasion; otherwise perhaps they had not come at all.

But though these Articles were thus (and no otherwise) made and agreed, and made known to Queen Elizabeth by William Lord Burleigh, Lord Treasurer of England, and Chancellor of the University, who misliked the tenents and proceedings:
 She much offended with such Innovations in the publick Doctrine of the Church, resolved to At-taint them all of Premunire; but upon received esteem at the request of that Prelate and Archbishop (whom she called her Black Husband) did favourably admit his excuse: She commanding him to recall and suppress those Articles, for a long time not a Copy thereof was to be found, though after by degrees they peep out. And again in the Conference at Hampton-Court, 1603. Dr. Reynolds desires, that the Nine Assertions Orthodox (as he styles them) concluded upon at Lambeth, might be inserted in the Book of Articles of the Church of England: the King unacquainted with such Novel Doctrine, asked what they were; and was told as before-said, to which he answered, That when such Questions arise among Scholars, the quietest proceedings were to determine them in the University, and not to stuff the Book with all conclusions theological; see Conf. p. 24, 40, 41. Now let the Reader judge of the matter, whether these Nine Assertions of this Doctrine thus authorized, are so Canonically confirmed as to determine them the Orthodox Doctrine of the Church of England, and those men for Arminians that do not subscribe to them.

This matter was referred to a Committee, which one nameth the first Committee for Religion that ever sate for the regulation of Religion by the Commons of England; and further they took upon them to enquire what persons the King had advanced to Ecclesiastical preferments, and of what persuasions, and to whom Pardons had been given; and though his Majesty did again press that House to proceed upon the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage; yet they prefer the matter of Religion, so they called it, for it did concern both his Majesty and the Subject, and That the work of the Lord must not be done negligently (as the Collector hath it) the House was resolved into a Committee to determine upon these grand Points, and thereat Mr. Fym spake as followeth:

TWO diseases there be (said he) the one Mr. Fym's
 'old, the other new; the old, Popery; Speech
 'the new, Arminianism. There be three things concern-
 'to be inquired after concerning Popery. ing Rea-
 '1. The cessation of the execution of Laws son.

Anno 1628. 2. How the Papists have been employed and countenanced.

3. The Law violated in bringing in of superstitious Ceremonies amongst us, especially at Durham by Mr. Cozens; as, Angels, Crucifixes, Saints, Altars, Candles on Candlemas-day, burnt in the Church after the Popish manner.

For Arminianism, let it be advised.

1. That a way be open for the Truth.

2. That whereas by the Articles set forth 1652.

and by the Catechism set forth in King Edward the Sixth's daies, and by the writing of Martin

Bucer and Peter Martyr, who were employed in making our Articles; and by the constant professions, sealed by the blood of so many Martyrs, as Cranmer, Ridley, and others; and by the 36

Articles in Queen Elizabeth's time, and by the Articles agreed upon at Lambeth, as the Doctrine of the Church of England, which King James sent to Dort and to Ireland, and were avowed by us and our State; his Majesty hath expressed himself, in preserving unity in Religion established, though his Royal intention, notwith-standings, hath been perverted by some to suppress the Truth. Let us shew wherein these late opinions are contrary to those settled Truths, and what men have been since preferred, that have professed these Heresies; what pardons they have had for false Doctrine; what prohibiting of Books and Writings against their Doctrine, and permitting of such Books as have been for them: Let us enquire after the Abettors; let us enquire also after the Pardons granted of late to some of these, and the presumption of some that dare preach the contrary to Truth before his Majesty. It belongs to the duty of a Parliament to establish true Religion, and to punish false;

we must know what Parliaments have done formerly in Religion. Our Parliaments have confirmed general Councils. In the time of King

Henry VIII. the Earl of Essex was condemned for countenancing Books of Heresie: For the Convocation, it is but a Provincial Synod of Canterbury, and cannot bind the whole Kingdom.

As for York, that is distant, and cannot do any thing to bind us or the Laws; for the High Commission, it was derived from Parliament.

Message
by Secretary Cook about Tonnage and Poundage.

Upon Wednesday, 28 of January, Mr. Secretary Cook delivered another Message to the House concerning the precedency of Tonnage and Poundage, declaring, that his Majesty intends not thereby to interrupt them, as to Religion, so that they do not intrench on that which belongs not to them; which Message was seconded by Sir Thomas Edmonds, in these words:

Sir Thomas Edmonds.

I Am sorry the House hath given cause to so many Messages about Tonnage and Poundage, after his Majesty hath given us so much satisfaction: You may perceive his Majesty is sensible of the neglect of his business; we that know this, should not discharge our duties to you, if we should not perswade you to that course which should procure his Majesties good opinion of you: You your selves are witnesses, how industrious his Majesty was to procure you gracious Laws in his Father's time, and since, what enlargement he hath made of our Liberties, and still we give him cause to repent him of the good he hath done. Consider how dangerous it is to alienate his Majesties heart from Parliaments.

Mr. Corston Replied.

When men speak here of neglect of Duty to his Majesty, let them know, we know no such thing, nor what they mean: And I see not how we do neglect the same. I see it is in all our hearts to expedite the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage in due time: our business is still put back by these Messages, and the business in hand is of God; and his Majesties affairs are certainly amiss, and every one sees it; and woe be to us, if we present them not to his Majesty.

The House hereupon came to this Resolve, That they would first proceed upon matters of Religion, and then in due time upon the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage.

Sir John Elliot concerning Religion.

And Sir John Elliot, upon this occasion, spake to this purpose, 'I have alwaies observed (said he) that in the proceedings of this House, our best advantage is Order; and I was very glad when that noble Gentleman, my Country-man, gave occasion to state our Proceedings; for I fear it would have carried us into a Sea of confusion and disorder. And having now occasion to present my thoughts in this great and weighty business of Religion, I shall be bold to speak a few words.

There is a jealousy conceived, as if we meant to dispute in matters of Faith; it is our profession, this is not to be disputed, it is not in the Parliament to make a new Religion, nor, I hope, shall it be in any, to alter the body of the truth, which we now profess. I must confess, amongst all those fears we have contracted, there ariseth to me not one of the least dangers in the Declaration that is made and publish'd in his Majesties name, concerning Disputing and Preaching; let not this my saying bear the least suspicion or jealousy of his Majesty, for if there be any misprision or error, I hope it is those Ministers about him, which not only he, but all Princes are subject unto; and Princes, no doubt, are subject to mis-informations, and many actions may be entitled to their Names, when it is not done by themselves. Antiochus King of Asia sent his Letters and Missives to several Provinces, that if they received any dispatches in his name, not agreeable to Justice, Ignoto se, literas esse scriptas ideoque iis non Parerent; and the reason of it is given by Gratian, because that oftentimes by the importunity of Ministers, Principes sepe constringuntur, ut non concedenda concedant, are drawn to grant things by them not to be granted; and as it was in that age, so it may be in this. And now to the particular in the Declaration, we see what is said of Popery and Arminianism, our Faith and Religion is in danger by it; for like an Inundation it doth break in at once upon us. It is said, If there be any difference of Opinion concerning the seasonable interpretation of the 39 Articles, the Bishops and the Clergy in the Convocation have power to dispute it, and to order which way they please, and, for ought I know, Popery and Arminianism may be introduced by them, and then it must be received by all: A slight thing, that the Power of Religion should be left to the persons of these men; I honour their Profession, there are among our Bishops such as are fit to be made examples for all Ages, who shine in virtue, and are firm for Anno 1628. for our Religion, but the contrary faction I like not. I remember a Character I have seen in a Diary of E. 6. that young Prince, of famous memory, where he doth express the condition of the Bishops of that time under his own hand-writing, That some for sloath, some for age, some for ignorance, some for luxury, and some for Popery, were unfit for Discipline and Government. We see there are some among our Bishops who are not Orthodox, nor sound in Religion, as they should be; witness the two Bishops complained of the last meeting of the Parliament; I apprehend such a fear, that should we be in their power, we may be in danger to have our Religion over-thrown. Some of these are Masters of Ceremonies, and they labour to introduce new Ceremonies into the Church; yet some Ceremonies are useful. Give me leave to joyn, that I hold it necessary and commendable, that at the Repetition of the Creed we should stand up, to testifie the resolution of our hearts, that we will defend the Religion which we profess; and in some Churches it is added, they did not only stand upright with their bodies, but with their swords drawn. Let us go to the ground of our Religion, and lay down a Rule, on which all others may rest; then when that is done, it will be time to take into consideration the breakers and offenders of that Rule: Hereupon, after some debate, the Commons entered into the Vow following.

The Commons enter into a Vow. WE the Commons in Parliament Assembled, do Claim, Protest, and Avow for Truth, the sense of the Articles of Religion, which were established by Parliament, in the Thirtieth year of our late Queen Elizabeth, which by the publick Act of the Church of England, and by the general and current Expositions of the Writers of our Church, have been delivered unto us. And we reject the sense of the Jesuites, and Arminians, and all others, wherein they differ from us.

Friday the 13 of January, 1628. both Houses joyn in Petitioning the King for a Fast.

Both Houses Petition the King for a Fast. MOST Gracious Sovereign, It is the very earnest desire of us your most dutiful Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this Parliament Assembled, that this Meeting may be abundantly blessed with all happy success in the great Affairs of Church and State, upon which we are to consult, and that by a clear understanding, both of your Majesties goodness to us, and of our ever faithful and Loyal hearts to your Majesties Royal Person and Service, (all jealousies and distractions, which are apparent signs of God's displeasure, and of ensuing mischief, being removed) there may this Session, be a perfect and most happy Union and agreement between your Majesty, and all the Estates of this Realm: But acknowledging, that neither this, nor any other blessing can be expected, without the especial Favour of Almighty God, upon the observation of the continued increasing miseries of the Reformed Churches abroad, (whose Cases, with bleeding hearts, we compassionate,) as likewise of those punishments already inflicted, and

Car. 4. which are like in great measure to fall upon our selves, we have just cause to conceive, that the Divine Majesty is, for our sins, exceedingly offended against us: Wherefore we do in these, and all other pious respects, most Dread Sovereign, humbly beseech your most Excellent Majesty, by your Royal Consent and Commandment, that not only our selves, but all People of your Kingdom, may be speedily enjoined, upon some certain day, by your Majesty to be prefixed, by publick Fasting and Prayer to seek Reconciliation at the merciful hands of Almighty God; so that the Prayers of the whole Kingdom, joyned with you Majesties most Princely care, and the faithful hearts and endeavours of this Great Council assembled, may procure honour to Almighty God in the preservation of his true Religion, much honour to your Majesty, prosperity to your People, and comfort to your Majesties Friends and Allies.

The King's Answer to the Petition.

MY Lords and Gentlemen, The chief Motive of His Majesty your Petition, being the deplorable condition of the Reformed Churches abroad, is too true: And sweet our duty is, so much as in us lieth, to give them all possible help; but certainly, fighting will do them more good than fasting; though I do not wholly disallow of the latter: yet I must tell you, that the custom of fasting every Session, is but lately begun, and I confess, I am not fully satisfied with the necessity of it at this time.

Yet to shew you how smoothly I desire your business to go on, (eschewing, as much as I can, Questions or Jealousies) I do willingly grant your request herein; but with this Note, That this shall not hereafter be brought into president for frequent Fasts, except upon great occasions; and for form and time, I will advise with my Lords the Bishops, and then send you a particular Answer.

After that the Commons make the address following to his Majesty concerning their preferring the matter of Religion, so call'd, to the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage.

MOST gracious Sovereign, We have within these three daies received from your Majesty a Message, putting us in mind of our present entering upon the consideration of a Grant of Tonnage and Poundage; but the manner of possessing the House therewith being disagreeable to our Order and Priviledges, that we could not proceed therein; and finding our selves, in your Majesties Name, pressed in that business, and that we should give precedence thereunto, we cannot but express some sense of sorrow, fearing that the most hearty and forward affections, wherewith we desire to serve your Majesty, are not clearly represented unto you; besides, such is the solicitous care we have in presenting our selves in your Majesties most gracious and good opinion, that it cannot but breed much trouble in us, when ever we find our selves (as now we are enforced) to spend that time in making our humble Apologies (from whence do usually arise long Debates) which we conceive might very profitably be applied in the greater Services of your Majesty and the Commonwealth, which we did, with all humble diligence, apply our selves unto; and finding

Anno 1628. ing the extreme dangers wherewith our Religion is threatened (clearly presenting it unto our thoughts and considerations) we thought, and we think we cannot without impiety to God, disloyalty to your Majesty, (and unthankfulness to those from whom we are put in trust) retard our proceedings until something be done to secure us in this main point, which we prefer above our lives, and all earthly things whatsoever. And here we do with all humble thankfulness acknowledge your Majesties most pious care, and Princely intentions, to suppress both Popery and Arminianism; the Professor of the one being an open enemy to the maintainer of the other, a subtle & more dangerous underminer of the Religion of Almighty God, established within your Realms & Dominions: The truth of which our whole Religion, or any part thereof (as being sufficiently known, & received generally here of all the Members of our Church, except only of some Schismatical persons, who have, of late years, taken the boldness to broach their contrary corrupt opinions) we desire should not be called in question, or doubt; but howsoever it hath pleased your Majesty, to our exceeding great comfort, by many testimonies to declare your own constant resolution to maintain the said Religion, yet we see how your gracious purposes are therein cross'd, and into what a miserable condition your whole Kingdom is likely, by that means, to be reduced; we shall earnestly endeavour (as that which both nearly concern us) the safety and prosperity of your Majesty, and People, which are in such sort disordered, that ruin thereby threatened to both, may, by God's blessing, be prevented; being most heartily sorry that these occasions are offered, which did thus hinder our proceedings: And therefore as well for the dignity and necessity of the matter, as for that we conceive it to be the most speedy and effectual way, by uniting of all our hearts and endeavours to dispatch all other business of importance, particularly those which may seem more immediately to respect your Majesties profit, we pray, that our resolutions of preferring this business before all others, may be acceptable to your Majesty, to whom, both in the matter & manner of our proceedings, we desire to give all possible satisfaction.

His Majesty's Answer to the Commons Declaration.

Gentlemen, This Answer being somewhat long, may, in reason, require some time to reply unto it, since as most of you cannot but judge, this giveth no satisfaction. Therefore I shall give you some short Notes upon it; I cannot think, that whereas you alledge that the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage was brought in against the privilege of your House; That you will offer to take so much privilege from every one of your Members, as not to allow them the liberty to bring in any Bill whatsoever; although it be in your power, when it is brought in, to do with it what you think good; and I cannot imagine, you coming together by my power, and to treat of things that I propound unto you; though in this particular I must confess, that this Bill was not to have been offered to you in my Name, as that Member of your House can bear witness. As for the cause of delay in my business, (being Religion) there is none of you shall have a greater care for the true preservation of it than my self, which since it is confessed by your Answer, you must either think I want power (which cannot be) or that I am very ill counselled, if it be in so much danger as you affirm: Though I may say much of this, I will say no more, but that for all this I shall not stop mine ears to you upon this subject, so that in form and matter you transgress not your limits; as for Tonnage and Poundage, I do not so much desire it out of greediness of the thing (being persuaded you will make no stop in it, when you once take it in hand) as out of a desire to put an end to those Questions that do arise between me and some of my Subjects, thinking it a strange thing, if you should give ear to those complaints, and not to take the sure and speedy way to decide them. Besides, I must think it strange, that this business of Religion should only be a hinderer of my affairs, whereas I am certainly informed all other things go according to their ordinary course; therefore I must still be instant with you, that you proceed with Tonnage and Poundage with diligence (not looking to be denied in so just a desire) and you must not think it strange, if I, finding you slack, give you such further quickning as I shall find cause.

And because the Commons were resolved to give no fair and candid Interpretation of their Sovereigns actions, that House did on the Fourth of February debate the King's Declaration published in Print, to command both the parties of Arminian and Anti-Arminian to forbear to dispute the controverted Points, which tended only to the breach of the Peace of the Church and State. They say the main end of this was to suppress the Puritan Party, and yet to give liberty to the contrary side, and they conceived, that Bishop Laud and Bishop Montague, mentioned in the last Remonstrance, had advised the King to that Declaration; Bishop Laud being advanced since the last Session of Parliament to be Bishop of London, and Mr. Montague since that time made Bishop of Chichester; and a Warrant was granted to the Attorney-General to draw up a Pardon for him; but whereas the Warrant was but for one, the Attorney put four into the Pardon, (viz.) Bishop Montague, Dr. Cofens, Dr. Sibthorp, and Dr. Manning.

And now behold another unfortunate accident happened, whereat the Commons presently took fire, on Mr. Rolls a Merchant; his Ware-house was lockt up by a Pursuivant, and he also himself being a Member of Parliament was call'd out of the Committee, and had a Subpoena served upon him; upon this the House was in a flame, but Sir Humphrey May, Chancellor of the Dutchy, and one of the Privy-Council, assured the House, that this neither proceeded from King nor Council, and therefore desired it might be searched into the bottom.

And this matter afterwards appeared to be a mistake, though debated after in that House. Upon a Report from the Committee about Tonnage and Poundage, Sir John Wostenholme, with other Customers, were call'd into the House to give information why the Merchants Goods were seized, carried into the Kings Store-house and detain'd there; they said, it was for Non-payment (as they con-conceived) of the said duty, and other duties contained in the Book of Rates hereupon; and because Informations had been made both in the Exchequer and High Commission Court against the said Merchants upon the former account, the matter to be debated was referred to a Committee, at which Mr. Noy thus spake:

We cannot safely give, unless we be in possession, and the proceedings in the Exchequer nullified; as also the Information in the Star-Chamber, and the annexion to the Petition of Right; for it will not be a Gift, but a Confirmation; neither will I give without the removal of these interruptions, and a Declaration in the Bill, that the King hath no right, but by our free gift; if it will not be accepted, as it is fit for us to give, we cannot help; if it be the King's already, we do not give it.

The Committee report, That it was their Opinion the Merchants should have their Goods before the House entered upon the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage; and hereupon the House order that the Barons of the Exchequer do make void the Injunction, whereby the Merchants Goods were stay'd, and that they might have notice hereof; which being accordingly given them, they return'd the Answer following:

Whereas the Honourable House of Commons, by order of the Twelfth of this instant February, have appointed, that notice shall be given to the Lord Treasurer, Chancellor, and Barons of the Exchequer, of a Declaration made by Sir John Wolstenholme, Abraham Daves, and Richard Cammartham, in the House of Commons, that the Goods that the Merchants brought into the King's Store-house, and laid up there for his Majesties use, were detained, as they conceived, only for the Duty of Tonnage and Poundage, and other sums comprized in the Books of Rates; which notice was given, to the end the said Court of Exchequer might further proceed therein, as to Justice shall appertain. Now the Lord Treasurer, Chancellor, and Barons, out of their due respect to that Honourable House, and for their satisfaction, do signify, that by the Order and Injunctions of the said Court of Exchequer, they did not determine, nor any way touch upon the Right of Tonnage and Poundage, and so they declared openly in Court, at the making of these Orders; neither did they, by the said Orders or Injunctions, bar the Owners of those Goods, to sue for the same in a lawful course; but whereas the said Owners endeavoured to take the same Goods out of the Kings actual possession, by Writs or Plaints of Replevin, which was no lawful Action or Course in the King's case, nor agreeable to his Royal Prerogative; therefore the said Court of Exchequer, being the Court for ordering the King's Revenue, did, by those Orders and Injunctions, stay those Suits, and did fully declare by the said Orders, that the Owners, if they conceived themselves wronged, might take such remedy as the Law alloweth.

George Vernon.

The Answer of the Lord Chief Baron, &c. was judged not satisfactory by the Commons, and the matter refer'd to a Committee to consider, Whether these proceedings had been usual in that Court, or whether his Majesty had done this by his Prerogative.

And now a report was made from the Committee about the Pardons of Bishop Mountague, Dr. Manwaring, Dr. Cosen, and Mr. Sibthorp; they said that the two last named had solicited their own pardons, and that the Lord Bishop of Winton had procured the King to sign them, and that he had promised to procure Bishop Mountague's pardon, that Manwaring had solicited his own pardon, and that the Bishop of Winton got his Majesties hand to it. Oliver Cromwell, the late Ufurper, being of this Committee, complains against the said Bishop, saying he encouraged and patronized those who preach'd downright Popery; and if Manwaring must be pardon'd and prefer'd (saith he) what may we expect? I hope the Gentleman never thought or expected himself to be Protector, which yet after hapned.

And now a most doughty Petition comes from the Stationers of London, some of whom had their Books seized for printing (as always they have been accustomed to do) seditious and unlicensed Pamphlets, therefore they, to cry quit with the Bishop of London, complain of the restraint of Books written against Popery and Arminianism, and the contrary allowed of by the only means of Dr. Laud Bishop of London; and that divers of the Printers and Booksellers have been sent for by Pursuivants for printing Books against Popery; and that Licencing is only restrained to the Bishop of London and his Chaplains; and instanced in certain Books against Popery, which were denied to be Licensed.

Upon this Petition Mr. Selden desires that a Bill might be brought in concerning printing, there being no Law then for the prevention of any Books whatever.

Alderman Chambers of London having been informed against in the Star-Chamber for not paying the Duties of Tonnage, &c. the House took the Matter into debate, Whether he ought not to have privilege of Parliament? An unheard of thing that the Commons should protect the Merchants from Suits at Law, they not being either Members of their House, or their Menial Servants.

On Friday the Thirteenth of February, the Commons resume the Debate about the encrease of Popery, and why the Jesuits taken at Clarkenwell were not all condemn'd? They were all Priests, and certainly they had great favour. Whereupon the Secretary endeavours, but all in vain, to give them a satisfactory account of this matter: They ordered that the Attorney General, Sir Robert Heath, should be examined about this matter, who gave the Commons the account following.

Sir Robert Heath his Answer concerning the prosecution of the Priests.

I Did receive (saith the Attorney) order touching some persons taken in Clarkenwell, conceived to be Priests, from the Council-board; and for that refer myself to the Order.

And I conceive I did follow the directions of that Order.

And I did myself cause them to be sent for from the several Prisons where they were formerly committed, and I committed them all to Newgate, as the Order from the Council-board directed; and I gave directions for Indictments to be drawn against them, as for being Priests; and I sent for, and conferred with the Witnesses, and took their Informations; and I sent

Anno 1628. for Mr. Long, who was formerly acquainted with that business, as I was advised to do by Mr. Secretary Cook, and desired him to take special care thereof at the Sessions. And I did not conceive, that by the Order I was directed to go thither my self; but if I had been so directed, and had so conceived it, I should not have declined the service. I know not, nor never heard of any Lands conveyed to the use of these persons, or of any Foundation there; but there was some mention made thereof in some of the Papers delivered to me by Mr. Secretary, but so generally, as I know not how to enquire thereof; but I did take care to entitle the King to the Goods, as the especial direction to me was by the Order of the Board; and the Indictment failed to be found against all but one: And I have Warrant to the Treasurers Remembrancer of the Exchequer, for a special Commission to that purpose; and I advised with Mr. Long who were fit Commissioners for that purpose; and after with Mr. Scrivener: and a Commission was granted to Gentlemen of very good quality, and an inquisition is found and returned accordingly, whereby the King is entituled to the Goods.

I had warrant from his Majesty to bail them: but for the manner of that, I must crave leave to acquaint the King therewith, before I answer any further.

I understood that an Indictment was preferred against three of them, for Treason, and I did direct Mr. Long, that if the Indictments should not be found for Treason, yet to tender them and all the rest the Oath of Allegiance, to bring them within the King's mercy, upon a Premunire, if they should refuse the Oath: and I understood the Oath was ministered to them accordingly at that Sessions; and I understood after, that the Indictment was found against one of them only to be a Priest, and that the other were quit. Therefore receiving an express commandment from the King for the bailing of them, I did conceive they were bailable, which otherwise of my self I would not have done. The Bonds I took, and kept them my self; for the Surety, I refer my self to the Bond, and understand that some of them were House-keepers in the Town.

I gave directions for Indictments to be drawn against them; but I gave no special directions, whether it should be drawn against Jesuits or Priests, but left that to the care of Mr. Long; and did not then conceive there was any difference in the substance of the Indictment for Treason between Priests and Jesuits.

I can give no special reason, why I rather bound them to appear at the Council-Table, than at the Sessions, but only this, because I received my first directions from the Council-board.

When the Sessions was past, I did enquire of Mr. Long, what was the success of these Indictments; who informed me, That one only was found guilty of being a Priest; and thereupon I gave order for the Commission before mentioned to enquire of their goods.

And being again sent unto for a clearer Answer, he said, For the Warrant which I received for the discharge of the Prisoners, and the Bond taken by me upon their deliverance, which has a dependance upon that Warrant, and whereof ye require an account, I have attended his Majesty, but yet have no leave to shew them; and the Bonds being taken but in December last, I keep them with me, as I conceive was proper for my place; but shall be ready to deliver them when I shall receive a commandment to that purpose.

And now again the Customers are call'd into the Commons House about the seizing of Mr. Rolls's goods, a Member of the House of Commons, who said, That he took Mr. Rolls's Goods by virtue of a Commission under the Great Seal, and other Warrants. That he knew Mr. Rolls demanded his Pri-vilidge, but he did understand his Priviledge did only extend to his person, not to his goods. And he further said, He took those goods for such Duties as were due in the time of King James; and that the King had sent for him on Sunday last, and commanded him to make no other Answer.

Mr. Carmarthen, another of the Customers, being called in, said, That he knew Mr. Rolls to be a Parliament man, and told him, He did not find any Parliament man exempted in their Commission. And as for the words charged on him, that he should say, If all the Body of the House were in him, he would not deliver the goods; he answered, If he said he would not, it was because he could not.

Mr. Selden hereupon said, If there be any near the King that doth misrepresent our actions, let the curse light on them, not on us; and believe it, it is high time to vindicate our selves in this case, else it is in vain for us to sit here.

Hereupon the House is resolved into a Grand Committee to debate the matter; some were of opinion that the Customers abstracting from the King's Command and Warrant whereby they acted, should be proceeded against, and that it was but fit that his Majesties interest, and the interest of the Customers should be distinguished, though they were plainly told by the Secretary, that this would not clear his Majesties Honour, and what they had done was done by his Majesties express knowledge and command, which his Majesty also the same day avowed openly at the Council. Upon this Message of his Majesties by the Secretary, the Prelates are cried out upon in the House of Commons, and that what was done was done by those who abetted the Popish party, and indeavoured a breach 'twixt his Majesty and his good Subjects the Commons: To which one replied, We have Oyl and Vinegar before us; if you go to punish the Customers as Delinquents, there is Vinegar in the wound: Think rather of some course to have restitution. Others of another temper said, Delinquency cannot be named, but presently a breach must be intimated. When we do that which is just, let there be no fear nor memory of breaches, and let us go to the Delinquency of the men.

Upon this Sir John Elliot, the great Caius Marius, names the Bishop of Winton, and the Lord Treasurer Weston, In whose person (said he) all evil is contracted; I find him acting and building on those grounds laid by his Master the great Duke; and his spirit is moving to these interruptions, and they for fear break Parliaments, lest Parliaments should break them: I find him the Head of all the great Party; the Papists, all Jesuits and Priests derive from him their shelter and protection, &c.

Others now interposing, he was desired to go on with his Speech, and did it. After this the Speaker was desired by the House to put the Question then proposed, but he would not do it, saying, He had order from his Majesty not to do it.

Mr. Selden replies upon him, Dare not you, Mr. Speaker, put the Question we when command you? If will not put it, we must sit still; thus we shall never be able to do anything. They that come after you may say, They have the King's command not to do it. We sit here by the command of the King under the Great Seal, and you are, by his Majesty, sitting in this Royal Chair, before both Houses, appointed for our Speaker; and now you refuse to perform your Office.

Upon which the House adjourned till the 25th of February, and thence further adjourned by his Majesties command till March the second, at which time the House met, and they requiring the Speaker, as before, to put the Question; he said,

Anno 1628. I have a command from his Majesty to adjourn the House till the 10th of March, and to put no Question. And rising up from his Chair, was violently laid hands on by some of the Members, and held in the Chair whiles a Declaration or Protestation of Sir John Elliot's drawing, was read, but not without great tumult, noise, nay, some blows struck by Mr. Coriton, who beat Mr. Winterton, of which demeanor more hereafter in the Information exhibited against the said Members in the Star-Chamber. The Protestation was,

1. Whosoever shall bring in Innovation of Religion, or by favour or countenance seem to extend or introduce Popery or Arminianism, or other Opinion disagreeing from the Truth and Orthodox Church, shall be reputed a capital Enemy to this Kingdom and Commonwealth.

2. Whosoever shall counsel or advise the taking and levying of the Subsidies of Tonnage and Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, or shall be an Actor or Instrument therein, shall be likewise reputed an Innovator in the Government, and a capital Enemy to the Kingdom and Commonwealth.

3. If any Merchant or Person whatsoever, shall voluntarily yield, or pay the said Subsidies of Tonnage and Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, he shall likewise be reputed a Betrayer of the Liberties of England, and an Enemy to the same.

After this done the Door was unlock'd, and the Gentleman-Usher of the Lords House admitted, the House being before adjourned in such confusion and tumult, as you have heard, till the 10th of March; but his Majesty declares the Parliament dissolved by his Proclamation dated March the 2d. The Proclamation followeth.

By the King.

A Proclamation about dissolving of the Parliament.

Whereas We, for the general good of our Kingdom, caused our High Court of Parliament to assemble and make Prorogation the 20 day of January last past; since which time the same hath been continued. And although in this time, by the malevolent dispositions of some ill-affected persons of the House of Commons, we have had sundry just causes of offence and dislike of their proceedings; yet we resolved with patience to try the uttermost, which we the rather did, so that we found in that House a great number of sober and grave persons, well affected to Religion and Government, and desirous to preserve Unity and Peace in all parts of our Kingdom. And therefore, having on the five and twentieth day of February last, by the uniform advice of our Privy Council, caused both Houses to be adjourned until this present day, hoping in the mean time, that a better and more right understanding might be begotten between us and the Members of that House, whereby this Parliament might have a happy end and issue.

And for the same intent, we did again this day command the like Adjournment to be made, until the Tenth day of this Month: It hath so hapned, by the disobedient and seditious carriage of those said ill-affected persons of the House of Commons, that we and our Regal Authority and Commandment have been so highly contemned, as our King's Office cannot bear, nor any former Age can parallel. And therefore it is our full and absolute resolution to dissolve the said Parliament, whereof we thought good to give notice unto all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and to the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of this present Parliament, and to all others whom it may concern, that they may depart about their needful Affairs, without attending any longer here. Nevertheless we will, that they, and all others shall take notice, that we do, and ever will distinguish between those, who have shewed good affection to Religion and Government, and those that have given themselves over to faction, and to work disturbance to the peace and good order of our Kingdom.

Given at our Court at Whitehall, this second day of March, in the fifth year of our Reign of Great Britain, France and Ireland.

The next day Warrants were issued by Order of the Council, that the principal Movers and Abettors in these Actions, who were Denzil Holles Esq; Sir Miles Hobart, Sir Peter Hayman, John Selden Esq; William Coriton, Walter Long, William Strode, and Benjamin Valentine, should appear at the Board; where appeared Holles, Elliot, Coriton, and Valentine, who refusing to give any account to the Council of what was done during their sitting in the House, they were all committed close Prisoners to the Tower, and Orders were given for the sealing up the Studies of Holles, Elliot, and Selden; but Long and Strode not appearing, a Proclamation was issued out for their apprehension.

On the Tenth of March, near a week after the Commitment of these Members, his Majesty seated in his Throne in the upper House, and the Peers in their Parliamentary Robes, many of the Commons being at the Bar of that House, his Majesty spake as followeth.

The King's Speech at the dissolution of the Parliament.

My Lords,

I Never came here upon so unpleasant an occasion, it being the dissolution of a Parliament; yet before men may have some cause to wonder, why I should not rather choose to do this by Commission, it being rather a general Maxim of Kings, to leave harsh Commands to their Ministers, themselves only executing pleasing things: yet considering that Justice as well consists in reward, and praise of Vertue, as punishing of Vice, I thought it necessary to come here to day, and to declare to you and all the world, that it was merely the undutiful and seditious carriage in the lower House, that hath made the dissolution of this Parliament; and you, my Lords, are so far from being any causers of it, that I take as much comfort in your dutiful demeanour, as I am justly distasteful with their proceedings; yet to avoid their mistakings, let me tell you, that it is so far from me to adjudge all the House alike guilty,

Car. 5. Anno 1628. Car. 5. *W*ith that I know that they are many there as dutiful Subjects as any in the World, it being but some few Dippers among them that did cast this mist of untruthfulness over most of their eyes: Yet to say truth, there was a good number there, that could not be infected with this Contagion; insomuch that some did express their duties in speaking, which was the general fault of the House the last day. To conclude, as those Dippers must look for their reward of punishment, so you, my Lords, must justly expect from me that favour and protection, that a good King oweth to his loving and faithful Nobility.

And now, my Lord Keeper, do what I have commanded you.

Then the Lord Keeper said, My Lords, and Gentlemen of the House of Commons, the Kings Majesty doth Dissolve this Parliament.

Immediately after the Dissolution of this Parliament, his Majesty, to prevent all evil Reports which the discontented Party every where with great industry cast abroad against his Majesties proceedings, issued out his Proclamation, giving his good People to understand the Motives and Reasons that induced his Majesty to it: It followeth in its due order.

And so prevalent was the interest of our Demagogues, especially in the City of London, that two most eminent Privy Counsellors, the Bishop of London, and the Lord Treasurer Weston, were publickly libelled in the City, and the Libels thrown into the Dean of St. Pauls his Court-yard in London.

His Majesty was resolved not to let go unpunished the exorbitances of these Members of Parliament, and therefore proposes to the Judges the Questions following, to which they respectively give Answer.

Car. 5.

1. *W*hether if any Subject hath received probable information of any Treason or treacherous attempt or intension against the King or State, that Subject ought not to make known to the King, or his Majesties Commissioners, when thereunto he shall be required, what information he hath received, and the grounds thereof; to the end, the King being truly informed, may prevent the danger? And if the said Subject in such case shall refuse to be examined, or to answer the Questions which shall be demanded of him for further inquiry and discovery of the truth, whether it be not a high contempt in him, punishable in the Star-chamber, as an offence against the general Justice and Government of the Kingdom?

Sol. The Resolution and Answer of all the Justices, That it is an offence punishable as aforesaid, so that this do not concern himself, but another, nor draw him to danger of Treason or Contempt by his Answer.

2. Whether it be a good answer or excuse, being thus interrogated, and refusing to answer, to say, That he was a Parliament-man when he received this Information, and that he spake thereof in the Parliament-house; and therefore the Parliament being now ended, he refused to answer to any such Questions but in the Parliament-house, and not in any other place?

Sol. To this the Judges, by advice privately to Mr. Attorney, gave this Answer, That this excuse being in nature of a Plea, and an error in judgment, was not punishable, until he were overruled in an orderly manner to make another Answer; and whether the Party were brought in Ore tenus, or by Information, for this Plea he was not to be punished.

3. Whether a Parliament-man, committing an offence against the King or Council not in a Parliamentary way, might, after the Parliament ended, be punished or not?

Sol. All the Judges, una voce, answered, He might, if he be not punished for it in Parliament; for the Parliament shall not give privilege to any contra morem Parliamentarium, to exceed the bounds and limits of his place and duty. And all agreed, That regularly he cannot be compelled out of Parliament to answer things done in Parliament in a Parliamentary course; but it is otherwise where things are done exorbitantly, for those are not the acts of a Court.

4. Whether if one Parliament-man alone shall resolve, or two or three shall covertly conspire to raise false slanders and rumors against the Lords of the Council and Judges, not with intent to question them in a Legal course, or in a Parliamentary way, but to blast them, and to bring them to hatred of the People, and the Government in contempt, be punishable in the Star-chamber after the Parliament is ended?

Sol. The Judges resolve, That the same was punishable out of Parliament, as an offence exorbitant committed in Parliament, beyond the Office, and besides the duty of a Parliament-man.

Upon the Seventh of May the Attorney General, Sir Robert Heath, by order from his Majesty, exhibits an Information in the Star-chamber against Sir John Elliot, &c.

To the Kings most Excellent Majesty.

*H*umbly sheweth and informeth unto your most excellent Majesty, Sir Robert Heath Kt. your Majesties Attorney General, for and on your Majesties behalf, That whereas by the ancient and fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, the High Court of Parliament consisteth of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in the Lords House, and of the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses in the Commons House of Parliament, and those two Houses thus composed, do together make up that great and honourable Body, whereof your most Excellent Majesty, as the Supreme Sovereign, is the Head: and whereas the Power of Summoning and Assembling of Parliaments, and of Continuing, Proroguing, Adjourning, and Dissolving thereof within this Realm at your good pleasure, is the undoubted Right of your Majesty; and the liberty and freedom of Speech, which the Members of the said Houses of Parliament have, according to the Privileges of those several Houses, to debate, consult, and determine of those things which are propounded amongst them, is, and ever hath been, and ought to be, limited and regulated within the bounds of Moderation and Modesty, and of that Duty which Subjects owe to their Sovereign: and whereas your Majesty, for many weighty causes, and for the general good and defence of the Church and State of this your Kingdom, lately summoned a Parliament to be holden at your City of Westminster, the 17th day of March, in the third year of your Majesties Reign, which continued from thence by Prorogation until the 20th day of January last; from which day, until the 25th day of February following, the said Houses continued sitting. And although the great part of the House of Commons, being zealous of the Common Good, did endeavour to have effected

Anno 1629. effected those good things for which they were called thither; yet between the said 20th day of January, and the said 25th day of February, by the malevolent disposition of some ill-affected Members of the said House, sundry Diversions and Interruptions were there made, and many Jealousies there unjustly raised and nourished, to the disturbance of those orderly and Parliamentary proceedings, which ought to have been in so grave a Council. During which time of the said last Meeting in Parliament, as aforesaid, so it is, may it please your most excellent Majesty, that Sir John Elliot Kt. then and all the time of the said Parliament, being one of the Members of the said Commons House, wickedly and maliciously intending, under a feigned colour and pretence of debating the necessary Affairs of the present Estate, to lay a scandal and unjust aspersion upon the Right Honourable the Lords, and others of your Majesties most Honourable Privy Council, and upon the Reverend Judges, and your Counsel learned, and as much as in him lay to bring them into the hatred and ill opinion of the people; after the said 20th day of January, and before the said 25th day of February last, did openly and publicly in the said House of Commons, falsely and maliciously affirm, That your Majesties Privy Council, all your Judges, and your Counsel learned, had conspired together to trample under their feet the Liberties of the said Subjects of this Realm, and the privileges of that House. And further, so it is, may it please your most Excellent Majesty, that when your Majesty, upon the 25th day of February, had, by Sir John Finch Kt. then Speaker to the said House of Commons, signified your Royal pleasure to the said House, that the said House of Commons should be instantly adjourned until the second day of March then following, he the said Sir John Elliot, and Denzil Holles Esq; Benjamin Valentine Gent. Walter Long Esq; William Corison Esq; William Strode Esq; John Selden Esq; Sir Miles Hobert and Sir Peter Hayman, Knights, all Members at that time of the said Commons House, conceiving with themselves, that your Majesty, being justly provoked thereto, would speedily dissolve that Parliament; they the said Sir John Elliot, Denzil Holles, Benjamin Valentine, Walter Long, William Corison, William Strode, John Selden, Sir Miles Hobert, and Sir Peter Hayman, and every of them, by unlawful confederacy and combination between them in that behalf before had, did maliciously resolve, agree, and conspire, how and by what means, before that Parliament should be dissolved, they might raise such false and scandalous rumours against your Majesties Government, and your Counsellors of Estate attending your person, that thereby as much as in them lieth, they might disturb the happy Government of this Kingdom, by and under your Majesty; interrupt the course of Traffick and Trade; discourage your Merchants, and raise Jealousies and Suspitions in the hearts of your People, that the sincerity of the true Religion professed and established in this Kingdom, was neglected: and in pursuance of this their resolution and confidence aforesaid, the said Sir John Elliot, with the privy and consent of the said Denzil Holles, and all other the said Confederates, did prepare a Paper or Writing, wherein he had written, or caused to be written, divers false and scandalous Assertions touching your Majesties Government; and touching the persons of divers of your Privy Council, which he and they resolved, and conspired, and agreed, should be delivered into the said House of Commons, and there publicly read, to the wicked and seditious intents and purposes aforesaid, and not with any purpose or opinion that those things that were therein contained, if they, or any of them had been true, as indeed they were not, should or could be at that time entertained, or pursued in any Legal or Parliamentary way, but meerly and only to express and vent his and their own malice and disaffection of your Majesty and your happy Government: And your Majesty, upon the said second day of March now last past, having signified your Royal pleasure unto the said Sir John Finch, then the Speaker of that House, That the said House should then be presently adjourned until the 10th day of the said Month of March, without any further speech or proceedings at that time; and the said Speaker then delivered your Majesties pleasure and commandment to the said House accordingly, and declared unto them your Majesties express charge and command unto him, That if any should notwithstanding disobey your Majesties command, that he must forthwith leave the charge, and wait upon your Majesty: unto which commandment of your Majesty, and signification of your Royal pleasure in that behalf, for a present Adjournment of the House, the greatest number of the Members of that House, in their Duty and Allegiance unto your Majesty, were willing to have given a ready obedience, as the Lords Spiritual and Temporal of the Lords House, upon the very same, upon the like signification made unto them of your Majesties pleasure, by your Lord Keeper of your Great Seal of England, the Speaker of that House had done: yet so it is, may it please your most Excellent Majesty, that the said Sir John Elliot, for the satisfying of his own malice and disloyal affections to your Majesty, and by the confederacy and agreement aforesaid, and in a high contempt and disobedience unto your Majesties command, aforesaid, and with set purpose to oppose your Majesties said command, did stand up, and several times offered to speak. Whereupon the said Speaker, in obedience to your Majesties said command, endeavouring to have gone out of the Chair, the said Denzil Holles and Benjamin Valentine, being then next the Speaker's Chair, and the one of them on the one hand, and the other of them on the other hand of the Speaker (where they so placed themselves of purpose on that day) out of their disobedience to your Majesty, and by the confederacy and agreement aforesaid, violently, forcibly, and unlawfully, and with purpose to raise a tumult in the said House, kept and held the said Speaker in the said Chair, against his Will; and the said Speaker again endeavouring to leave the Chair, and having then gotten out of the Chair, they, the said Denzil Holles and Benjamin Valentine laid violent hands upon the said Speaker, forcibly and unlawfully, and by strong hand thrust him into his Chair again; and then the said Sir John Elliot again stood up, and used these speeches; (viz.) We have prepared a short Declaration of our intentions, which I hope shall agree with the Honour of the House, and the Justice of the King. And with that he threw down a Paper into the floor of the said House, desiring it might be read: and the said Denzil Holles, Benjamin Valentine, and all other the Confederates aforesaid, in disobedience and high contempt of your Majesties said command, called and cried out to have the same Paper read. But some others of the House spake to the contrary, that it might not be read; and the House thereupon, by reason of the disorderly behaviour of the said Confederates, was much troubled, many pressing violently and tumultuously to have the said Pa-

Anno per read, and others dutifully and diligently urging 1629. the contrary, to the great disquiet and discomfort of many well-affected Members of that House.
 And the said William Coriton, in this distemper, demeaned himself so passionately and violently, that he then & there violently, forcibly, and unlawfully assaulted and struck Wimerton, Gent. then being a Member of the said House: and divers of the Members of the said House being then desirous, and endeavouring to have gone out of the said House, the said Sir Miles Hobart did, of his own head, lock the door of the said House, and kept the Key thereof, and imprisoned the Members of the said House, being then in the said House against their wills, so that none of them could go out. And the said William Strode, for the further expressing of his malignity and undutifulness towards your Majesty, and in pursuance of the agreement and confederacy aforesaid, openly moved, and with much earnestness urged, that the said Paper or Declaration might be first read, to the end (as he then, in great contempt of your Royal Majesty, said) that we, meaning the Members of the House, may not be turned off like scattered Sheep, and sent home as we were last Sessions, with a scorn put upon us in Print; meaning thereby the words which your Majesty, in your own Person, spake at the ending of the last Session, and caused the same to be printed: And the said Strode, in a very disorderly manner, further moved,
 That all those who would have the said Paper read should stand up; which divers of them thereupon did do accordingly, and he the said Strode amongst others did stand up; and in this heat of contention, and height of disobedience, by the confederacy a-foreaid, to have the said Paper read, the said Sir Isaac Hayman, with rough and reproachful words, reprov'd the said Speaker, for being constant and resolute in his obedience to your Majesty, in not putting the reading of the said Paper to the Question, as by all the said Confederates, with many Reasons and Arguments he was urged to do: and the said Sir P. Hayman then further said, That the said Speaker was made an Instrument to cut up the Liberty of the Subjects by the roots. But when by no means the said Speaker would be drawn to transgress your Majesties Royal command aforesaid, and lest the said Paper should not be read, the said John Selden moved, that the Clerk of the said
 House might read the same: And when the said Sir John Elliot found, that he and his Confederates aforesaid, could not procure the said Paper to be read, he, the said Sir John Elliot, to the end he might not lose that opportunity to vent and publish those malicious and seditious Resolutions, which he and his Confederates had collected and prepared as aforesaid, took back the said Paper again, and then immediately in the said House said, I shall now express that by Tongue, which this Pa- per should have done; and then spake these words:
The miserable condition we are in, both in matters of Religion and Policy, makes me look with a tender eye both to the Person of the King, and to the Subjects.
 And then speaking of them whom he intended to be ill Instruments in this State, at whom he principally aimed, he said, There are amongst them some Frelaues of the Church, the great Bishop of Winchester and his Fellows; it is apparent what they have done, to cast an aspersion upon the honour and piety, and goodness of the King. These are not all, but it is extended to some others, who, I fear, in guilt of Conscience of their own defects, do joyn their power with that Bishop and the rest, to draw his Majesty into a jealousy of the Parliament; amongst whom, I shall not fear to name the great Lord Treasurer, in whose Person I fear is contracted all that which we suffer. If we look into Religion or Policy, I find him building upon the ground laid by the Duke of Buckingham his great Master; from him, I fear, came those ill Counsels which contracted that unhappy conclusion of the last Session of Parliament; I find, that not only in the affections of his heart, but also in relation to him, and I doubt not to fix it indubitably upon him: and so from the power and greatness of him, comes the danger of our Religion.

 For Policy in that great Question of Tonnage and Poundage, the interest which is pretended to be the King's, is but the interest of that Person so undermine the Policy of this Government, and thereby to weaken the Kingdom, while he invites Strangers to come in to drive our Trade, or at least our Merchants to Trade in Strangers Bottom, which is as dangerous. Therefore it is fit to be declared by us, that all that we suffer, is the effect of new Counsels, to the ruine of the Government of the State; and to make a Protestation against all those Men, whether greater or subordinate, that they shall all be declared as capital Enemies to the King and Kingdom, that will persuade the King to take Tonnage and Poundage without grant of Parliament, and that if any Merchants shall willingly pay those Duties without consent of Parliament, they shall be declared as Accessories to the rest. Which words of the said Sir John Elliot, were by him uttered as afosaid, falsely, and maliciously, and seditiously, out of the wickedness of his own affections towards your Majesty, and your gracious and religious Government, and by the confederacy, agreement, and privity of the said other Confederates, and to lay a slander and scandal thereupon, and not with a purpose, or in a way to rectifie any thing which he conceived to be amiss, but to traduce and blast those persons against whom he had conceived malice; for so himself the same day in that House said, and laid down as a ground for that he intended to say, That no man was ever blasted in that House, but a curse fell upon him.

And further, so it is, may it please your most Excellent Majesty, That when the said Sir John Elliot had thus vented that malice and wickedness which lay in his heart, and as appeareth by his own words, were expressed in the said Paper, which was prepared as aforesaid, the said Walter Long, out of his inveterate malice to your Majesty, and to your Affairs, and by the confederacy aforesaid, then and there said, That man who shall give away
my Liberty and Inheritance (I speak of the Merchants) I note them for capital Enemies to the Kingdom. And lest the hearers should forget these wicked desperate Positions laid down as aforesaid, and to the end the same might have the deeper impression, and be the more divulged abroad to the prejudice of your Majesty, and of your great Affairs, and to the scandal of your Government, the said Den- zil Holles collected into several Heads what the said Sir John Elliot had before delivered out of that Paper, and then said, Whoever shall counsel the ta- king up of Tonnage and Poundage, without an Act of Parliament, let him be accounted a capital Enemy to the King and Kingdom. And further, What Mer- chants soever shall pay Tonnage and Poundage without an Act of Parliament, let him be counted a Betrayer of the Liberty of the Subjects, and a capital Enemy to the King and Kingdom.

Which Positions thus laid, the said Denzil Hol- les, neither being Speaker, nor sitting in the Chair as in a Committee by direction of the House, but in an irregular way, and contrary to all course of orderly proceedings in Parliament, offered to put these things so delivered by him as aforesaid, to the Que-

Anno 1629. Question, and drew from his Confederates aforesaid an applause and assent, as if these things had been voted by the House.

And further: so it is, may it please your most Excellent Majesty, That the disobedience of the said Confederates was then grown to that height, that when Edward Grimston, the Serjeant at Arms then attending the Speaker of that House, was sent for by your Majesty, personally to attend your Highness, and the same was made known in the said House, the said Confederates notwithstanding at that time, forcibly and unlawfully kept the said Edward Grimston locked up in the said House, and would not suffer him to go out of the House to attend your Majesty: And when also, on the same day, James Maxwell Esq; the Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod, was sent from your Majesty to the said Commons House, with a Message immediately from your Majesties own person, they the said Confederates utterly refused to open the door of the House, and to admit the said James Maxwell to go to deliver his Message. After all which, the said House was then Adjourned until the said Tenth day of March then following; and on the said Tenth day of March the said Parliament was Dissolved and ended. In consideration of all which Premisses, and forasmuch as the contempt and disobedience of the said Sir John Elliot, and other the Confederates aforesaid, were so great, and so many, and unwarranted by the privilege and due proceeding of Parliament, and were committed with so high a hand, and are of so ill example, and so dangerous consequence, and remain all unpardoned. Therefore they prayed a Process against them, to answer their contempts in the High Court of Star-Chamber.

Memorandum, That the 29 of May, Anno quin-to Car. Reg. these words, viz. After all which, the said House was then Adjourned until the said Tenth day of March; and on the said Tenth day of March the said Parliament was Dissolved and ended; were added and inserted by order of the Court, immediately before, In tender consideration, &c.

And at the same time Alderman Chambers was proceeded against by his Majesties Attorney in the said Court of Star-Chamber, and he was fined and sentenced for saying these words derogatory to his Majesties good Government, &c. That the Merchants in England were more screwed than in Turkey, or words to that effect. He was tendered a Re-cantation and Submission, but he utterly refused it; and by his wilfulness was at last reduced to want. He Petitions Olivers Parliament in 1656:
for relief, but in vain.

His Majesty afterwards was pleased to proceed against the Members of the House of Commons imprison'd in the Tower, at the Common Law by way of Information in the King's Bench, the Court was content that they should be bailed, but they refused to be of good behaviour, or to find Sureties; therefore in the same Term this Information is brought against Sir John Elliot, That he intending to stir up Discord, Evil-will, Murmuring, and Seditions against the King's Majesty, &c. did falsely and maliciously on the 23 of February, 4 Car. utter these words, That the King's Privy Council, his Judges, and his Counsel Learned, have conspired together to trample under their feet the Liberties of the Subjects of this Realm, and the Liberties of this House.

And that Denzil Holles and Benjamin Valentine, after the King's pleasure signified to Adjourn the House of Commons, did detain the Speaker, Sir John Finch, in his Chair Vi & Armis, manu forti & illicita, and the said Sir John Finch endeavouring to get out of the Chair, and being out of it, they assaulted him in the House, and evilly entreated him, violently, manu forti & illicita, drew him into the Chair again; whereupon great Tumults were raised in the House against their Allegiance, in contempt of the King's Crown and Dignity, for which &c.

Whether such Actions of these Members of Parliament, called together by their Sovereign to treat of some arduous Affairs which respect the King's Crown and Dignity, now flying over the Seas, or in former Parliaments influenced the Commonalty of France to raise Commotions against the Clergy of France in their Parliaments, (we say not;) most certain it is, That the King of France discontinued the Assemblies of the three Estates upon far less provocations; for from the ancient constitution of that Assembly it continued to the Year 1614. when first the third Estate, representing (ours) [their Commons] encroached too busily upon their Clergy, and some preeminency of the Nobility, enjoyed by favour of their former Kings, so offended the Royalty, that he resolved to Dissolve them, and never admit the like, (the Justice of which Act we dispute) the future Kings follow that President, yet with some regret his Subjects remembering a former Constitution, it was therefore devised to communicate with his People in another manner, called L'assemble des Notables, some selected Persons out of each Order of Estate, of his own election or naming; and to them were added some Counsellor out of every particular Court of Parliament (there being eight of them in all France) through that Kingdom, and so being fewer in number, would not breed such a confusion as the general Assembly of States had done before. Their Acts are as obliging to all sorts of Subjects, as the others were, only from Comptrollers they are become good Counsellors still: And with this course the Estates and People are as yet content, they thinking perhaps it no shame to submit to that Power which it will be Sin to resist.

In Hillary Term the Case of Mr. Long, one of the Parliament men, came to a hearing in the Star-Chamber; For that he being chosen Sheriff of the County of Wilts, in or about November, in the third year of his Majesties Reign, and received his Patent of Sheriffwick for the said County about ten days after, and that he took an Oath before one of the Masters of the Chancery, for the due execution of the said Office of Sheriff of the said County. In which Oath, as appear'd by the same there read in Court, he did swear, That he would in his own person remain within his Bayliffwick during all the time of his Sheriffwick, unless he had the King's Licence to the contrary; and that at an Election of Citizens for the said City of Bath, the said Defendant Long was chosen one of the Citizens to serve for the said City of Bath in the Parliament then summoned, to be holden and commence upon the 17th day of March in the said third year of his Majesties reign; and being so chosen, and returned by the Sheriff of the County of Somerset, notwithstanding his said Oath taken to remain in his proper person, within

Anno 1629. within his Bayliffwick, unless he were licensed by his Majesty, he the said Defendant did make his personal appearance in the Commons House of Parliament, at the City of Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, and did, during the most part of the said Parliament, continue in and about the City of London and Westminster, and did attend in the Parliament as a Citizen for the said City of Bath: during all which time he likewise was, and continued High Sheriff for the said County of Wilts., and had no particular Licence from his Majesty to the contrary.

To this Information he put in his Demurrer and Plea, which by the Court were judged of no weight, but that also they were in derogation of the Jurisdiction of that High and Honourable Court, it was adjudged by the said Court, That the said Defendant should stand and be committed to the Prison of the Tower, there to remain during his Majesties pleasure, and also pay a Fine of Two thousand Marks to his Majesties use; and further, make his humble submission and acknowledgment of his offence both in the Court of Star-chamber, and to his Majesty, before his thence enlargement.

In this Term likewise the Attorney General Sir Robert Heath, prosecuted his Information against Sir John Elliot, and argued in defence of the said Information, upon which the whole Court agreed, That the Court of Kings Bench, as the Case now is, shall have Jurisdiction, although the Offences were committed in Parliament; and that the Members imprisoned ought to Answer. And more particularly Judge Jones delivered himself thus, That this Court hath power to punish Offences committed criminally in Parliament. Quia interest Reipublicæ ut maleficia non maneat impunita.

It hath been objected, That the Parliament is the Superiour Court to this, therefore this Court cannot examine their proceedings.

To this I say, That we do not question the judgments of Parliaments, but their particular Offences.

2. Object. It is a Priviledge of Parliament, whereof we are not competent Judges.

To this I say, That privilegium est privata Lex & privat legem. And 8 Eliz. (which was cited by Mr. Attorney) it was the Opinion of Dyer, Oatlyn, Welsh, Brown, and Southcot, Justices, That offences committed in Parliament might be punished out of Parliament. And 3 Ed. 5. 19. it is good Law. And it is usual near the end of Parliaments to set down some petty punishment upon offenders in Parliament, to prevent other Courts. And I have seen a Roll in this Court, in 6 H. 6. where Judgment was given in a Writ of Annuity in Ireland, and afterward the said Judgment was reversed in Parliament in Ireland; upon which Judgment, Writ of Error was brought in this Court, and reversed.

Hide, Lord Chief Justice, argued to the same purpose, and said, That the Reasons were the same which the Defendants had formerly offered to the Judges at Serjeants Inn in Fleetstreet, when it was resolved by them all, That any offence committed in Parliament (that being ended) might be punished out of Parliament, and that this Court was the fittest Court for that purpose.

Whitlock's opinion was the same, who said, The Question was 'twixt some private Members of the House of Commons and the King, not betwixt the King and Parliament, &c.

That the King well may question the Members for such their offences, that in every Commonwealth there is one Supereminent Power, which is not subject to be questioned by any other; and that is the King in this Commonwealth, who, as Bralton saith, Solum Deum habet ultorem. But no other within the Realm hath this Priviledge. It is true, That that which is done in Parliament by consent of all the House, shall not be questioned elsewhere; but if any private Members, Exeunt personas judicium, & induunt malefacientium personas, & sunt seditiosi.

Justice Crook, one of the Judges who argued against the levying of Ship-money, was very positive; he said, That the offences of these Members were punishable in this Court, or no where, nay, that all offences against the Crown were here to be punished: Indeed what was done in a Parliamentary way cannot here be punished; but what is done there in such a way, as now is pretended, falsely and unlawfully, that cannot be in a Parliamentary course, and therefore their offences, if such, are punishable here.

And accordingly the Defendants were ordered to plead further, which they not doing, Judgment was on the last day of the Term given against them by a Nihil dicit, and the Judgment was delivered by Judge Jones to this purpose; That forasmuch as the Defendants had admitted the Information as true, and that the Court had Judged their Plea insufficient, both for matter and manner; And that the Court did not go about to draw the true Liberties of Parliament men into question for such things as they do or speak in a Parliamentary manner; but in this Case, he said, that there was a Conspiracy betwixt the Defendants to raise Sedition and Discord 'twixt the King and his People: And therefore the Court gave Sentence,

1. That every of the Defendants shall be imprisoned during the Kings pleasure: Sir John Elliot to be imprisoned in the Tower of London, and the other Defendants in other Prisons.

2. That none of them shall be delivered out of Prison until he give security in this Court for his good behaviour, and have made submission and acknowledgment of his offence.

3. Sir John Elliot, inasmuch as we think him the greatest Offender, and Ringleader, shall pay to the King a Fine of Two thousand pounds; and Mr. Holles, a Fine of One thousand Marks; and Mr. Valentine, because he is of less ability than the rest, shall pay a Fine of Five hundred pounds. And with Judge Jones all the rest of the Judges of that Court agreed.

His

His Majesties Declaration to all His Loving Subjects, of the Causes which moved Him to Dissolve the last Parliament, March 10. 1628.

Howsoever Princes are not bound to give account of their Actions but to God alone; yet for the satisfaction of the Minds and Affections of our loving Subjects, We have thought good to set down thus much by way of Declaration, that We may appear to the World in the Truth and Sincerity of Our Actions, and not in those Colours, in which We know some Turbulent and Ill-affected Spirits (to Masque and Disguise their Wicked Intentions, Dangerous to the State) would Represent Us to the Publick View.

We Assembled Our Parliament the 17th. day of March, in the third Year of Our Reign, for the safety of Religion, for securing Our Kingdoms and Subjects at home, and Our Friends and Allies abroad. And therefore at the first sitting down of it, We declared the Miserable Afflicted Estate of those of the Reformed Religion in Germany, France, and other parts of Christendom; the Distressed Extremities of Our dearest Uncle, the King of Denmark, chased out of a great part of his Dominions; the strength of that Party which was United against Us; That (besides the Pope and the House of Austria, and their Antient Confederates) the French King Professed the Rooting out of the Protestant Religion; That, of the Princes and States on Our party, some were Over-run, others Diverted, and some disabled to give Assistance. For which, and other Important Motives, We Propounded a speedy supply of Treasure, answerable to the necessity of the Cause.

These things in the beginning were well Resented by the House of Commons, and with much Alacrity and Readiness, that they agreed to grant a Liberal Aid: But before it was brought to any Perfection, they were Diverted by a Multitude of Questions, raised amongst them, touching their Liberties and Privileges, and by other long Disputes, that the Bill did not pass in a long time; and by that delay, Our Affairs were put into a far worse case than at the first; Our Forreign Actions then in hand being thereby Disgraced and Ruined, for want of timely help.

In this, as We are not willing to Derogate from the merit and good Intentions of those Wise and Moderate men of that House, (to whose forwardness We Attribute it, that it was Propounded and Resolved so soon) so We must needs say, that the delay of passing it when it was Resolved, occasioned by causeless Jealousies, stirred up by Men of another Temper, did much lessen both the Reputation and Reality of that Supply. And their spirit, Infused into many of the Commissioners and Assessors in the Country, hath returned up the Subsidies in such a Scanty Proportion, as is infinitely short, not only of Our great Occasions, but of the Presidents of former Subsidies, and of the Intentions of all well-affected men in that House.

In those large Disputes, as We Permitted many of Our High Prerogatives to be Debated, which in the best times of Our Predecessors had never been questioned, without Punishment or sharp Reproof; so We did endeavour to have shortened those Debates, for Winning of time, which would have much advantage Our great Affairs, both at Home and Abroad. And therefore both by Speeches and Mellages, We did often Declare Our Gracious and clear Resolution, to maintain, not only the Parliament, but all Our People, in their Antient and Just Liberties, without either Violation or Diminution; and in the end, for their full Satisfaction and Security, did, by an Answer, Framed in the Form by themselves desired, to their Parliamentary Petition, confirm their Antient and Just Liberties and Rights, which We Resolve, with all Constancy and Justice, to maintain.

This Parliament, howsoever besides the settling Our necessary Supply, and their own Liberties, they wasted much time in such Proceedings, (blasting Our Government) as We are unwilling to to remember, yet We suffered them to sit, until themselves desired Us to appoint a time for their Recess, not naming either Adjournment or Prorogation.

Whereupon by advice of Our Council, We resolved to Prorogue and make a Session; and to that end prefixed a day, by which they might (as was meet in so long a Sitting) finish some profitable and good Laws; and withal gave order for a Gracious Pardon to all Our Subjects: which, according to the use of Former Parliaments, passed the Higher House and was sent down to the Commons. All which being Gratioussly intended by Us, was ill Entertained by some Disaffected persons of that House, who by their Artifices, in a short time raised so much Heat and Distemper in the House, for no other Visible cause, but because We had declared Our Resolution to Prorogue, as Our Council Advised, and not to Adjourn, as some of that House (after Our Resolution declared, and not before) did manifest themselves to affect: That seldom hath greater Passion been seen in that House, upon the greatest occasions. And some Glances in the House, but upon open Rumors abroad, were spread, That by the Answer to the Petition, We had given away, not only Our Impositions upon Goods, Exported and Imported, but the Tunnage and Poundage, (whereas in the Debate and Hammering of that Petition, there was no Speech or mention of either House concerning those Impositions, but concerning Taxes and other Charges within the Land; much less was there any thought thereby to debar Us of Tunnage and Poundage, which, both before and after the Answer to that Petition, the House of Commons, in all their Speeches and Treaties, did profess they were willing to Grant.) And at the same time, many other Misinterpretations were raised of that Petition and Answer, by men, not well distinguishing between well ordered Liberty, and Licentiousness; as if by Our Answer to that Petition, We had let loose the Reins of Our Government. And in this distemper, the House of Commons, laying aside the Pardon, (a thing never done in any former Parliament) and other business, fit to have been concluded in Session, some of them went about to Frame and Contrive a Remonstrance against Our receiving of Tunnage and Poundage, which was so far proceeded in the Night before the prefixed time, for concluding the Session, and so hastned by the Contrivers thereof, that they

Anno 1628. meant to have put it to the Vote of the House the next Morning, before We should Prorogue that Session. And therefore finding Our Gracious Favours in the Session, afforded to Our People, so ill requited, and such Sinister strains made upon Our Answer to that Petition, to the Diminution of Our Profit, and (which was more) to the danger of Our Government: We resolved to prevent the finishing of that Remonstrance, and other dangerous Intentions of some ill-affected persons, by ending the Session the next Morning, some few Hours sooner than was expected; and by Our Own Mouth to declare to both Houses the cause thereof; and for hindring the spreading of those Sinister Interpretations of that Petition and Answer, to give some necessary directions, for settling and quieting Our Government, until another Meeting; which We performed accordingly the Six and Twentieth of June last.

The Session thus ended, and the Parliament risen, that intended Remonstrance gave Us occasion to look into the business of Tunnage and Poundage. And therefore, though Our necessities pleaded strongly for Us, yet We were not apt to strain that point to far, but resolved to guide Our Self by the practise of former Ages, and Examples of Our most Noble Predecessors, thinking those Counsels best warranted, which the Wisdom of former Ages, Concurring with the present Occasions, did approve; and therefore gave Order for a diligent search of Records: Upon which it was found, That although in the Parliament holden in the first Year of the Reign of King Edward the Fourth, the Subsidy of Tunnage and Poundage was not Granted unto that King, but was first Granted unto him by Parliament in the third Year of his Reign; yet the same was accounted and answered to that King, from the first day of his Reign, all the first and second Years of his Reign, and, until it was Granted by Parliament. And that in the succeeding times of King Richard the Third, King Henry the Seventh, King Henry the Eighth, King Edward the Sixth, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, the Subsidy of Tunnage and Poundage was not only enjoyed by every of those Kings and Queens, from the death of each of them Deceasing, until it was Granted by Parliament unto the Successor; but in all those times, (being for the most part peaceable, and not Burdened with like Charges and Necessities, as these Modern times) the Parliament did most readily and Cheerfully, in the beginning of every of those Reigns, Grant the same, as a thing most necessary for the Guarding of the Seas, Safety and Defence of the Realm, and Supportation of the Royal Dignity. And in the time of Our Royal Father of Blessed Memory, he enjoyed the same a full Year, wanting very few days, before his Parliament began; and above a Year before the Act of Parliament for the Grant of it was passed. And yet when the Parliament was Assembled, it was Granted without difficulty. And in Our Own time, We quietly received the same three years and more, expecting with Patience, in several Parliaments, the like Grant thereof, as had been made to so many of Our Predecessors; the House of Commons still professing, That Multitude of other Businesses, and not want of willingness on their part, had caused the settling thereof to be so long deferred. And therefore finding so much Reason and Necessity, for the receiving of the ordinary Duties in the Custom-house, to Concur with the Practise of such a Succession of Kings and Queens, Famous for Wisdom, Justice, and Government; and nothing to the contrary, but that intended Remonstrance, hatched out of the passionate Brains of a few particular persons; We thought it was so far from the Wisdom and duty of a House of Parliament, as we could not think, that any Moderate and Discreet man, (upon Composed Thoughts, setting aside Passion and Distemper) could be against receiving of Tunnage and Poundage; especially since We do, and still must, pursue those ends, and undergo that charge, for which it was first Granted to the Crown; It having been so long and constantly continued to our Predecessors, as that in four several Acts of Parliament for the Granting thereof to King Edward the Sixth, Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, and Our Blessed Father, it is in expresse terms mentioned, to have been had and enjoyed by the several Kings, named in those Acts, time out of mind, by Authority of Parliament. And therefore upon these reasons, We held it agreeable to Our Kingly Honour, and necessary for the Safety and Good of our Kingdom, to continue the Receipt thereof, as so many of our Predecessors had done. Wherefore when a few Merchants (being at first but one or two) Fomented, as it is well known, by those Evil Spirits, that would have hatched that Undutiful Remonstrance, began to oppose the Payment of our Accustomed Duties in the Custom-house, We gave order to the Officers of our Customs to go on, notwithstanding that opposition, in the receiving of the usual Duties; and caused those, that refused, to be warned to Attend at the Council-board, that by the Wisdom and Authority of our Council, they might be Reduced to Obedience and Duty; where some of them, without Reverence or Respect to the Honour and Dignity of that Presence, behaved themselves with such Boldness and Insolency of Speech, as was not to be endured by a far meaner Assembly, much less to be Countenanced by a House of Parliament, against the Body of our Privy Council.

And as in this We did, what in Reason and Honour was fit for the present, so Our Thoughts were daily Intentive upon the Re-Assembling of our Parliament, with full Intention, on Our part, to take away all ill-understanding between us and our People; whose Loves, as We desired to Continue and Preserve, so we used our best Endeavours to prepare and Facilitate the way to it. And this end, having taken a strict and exact Survey of our Government, both in the Church and Common-Wealth, and what things were most fit and necessary to be Reformed: We found, in the first place, that much Exception had been taken at a Book, Entituled, Appello Casarem, or, An Appeal to Caesar; and published in the Year 1625. by Richard Montague, then Batchelor of Divinity, and now Bishop of Chichester; and because it did open the way to those Schisms and Divisions, which have since ensued in the Church, We did, for Remedy and Redress thereof, and for the Satisfaction of the Consciences of our good People, not only by our Publick Proclamation, call in that Booke, which Ministred matter of offence; but to Prevent the like danger for hereafter, re-printed the Articles of Religion, Established in the time of Queen Elizabeth of Famous Memory; and by a Declaration before those Articles

1628. cles, We did tie and restrain all Opinions to the sense of those Articles, that nothing might be left for private Fancies and Innovations. For, We call God to record, before whom We stand, that it is, and always hath been, Our Hearts desire, to be found worthy of that Title, which We account the most Glorious in all Our Crown, Defender of the Faith. Neither shall We ever give way to the Authorising of any thing, whereby any Innovation may Steal or Creep into the Church; but to preserve that Unity of Doctrine and Discipline, Established in the time of Queen Elizabeth, whereby the Church of England hath stood and flourished ever since.

And as We were careful to make up all Breaches and Rents in Religion at home, so did We, by Our Proclamation and Commandment, for the Execution of Laws against Priests, and Popish Recusants, fortifie all Ways and Approaches against that Forreign Enemy; which if it have not succeeded according to Our intention, We must lay the fault where it is, in the Subordinate Officers, and Ministers in the Country, by whose Remission, Jesuites and Priests escape without apprehension; and Recusants, from those Convictions and Penalties, which the Law and Our Commandment would have inflicted on them. For we do profess, That as it Our Duty, so it shall be Our Care to Command and Direct well; but it is the part of others to perform the Ministerial Office. And when We have done Our Office, We shall account Our self, and all Charitable Men will account Us Innocent, both to God and Men. And those that are negligent, We will esteem as Culpable both to God and Us; and therefore will expect, that hereafter they give Us a better account.

And, as We have been careful for the settling of Religion, and quieting the Church; so were We not unmindful of the preservation of the Just and Antient Liberties of Our Subjects, which We secured to them by Our Gracious Answer to the Petition in Parliament, having not since that time done any act whereby to infringe them. But Our care is, and hereafter shall be, to keep them Intire and Inviolable, as We would do Our Own Right and Sovereignty, having for that purpose Enrolled the Petition and Answer in Our Courts of Justice.

Next to the care of Religion, and of Our Subjects Rights, We did Our best for the provident and well-ordering of that Aid and Supply, which was Granted us the last Session, whereof no part hath been wastfully spent, nor put to any other use, than those for which it was Desired and Granted; as, upon Payment of Our Fleet and Army: Wherein Our care hath been such, as We chose rather to Discontent Our dearest Friends and Allies, and Our nearest Servants, than to leave Our Souldiers and Marriners Unsatisfied, whereby any Vexation or Disquiet might arise to Our People. We have also, with part of those Monies, begun to supply Our Magazines, and Stores of Munition, and to put Our Navy inco a constant Form and Order. Our Fleet likewise is fitting, and almost in a readines, whereby the Narrow Seas may be Guarded, Commerce Maintained, and Our Kingdom secured from all Forreign Attempts. These Acts of Ours might have made this Impression in all Good Minds, that We were careful to direct our Counsels, and dispose Our Actions, as might most Conduce to the maintenance of Religion, the Honour of Our Government, and safety of Our People. But with mischievous men once ill-affected, sem bene, sem mala facta premunt; and whatsoever once seemed amiss, is ever remembered; but good endeavours are never regarded.

Now all these things that were the chief Complaints the last Session, being by Our Princely care so seriously reformed, the Parliament re-assembled the 20th. of January last. We expected, according to the Candour and Sincerity of Our own Thoughts, that men would have framed themselves for the effecting of a right Understanding between Us and Our People. But some few malevolent persons, Like Empericks and Lewd Artists, did strive to make new work, and to have some disease on Foot, to keep themselves in Request, and to be Employed and Entertained in the cure. And yet to manifest how much Offences have been Diminished, The Committees for Grievances, Committees for Courts of Justice, and Committees for Trade, have since the Sitting down of the Parliament, received few Complaints, and those such, as they themselves have not thought to be of that moment or importance, with which our Ears should be acquainted.

No sooner therefore was the Parliament set down, but these ill-affected men began to Sow and Disperse their Jealousies, by casting out some Glances and Doubtful Speeches, as if the Subject had not been so clearly and well dealt with, touching their Liberties, and touching the Petition answered the last Parliament. This being a Plausible Theam, thought on for an ill purpose, easily took hold on the minds of many, that knew not the Practice. And thereupon the second day of the Parliament a Committee was appointed to search, whether the Petition and Our Answer thereunto were Enrolled in the Parliament-Roll, and in the Courts at Westminster, and in what manner the same was done. And a day also was then Appointed, on which, the House being relolved into a Committee, should take into Consideration those things, wherein the Liberty of the Subject had been Invaded, against the Petition of Right. This, though it produced no other effect of moment or Importance, yet was sufficient to raise a Jealousie against Our Proceedings, in such as were not well acquainted with the Sincerity and Clearness of them. There followed another of no less skill; for although Our proceeding before the Parliament, about matters of Religion, might have satisfied any moderate men, of Our Zealous care thereof, (as we are sure it did the most) yet, as bad Stomachs turn the best things into their own nature, for want of good Digestion; so those distemper'd persons have done the like of Our good intents, by a Bad and Sinister Interpretation: For, when they did observe, that many Honest and Religious minds in that House, did Complain of those dangers that did Threaten the Church; they likewise took the same Word in their Mouth, and their cry likewise was, Templum Domini, Templum Domini, when the true care of the Church never came into their Hearts: And what the one did out of Zeal unto Religion, the other took up as a Plausible Theam, to deprave Our Government, as if We, Our Clergy, and Council, were either Senseless or Careless of Religion. And this Wicked Practise hath been, to make Us seem to walk before Our People, as if We Halted before God.

Having, by these Artifices, made a jealous impression in the hearts of many; and a Day being appointed to Treat of the Grant of Tunnage and Poundage, at the time prefixed, all express great willingness to grant it. But a new strain is found out, that it could not be done, without great Peril to the right of the Subject, unless we should disclaim any right therein, but by Grant in Parliament; and should cause all those Goods to be restored, which, upon Commandment from Us, or Our Council, were stayed by Our Officers, until those Duties were Paid, and Consequently should put Our selves out of the Possession of the Tunnage and Poundage, before they were Granted; for else, it was pretended, the Subject stood not in fit case to grant it. A Fancy and Cavil raised of purpose to trouble the business; it being evident, that all the Kings before named did Receive that Duty, and were in actual Possession of it, before, and at the very time, when it was Granted to them by Parliament. And although We, to remove all Difficulties, did from Our Own Mouth, in those clear and open Terms, that might have satisfied any moderate and well disposed minds, declare, That it was Our meaning, by the Gift of Our people, to enjoy it, and that We did not Challenge it of right, but took it de bene esse, shewing thereby, not the right, but the necessity, by which We were to take it, (wherein We descended, for their satisfaction, so far beneath Our Self, as We are Confident, never any of Our Predecessors did the like, nor was the like ever required or expected from Them.) Yet for all this, the Bill of Tunnage and Poundage was laid aside, upon pretence, they must first clear the right of the Subject therein; under colour whereof, they entertain the Complaints, not only of John Rolles, a Member of their House, but also of Richard Chambers, John Fowkes, and Bartholomew Gilman, against the Officers of Our Customs, for detaining their Goods, upon refusal to pay the ordinary Duty, accustomed to be paid for the same. And upon these Complaints, they send for the Officers of the Customs, enforcing them to attend, day after day, by the space of a Month together; they cause them to produce their Letters Patents under Our Great Seal, and the Warrants made by Our Privy Council, for levying of those Duties. They examine the Officers upon what questions they please, thereby to entrap them for doing Our service and Commandment. In these and other their proceedings, because We would not give the least shew of Interruption, We endured long with much Patience, both these, and sundry other strange and exorbitant Incroachments and Usurpations, such as were never before Attempted in that House.

We are not Ignorant, how much that House both of late years endeavoured to extend their Privileges, by setting up general Committees for Religion, for Courts of Justice, for Trade, and the like, a course never heard of until of late: So as, where in former times the Knights, and Burgesses were wont to Communicate to the House, such business, as they brought from their Countries; now there are so many Chairs erected, to make enquiry upon all sorts of men, where complaints of all sorts are entertained, to the unsufferable disturbance and Scandal of Justice and Government, which having been tolerated a while by Our Father, and

Our Self, hath daily grown to more and more height; insomuch that young Lawyers sitting there, take upon them to decry the Opinions of the Judges; and some have not doubted to maintain, That the Resolutions of that House must bind the Judges, a thing never heard of in Ages past. But, in this last Assembly of Parliament, they have taken on them much more then ever before.

They sent Messengers to examine Our Attorney General, (who is an Officer of Trust and Secrecy) touching the execution of some Commandments of Ours, of which, without Our leave first obtained, he was not to give account to any but Our self. They sent a Captious and Directory Message to the Lord Treasure, Chancellor, and Barons of the Exchequer, touching some Judicial Proceedings of theirs in Our Court of Exchequer.

They sent Messengers to examine upon sundry questions, Our two Chief Justices, and three other of Our Judges, touching their Judicial Proceeding at the Gaol-Delivery at Newgate, of which, they are not accountable to the House of Commons.

And where as Suits were Commenced in Our Court of Star-Chamber against Richard Chambers, John Fowkes, Bartholomew Gilman, and Richard Phillips, by Our Attorney General, for great Misdemeanours; they resolved, that they were to have privilege of Parliament against Us for their persons, for no other cause, but because they had Petitions depending in that House; and (which is more strange) they resolved, that a Signification should be made from that House, by a Letter, to issue under the hand of their Speaker, unto the Lord Keeper of Our Great Seal, that no Attachments should be Granted out against the said Chambers, Fowkes, Gilman, or Phillips, during their said privilege of Parliament. Whereas it is far above the power of that House, to give direction to any of Our Courts at Westminster, to stop Attachments against any man, though never so strongly privileged; the breach of Privilege being not in the Court that Grants, but in the Party or Minister that puts in Execution such Attachments. And therefore, if any such Letter had come to the Lord Keeper, as it did not, he should have highly offended Us if he had obeyed it. Nay, they went so far, as they spared not the Honour of Our Council-board, but examined their Proceedings in the case of Our Customers; interrogating what this or that man of Our Council said, in direction of them in the Business Committed to their Charge. And when one of the Members of that House, speaking of Our Counsellors, said, We had wicked Counsel; and another said, That the Council and Judges sought to trample under Feet the Liberty of the Subject; and a Third Traduced Our Court of Star-Chamber, for the Sentence given against Savage, they passed without Check or Censure by the House. By which may appear, how far the Members of that House have of late swollen beyond the Rules of Moderation, and the modesty of former times; and this under pretence of Privilege and Freedom of Speech, whereby they take liberty to declare against all Authority of Council and Courts at their Pleasure.

They sent for our Sheriff of London to examine him in a cause, whereof they had no jurisdiction.

1628. diction: their true and antient jurisdiction extending only to their own members, and to the conservation of their Priviledges, and not to the censure of forreign Persons and Causes, which have no relation to their Priviledges, the same being but a late innovation. And yet upon an enforced strain of a Contempt, for not answering to their satisfaction, they commit him to the Tower of London, using that outward pretext for a cause of committing him, the true and inward cause being, for that he had shewed himself dutiful to Us and our Commandments, in the matter concerning Our Customs.

In these innovations (which we will never permit again) they pretended indeed Our service; but their drift was, to break, by this means, through all respects and ligaments of Government, and to erect an universal over-swaying power to themselves, which belongs only to Us, and not to them.

Lastly, In their proceedings against Our Customers, they went about to censure them as Delinquents and to punish them, for staying some Goods of some factious Merchants, in Our Storehouse, for not paying those Duties which themselves had formerly paid, and which the Customs, without interruption, had received of all other Merchants, many years before, and to which they were Authorised, both by Our Great Seal, and by several directions and commandments from Us and Our Privy Council.

To give some colour to their proceedings herein, they went about to Create a new Priviledge (which We will never admit) That a Parliament-man hath priviledge for his goods against the King; the consequence whereof would be, That he may not be constrained to pay any Duties to the King, during the time of priviledge of Parliament. It is true, they would have this case to have been between the Merchants and Our Farmers of Our Customs, and have severed them from Our interest and commandment, thereby the rather to make them liable to the censure and punishment of that House. But on the other side, We holding it both unjust and dishonourable, to withdraw Our Self from Officers, in any thing they did by Our commandment, or to disavow any thing that we had enjoined to be done, upon Monday the 23 of February, sent a Message to them by Secretary Cook, thanking them for the respect they had shewed, in severing the interest of Our Farmers from Our Own interest and commandment. Nevertheless we were bound in honour to acknowledge a truth, that, what was done by them, was done by Our express commandment and directions; and if for doing thereof Our Farmers should suffer, it would highly concern Us in honour. Which Message was no sooner delivered unto them, but in a tumultuous and discontented manner, they called, Adjourn, Adjourn, and thereupon, without any cause given on Our part, in a very unusual manner, adjourned, until the Wednesday following.

On which day, by the uniform wisdom of Our Privy Council, We caused both Houses to be adjourned until the second day of March; hoping that in the mean time, a better and more right understanding might be gotten between Us, and the Members of that House, whereby the Parliament might come to an happy issue.

But understanding by good Advertisement, that their discontent did not in that time digest, and pass away; We resolved to make a second Adjournment, until the Tenth of March; which was done, as well to take time to Our Self, to think of some means to accommodate those difficulties, as to give them time to advise better; and accordingly, We gave commandment for a second Adjournment in both Houses, and for cessation of all business till the day appointed; which was very dutifully obeyed in the Higher House, no man contradicting or questioning it. But when the same commandment was delivered in the House of Commons by their Speaker, it was streightways contradicted; and although the Speaker declared unto them, it was an absolute right and power in Us to Adjourn, as well as to Prorogue or Dissolve; and declared and read unto them divers presidents of that House, to warrant the same; yet Our Commandment was most contemptuously disobeyed; and some rising up to speak, said, They had business to do before the House should be Adjourned.

Whilst the Duke of Buckingham lived, he was entituled to all the distempers and ill events of former Parliaments; and therefore much endeavour was used to demolish him, as the only Wall of separation between Us and Our People. But now he is dead, no alteration was found amongst those envenomed Spirits, which troubled then the blessed harmony between Us and our Subjects, and continue still to trouble it. For now under the pretence of publick care of the Commonwealth, they suggest new and causeless fears, which in their own Hearts they know to be false; and devise new Engines of mischief, so to cast a blindness upon the good affections of Our People, that they may not see the truth, and largeness of our Heart towards them. So that now it is manifest, the Duke was not alone the mark these men shot at, but was only as a near Minister of Ours, taken up, on the By, and in their passage to their more secret designs; which were only to cast Our Affairs into a desperate condition, to abate the powers of Our Crown, and to bring Our Government into obloquy; that, in the end all things may be overwhelmed with Anarchy and Confusion.

We do not impute these disasters to the whole House of Commons, knowing that there were amongst them many Religious, Grave, and well-minded men; but the sincerer and better part of the House was over-born, by the practices and clamours of the other, who, careless of their duties, and taking advantage of the times, and Our necessities, have enforced Us to break off this meeting; which, had it been answered with like duty on their parts, as it was invited and begun with love on Ours, might have proved happy and glorious, both to Us and this whole Nation.

We have thus declared the manifold causes We had, to dissolve this Parliament, whereby all the World may see, how much they have forgotten their former engagements at the entry into the War, themselves being perswaders to it; promising to make Us feared by our Enemies, and esteemed by Our Friends. And how they turned the necessities grown by that War, to enforce Us to yield Conditions incompatible with Monarchy.

And now that Our People may discern, that these provocations of evil men (whose punishments We reserve to a due time) have not changed

* Here are the passages concerning the Members deportment in the House, mentioned in this Declaration, which we forbear to repeat, in regard the same are at large expressed in the Information in the Star-chamber, before-mentioned.

Car. 4.

Anno 1628. changed Our good intentions to Our Subjects, We do here profess to maintain the true Religion and Doctrine, established in the Church of England, without admitting or conniving at any back-sliding, either to Popery or Schism. We do also declare, That We will maintain the ancient and just Rights and Liberties of Our Subjects, with so much constancy and justice, that they shall have cause to acknowledge, That under our Government and gracious Protection, they live in a more happy and free Estate, than any Subjects in the Christian World. Yet let no man hereby take the boldness to abuse that liberty, turning it to licentiousness; nor misinterpret the Petition, by perverting it to a lawless liberty, wantonly or frowardly, under that or any other colour, to resist lawful and necessary Authority. For as We will maintain Our Subjects in their just liberties, so We do and will expect, that they yield as much submission and duty to Our Royal Prerogatives, and as ready obedience to Our Authority and Commandments, as hath been performed to the greatest of Our Predecessors.

And for Our Ministers, We will not that they be terrified by those harsh proceedings, that have been strained against some of them. For, as we will not command any thing unjust or dishonourable, but shall use Our Authority and Prerogatives for the good of Our People; so We will expect, that our Ministers obey Us, and they shall assure themselves, We will protect them.

As for our Merchants, We let them know, We shall always endeavour to cherish and enlarge the Trade of such as be dutiful, without burthening them beyond what is fitting: but the Duty of Five in the Hundred, for guarding of the Seas, and defence of the Realm, to which We hold our Selves still obliged (and which Duty hath continued without interruption so many succession of Ages) We hold no good or dutiful Subject will deny it, being so necessary for the good of the whole Kingdom. And if any factious Merchant will affront Us, in a thing so reasonable, and wherein We require no more, nor in no other manner, than so many of our Predecessors have done, and have been dutifully obey'd: Let them not deceive themselves, but be assured, that We shall find honourable and just means to support our Estate, vindicate our Sovereignty, and preserve the Authority which God hath put into our Hands.

And now having laid down the truth and clearness of our proceedings, all wise and discreet men may easily judge of those rumours, and jealous fears, that are maliciously and wickedly bruited abroad; and may discern, by examination of their own Hearts, whether (in respect of the free passage of the Gospel, indifferent and equal administration of Justice, freedom from oppression, and the great peace and quietness which every man enjoyeth under his own Vine and Fig-tree) the happiness of this Nation can be paralleled by any of our Neighbour-Countries; and if not, then to acknowledge their own blessedness, and for the same be thankful to God, the Author of all goodness.

A Pro-

A Proposition for His Majesties Service, to bridle the Impertinency of Parliaments. Afterwards questioned in the Star-chamber; and found to be a Seditious and false Libel.

THE Proposition for your Majesties service containeth two parts: the one, to secure your State, and to bridle the impertinency of Parliaments: the other, to encrease your Majesties Revenue, much more than it is. Touching the first, having considered divers means, I find none so important, to strengthen your Majesties Revenue, much more than it is. Touching the first, having considered divers means, I find none so important, to strengthen your Majesties Regal Authority, against all oppositions and practises of troublesome spirits; and to bridle them, than to fortifie your Kingdom, by having a Fortres in every chief Town, and important place thereof, furnished with Ordnance, Munition, and faithful men, as they ought to be, with all other circumstances fit for to be digested in a business of this nature; ordering withall, the Trained Souldiers of the Countrey to be united in one dependency with the said Fort, as well to secure their beginning, as to succour them in any occasion of suspect; and also to retain and keep their Arms for more security, whereby the Countries are no less to be brought in subjection, than the Cities themselves; and consequently the whole Kingdom; your Majesty having by this course the power thereof in your own hands. The reasons of the suggests are these. 1. That in policy, it is a greater tie of the People by force and necessity, than merely by love and affection; for by the one, the Government resteth always secure; but by the other, no longer than the People are contented. 2. It forceth obstinate subjects to be no more presumptuous, than it pleaseth your Majesty to permit them. 3. That to leave a State unfurnished, is, to give the Bridle thereof to the Subject; when, by the contrary, it resteth only in the Prince's hands. 4. That modern Fortresses take long time in winning, with such charge and difficulty, as no Subjects in these times have means probable to attempt them. 5. That it is a sure remedy against Rebellions, and popular Mutinies, or against Forreign Powers; because they cannot well succeed: when by this course the apparent means is taken away, to force the King and Subject upon a doubtful fortune of a set Battel, as was the cause, that moved the pretended invasion against the Land, attempted by the King of Spain in the Year 1588. 6. That your Majesties Government is the more secure, by the People's more subjection; and by their subjection, your Parliament must be forced consequently to alter their style, and to be conformable to your will and pleasure; for their words and opposition import nothing, where the power is in your Majesties own hands, to do with them what you please; being indeed the chief purpose of this discourse, and the secret intent thereof, fit to be concealed from any English at all, either Counsellors of State, or other.

For these, and divers other weighty reasons, it may be considered in this place, to make your Majesty more powerful and strong, some orders orders to be observed, that are used in fortified Countries, the Government whereof imports as much as the States themselves, I mean, in times of doubt or suspect, which are these. Imprimis, That none wear Arms or Weapons at all, either in City or Country, but such as your Majesty may think fit to privilege, and they to be enrolled. 2. That as many High-ways as conveniently may be done, be made possible through those Cities and Towns fortified, to constrain the Passengers to travel through them. 3. That the Souldiers of Fortresses be sometimes chosen of another Nation, if subject to the same Prince; but howsoever, not to be born in the same Province, or within Forty or Fifty Miles of the Fortrefs, and not to have Friends or Correspondency near it. 4. That all the Gates of each walled Town be appointed Officers, not to suffer any unknown Passengers to pass, without a Ticket, shewing from whence he come, and whither to go. And that the Gates of each City be shut all Night, and Keys kept by the Mayor or Governour. 5. Also Inkeepers to deliver the Names of all unknown Passengers that lodge in their Houses; and if they stay suspiciously at any time, to present them to the Governour: whereby dangerous persons seeing these strict courses, will be more wary of their actions, and thereby mischievous attempts will be prevented. All which being referred to your Majesties wise consideration, it is meet for me withall to give you some satisfaction, of the charge and time to perform what is purposed, that you may not be discouraged in the difficulty of the one, or prolongation of the other; both which doubts are resolved in one and the same reason, in respect that in England each chief Town commonly hath a ruined Castle, well seated for strength, whose foundation and stones remaining, may be both quickly repaired for this use, and with little charge and industry made strong enough, I hope, for this purpose, within the space of one year; by adding withall Bulwarks and Rampiers for the Ordinance, according to the Rules of Fortification. The ordinance for these Forts may be of Iron, not to disfigure your Majesties Navy, or be at a greater charge than is needful.

To maintain yearly the Fort, I make account an ordinary pay, Three thousand men will be sufficient, and will require Forty thousand pound charge per annum, or thereabouts, being an expence that inferiour Princes undergo, for their necessary safety. All which prevention, added to the invincible Sea-force your Majesty hath already, and may have, will make you the most powerful and obeyed King of the World. Which I could likewise confirm by many examples, but I omit them for brevity, and not to confuse your Majesty with too much matter. Your Majesty may find by the scope of this Discourse, the means shewed in general to bridle your Subjects, that may be either discontent or obstinate. So likewise am I to conclude the same intent particularly, against the perverseness of your Parliament, as well to suppress that pernicious humour, as to avoid their oppositions against your profit, being the second part to be discoursed on: and therefore have first thought fit, for better prevention thereof, to make known to your Majesty the purpose of a general Oath your Subjects may take for sure avoiding of all rubs, that may hinder the conclusion of these businesses. It is further meant, that no Subject upon pain of High Treason, may refuse the same oath, containing only matter of Allegiance, and not scruples in point of Conscience, that may give pretence not to be denied. The effect of the oath is this, That all your Majesties Subjects do acknowledge you, to be as absolute a King and Monarch within your Dominions, as is amongst the Christian Princes; and your Prerogative is great: whereby you may and shall of your self, by your Majesties Proclamation, as well as other Sovereign Princes doing the like, either make Laws, or reverse any made, with any other Act, so great a Monarch as your self may do, and that without further content of a Parliament, or need to call them at all in such Cases; considering, that the Parliament in all matters, excepting causes to be sentenced as the highest Court, ought to be subject unto your Majesties will, to give the negative or affirmative conclusion, and not to be constrained by their impertinencies to any inconvenience, appertaining to your Majesties Regal Authority; and this, notwithstanding any bad pretence or custom to the contrary in practice, which indeed were fitter to be offered a Prince elected, without other right, than to your Majesty, born successively King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and your Heirs for ever; and so received, not only of your Subjects, but also of the whole World. How necessary the dangerous supremacy of Parliament's usurpation is to be prevented, the example of Lewes the Eleventh King of France, doth manifest, who found the like opposition as your Majesty doth, and by his wisdom suppressed it. And, to the purpose here intended, which is not to put down altogether Parliaments and their Authority, being in many cases very necessary and fit, but to abridge them so far, as they seek to derogate from your Majesties Regal Authority, and advancement of your greatness. The caution in offering the aforesaid oath, may require some policy, for the easier passage at first, either by singular, or particular tractation, and that so near about one time over the Land, as one Government may not know what the other intendeth; so it may pass the easier, by having no time of combination or opposition. There is another means also more certain than this, to bring to pass the Oath more easily, as also your profit, and what else pretended; which here I omit for brevity, requiring a long Discourse by it self, and have set it down in particular instructions to inform your Majesty.

2. The second part of this Discourse is, touching your Majesties Profit, after your State is secured: Wherein I should observe both some reasonable content to the People, as also consider the great expences that Princes have now adays, more than in times past, to maintain their greatness, and safety of their Subjects; who, if they have not wit or will to consider their own interest so much indifferently, your Majesties wisdom must repair their defects, and force them to it by compulsion; but I hope there shall be no such cause, in points so reasonable, to encrease your Majesties Revenue, wherein I set down divers means for your gracious Self to make choice of, either all, or part at your pleasure, and to put it in execution by such degrees and cautions, as your great wisdom shall think fit in a business of this nature.

Imprimis

Anno 1628. Imprimis, The first means or course intended to encrease your Majesties Revenues or Profits wirhall, is of greatest consequence, and I call it a Decimation, being so termed in Italy, where in some part it is in use, importing the Tenth of all Subjects Estates, to be paid as a yearly Rent to their Prince, and as well monied men in Towns, as landed men in the Countries, their value and estates esteemed justly as it is to the true value, though with reason; and this paid yearly in Money: Which course applied in England for your Majesties service, may serve instead of Subsidies, Fifteens, and such like, which in this case are fit to be released, for the Subjects benefit and content, in recompence of the said Decima, which will yield your Majesty more in certainly, than they do usually by five hundred thousand pounds

2. To buy out all Leases upon the Crown-Lands.

2. To take the Salt into his Majesties own hands.

4. To demand a rate for Sealing the Weights every year.

5. To demand an Impost for Wools.

6. To put a Tax upon every Lawyers Fees.

7. To put a Tax upon Inns and Victualling-houses for a Week.

per annum at the least. Item, That when your Majesty hath gotten Money into your hands by some courses to be set down, it would be a profitable course to encrease your Entrada, to buy out all Estates and Leases upon your own Lands, in such sort, as they be made no losers; whereby having your Lands free, and renting it out to the true value, as it is most in use, and not employed as heretofore, at an old Rent, and small Fines, you may then Rent it out for at least four or five times more Money, than the old Rent comes unto. So as if your Majesties Lands be already but sixty thousand pounds per Annum, by this course it will be augmented at the least two hundred thousand pounds per Annum; and to buy out the Tenants Estates will come to a small matter by the course, to make them no losers, considering the gain they have already made upon the Land: And this is the rather to be done, and the present course changed, because it hath been a custom used meerly to coulsen the King. Item, whereas most Princes do receive the benefit of Salt in their own hands, as a matter of great profit, because they receive it at the lowest price possible, and vent it at double gain yearly; the same course used by your Majesty, were worth at least one hundred and fifty thousand pounds per Annum. It is likewise in other parts, that all Weights and Measures of the Land, either in private Houses, Shops, or publick Markets, should be viewed to be just, and settled once a year, paying to the Prince for it; which in England, applied to your Majesty, with order to pay six pence for the sealing of each said Weight or Measure, would yield near sixty thousand pounds per Annum. Item, Though all Countries pay a Gabella for transportation of Cloath, and so likewise in England; yet in Spain there is Impost upon the Wools; which in England is so great a wealth and benefit to the Sheep-masters, as they may well pay you five pound per cent. of the true value at the Shearing, which I conceive may be worth one hundred and forty thousand pounds per Annum. Item, Whereas the Lawyers Fees and Gains in England be excessive, to your Subjects prejudice; it were better for your Majesty to make use thereof, and impose on all Causes sentenced with the party, to pay Five pound per cent. of the true value that the Cause hath gained him; and for recompence thereof, to limit all Lawyers Fees and Gettings, whereby the Subject shall save more in Fees and Charges, than he giveth to your Majesty in the Gabella, which I believe may be worth, one year with another, fifty thousand pounds. Item, Whereas the Inns and Victualling-houses in England are more chargeable to the Travellers, than in other Countries, it were good for your Majesty to limit them to certain Ordinaries, and raise besides a large Imposition, as is used in Tuscany, and other parts; that is, a prohibiting all Inns and Victualling houses, but such as shall pay it; and to impole upon the chief Inns and Taverns, to pay ten pounds a year to your Majesty, and the worst five pounds per Annum, and all Ale-houses twenty shillings per Annum, more or less, as they are in custom. Of all sorts there are so many in England, that this Impost may well yield one hundred thousand pounds per Annum to your Majesty.

Item, in Tuscany, and other parts, there is a Gabella of all Cattel, or Flesh, and Horses sold in markets, paying three or four per cent. of what they are sold for, which by conjecture may be worth in England, two hundred thousand pounds per Annum; using the like Custom upon Fish, and other Victuals (Bread excepted) and for this cause, Flesh, and Fish, and Victuals in the markets, to be priced and sold by weight, whereby the Subject saveth more in not being coulsed, than the Imposition impaireth them.

Item, In Tuscany is used a Taxation of Seven per cent. upon all alienation of Lands to the true value. As also seven per cent. upon all Dowries, or Marriage-monies. The like, if it be justly used in England, were worth at least one hundred thousand pounds per Annum; with many other Taxations upon meal, and upon all merchandises in all Towns, as well as Port-Towns, which here I omit, with divers others, as not so fit for England. And in satisfaction of the Subject for these Taxes, your Majesty may be pleased to release them of VVardships, and and to enjoy all their Estates at eighteen years old; and in the mean time, their profits to be preserved for their own benefit. And also in forfeitures of Estate by condemnation, your Majesty may release the Subject, as not to take the forfeiture of their Lands, but their Goods, High-Treason only excepted; and to allow the Counsel of Lawyers in case of Life and Death; as also not to be Condemned without Two Witnesses, with such like benefit, which importeth much more their good, than all the Taxations named can prejudice them. Item, Some of the former Taxations used in Ireland and in Scotland, as may easily be brought about by the first example thereof used in England, may very well be made to encrease your Revenue there, more than it is, by Two hundred thousand pounds per Annum.

Item, All Officers in the Land, great and small, in your Majesties grant, may be Granted, with condition, to pay you a part yearly, according to the value: This in time may be worth (as I conceive) one hundred thousand pounds per Annum, adding also Notaries, Attorneys, and such like, to pay some proportion yearly towards it, for being allowed by your Majesty to practise, and prohibiting else any to practise in such places.

Item, To reduce your Majesties Household to Board-wages, as most other Princes do, reserving some few Tables; this will save your Majesty sixty thousand pounds per Annum, and ease greatly the Subjects besides, both in Carriages and Provision, which

8. To put a Tax upon all Cattel, Flesh, and Horses sold in the Market.

9. To put a Tax upon all Lands alienated.

10. To demand a rate upon all Offices in his Majesties grant.

11. To reduce his Majesties Household to Board-wages.

which is a good reason that your Majesty in honour might do it. Item, I know an assured course in your Majesties Navy, which may save at least forty thousand pounds per annum, which requiring a whole Discourse by it self, I omit; only promise you to do it, whensoever you command.

Item, Whereas your Majesties Laws do command the strict keeping of Fasting-days, you may also prohibit on those days to eat Eggs, Cheese and White-meats, but only such as are contented to pay eighteen pence a year for the Liberty to eat them, and the better fort ten shillings. The employment of this may be for the defence of the Land, in maintaining the Navy, Garrisons, and such like, much after the fashion of a Crusado in Spain, as your Majesty knoweth, being first begun there, under the pretence to defend the Land against the Moors. And the same used in England, as aforesaid, may very well yield, one year with another, one hundred thousand pounds, without any disgust to any, because it is at every ones choice to give it or no.

Lastly, I have a course upon the Catholics, and very safe for your Majesty, being with their good liking, as it may be wrought, to yield you presently at least two hundred thousand pounds per Annum, by raising a certain value upon their Lands, and some other Impositions; which requiring a long Discourse by it self, I will omit it here, setting it down in my Instructions; it will save your Majesty at least one hundred thousand pounds per Annum, to make it pain of Death, and Confiscation of Goods and Lands, for any of the Officers to couzen you, which now is much to be feared they do, or else they could not be so rich; and herein to allow a fourth part benefit to them that shall find out the Couzenage. Here is not meant Officers of State, as the Lord Treasurer, &c. being Officers of the Crown. The Sum of all this Account amounteth unto two Millions, or twenty hundred thousand pounds per Annum: Suppose it to be but one Million and a half, as assuredly your Majesty may make, by these courses set down; yet it is much more than I promised in my Letter for your Majesties Service. Besides, some sums of Money in present, by the courses following: Imprimis, By the Princes Marriage, to make all the Earls in England Grandees in Spain and Principi, with such like Priviledges, and to pay twenty thousand pounds apiece for it.

2. As also, if you make them Feudatories of the Towns belonging to their Earldoms, if they will pay for it besides, as they do to the King of Spain in the Kingdom of Naples. And so likewise Barons to be made Earls and Peers, to pay nineteen thousand pounds apiece, I think might yield five hundred thousand pounds, and oblige them more sure to his Majesty. 3. To make choice of two hundred of the richest men of England of estate, that be not Noblemen, and make them Titulate, as is used in Naples, and paying for it; that is, a Duke Thirty thousand pounds; a Marquis Fifteen thousand pounds; an Earl Ten thousand pounds, and a Baron or Viscount Five thousand pounds. It is to be understood, that the Ancient Nobility of Barons made Earls, are to precede these as Peers, though these be made Marqueses or Dukes; this may raise a Million of pounds and more unto your Majesty. To make Gentlemen of low quality, and Francklins, and rich Farmers, Esquires, to precede them, would yield your Majesty also a great Sum of Money in present. I know another way to yield your Majesty at least Three hundred thousand pounds in Money; which as yet the time serveth not to discover, until your Majesty be resolved to proceed in some of the former courses; which till then I omit. Other courses also, that may make present money, I shall study for your Majesties Service; and, as I find them out, acquaint you withal. Lastly, to conclude all these Discourses, by the application of this course used for your profit, That it is not only the means to make you the richest King that ever England had, but also the safety augmented thereby to be most secure; besides what shewed in the first part of this Discourse; I mean, by the occasion of this Taxation, and raising of Monies, your Majesty shall have cause and means to employ in all places of the Land so many Officers and Ministers, to be obliged to you for their own good and Interest, as nothing can be attempted against your Person, or Royal State, over Land, but some of them shall, in all probability, have means to find it out, and hinder it. Besides, this course will detect many Disorders and Abuses in the publick Government, which were hard to be discovered by men indifferent. To prohibit Gorgeous and Costly Apparel to be worn but by persons of good quality, shall save the Gentry of the Kingdom much more money than they shall be taxed to pay unto your Majesty. Thus withal I take my leave, and kiss your Gracious hands, desiring pardon for my Errour I may commit herein.

This Project was contrived long since by Sir Robert Dudley at Florence, 1619. (that discontented Catholick) who descended from the Dudleys, Earls of Warwick; and so he stiled himself. It was a Rapsody of several Projects for increase of the Kings Revenue, and somewhat in prejudice of Proceedings in Parliaments. Sundry Copies thereof were dispersed by such as meant not much honour to the King, and therefore suspected to contrive the Book, though pretended for his Majesties Instruction, as the manner had been, to force such feigned discoveries, and fix them for the Kings Designs; and therefore the Earls of Bedford, Somerset and Clare, Sir Robert Cotton, Mr. Selden and Mr. Saint-John were committed; and an Information entred in the Star-Chamber against them; but Sir David Fowles upon Oath, cleared the Suspition, and discovered the Author, and so it ended.

No sooner was the Parliament Dissolved, but the members that were not well affected to his Majesty, gave it out amongst others of their own perswasion, that his Majesty went about to destroy the Liberties of the People in taking Tunnage and Poundage without their consent in Parliament; that our Trade was destroyed and gone, and our Religion in danger, &c.

To prevent and suppress such false and groundless Reports, his Majesty issued out his Proclamation.

‘THat notwithstanding his Majesties late Declaration for satisfying of the minds and affections of his loving Subjects, some ill disposed persons do spread false and pernicious Rumors abroad, as if the scandalous and seditious Proposition in the House of Commons, tumultuously taken up by some few, after that by his Majesties Royal Authority he had commanded their Adjournment, had been the Vote of the whole House; whereas the contrary is the Truth:

Against false Rumors of Parliam.

Anno 1628. which Proposition was a thing of a most wicked and dangerous consequence to the good Estate of this Kingdom, and it appeareth to be so by those impressions which this false Rumor hath made in mens minds, whereby, out of causeless Fears, the Trade of the Kingdom is disturbed, and Merchants discouraged to continue their wonted Traffique. His Majesty hath thought it expedient, not only to manifest the Truth thereof, but to make known his Royal Pleasure; that those who raise or nourish false Reports, shall be severely punished; and such as cheerfully go on with their Trades, have all good encouragement; not purposing to overcharge his Subjects by any new Burdens; but to satisfy himself with those Duties that were received by the King his Father, of Blessed Memory, which his now Majesty neither can, nor will dispence withal. And Whereas, for several ill ends, the calling again of a Parliament is divulged, howsoever his Majesty hath shewed by his frequent meeting with his People, his Love to the use of Parliaments; yet the late Abuse, having for the present, driven his Majesty unwillingly out of that Course; he shall account it presumption for any to prescribe any time to his Majesty for Parliaments; the Calling, Continuing, and Dissolving of which, is always in the King's own power. And his Majesty shall be more inclinable to meet in Parliament again, when his People shall see more clearly into his Intents and Actions; when such as have bred this interruption, shall receive their condign punishment, and those who are misled by them, and such ill Reports as are raised upon this Occasion, shall come to a better understanding of his Majesty and Themselves.

The Protestant Interest in France decaying, the Duke of Rohan, and the Deputies of the Protestants there address themselves to our King, to crave his Assistance once again; though 'tis not to be forgotten how that People refused the English Fleet, sent to their Relief, under Buckingham, entrance into their Haven of Rochel, in the Expedition to the Isle of Ree; but the Tide was changed; and he writes to his Majesty, as followeth.

The Duke of Rohan's Letter to the King.

SIR,

THE deplorable Accident of the Loss of Rochel, which God hath pleased to permit to humble us under his hand, hath redoubled in the Spirit of our Eneemies, the passion which they have for our Ruine; and the hopes to attain thereunto: but it hath not taken away from those Churches of the Provinces that Courage or Affection of opposing, by a just and vigorous Defence, to their unjust Designs. This is that which hath made them take up a resolution, and assemble themselves together, and to stand in a Body amidst these Commotions, to assist me with their good Counsel, and provide, with me, means for their Deliverance. And because the most powerful Means, which God hath raised them upon Earth, is the Aid which our Churches have received, and do expect from your Majesty, the General Assembly have desired, that my Letter (which solely hitherto represented unto your Majesty the Interest of the publick Cause) might be joyned to the most humble Supplication, which they represent. I do, Sir, with so much the more Affection, because I am witness, that this poor People breath after your Assistance, having once laid down their Arms, which the Oppression of the Enemy made so necessary: and because they knew it was your desire, took them up again, when they learned that your Majesty obliged them to it by your Counsel, and by your Promises. Upon this sole Assurance, they have exposed themselves to all Dangers; overcome all Obstacles, consumed their Goods, and are still ready to spill their Blood, even unto the last Drop. Your good will they have found more dear than their Lives; and notwithstanding the Promises and Menaces, which their Enemies have made use of to move them, they have not been induced to make any breach of those Oaths, by which they were tied never to hearken to any Treaty, but with your Majesties consent. All the Churches of this Kingdom, which are linked together to an unexampled fidelity, are glorious Objects of your Charity and Power. You are (Sir) Defender of that Faith, which they profess. Do not suffer it to be unjustly oppressed! You have stirred up their Affections by your Royal Promises, and those Sacred Words, That your Majesty would employ all the Power of your Kingdoms to shield those Churches from the Ruine that threatned them, and have been, next to the favour of God, the only Foundation of their Hopes; they have also thought it to be one of the highest Crimes they could commit, to doubt of the performance thereof. If the beginning of their Miseries hath moved your Compassion, this sad Subject hath increas'd upon them with so much violence, that there is nothing but your assistance can prevent their absolute Destruction; for at this day the greatest Misdemeanors which our Enemies accuse us of, and publish, that it cannot be expiated, but by our Blood, is the imploring and hoping for your Assistance. Our Goods for this are confiscated and destroyed; our Farms desolate, and burned to Ashes; our Heads exposed to the Block; our Families banished; our Temples demolished. And every where, where the cruelty of our heinous Enemies can extend, Men and Women are beaten to Mass with Staves. In short, the Honour and Persecution we endure is so great, that our Words are too weak to express them.

Furthermore, We see, even at our doors, the powerful Armies, which only wait the time to destroy those retiring places that are left; and after that banish the exercise of Religion, and massacre the Faithful throughout the Kingdom. Hereupon, if I should entreat your Majesty not to abandon us; I fear by these Words to offend a great King, so powerful and so faithful; but I will take upon me the boldness, by reason of our pressing necessities, to supplicate your ready Assistance, to hinder our falling under the strength of our Enemies. Your Majesty need not search elsewhere, but in your own profound Wisdom and Experience, to render your succour redoubtable to those that despise it, and advantageous to those People that expect it. By this means you will gain the greatest Glory that can be desired; you will free Anno 1629. free from Fire and Sword 300000 Families, which pray to God continually for your Prosperity; will preserve a People, whom God hath purchased by his Blood, and that have kept their Faith towards God and Man amidst the greatest Distractions and cruel Sufferings; will place the Fidelity of your Word, the Reputation of your State, and your Armies in a point worthy of so much Grandeur, and in checking the boldness of those who undertake to blast it daily with unworthy Reproaches, will add to your Title that of the Restorer of the most innocent People in the World, and the most inhumanely persecuted.

As to my own Concerns, Sir, I make no mention to your Majesty of my Interest. I might (having the Honour to be what I am) do it without blame, as to outward appearance; but it is so long since I had consecrated them to the use of the Publick, that I shall always esteem my condition happy enough, provided the Church be not miserable; and that I may have this advantage, to be known by such occasions which your Majesty doth not disprove of, that I am,

At Rohan the 12th. of March, 1629.

Your Majesties most Humble & most Obedient Servant,

HENRY of ROHAN.

And because a Treaty which afterwards took effect, was then in hand betwixt the two Crowns of England and France, the Deputies of the Protestant Churches pray his Majesty, that he would insist upon the Capitulation made betwixt them and his Majesty of France, That no Forces should be kept in Cittadels or Forts, and they on their part would also truly perform what they had stipulated: In answer to both of these his Majesty returns Answer.

That his Majesty understands there is an Intention, by the Mediation of some Foreign Princes, to propose a Peace between the two Crowns of England and France, which probably he may incline unto; and therefore adviseth the said Duke, and those of the Reformed Religion, timely to apply themselves to the French King, and to get as advantageous Terms for himself, and those engaged with him, as he could procure: The King further informing the Duke, that he was constrained to dissolve the Parliament, which he had lately re-assembled, and from whom he expects further Supplies of Money; but failing thereof, he was not in a condition to receive further Aid and Assistance, either by Money or Arms, as the Duke of Rohan, and those that adhered unto him, might expect, and their present Necessities require; his Majesty expressing his sorrow, that the Condition of his Affairs was such, that he could not answer his and their Expectation.

And accordingly a peace betwixt both these Parties was concluded, and Hostages given reciprocally.

The Wars in Italy began two years since, about the Succession of the Duchies of Mantua and Monferrat, which after the Death of the Duke Vincent, without Children, fell to the Duke of Trevers. The Spaniards (through Jealousie) without Right or Title take Arms; so did the Duke of Savoy; he seized some Places in Monferrat, and they besieged Casal. The Venetians are in suspicion of the Spaniards further progress in Italy, and joyn with Trevers; so doth France, who passeth by force through Savoy, to the Streight of Susa; and after the taking many Towns of Savoy, falls upon the Spaniard, takes Cambrey, besieges Montmelian, sends before to Piemont, and follows himself in person; where he was victorious: leaving the poor Duke of Savoy to seek preservation in desert and inaccessible places. Yet the Spaniard continues the Siege of Casal, under Command of Spinola; and the French defends the Cittadel by force of Toras, two successful Generals, the one in the Low-Countries, and the other against the English at the Isle of Rhe. The Business came to this, the Town and Castle were already yielded to Spinola, and the Cittadel had capitulated to surrender by such a Day, if Succour came not; in the Interim, Spinola dies of Infection, the Duke of Savoy was sick in his Bed, when by intercession of the Pope and Cardinal Mazarines first Negotiation and Dexterity, the Peace was concluded with the Emperor at Vienna, and all carested in that Treaty; the French restores all to the Savoyard; Trevers begs pardon, and is invested; the Spaniard renders Monferrat, and all are Friends again, which the Fume of Ambition had caused with much Bloodshed.

And really those two Nations, having stoutly wrangled, by Famine, Sword, and Sicknes in Italy, with the loss of above two Millions of men, reaped no other Salary but Vain-Glory, and all their Neighbours about suffered by siding to their several humors.

When the French had broken that puissant party of the House of Austria in Italy, he devises new Alliance to attack the Spaniard; and first by mediation of the Venetians, they are put upon it to propose a Treaty for Peace between the two Crowns of England and France; which was not difficult for us to accept, King Charles being more manacled at home by his own Subjects, than the French were with outward Forces, and so both parties having their several Designs, they soon agreed into these Articles.

1. That the two Kings shall renew former Alliances inviolably, with free Commerce; and in this particular, such things may be proposed to add or diminish, as either part shall judge convenient.

2. That for what is past during the last Difference, satisfaction shall be demanded on either side.

3. That the Article of Marriage of the Queen of Great Britain shall be confirmed, and concerning her Domesticks, to propose Expedients to be added or diminished.

4. All former Alliances between the Crowns shall stand good, unless changed by this present Treaty.

5. And the two Kings being thus remitted to their former Affections, shall respectively correspond towards the Assistance of their Allies (so far as the continuation of Affairs, and the general Good shall permit) for procuring of the Repose of the Troubles of Christendom.

6. Ambassadors on either part to be dispatch'd for Ratifications and Residencies in either Court.

Anno 1619. 7. And touching Ships at Sea, with Letters of Marque on either side, that for two Months following shall not prejudice this Agreement, provided to restore either Prize after that time upon Demand.

8. These Articles to be jointly Signed the 14th. of this present April, and instantly to be consigned into the hands of the Lords Ambassadors of Venice, to be delivered to each King at a day prefix'd; all Acts of Hostility to cease, and to be proclaimed in both Kingdoms the 20th. of May following.

And in September Sir Thomas Edmonds Controller of the Kings Household, and the Marquess of Chasteauneut were sent reciprocally from either King, to take confirmation of these by Oath.

In regard the Peace of the Church here, was very much disturbed at this time, through a party then growing up; but afterwards prevailing to the ruine thereof, Dr. Land, Bishop of London, put into his Majesties hands some Considerations in order to the Establishment thereof; and they are said to be these which follow.

Considerations for the better settling of the Church-Government.

The Bish. of London presents a Paper to the King concerning the Church-Government.

THAT his Majesty would be graciously pleased,

1. To command the Lords, the Bishops, to their severall Sees, excepting those which are in attendance at Court.

2. That none of them reside upon his Land, or Lease that he hath purchased, or on his Commendam, if he hold any, but in one of his Episcopal Houses; and that he waste not the Woods where any are left.

3. That they give Charge in their Triennial Visitations, and at other times, both by themselves, and the Arch-Deacon, that the Declaration for settling the Questions in difference be strictly observed,

4. That a special Charge be given them against frequent and unworthy Ordinations.

5. That a special Care be had over the Lecturers in every Diocess, which by reason of their Pay, are the People's Creatures, and blow the Bellows of their Sedition.

For the abating of whose Power, these ways may be taken.

1. That the Afternoon-Sermons in all Parishes may be turned into Catechizing, by Questions and Answers, according to an Order set out by King James of Blessed Memory.

If this cannot be, then,

2. That every Bishop Ordain in his Diocess, That every Lecturer do read Divine Service in his Surplice before the Lecture.

3. That where a Lecture is set up in a Market-Town, it be read by a Combination of Grave and Orthodox Divines near adjoining.

4. That if an Incorporation do maintain a Lecturer, that he be not suffered to Preach, till he take upon him Cure of Souls within that Incorporation.

5. That the Bishop do countenance and encourage the grave orthodox Divines of his Clergy, and gain them in the severall Quarters of his Diocess, to be present at such Lecturer's Sermons, as are near them; that so the Bishop may have knowledge.

6. That the Bishop suffer none under Noble-men, and Men qualified by Law, to have any private Chaplain in his House.

7. That his Majesty may be graciously pleased, that men of Courage, Gravity and Experience in Government, be preferred to Bishopricks.

8. That Emanuel and Sydney Colledges in Cambridge, which are the Nurseries of Puritanism, may from time to time be provided of Grave and Orthodox men for their Governors.

9. That his Majesties high Commission be countenanced by the Presence of some of his Majesties Privy Council, so oft at least as any matter of Moment is to be Sentenced.

10. That some Course may be taken that the Judges may not send so many Prohibitions.

11. That his Majesty would be graciously pleased, once in half a year, to call for an Account of all, or so many of these as he in his Wisdom shall think fit.

A Consideration also to be had,

1. As to the General Feoffees for Benefices and Preferments.

2. A new Authorizing of the Injunctions.

And because the People were much amused through the perswasion of that sort of men before spoken of, his Majesty did farther declare himself as to Religion, and Property; 'That it is, and always hath been our hearts desire to be found worthy of that Title, which we account the most Glorious in all our Crown, Defender of the Faith. Neither shall we ever give way to the Authorizing of any thing, whereby any Innovation may steal or creep into the Church, but to preserve that Unity of Doctrine and Discipline established in the time of Queen Elizabeth, whereby the Church of England hath stood and flourished ever since; and that we have by our Proclamation and Commandment, ordered the Laws to be put in execution against Priests and Popish Recusants, to fortifie all ways and Approaches against that Foreign Enemy.

'And as we have been careful (saith his Majesty) for the settling of Religion, and quieting the Church, so were we not unmindful of the preservation of the just and ancient Liberties of our Subjects, which we secured to them by our gracious Answer to the Petition in Parliament, having not since that time done any Act whereby to infringe them; but our Care is, and hereafter shall be, to keep them entire and inviolable, as we would do our own Right and Sovereignty, having for that purpose enrolled the Petition and Answer in our Courts of Justice.

And as to the Duties of Tunnage and Poundage, which were the Matters of the great Contest in the last Parliament, The council passed these Orders;

1. That Warrants should be directed to the Officers of the Customs in the Port of London, and elsewhere, to seize and detain the Goods of any

Customs of Tunnage and Poundage required to be paid

any that shall attempt to Land without Warrant, till the Customs be paid.

2. And they farther Ordered, That such Merchants Goods as remained on Ship-board, be removed into Store-houses at the Custom-house-Key, and for want of Room, into the Tower, to remain there, till his Majesties Duties, and the Freight due to Ship-Masters, were satisfied.

3. And whereas Attempts were made by Replevin, directed to the Sheriff of London, to obtain those Goods out of the King's Store-houses, the Messengers of the Council were appointed to detain them in their keeping; and to apprehend, and keep in safe Custody all Persons that should make resistance in this Case.

4. Also Letters of Command were sent unto the Officers and chief Magistrates of most Ports of the Kingdom, to assist the Officers of the Customs, in case of opposition, that might be made by refractory Persons.

5. In like manner, Sir Francis Cottington was Authorized to call before him those Merchants that had been trusted by the Collectors for Sums grown due by Customs, and protracted the payment thereof; and to require them, without delay, to pay in the several Sums which they owe to his Majesty; and upon refusal, to enjoin them to attend the Lords of the Council.

6. Richard Chambers, whose Goods were detained in the Commissioners hands for non-payment of Customs, being Fined to his Majesty in the Sum of 2000 l. in the Court of Star-Chamber; and the Fine estreated in the Exchequer; and from thence Process of Extent issued out to levy the same. It was afterwards ordered by the Court of Exchequer, that the Goods should be delivered to the said Chambers, upon payment of so much Money into the Court, as the Duties demanded for the King did amount unto; or levying of so much Goods as should amount to double the Value of those Monies. The Privy-Council required the Commissioners not to deliver the Goods until the Fine was Levied; the Order of the Exchequer no wayes intending, or being intended to prevent the same, and then to observe the Order of the Court.

7. About the same time, a Ship returning from the Streights, laden with store of fine Wares, belonging to the London-Merchants, and consign'd for London, was appointed by the Merchants to come to an Anchor in Dover-Road: Whereupon, the Council being informed that the Merchants intended to defraud the King of his Customs, by unlading their Goods into Ketches, and other small Vessels, and Landing at unlawful hours, in obscure places, commanded the Officers of Dover to take a particular account of the Goods, and to put them into Store-houses, unless Security was given to send them to the Custom-House-Key at London. But a farther ground of the Warrant was this; because the Merchants were purposed to send their Goods into Holland in Ketches, and not to Land them at all; which purpose was held by divers Merchants; and afterwards an Order was made against this secret conveying of Wares and Merchandizes beyond Sea in Ketches, and other small Vessels, to defraud the King of his Customs.

8. There was also a strict Order made, enabling the Messengers of the Council-Table to enter into any Ship, or Vessel, House, Ware-house, or Cellar; and to search in any Trunk or Chest, and to break any Bulk whatsoever, in default of the payment of Customs; and to apprehend all Persons that shall give out any scandalous Speeches against his Majesties Service, or cause any disturbance.

Care is likewise taken by the Council for putting the Militia of the Kingdom into good Order; and accordingly they express in their Letters to the Lords Lieutenants of the respective Counties, the King's Displeasure at the great neglect of Musters in most parts of the Kingdom, and required them to take care that the Trained Forces, both Horse and Foot, be compleat, according to the Modern Fashion, and be perfectly instructed in the Exercise of Arms: And that the Captains and Officers be able to perform their several Charges; and that both Officers and Souldiers be not only able and sufficient men; but well-affected in their Religion; that they take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; and if a Souldier enroll'd remove his dwelling out of the Town or Parish of his Abode, notice be given thereof to the Deputy-Lieutenants of that Division; to the end that in case he have Licence to depart, his Company may be made up again. And in case any Manor, Mansion-Houses, or Lands, which formerly found, or contributed toward the finding of Horse or Foot, do not furnish the Musters, as formerly, by reason of the dividing of such Estate among Co-heirs, or coming into the hands of any Joynters, or Tenant in Dower, or the Purchase of new Owners or Occupiers thereof, that no such alteration may diminish the Bands, which should rather be increased, especially the Horse. That the best sort of Men provide themselves Arms for their particular use; that the Beacons be repaired, and continued in good Order; that a proportion of Powder, Match and Bullets be kept in the Magazines. And in regard of the great deficiency in the Horse-Bands, and neglect in those that should shew their Horses, it was required that good Bond be taken for his Majesties use, of those that shew not, or whose Horses, Arms and Furniture are deficient, that they shall personally appear with their Horses and Arms, to shew them on the first of October next.

The Lord Mayor of London received the like Command concerning the Trained Forces within the City, and concerning the Arms and Furniture, the Commanders and Officers, and a convenient Magazine.

Order for Militia.

Moreover, the Council taking into Consideration the Unwillingness, Excuses and Refusals of some Gentlemen to undertake and perform the Discharge of Captains of Trained Bands, which are the ordinary Forces and Strength of the Kingdom: Declared and Ordered, That the Lord-Lieutenants, in the Counties of their Lieutenancy, shall appoint for Captains, upon the vacancy of the Charge, such Gentlemen as they shall find most fit and capable; and they shall return to the Board the Names of all such as shall refuse to undertake, or execute the same, that they may be proceeded with in such manner as their Contempt in a Case of this nature and importance shall deserve.

of Train'd Bands.

And for the exercising and keeping of the Train'd Bands in good Equipage and Order, each County was Assessed at a certain Rate, for the

r. Matter.

And because the Pulse of the Parliament beat so high against Popery, and so much clamour was made thereabout, his Majesty took all care imaginable for the prosecution thereof, as by this publick Act may appear.

Popish
Recusants
to be prosecuted.

AS We were careful to make up all Breaches and Rents in Religion at home, so did we by our Proclamation and Commandment for the execution of the Laws against Priests and Popish Recusants, fortifie all ways and approaches against that Foreign Enemy; which if it hath not succeeded according to our Intention, we must lay the fault where it is, in the subordinate Officers and Ministers in the Country, by whose Remissness Jesuites and Priests escape without Apprehension, and Recusants from those Convictions and Penalties which the Law and our Commandment would have inflicted on them.

Recusants
going to

bited.

And also by Order of Council a strict Order to seize upon all English going to Ambassadors Houses to hear Mass, requiring the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, Justices of Peace, and others, to assist the Kings Messengers, in the apprehending of any of the King's Subjects going to Mass, requiring the Laws to be put in execution against them. And, to shew the clearness of his Intention, doth declare that he hath begun already at his own House, not permitting any to go to the Queens Chappel, but those of the Queens own House, who do attend her; and requires the Privy-Council to acquaint Foreign Ambassadors with this his Intention.

The Stat.
3 Jac. to be put in execution

And the Attorney General had order to take care that the Statute 3 Jacobi be put in execution against Recusants dwelling within 10 Miles of London; and that the Statute of Confinement be executed against all such of them as are Lodgers about the City; and that he cause a Bill of Indictment to be exhibited at the next Sessions, against the Keeper of New Prison, for suffering Priests committed to his Custody, to walk abroad at their pleasure.

Recusants
in Northumber-land, secuted according to Law.

And Instructions were also sent to the High Sheriff and Justices of the Peace in Northumberland, expressing how his Majesty was credibly informed that the Number of Popish Recusants in that County, which of late years was very small, is now through too much remissness in the execution of the Laws against them, increased to such an excessive number, as hath given his Majesty just cause to be highly displeased therewith, and may justly give exceeding great offence to all his well affected Subjects. Wherefore they thought fit (as they Declare) for the timely preventing the farther growth of such an insufferable Evil, whereby Almighty God is dishonoured, his Majesties most Gracious and Religious Government may be traduced, and the Peace and Safety of the Kingdom endangered, to signifie unto them his Majesties express Pleasure, that they make exact Enquiry into the number of Popish Recu-fants Convicted, or Unconvicted, which may be justly suspected, and return a Certificate. Also that they take care that the Laws against them be put in execution without Partiality or Connivance; and that they give unto the Board a faithful Account of their Proceedings herein, as they tender the Good of Religion, the happy Government of the Commonwealth, and as they would avoid his Majesties great Displeasure.

And all Priests and Jesuites convict, are ordered to be sent to Witch, there to remain in safe Custody; and in regard that Party also in Scotland had been no less active, chiefly under the Patronage of the Marquess of Huntley, the Earls of Niddale, Athol and Abercorn, &c. who being all put to the Horn in Scotland, and flying into England for Refuge, were all of them forced to return, and to submit themselves respectively.

About this time, his Majesties Affairs requiring supplies of Money, some persons advised the setting up a new Corporation for the making of Starch; and also the delivery out of Commissions for taking the Forfeitures of Recusants, that all persons concerned might repair to the Commissioners appointed by the King for that purpose.

And now a Second Proclamation was issued forth for the Apprehending of Richard Smith, Titular Bishop of Chalcedon, to the effect following:

THAT his Majesty by his Proclamation, bearing Date the 11th. Day of December last past (for the Reasons therein expressed) did straitly command, That none of his Subjects should harbour or conceal the said Smith, but that forthwith they should arrest and apprehend his Body, and bring him before the next Justice of the Peace to the Place where he should be apprehended; whom his Majesty thereby commands to be committed to Prison without Bail or Mainprize; and presently to inform his Majesty, or his Privy Council of his Apprehension. And the King did thereby declare, That if any person should then after, directly or indirectly harbour or conceal the said Smith, or use or connive at any means whereby the said Smith might escape from being apprehended or arrested, that his Majesty should extend the utmost severity of his Laws against every such Offender, as by his Proclamation more at large appears. Which Proclamation hath not yet wrought that good Effect which his Majesty expected; the said Smith being still hidden and harboured by those, who being infected and blinded with Popish Superstition, prefer their Respects to him, before their Duty to their King, and the fear of his high Displeasure, and the Consequence thereof. His Majesty therefore, by the Advice of his Privy Council, hath thought fit by this his second Proclamation, to renew his former Command in that behalf.

And to the end that none of his Subjects may hereafter excuse themselves, by a pretended Ignorance of the danger they shall fall into, if they shall harbour or conceal him, his Majesty doth hereby publish and declare, That the said Smith is not only a Popish Priest, and with high presumption taketh upon him to exercise

exercise Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, pretended to be derived from the See of Rome, within this Realm, and endeavoureth to seduce the King's Subjects from the true Religion established in the Church of England (which by God's assistance, his Majesty shall ever constantly maintain) but doth also seditiously and traiterously hold correspondence with the Kings Enemies, tending to the disturbance of the State.

And therefore his Majesty doth now again renew his former Command for the Apprehension of the said Smith; and doth hereby farther signify, That whosoever shall lodge, harbour, or relieve the said Smith, or any other Priest, Jesuit, or other, having taken Orders by Authority pretended to be derived from the See of Rome, shall incur the danger of the King's Laws made against the Harbourers, Lodgers, and Relievers of Priests, to the full extent thereof, which by the Statutes of this Realm is Felony.

And the King doth further hereby declare, That whosoever shall discover the said Smith, and cause him to be apprehended, as aforesaid, shall have a Reward of one Hundred pounds in Money, to be presently paid unto him by the King; and shall also have the benefit of such Penalties and Forfeitures which shall or may accrue unto his Majesty, and be forfeited by that Person in whose House the said Smith shall be found to have been harboured or concealed.

And his Majesty doth farther charge and command hereby (as by his former Proclamation his Majesty did) all and singular the Judges, Justices of the Peace, Mayors, Sheriffs, Constables, and all other his Officers, Ministers, and Loving Subjects, that if they shall find any Person offending herein, that then they, and every of them, proceed with all diligence and readiness, not only against the said Smith, but also against all such as shall harbour, conceal, or connive at his concealment, or shall not use their best endeavours for his Discovery and Apprehension, according to the utmost extent of the Laws.

It may be here noted that there had been long since a great Feud betwixt the Secular and Regular Priests of the Church of Rome; the former had laboured to obtain from that See a Bishop both for Ordination, and for the Government of their Church here; but their Endeavours herein were always opposed by all the Regulars; but more particularly by the Jesuites; those of the Benedictines only siding with the Seculars; at last the Seculars and Benedictines prevailed with Urban the Eighth, who, by a special Order, Dated Octob. 4. 1625. created Richard Smith Bishop of Calcedon, and sent him into England, to exercise the Episcopal Jurisdiction here; he is oppos'd by the Regulars by Printed Books and otherwise; and on the other side, the Regulars write in defence of their Bishop, and of Episcopacy. At last Matters on both sides were referred to the Judgment of the Theological Faculty of Paris; where the Jesuites and Regulars were Censured; though here they raised such troubles against the Titular Bishop, that he was forced to flee into France, where he was most courteously entertained by Cardinal Richelieu, the Learned Bishop of Lussion, who was his intimate Acquaintance; they being educated together in the same Studies. Rudecindus President of the English Benedictines, writes in behalf of Smith to the Congregation at Rome de propaganda fide, and in his Letter, he doth with great grief of mind lament the opposition given to Matthew Kellyson and Richard Smith, ancient Priests, who, among others, were nominated to his most holy Lord, to undergo the Episcopal Charge in the English Mission (for he reckons above 60 Benedictine Monks in England subject to his Congregation, and does prepare far more in their Convents to the Function of Mission) and doth testify that the said venerable Priests, Dr. Matthew Kellyson and Dr. Richard Smith are in great veneration in England; and that Dr. Kellyson was chief Professor of Divinity for many years in the University of Rhemes; and that Dr. Smith was first conjoyned in the Society of Studies to the most Learned Bishop of Lussion, now Cardinal of Richlieu; and concludes, We Benedictines, your humble Servants and Sons, do humbly pray that you will be pleased to grant a Bishop to our England, seeing that no Province of the Catholick World hath more need of one; the observance of Ecclesiastical Discipline being not able to be preserved without Episcopal Authority. Neither is it to be doubted, for we have already seen the good success under the first Bishop, that another Bishop being constituted, you would behold more joyful Fruits within one two years in the English Mission, than hitherto ye have beheld for 60 years now elapsed. And we see not why the Regulars, with their Priviledges given them by the Apostolick See, may not as happily agree with a Bishop and Secular Clergy in the English Mission, as well as we see they every where do out of England, &c.

At this time there came over an Address from Ireland, by permission from the Lord Deputy Falkland; whereby he gives the Nobility and Gentry of that Kingdom leave to present unto his Majesty here what they had to offer on the behalf of themselves and the People; which accordingly they did in the Petition following.

The Humble Petition of your Majesties Subjects appointed Agents to prefer certain Humble Requests and Petitions to your Highness, in the behalf of your Kingdom of Ireland.

Humbly sheweth.

THAT your Majesties Suppliants did in the behalf of your Subjects of Ireland, offer unto your Majesty to remit and release unto your Highness 150000*l.* or thereabouts already borrowed from them, or paid to your Majesties Army there, and further to grant three Subsidies to be paid in the next three Years, which humble Offers your Petitioners are now only authorized to make; as also do present certain humble Requests to your Highness, according to the Instructions given them, of your Majesties faithful Subjects of your Kingdom of Ireland: which Offers, though they do not extend to that Greatness, as from your Highnesses other more flourishing Kingdoms may be expected, yet considering the State and Poverty of the said Kingdom, they are as much as the Subjects are possibly able to afford at this time. And lest it might be conceived, or be objected by any, that these Offers are in any such kind, as though

though your Highness's said Subjects did intend to contract with your Highness, and that they would not after the said three years express their Loyal and Dutiful desires to do your Majesty Service, by further contributing to your Highness's occasions, your said Petitioners do most humbly beseech your Highness to call to mind with what Celerity, Alacrity, and true hearty Affection and Duty your said Subjects and their Ancestors in all the times of your Majesties Royal Predecessors, have made demonstrations of themselves, by shedding their Blood, and extending their Means in the Service of the Crown from time to time; and to conceive of your said Subjects, that as they must acknowledge themselves most bound to your Majesty, so they will be ever willing with all their Ability, Means and utmost Power, to contribute to your Majesties Affairs from time to time, not doubting that your Highness will in your Paternal Care of your Loyal and Faithful Subjects there, take such courses that they shall never be prest beyond the necessity of Times and their Abilities.

And in regard the said Kingdom hath lately, and now doth sustain great Burdens, as well by your Petitioners Attendance here, as otherwise, that your Highness will be graciously pleased to give a favourable and speedy dispatch to this Affair, that your said Subjects being eased of a great Charge, might be better able to satisfy your Highness, according to their desire and true intention.

And they will ever most humbly pray, &c.

The Grievances were many; in all 55; to each of which his Majesty gave a particular and gracious Answer; especially to that about the Calling of a Parliament there; which his Majesty granted: whereupon, they too hastily, and contrary to course of Law, Issue out Writs for the Convening the Parliament there, though they had not yet a Grant under the Great Seal of England enabling them to do it; which gave occasion to the ensuing Order of the Council here, and the Matter it self was referr'd to the consideration of the Judges.

ing a Parliament in Ireland.

V Hereas the Board hath understood by Letters from the Lord Deputy and Council of Ireland, that they had already issued the Writs for the Summoning of a Parliament to be held in that Kingdom in November next. Forasmuch as the Writs of Summons have been issued illegally, contrary to the Statute made in that behalf, Anno 10. Hen. 7. and 3 Eliz. and the due formality of a Licence, which ought to have been first obtained of his Majesty under the Great Seal of England, was not obtained, whereby the said Summons is in self Null and of none effect, and the Parliament (if any should ensue thereupon) would be utterly void and fruitless. The Board for this Consideration, thought fit and Ordered, that all the Judges of his Majesties Court at Westminster, that are now in or near the City of London, shall be pray'd and requir'd forthwith to meet together, and calling to their Assistance the Commissioners for Irish Causes, especially Sir Francis Ainslow, Vice-Treasurer of Ireland, and Sir Henry Holcroft, together with the King and Queens Attorneys and Solicitors General, or as many of them as may be had, and take into their consideration as well the said Letters written to the Board concerning the said Summons, and the Errors committed in precipitately Issuing of the said Writs, as a Certificate made by the said Commissioners, touching the due Preparations for the Calling of a Parliament in Ireland, and upon the whole matter, as soon as may be, to certify their Opinions in writing, what course they think fittest to be held for redress and rectifying of the before-rehearsed erroneous Proceedings; whether by revoking the former Summons, superseding or respiting them for a time, or issuing out of new, and by what means it may be done, either by Letters, Proclamations, or otherwise, as they shall think best and most expedient for his Majesties Honour and Service; that satisfaction and full Assurance may be given to his Subjects of that Kingdom, of his Royal Intention to proceed in the Calling of a Parliament, so soon as things may be done in such manner and form as they ought to be, according to the ancient Custom.

May it please your Honourable Lordships.

A According to your Lordships Order the 19th of September last, we have taken into our consideration the Letters written from the Lord Deputy of Ireland, touching the Summons of a Parliament already made there, and the former Certificate made by his Majesties Commissioners for Irish Causes, as was directed by the said Order. Upon Consideration whereof, we find that the said Summons already made, is unwarrantable; and that if a Parliament should be assembled and proceed thereupon, all that should be done therein, would be utterly void.

The Statute of 10 Hen. 7. commonly called Poyning's Act, and the Statute 3 and 4 of Phil. and Mary, expounding and explaining the doubts conceived upon that Act, do prescribe an absolute form of summoning a Parliament in that Kingdom, which must be by a Certificate first made by the Lord Deputy and Council, from thence, of such Acts as they would offer to his Majesties consideration, with the Reasons and Motives for the same to be enacted there, and that Certificate to be under the Great Seal of Ireland: Which Acts, so propounded, must be returned back from hence, approved or altered by his Majesty, as by him shall be thought fit; together with his Majesties Licence for summoning of a Parliament under the Great Seal of England, and then, and not before, the Summons of a Parliament there is to issue; wherein if any failure be of those Circumstances prescribed by these two Laws, which continue in force in that Kingdom, all that shall be done will be utterly void. We have also taken into our consideration the Lord Deputies Commission, wherein he hath power given him to Summon the Parliament; but that is limited to be according to the Laws, Statutes, and Customs of that Kingdom, and with the King's consent first had, and not otherwise; which hath not been observed in the Summons of this intended Parliament in any of the points before mentioned, and therefore this Summons, notwithstanding that power, is illegal and void.

We have also observed the passage in the Lord Deputies Letter, as if by an Adjournment this might be Remedied; but we are of opinion that that is not a right way, because it fails in the ground of the Summons; so that upon the whole matter we humbly offer our Opinions, That the best course to be held for the rectifying of the Premises, and for avoiding of all mis-instructions thereupon, will be this: That directions be given from hence with all possible speed for a Proclamation to be there made, wherein this mistaking, and the reasons thereof, may be published, that so the Assembly may be prevented, until by a due and orderly preparation, Summons may be legally, according to the said Laws and Statutes, and that by the same direction they be advised to make due preparation for a Parliament, according to the recited Acts. Whereupon His Majesty may be Graciously pleased to send his Licence and Consent under the Great Seal of England for the Summoning of the Parliament, and so all may after proceed legally, although with some loss of time, which cannot now be prevented. And if your Lordships shall so approve thereof, we humbly conceive it would not be amiss for the better expedition of the Service, and for the avoiding of all mistakings, that the form of a Proclamation to the effect aforesaid were sent thither, but to be made and Proclaimed there, that the Error may appear to have come from themselves, as the truth is;
 which will most probably take away all Jeal-ousie from the People. But we are of Opinion that no General Writ of Superfedeas of the former Writ of Summons can be awarded, because there neither was, nor can be any one General Writ of Summons, and afterwards particular Writs of Superfedeas to every one Summoned, would be Infinite and Inconvenient. All which we most humbly submit to your Majesties great Wisdom and Judgment. Serjeants-Inn in Chancery-lane, Octob. 2.

Whereupon this Proclamation following was issued forth by the Lord Deputy of Ireland in the King's Name, against Priests and Jesuites.

Inasmuch as we cannot but take notice that the late intermission of legal Proceedings against Popish Pretended or Titulary Arch-Bishops, Bishops, Abbots, Deans, Vicars General, Jesuits, Friars, and others of that sort, that derive their pretended Authority and Orders from the See of Rome, hath bred such an extraordinary Insolence and Presumption in them, as that they have dared of late not only to Assemble themselves in Publick Places to celebrate their Superstitious Services in all parts of this Kingdom, but also have Erected Houses and Buildings, called Publick Oratories, Colleges, Mass-Houses, and Convents of Friars, Monks and Nuns, in the eye and open view of the State and elsewhere; and do frequently exercise Jurisdiction against his Majesties Subjects, by Authority derived from the See of Rome, and (by colour of teaching and keeping Schools in their pretended Monasteries and Colleges) to train up the Youth of this Kingdom in their Superstitious Religion, to the great Derogation and Contempt of His Majesties Regal Power and Authority, and great offence of many of His Majesties good Subjects, contrary to the Laws and Ecclesiastical Government of this Kingdom, and the Impoverishment of His Majesties Subjects in the same.

These are therefore to will and require, and in His Majesties Name straitly to Charge and Command all, and all manner of such Pretended or Titulary Arch-Bishops, Bishops, Deans, Vicars General, Arch-Deacons and others, Deriving any Pretended Authority, Power, or Jurisdiction from the See of Rome, That they,
 and every of them, forbear from henceforth to exercise any such Power, Jurisdiction, or Authority within this Kingdom; and that all such Abbots, Priors, Jesuits, Friars, Monks, Nuns, and others of that sort, as aforesaid, do forthwith break up their Convents and Assemblies in all Houses of Friars, Colleges, Monasteries, and other Places, wheresoever they are, or shall be Conventually or Collegiately Assembled together within this Kingdom, and to Relinquish the same, and to dispose and separate themselves.

And that all and every of the Orders before-named, and other Priests whatsoever, do from henceforth forbear to Preach, Teach, or Celebrate their Service in any Church, Chappel, or other Publick Oratory or Place, or to Teach any School in any place or places whatsoever within this Kingdom.

And we do further Charge and Command all and singular the Owners of such Houses of Friars, Colleges, Monasteries, Schools, Oratories, Mass-houses, and Nunneries, That they and every of them respectively, in default of the Persons before-named, their Voluntary Relinquishing of the said Houses of Friars, Colleges, Monasteries, Schools, Oratories, Mass-houses, and Nunneries, do forthwith Expel and thrust forth all and singular such Friars, Jesuits, and other Mo-nasticall Persons out of the same, and do Convert the same to more lawful Uses, upon pain to have their said Houses Seized upon to His Majesties use; and both the one and the other to be proceeded against for their unlawful Assemblies, and Maintenance of such unlawful Conventicles and Corrupt Nurture of Children, in the severest manner that by the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom, and Ecclesiastical Government of the same, may be had or Extended; whereof they and every of them are to take Notice, and to yield due Obedience thereunto, as they and every of them will avoid His Majesties High Indignation, and the Consequence thereof.

Anno 1630. The Estate of Spain was now in no good Condition, which was wittily at Rome proclaimed by Pasquin, habiting the Universal Monarch in that Attire of a Begging Fryer to make amends for the Grandeur of the Emperour; another Branch thereof, who was now in Medal Represented by a King under his Feet, [the Unfortunate Palsgrave] and the Imperial Eagle Loaden with Feathers, plucking the Crown from his head; thus we see Monarchies as well as private persons have their Fates and vicissitudes, Hodie mihi, Cras tibi. Therefore the lofty Spaniard being a little concerned at the new Peace lately entred into by the Kings of England and France, dispatcheth hither Don Carlos Colonnas for that great work of Peace-making on his part also, which was brought to pals in November following, being Sworn to by our King, Sunday, December 17. in the Chappel at Whitehall.

And whereas some have vainly imagined that Peter Reuben the Famous Painter of Antwerp, afterwards Knighted by our King, came hither upon any such account is Vain and Groundless; for the King having lately Finished the Sumptuous Banqueting House at Whitehall, and Reuben being the most Famous Man in his Art of those times, having done those most Excellent Figures in the Historical Pieces in the Queen Mothers Palace at Paris, on the same Errand he was sent for hither, and pourtray'd what we now see in that Banqueting House, viz. the Painting over head in the Room Foreshortned and looking downwards, the Pourtrait of King James in several Relations with all imaginary Similitude of him, looking down from the Clouds, in the rarest Postures, that perhaps these later Ages can Parallel, tending (as one saith) towards Eternity, for which he was very well rewarded, and dubb'd, as before, with the Honour of Knighthood.

The Grand Seignior resolved on the Siege of Babylon lately Revolted, and sends the Grand Vizier on that design with 200000 Men, whose Military Discipline was most exemplary; for he Punished with Death every Souldier wronging in the least matter any Person, who Arriving at Aleppo, is Entertained there by a Complaint of the French Consul against the English, for that some of our Men of War had Plundered in the Port of Alexandria some small Barges of Marseilles, who sending for the English Consul, Threatned with Death for the same, and Hanged immediately his Interpreter, he saving his Life by a Present of 30000 Ducatoones. A rare Example of Turkish Justice.

To repair Churches and Chapels in decay.

That having of late taken special notice of the general Decay and Ruin of Parish-Churches in many parts of this Kingdom; and that by Law the same ought to be Repair'd and Maintain'd at the proper charge of the Inhabitants, and others having Land in those Chappels, and Parishes respectively; who had wilfully neglected to repair the same, being Consecrated Places of God's Worship and Divine Service: His Majesty doth therefore Charge and Command all Arch-Bishops and Bishops, That they take special care of the Repairing and Upholding the same from time to time, and by themselves, and their Officers, to take a View and Survey of them, and to use the power of the Ecclesiastical Court, for putting the same in due Execution; and that the Judges be requir'd not to Interrupt this good Work, by their too easy granting of Prohibitions.

And also for Ornament for the City of London, there was an Order of Council-Board.

That Forasmuch as his Majesty hath received Information of the Unseemliness and Deformity appearing in Cheap-side, by reason that divers Men of mean Trades have Shops there amongst the Gold-smiths; which disorder, it is his Majesties expresse pleasure to have reformed; Whereas by occasion that Sir Henage Finch Kt, and some Aldermen, did this day Attend the Board upon other business, there was the same time also mention made of the aforesaid Deformity. It was thereupon thought fit and accordingly Ordered, That the two Lord Chief Justices, with such other Judges as they shall think meet to call unto them, shall consider what Statutes, or Laws there are, to enforce the Gold-smiths to Plant themselves for the use of their Trade, in Cheap-side, Lombard-street, and the parts Adjacent, and thereupon return Certificate to the Board in Writing, with all Convenient expedition. Of which Order the said Lord Chief Justices are hereby Prayed and Required to take Notice, and to perform the same accordingly.

And in December following Provision was made against the Transportation of Timber.

Whereas his Majesty and the Board, having been Informed of the great decay of Timber, as well within the Kingdom of Ireland as here in England, and that Ship-Timber, and Pipe-Staves, and more particularly Knee-Timber, is grown very scarce both here, and in that Kingdom, and therefore the preservation thereof doth much concern the good and safety of his Majesties Dominions. Their Lordships being careful to prevent the Transportation thereof, have this day thought fit and Ordered, that the Lord Treasurer do forthwith give effectual Order and Directions to the Officers of the Ports of England, That no Ship-Timber, especially Knee-Timber, or Pipe-Staves, be Transported to any parts out of this Realm, without special direction from His Majesty, or this Board. And that the like Order be given to the Officers of the Ports of Ireland, for the Restraining of all Transportation out of that Kingdom.

This Year was made Famous by the Death of Bethlehem Gabor Prince of Transylvania, who by his last Will Divided his Estate betwixt the Grand Seignior, the Emperour of Germany, and his Wife the Princess.

On the 30th. of January there were Instructions came from his Majestic to both the Arch-Bishops to this effect.

Instructions

Anno 1630. Instructions for the most Reverend Father in God, Our Right Trusty, and Intirely Beloved Councillor, George Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, concerning certain Orders to be observed, and put in Execution by the several Bishops in his Province.

Afterwards called Regal Instructions, differing in some things, from the Bishop of London's Considerations before mentioned.

That the Lords the Bishops give Charge in their Triennial Visitations, and at other Convenient times, both by themselves, and the Arch-Deacons; that the Declaration for the settling all Questions in difference, be strictly observed by all Parties. That there be a special Care taken by them all, that their Ordinations be Solemn, and not of unworthy Persons.

That they take great Care concerning the Lectures in their several Diocesses, for whom We give these special Directions following.

1. That in all Parishes the Afternoon Sermons be turn'd into Catechising by Question and Answer, where, and whensoever there is not some great Cause apparent to break this Antient and profitable Order.

2. That every Bishop ordain in his Diocess, That every Lecturer do read Divine Service, according to the Liturgy Printed by Authority, in his Surplice and Hood, before the Lecture.

3. That where a Lecture is set up in a Market-Town, it may be read by a Company of Grave and Orthodox Divines near adjoining, and in the same Diocess; and that they Preach in Gowns, and not in Cloaks, as too many do use.

4. That if a Corporation do maintain a single Lecturer, he be not suffered to Preach; till he profess his willingness to take upon him a Living with Cure of Souls within that Corporation; and that he do actually take such Benefice, or Cure, so soon as it shall be fairly procur'd for him.

5. That the Bishops do Countenance and Encourage the Grave and Orthodox Divines of their Clergy, and that they use means, by some of the Clergy or others, that they may have Knowledge how both Lecturers and Preachers within their Diocesses behave themselves in their Sermons, that so they may take order for any Abuse accordingly.

6. That the Bishops suffer none, under Noblemen, and Men qualified by Law, to have any private Chaplain in his House.

7. That they take special care that Divine Service be diligently frequented, as well for Prayers and Catechisms, as Sermons; and take a particular note of all such as absent themselves, as Recusants, or otherwise.

8. That every Bishop, that by Our Grace and Favour, and good Opinion of his Service; shall be nominated by Us to another Bishoprick, shall, from that day of nomination, not presume to make any Lease for three Lives, or 21 Years, or concurrent Lease; or any ways to renew any Estate, or Cut any Wood or Timber, but merely to receive the Rents due, and quit the Place: For we think it a hateful thing, that any Man's leaving the Bishoprick, should almost undo the Successor. And if any Man shall presume to break this Order, We will refuse Our Royal Assent, and keep him at the place he hath so abus'd. Car. 6.

9. And lastly; We command you to give Us an account, every Year, the second of January, of the performance of these Our Commands.

These Regal Injunctions were sent to the Arch-Bishops of Canterbury and York, and by them to all the Bishops in both the Provinces.

On occasion of which the Bishop of London, Dr. Laud, Summon'd the Clergy of his Diocess in a Solemn Speech pressing their Obedience thereto.

There happening some Tumult in the City of Chichester, about the Billeting of Souldiers, the Mayor and some of the Aldermen, with two of the Burgesses, were sent for up to London by Order of the Council.

And in regard as before we intimated the Insolencies of the Papists in Ireland, did every day more and more Encrease insomuch as they proceeded to create Convents of Monks and Nuns openly by Authority from home, the King and Council here being acquainted therewith Wrote the Letter following thereupon to the Lords, Justices, and Council of Ireland.

A Letter to the Lords Justices, and Council of Ireland.

BY your Letters we understand how the Seditious Riot, moved by the Fryars and their Adherents at Dublin, hath by your good Order and Resolution been happily suppress'd; And we doubt not but by this occasion, you will consider how much it concerneth the good Government of that Kingdom, to prevent in time the first growing of such evils. For where such People are permitted to swarm, they will soon make their Hives, and then endure no Government but their own, which cannot otherwise be restrained, than by a due and seasonable Execution of the Laws, and such Directions as from time to time have been sent from his Majesty and this Board. Now it redoundeth much to his Majesties Honour, that the World shall take notice of the Ability and good Service of his Ministers there, which in Person he hath been pleas'd openly in Council, and in most Gracious manner to approve and commend, whereby you may be sufficiently encouraged to go on with like Resolution and Moderation till the Work be fully done, as well in that City, as in the other places of that Kingdom. The Carriage whereof we must leave to your own good Discretions, whose particular knowledge of the present state of things, can guide you best when and where to carry a hard or a softer hand; only this we hold necessary to put you in mind, that you continue in that good Agreement among your selves, for this and other Services, which your Letters do express, and for which we commend you much. That the good Servant of the King and State may find encouragement equally from you all, and the ill-affected my find no support or Countenance from any, or other Continuance used, than by general Advise, for avoiding further evils, shall be allowed. And such Magistrates or Officers, if any shall be discovered, that openly, or under-hand, favour such disorders, or do not their duties in suppressing them, and Punishing the Offenders, you shall do well to take all fit and safe Advantages, ages, by the Punishment or Displacing of a few, to make the rest more cautious. This we Write not as mistaking the fair course you have taken, but to express the Concurrence of our Judgments with yours. And to assure you of our Assistance in all such Occasions, wherein for your further Proceedings, we have advised, and His Majesty requireth you accordingly to take Order, First, That the House where so many Fryars appeared in their Habits, and wherein the Reverend Arch-Bishop and the Mayor of Dublin received the first Affront, be speedily Demolished; and be a mark of Terror to the Resisters of Authority: And that the rest of the Houses erected, or Employed there, or elsewhere in Ireland, to the use of Superstitious Societies, be Converted to Houses of Correction, and to set Idle People on work, or to other publick uses, for the Advancement of Justice, good Art or Trade. And further, that you use all fit means to discover the Founders, Benefactors, and Maintainers of such Societies and Colledges, and Certify us their Names. And that you find out the Lands, Leases, Rents or Revenues applied to their uses, and dispose thereof according to the Law. And that you Certify also the Places, and Institutions of all such Monasteries, Priories, Nunneries, and other Religious Houses, and the Means of all such Persons as have put themselves to be Brothers or Sisters therein, specially such as are of Note, to the end such evil Plants be not Permitted any more to take root in that Kingdom, which we require you to take care of. As for the supply of Munition, which you have reason to desire, we have taken effectual order that you shall receive it with all Convenient speed. And so, &c.

 Sir William Alexander.

Mr. Chancy Minister of Ware, and Mr. Palmer Minister of St. Alphage in the City of Canterbury, were now questioned in High Commission Court, the former for that in his Sermon he had said, That Idolatry, Atheism and Popery, was crept into the Church, and that the Gospel was likely to be Suppressed. He was ordered by his Diocesan the Bishop of London, Submission, which he performed; the other had never read the Prayers of the Church, nor used the Surplice, and therefore he was removed from his said place.

At this time there came from beyond the Seas several Exile Ministers out of the Palatinate who were there Relieved: His Majesty under the Broad Seal Commending their Distressed Estate and Condition very Pathetically to all his Loving Subjects.

And now God having given his Majesty Peace on all hands, he takes care of the Interest of his only Sister the Queen of Bohemia, and of her Children, their Antient Patrimony being taken from them by the Emperour, and given by him to the Duke of Bavaria, he therefore Leagues himself with the French King to mediate a Peace betwixt the King of Poland and Sweden, then in open Hostility, which was speedily Accomplished by the two Kings, the one hereby Intending a new Enemy for the Austrian Family, and our King the Recovery of the Palatinate: The Sweed finding his Army ready for any Enterprize of War acquaints them an intended Expedition into Germany, for the restoring Peace and Liberty to the Distressed Protestants Estates and Princes there, which they like very well; presently after he sends his Embassador hither with the King and Queen of Bohemia's Letters to our King for Assistance in so good a cause; with whom his Majesty Complies and Agrees to send him 6000 Men under the Command of the Marquis of Hamilton; yet so as these were sent and raised only out of good will by his Subjects, that so no umbrage might be given to the Emperour by the action of the Kings, and accordingly there were made certain Stipulations and Agreements betwixt the King of Sweden and the Marquis; which afterwards were made Publicque.

And now at Ausburgh the Exercise of the Protestant Religion was quite Abolish'd by the Emperours Edict, and the Act of his Commons, as also at Halberstedt, and their Ministers Banished; and likewise the Catholick Bishops are Restored in those places, to Exercise Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction as formerly. The Dukedome of Mecklenburgh was likewise taken by the Emperour from the lawful Duke, and bestowed upon Wallestein his old General, and he Invested therewith, of all which Violent Proceedings, the Sweeds being Advertised and desirous to find work for his Veterane Army (but whether he ever intended the Liberty of Germany or not, only God knows, most certain it is he was not over kind or just to the Palgrave, when God had put an opportunity into his hand, as we shall afterwards hear;) he makes ready for his German expedition, expecting the Supplies under the Marques to meet him in Germany, according to Orders and Appointment. And thus ends the Year, 1629.

This Year beginning, Died William Earl of Pembroke Kt. of the Garter, and Chancellor of the Universitie of Oxford, a proper person and full of Gracefull Deportment, and of a Truly Generous mind, of the Antient Stock and manner of our Nobility, a person always Adverse to Men of Forein Mode and Manners, and an Enemy to the Scotch Faction at Court: he left his Honour to his Brother Phillip Herbert; and his Chancellorship of the University of Oxon to Dr. Laud Bishop of London, who was chosen thereto by that University, and presently afterward install'd at London by the Vice-Chancellor and Convocation.

About this time the Arch Bishop and Mayor of Dublin, Seize upon several Priests in that City in the Act of Massing, their Trinkets were taken from them, the Images Battered and Destroyed, the Priests and Friars were delivered up to the Souldiers, whom some Papists endeavour to Rescue, but in Vain, for a far stronger Power appearing with the Magistrates, they were Repelled, 12 Popish Aldermen were Imprisoned for not Assisting the Mayor, and upon their Misbehaviour and Anno 1630. and mutiny 15. Houses were seized and forfeited to the King, the Friars and Priests were ordered to be prosecuted, and two of them to avoid Justice hang'd themselves in Prison; And yet notwithstanding all this, some would have us believe that Popery was connived at, nay tolerated in Ireland in their times, and that by the Governours and Government of that Kingdom, but how truly such things are said, may sufficiently from hence appear.

The Ministers of the City of York now Petition the Board for augmentation of their respective Salaries to the sum of Twenty Four pounds per Annum, referring to some instances in the like Cases in the Cities of London and Norwich, which was granted by the Council accordingly, and an order was sent to the Lord Archbishop of York, for the encrease of maintenance out of every mans House-rent.

The Lords of the Council in Ireland, as well for the encrease of his Majesties Revenue, as for the securing mens Estates as to defective Titles, put forth a Proclamation declaring the Kings will to confirm to his Subjects their defective Titles and appointed Commissioners to treat with the Kings Subjects about that work, which they did accordingly.

The Earl of Essex, of whose divorce from the Body of Katharine Howard you have formerly had an ample account; had some thoughts after his return from the VVar in the Netherlands of a second marriage, and accordingly he set his affections on Madam Paulet, a Lady by extraction of the Family of the Marquess of Winchester, of whom this account was given, by one who was acquainted with the Court in those days. That pretty she was, but poor, Beauty hath price enough, and a good Fortune would not be courted by him; In March he was Married, but being mistaken in his abilities, finding 'tis thought some defects in himself, he retired out of the Town, and thereby gave occasion to others to court his Countess, proposing to himself [be like] the advantage of another Divorce whereto he might possibly be drawn, by some of his Dependants and Servants, whose design it was to watch their Countess, who was thought wanton enough for such a Husband, and by a Ladder to her Chamber Window, saw so much as made them bold to force the Door, where they found Mr. Udall sitting upon her Beds side very late, and unbooted, who was said to have followed in pursuit of her Sister into the Countesses Chamber where he went to seek her, but the Conclusion is reported to have been Divorce, though her innocence was pleaded and sealed with all possible protestations, and so generally believed until she proved with Child, &c. But enough of this Story, which I had not mentioned, but that another faith, these matters had been charged to the account of the best of Kings, and in revenge the Earl became the Head of an Army, giving his Sovereign battel in a pitch'd Field; which Act of his, the Act of Amnesty hath pardoned, and I shall no further mention it.

On the Twenty Ninth of May Prince Charles our now Gracious Sovereign was born about One of the Clock P. M. at whose Birth there appeared a Star visible at that very time of the Day when his Majesty his Father, was going to St. Pauls Church, to render thanks to Almighty God for so great a blessing to Himself and Nation, and for the safe delivery of her Majesty; who wrote to the Bishop of London to give him notice of it as followeth, CHARLES REX.

Car. 6.

Right Reverend Father in God, Right Trusty The King's Letter to the Bishop of London concerning the Birth of the Prince and Wellbeloved Counsellor, VVe Greet you well. VVhereas it hath pleased God of his infinite Grace and Goodness to vouchsafe unto us a Son born at our Mansour of St. James, the Twenty Ninth day of this present month of May, to the great comfort not only of our selves in particular, but to the general Joy and Contentment of our Loving Subjects, as being a principal means for the establishment of the prosperous estate and Peace of this and other our Kingdoms, whose VVelfare VVe do and will ever prefer before any other earthly Blessing that can befall us in this Life. VVe therefore according to the laudable Custom of our Royal Progenitors in like case heretofore used, have thought fit to make known unto you these glad tidings, being well assured that with all dutiful and loving Affection you will embrace whatsoever may make for the prosperous advancement of the publick Good.

Shortly after the King of Sweden signed the Articles agreed unto by our King, the Marquess and himself, about the bringing of an Army of Six thousand men into Germany for that Kings assistance, in asserting of the German liberties, as well as the recovery of the Palatinate, the Tenor of those Articles follow.

WE Gustavus Adolphus by the Grace of God King of the Swedes, Goths, and Vandals, Great Prince of Finland, Duke of Esthonia and Caryl, and Lord of Ingria, &c. To all and sundry whom it concerns, make it known and certain, That whereas the Illustrious and our sincerely beloved Lord James Marquess of Hamilton, Master of the Horse to the most Serene King of Great Britain, out of his Zeal for the publick Good, and for acquiring eternal Fame, hath resolved, to dedicate himself, and the Fortunes and Forces of all he is concerned in for restoring our oppressed Friends in Germany, and for that end hath offered to us by the Illustrious and our sincerely faithful Colonel Alexander Hamilton, his Fidelity and Service; and that he will on his own expence gather a strength of six thousand Men, and bring them over as soon as may be, to any place we shall appoint, either against the Imperialists, or any other of our Enemies, and maintain them on his own Charge, and do us all faithful and vigorous Service with them, till this great Affair be brought to a good issue; Provided we shall Authorize this his Design with our Protection, and give him the underwritten Assistance: Therefore there being nothing dearer to Us than to make all vigorous resistance to the common Enemies of Liberty, and having in high estimation the brave Undertakings of Generous men, we not only would not reject, but have heartily embraced the nobleness of so good Resolutions: We have therefore admitted like as by the vigour of these Presents, We admit the said Lord Marquess in our Service, Armies, and Military Councils, on the following Conditions.

The Condition of Agreement between the King of Sweden and Marquess Hamilton.

1. Whenever he shall signifie to Us that he is ready to bring over his Forces, We shall assign him a place for his Landing, either to come and joyn

Anno 1630. joyn with our Armies, or to make an Impression elsewhere, as we shall think fit.

2. 'If we appoint him to Land in any place, from whence he shall not come straight to us, We shall for strengthening his Forces send, to the place we shall assign for his Landing, four thousand Foot out of our Armies, whom we shall furnish with all Necessaries, and maintain on our Charges a whole Year.

3. 'Because the said Marquess thinks Two thousand Horse are necessary for his Foot, for whose Levy and Pay he promises all Assistance; We shall therefore think of all ways and means for raising and maintaining these.

4. 'We not only give the said Illustrious Marquess the Absolute Command of this Army in our Absence, but shall also joyn to him a Counsellor, with whom he may consult in all things, that so his Deliberations be more expedite and clear.

5. 'Whatever the Illustrious Lord Marquess shall take from the Enemy, the Lands and Territories shall belong to Us, but the Revenues and all the Emoluments shall go to him, and to the Relief of his Army; yet so as these Revenues shall be gathered decently and in order, without Depredations or Plunderings: Since Our Design is not to oppress those who have been already enough pressed, but rather to deliver them from the Oppressions of others, as much as by the Divine Assistance we can.

6. 'That the Marquess may more effectually perform what he hath bravely resolved, and may sooner make those Warlike Instruments of his own Invention, on which he relies much in his Expedition, VVe shall not only (with the first occasion) furnish him with a hundred Ship-pounds of crude Iron, but shall also assign Hammers for working it according to his Design; of which Instruments he hath promised to leave a Model with Us, and VVe shall be careful that none of our Servants shall make use of them, before he hath first made trial of them himself.

7. 'VVe shall also furnish him with Three hundred and seventy Ship-Pounds of Iron Ball for his Guns, and Two thousand five hundred Pikes, and as many Musquets.

8. 'VVenever the Marquess shall advertise us of his needing Gun-Powder, we shall assign him Bills of Exchange in Holland for buying seventy two Ship-pounds of Gun-powder.

9. 'If any other Kings or States shall concur with us, all they contribute shall be at our Disposal: but if the Marquess his necessities require further assistance, VVe shall not abandon him, but faithfully assist him as much as our Affairs shall permit.

10. 'For all which the said Illustrious Lord Marquess with all his Forces hath promised Fidelity to us, and shall be bound to it, as well as our men, and those who receive our Pay, are; for which both he, and all his Captains shall be particularly engaged.

'But because there is to be a treaty betwixt our Commissioners and the Imperialists at Dantzick; therefore if a Peace shall be there concluded, so that VVe shall not need the service of the Marquess and his Army, he hath obliged himself to pay for the foresaid materials at their entire Value.

'All which things being thus concluded, and to be firmly observed by Us, We have subscribed these Articles with our Hand, and commanded our Royal Seal to be put to them, at our Castle in Stockholm the last of May, Anno Dom. 1630.

Signed,

Locms Sigilli.

Gustavus Adolphus.

The Counterpart of which Agreement was afterwards signed by the Marquess of Hamilton.

And now we shall give you a most signal instance of the Effrontery, as well as intemperate Zeal and ignorance of the Scotch Presbytery in one Doctor Leighton a Scotch man born, who had wrought a most scandalous Book against our King and his Father King James, their Governments and Councils, as well as the discipline of our Church; whose assertions and positions in the said Book follow.

1. 'That we do not read of greater Persecution and higher Indignities done upon God's People in any Nation professing the Gospel, than in this our Island, especially since the death of Queen Elizabeth.

2. 'He terms the Prelates of this Realm Men of Blood, and Enemies to God and the State, and saith, That the maintaining and establishing of Bishops within this Realm is a main and master-Sin established by Law, and that Ministers should have no Voices in Council Deliberative and Decisive.

3. 'He avowed the Prelacy of our Church to be Antichristian and Satanical, and terms the Bishops, Ravens and Magpies, that prey upon the State.

4. 'He terms the Canons of our Church, made Anno 1603. Non-sence Canons.

5. 'He disallowed and contemned the Ceremony of Kneeling in the receiving of the Sacrament, alledging that the suggestion of false fears to the King by the Prelacy, and the seeking of their own unlawful standing, brought forth that received Spawn of the Beast, Kneeling at the receiving of the Sacrament.

6. 'He affirms that the Prelates did corrupt the King; forestalling his Judgment against God and Goodness, and most audaciously and wickedly calleth his Majesties Royal Consort, our gracious Queen, the Daughter of Heth.

7. 'He most impiously seems to commend him that committed the barbarous and bloody Act of Murdering the late Duke of Buckingham, and to encourage others to second him in the like wicked and desperate Attempt, to the destruction of others.

8. 'He layeth a most seditious Scandal upon the King, State, and Kingdom, wickedly affirming, that all that pass by us spoil us, and we spoil all that rely upon us. And amongst other particulars, instanceth the black pining death of the famished Rochelers, to the number of 15000 in four Months: by which Passages and wicked Positions and Assertions, he did as much as in him lay, scandalize his Majesties Sacred Person, his Religious VVife, and just Government, the person of his Royal Consort the Queen, the Persons of the Lords and Peers of this Realm, especially the Reverend Bishops.

9. 'That in another place of the said Book, endeavouring to slander not only his Majesties Sacred Person and Government, but also to de-

Anno 1630. tract from his Royal Power, in making Laws and Canons for Government Ecclesiastical, and in matters concerning the Church, he saith, That the Church hath her Laws from the Scripture, and that no King may make Laws in the House of God: For if they might, then the Scriptures might be imperfect.

10. And further charged, that in another place of the said Book, thinking to salve all with an expression of his Sacred Majesty, he hath these words following; What pity it is, and indelible dishonour it will be to you the States Representative, that so ingenuous and tractable a King should be so monstrously abus'd, to the undoing of himself and his Subjects?

He confesseth the Book to be of his own Penning, and the Lords Chief Justices say it was Treasonable, but he was Adjudged Imprisonment during Life, a Fine of 10000*l.* to the King, and to be degraded, whipt, and set upon the Pillory, having his Nose slit, and his Face branded with a double S. for a Sower of Seditions, but he escaped out of Prison, and the Hue and Cry overtaking him in Bedfordshire, he was again Committed to the Fleet, and the Sentence Executed on him. Novemb. 16. in the New Palace Yard at Westminster.

The punishment of Leighton was much resented by the discontented party, but shortly after two other persons who were concerned in his escape received sentence in the same, and were fined at Five hundred pound each, and committed to the same Prison of the Fleet, during the Kings pleasure.

The Tax for Knighthood came now to be lookt into, it was as old as Edward the Second, and call'd Statutum de militibus, that all who had 30 pounds per an. and were fit, ad armagerenda, should be made Knights. A plentiful revenue it was in those times, and if the persons were not found fit of Body for the Kings service, others might be found that were fitting, and these were excused from service, paying the King so much money, but this ancient Statute was taken away by the Long Parliament, that the King wanting any supplies of this nature from his Subjects out of Parliament might solely depend upon Parliamentary Aides.

It was about Midsummer when Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden crossed the Baltick, and descended into Germany, invited, as he said, by the Germans, with promised assistance from them; his Reasons be published to the Emperour with this Protestation or Manifesto.

That he meant no Hostility unto the Empire, or Person of the Emperour: Declaring further, that his coming was principally to Relieve that Distressed Prince, his Cousin and Confederate the Duke of Stetin and Pomeran, who at that time, and for Three years before, had been injuriously oppressed by the Emperour; That he was not only engaged by ancient Alliances and Confederacies to aid the State of Pomerland (thus distressed, spoiled, taken and disarmed) but it concerned him also in point of State and good Policy, not to suffer the Duke's Enemy to be Master of those Coasts of the Baltick-Sea, whence he might at pleasure infest Sweden, and at his leisure and opportunity invade it. That his League with the said Duke was Defensive only, and not for any Offensive War against the Emperour.

Car. 8.

His pretences you see were fair and plausible, the defence of the Protestant Cause and Religion, the succouring of his distressed Allies, and reason of State to boot; but he was told from the Emperour, that the Imperial Majesty was not to be controuled by Foreign Princes, that his Ears were and should be open to their Intercessions, but not to their Commands; and so this cause bringing no redress, for a further justification of his proceedings, and by way of Apology he enlargeth himself in the manner following, and the whole was Printed for the World to Judge.

That being by his oppressed Neighbours and Confederates invited to their relief; He for a long time rather expected the Emperour's goodness towards the Subjects of Germany, than desired to interest himself against him, with whom he so much wished the continuation of Amity. That the Quarrel was first begun by the Emperour, who in the late Wars of Prussia, between Sweden and Poland, had prohibited the King of Sweden to make any Levies of Men, or Provision of Victuals, or Ammunition in Germany, apparently granting the same liberty unto his Enemy, the King of Poland. That the Emperour himself had heretofore sent Two several Armies under his own Ensigns into Prussia, in the aid of the Pole, his Enemy. The first in the Year 1627. under the Command of the Duke of Holstein, and the second 1630. conducted by Arnheim, Marshal of the Field unto Waisstein. That his Courier riding Post with his Packets, hath been stayed; his Letters unto Bethlem Gabor opened, and false Copies published of them; that his Embassadors had been slighted, not admitted to Audience, nor vouchsafed an Answer, forbidden to stay in Germany. That upon the seeking of peace by mediation of the King of Denmark, he obtained nothing but affronts and delays: and that writing to the Colledge of Electors, then assembled at Lubbeck 1629. he found in their Answers by their Letters the main point of the business not once toucht upon; and so no remedy that way neither.

That the poor Town of Stralsund, notwithstanding it had no way wronged the Emperour, and had received Assurances and Promises of protection from the Emperour; yet had it been block'd up by Waisstein, Duke of Friedland, and the Island of Rugen, lying in the Sea, right against it, taken by the said Friedland. That the Town and Island aforesaid (his Confederates) had often complained unto him of this Injustice, and desired his peaceful Mediation first, and his armed Assistance afterwards. That considering how things stood betwixt the Emperour and Himself; it much concern'd him not to suffer that Island and Town to be possessed by his Enemies, seeing they lie so commodiously for the command of the Baltick-Sea, and so dangerously for infesting the Coasts of Sweden, which lie right against it: that the Emperour had actually molested those Coasts with Shipping, which he had newly gotten from Danzick; and other Hans Towns thereabout had hindered the Swedish Trade and Merchandizing upon the Coasts of Germany.

His

Anno 1630. His first descent was on the Isle of Usedom, not far from Straelſond; where being Entrench'd, after his whole Army Lands both Canon and Cavalry. In the beginning of July Embassadors came to him from the Duke of Mecklenburgh, Pomeran, &c. And in a short time he drove out of that Island under Col. Alexander Leslyes conduct, the whole power of the Emperour, and immediately transports his Army up the Oder to the City of Stettin, which was summon'd by the Van of his Army under the command, of Grave Neeles, and the Lord Rea a Scotch-man; upon which the City demurr'd a while, but his Army encompassing the Town, they presently yield: hereupon he sends another part of his Army to attack Colberg upon the Baltick Sea, while others take in the Castles and other fortified places in Mecklenburgh and Pomerania, of which you may expect more in the next Year.

And now arrives the Marquess of Hamilton in England, with the Stipulations and Agreements ratified betwixt himself and the Swede; and the King of Great Britain writes to his Sister the Queen of Bohemia, to acquaint her that the Marquess should speedily be dispatch'd hence with the English Succors, and that in the mean time he hoped to prevail by a treaty with the Spaniards for an entire restitution of the Palatinate, notwithstanding her thoughts to the contrary: His Letter here follows.

My only dear Sister,

The King's Letter to the Queen of Bohemia.

HAVING found that my last hath troubled you more than I could have imagined (for I did suspect that at the first it would a little Rattle you, before you had well considered of it; but upon debate, I thought you would not have still remained unsatisfied, as I see you are) I would say no longer from giving you satisfaction (as I hope) in some things which without doubt you mistake. But first give me leave to tell you, that it is impossible in this unfortunate Business of yours, either to give or take a Counsel absolutely good; but whosoever makes you believe otherwise, deceives you; so that the best Counsel in this, being but the best Ill, must have many Objections against it; therefore I will not undertake a Disputation, but clear those things (if I spoil not a good Cause in the telling) which you apprehend to be most prejudicial unto you, which (as I take it) is, That if I make a Peace with Spain, it will both hinder the Assistance of our Friends, and lay my Arms asleep for doing you Service. As for our Friends that can do us most good (I mean France and the United Provinces) they cannot be further from doing you good than now they are: What the Cause is I cannot say, but what it is not I can; For notwithstanding my Treaty with Spain, I have passed them both, the one for making a League for the Palatinate, and Liberty of Germany: that that is made to that same purpose (which indeed was the true intent of it) they both deny, though in a diverse fashion; so that the Treaty of Spain is not the Cause. As for Sweden, I confess he is to be heartned and used as much as may be; but I will assure you, I shall be the better able by a Peace with Spain to help and hearten him. Now for me, I am so far from forgetting or leaving your Interests in my peaceable disposition; That Spain not only promiseth as much as I can ask for his Part for your entire Restitution, but confesseth, That if his Performance answereth not his Words, I have a just Cause to renew the War upon him; so that when I have opportunity, I shall not want a just Quarrel even with Spain by his own Confession; and in the mean time, though the Peace be made, I shall not rest, but do what lies in me to engage my Friends in an Offensive and Defensive League for the Palatinate and Liberty of Germany. Lastly, Whatsoever may be informed you, or your Husband, the Peace of Spain is so far from being concluded, that as yet I have not seen a Draught of the Articles; and I earnestly entreat you to believe, that what I shall do in this, shall be chiefly to do you the best service that may be; and as I shall proceed in this, you shall have a true account, as on my credit you have had hitherto; assuring you that howsoever change of Affairs may alter Councils, my Actions shall ever prove me to be

Your Loving Brother to serve you,

Charles R.

THE King of Sweden's success hastened forward the Marquess of Hamilton in his intended design to wait upon that Kings fortunes, that was his outward aim; though his ambition had an Eye homeward in that undertaking: for he having sent hither David Ramsay a Gentleman of the Kings Privy Chamber, a most turbulent Boute-feau (Sir James and Alexander Hamilton, and Robert Meldram, and also to endear the Marquess to the Scots Officers in that Army) to proffer his service to the King, with the aid of some Regiments of foot, this Mad man, more like an Ambassador from a great Prince, than a Messenger from a Peer, took his place before the Lord Rey his Countryman, and a Colonel in Arms, who to honour him the more, procured the other Scots Officers to make addresses, and to attend him; discovering thereby that the Marquess his aim was of deeper consequence, not to fight under the Swede; and following his apprehension with prudent observations, he won upon Ramsay, to History out the mystery of the Marquesses design, by this means to raise Forces under a formal colour, but in earnest, to make himself King of Scotland, and thereon he draws a pedigree of his Right and Title from King James the First, and in several frolicks of Mirth and Wine, to ascribe unto him Sovereignty; of which Rey returning into England, told it to the Lord Uchiltry (yet living) who forthwith acquainted the Lord Treasurer Weston, and he the King.

And at the same time Major Borrick accused the said Meldram to have under Oath of secrecy, communicated to him the whole design, the grounds and reasons which he justified before the King and Council, and Meldram faintly denied, and was committed to the Fleet Prisoner Two years, and then released by the Marquess.

Sometime before his discovery Sir William Elphinston Cup-bearer to the King, was sent over Convoy to the King of Denmark, and with him, the Marquess would enforce a Companion, Meldram, who had private instructions to the Principal Scotch Officers in the Armies, and thereby more respected than the Kings Messenger, Elphinston; but at their return to Gravesend, a Scotchman dependant of the Marquess, gave intelligence to Meldram that all was discovered; but was imboldned to come to Court, where he was accused.

The

Anno 1630. The Lord Ochiltry, for reporting the discovery to Weston, was afterwards sent prisoner to Scotland, where the Marquesses power was more dreaded, and there coming to Examination and Tryal, Ochiltry spake out so plainly, but without further hearing, he was conveyed close prisoner to the Castle of Blackness, where he remained till the English set him free.

Meldram was after preferred Secretary to General Lesly at Newcastle; and Alexander Hamilton with a Pension of 500 l. was afterwards General of the Covenanters Artillery. This Account is given by one who then was a Courtier, and one well versed in the Affairs of that time.

But Mr. Rushworth gives the Account following, 'That the Marquess of Hamilton arriving at the Court in the end of this year, there happened to be at that time Mackay Lord Ochiltry, a Lord in Scotland, by name Stuart, and who once bore the Name of the Earl of Arran, when by a Parliament which contracted a By-Name in that Kingdom, the Hamiltons were attainted of High Treason; but afterwards both Blood, Honour and Estate were restored to them. This Lord had no kindness for the Marquess of Hamilton, but nourished a Discourse, which Ramsay let fall to the Lord Rea, when they were beyond Seas; and prevailed so far with the Lord Weston, then Lord High Treasurer of England, as to impart the Business to the King, being a Treason of an high nature (if true) to this effect; 'That he raised this new Army, with design when he was at the head of them, to set himself up as King of Scotland. Much Credit was given to this Design by the Lord Weston Lord High Treasurer, who endeavoured to persuade the King not to permit the Marquess to come near his Sacred Person, and in no kind to have the privilege to lie in his Majesties Bed-Chamber, lest his Majesties Life were hazarded thereby.

The Lord Weston pressed this home unto the King; but his Majesty kept his thoughts private to himself: and having a great affection to Hamilton, as soon as he came into his Presence, embraced him with great kindness, and discovered to him what he was accused of, but said, I do not believe it; and that the World may know I have a confidence in your Loyalty, you shall lie in my Bed-Chamber this night. But the Marquess beseeched his Majesty to excuse him, till he had received a Trial, and was cleared of the Treason he was accused of; but the King would receive no Denial; yet told him he would put the Business into a way of Examination; but afterwards when the Examination was taken, it was found that the one affirmed the Accusation to be true; and the other as positively denied it, and that there appeared not then any concurrent proof of the same.

A Report of these Examinations was afterwards made to the King's Majesty, who was graciously pleased to refer the whole matter to a Trial before the Lord High Constable, and Earl Marshal, in the Court of Honour; of which the Reader will have a full account towards the end of the next Year in its proper time and place. In the mean time, the King caused Rea and Ramsay to be secured in order to that Trial; so the Marquess proceeded in making provisions for the embarking of his Army, and ordering those Forces in Scotland to be in readiness to be shipped, to come to the place of Rendezvous when they received Orders.

In Germany by this time, all parties concerned, both Protestant and Popish, had enough of the War; it had now continued 12 years almost to the Ruine of Germany, once the most flourishing part of Europe; which the Emperor seriously reflecting upon, and thinking of the great Impositions which it now underwent, if they should be continued, it would in fine set both the Parties against the Emperor, as now they were against his General Wallenstein; which as Mr. Rushworth hath well observed, had much disgusted the People against the Emperor; and if other Wars should thereupon ensue, the Chances thereof might happen to be uncertain, and the event in the end fatal. And further, that if at this Diet things unreasonable should be proposed unto him by the Confederate Protestant Princes, if he did refuse their Desires upon just grounds, he should thereby oblige the Confederate princes of the Catholick League the more firmly to assist him, than if he should refuse the Calling of a Parliament (or Diet) and act upon his Imperial Authority.

The Princes of the Catholick League, as also the Catholick Party, seemed very desirous of this Diet, having, as well as the Protestants, shared in the Insolencies of the Imperial Sculdiers under Wallenstein, and of the Charges of the War; and the more moderate sort of Catholicks were much dissatisfied at the Covetousness of the Duke of Bavaria, for his pressing the Emperor so hard to confer the Electorship and Patrimony of the Prince Elector Palatine upon him, as a Reward for his Services, they conceiving this action of disinheriting a Prince of so great Interest and Alliance, would at one time or other, raise up Friends that might disturb the Peace of the Empire: wherefore they wished the Emperor would rather confiscate the Estate for Life, as a Punishment for the Fathers Offence, than to disinherit the Children, who were innocent of their Father's forward and rash undertaking, as they termed it.

Those of the Catholick League expressed themselves as to the said Diet, That though they did much desire it, yet their hopes were, that the Emperor would never consent to let the Protestants go away without restitution of the Church-Lands and Goods, which they pretended the Protestants held from them.

The Princes of the Union and Protestant Party, were no less thirsty of Peace, having undergone the greatest of all hardships, being most of all overlaid with heavy Impositions, and with the Billeting of Souldiers of the Catholick League, and were desirous that there might be an absolute Oblivion of all things by-past, and the Empire settled in firm Peace. Great Joy therefore was throughout the Empire, expecting that there would be an end of further War, and a firm and settled Peace concluded at this Diet. But there wanted not those, who did insinuate unto his Imperial Majesty what was fit for him to insist upon at the Meeting of the Diet, from which it was not fit for the Emperor to recede;

Amongst which, one was,

1. That he should in no wise consent to a settlement until the Protestants should restore the Church-Lands and Goods unto the Catholick Party.

Private Resolves of the Emperor, from what things not to recede.

Anno 1629. 2. Not to diminish his Army, but in a small proportion, that he might keep up his Power by force, and a strong hand, lest the Deposed Princes, and others, should upon any opportunity of advantage, revenge themselves upon the Emperor.

3. And therefore resolved to keep up his Army, and not to restore the Prince Elector Palatine to his Dignity and Patrimony.

The Emperors Proposal at the Diet as to the Palgrave.

Notwithstanding all opposition, the Emperor met at the Diet; he represented unto the Princes then Assembled, that he was not the cause of so cruel a War as had been, nor would be a hinderer of the Peace; imputing all the mischief that fell out upon the War, unto the Palgrave, Count Mansfield, Brunswick, and the King of Denmark; and that it was high time to think of a firm and settled Peace: But as to the Palgrave, he proposed to the Diet to pass an Act, that he should continue a Banished Man, without all hopes of returning; and that they would never vouchsafe to entertain Peace or Amity with him.

That the French were concluding a League with the King of Sweden; and though there were causes of Enmity between Him, the Emperor, and the King of Swedeland, yet if the King of Sweden would not condescend unto the Imperial Ambassadors and the King of Denmark's Mediation for a Peace, he was to be threatened with the Power of the Roman Empire, and to be chastised by Force of Arms.

Lastly, His Imperial Majesty proposed, that the Princes would consult to provide Money for maintaining a standing Army; for restoring of Martial Discipline, and of the manner of laying and levying Impositions.

In Answer to the Proposals of the Emperor, the Princes Electors laid open the general Grievances and Miseries of the Empire, the Outrages committed in War, and Excessiveness of the Impositions; and as the Emperor laid the fault upon the Palgrave, the Electors laid the fault of all the Misery that had happened, upon the new Duke of Mecklenburgh (Wallenstein) General of the Emperors great Army, to whom his Imperial Majesty had given such a large Commission, without the consent of the Princes of the Empire (as never before him any man had.) That the Impositions which by the Laws of the Empire, had wont to be assessed by the joynt consent of the Princes, had at the pleasure of the said Duke of Mecklenburgh been imposed, and most rigorously exacted; insomuch that the Elector of Brandenburgh had in a few years been forced to contribute about 20 Millions of Florins. The Duke of Pomerland complained that Ten Millions was paid out of his Principality of Stetin, all in one year only; besides other Charges and Expences with the Rabble of the Army.

The like complaint came from other Princes. In conclusion, the said Electors did more particularly fall upon the said Duke of Mecklenburgh, pressing the Emperor to cashier him, and to disband his Army, and to have Peace made with the French King, and the Princes of Italy, and with the King of Swedeland also.

The Complaints both of the Protestant and Catholick Princes were so many and very great against Wallenstein, and the Insolencies of his Soldiers in their Quarters, and of his Commissaries in their bold levying of Money upon the Empire, as that the Emperor hath nothing to say for him, but consented to their Desires, that his Command should be taken from him. And two Barons of the Empire were sent to him, with the Proposals of the Diet presented to the Emperor, and the Emperor's Resolution thereupon, that he should deliver up his Commission.

All mens Minds were full of expectation what the event of this Message to a General so potent, and an Army so rude, should produce: but contrary to all imagination, Wallenstein complied with the Emperor's Command, left his Army, and went to Nimwegen, where he remained as a private person.

The Electors having prevailed as to his Removal, proposed also unto his Imperial Majesty further to declare his purpose, that no war should be made upon any without the consent of the Princes, and that no Imposition should hereafter be levied at the pleasure of the General of the Army.

The Electors having obtained a safe Conduct of the Emperor for Rusdorfe, Ambassador of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine, he came to the Diet, in the company of Sir Robert Anstruther, the King of Great Britain's Ambassador, who much pressed for Audience, about the time that News came how the King of Swedeland was active in Pomerland, which made most of Opinion his Landing would contribute to get Restitution of the said Elector Palatine to his Dignity and Patrimony. And Audience being granted to the English Ambassador, he thus delivered his Errand.

'That nothing could affect (his Master) the King of Great Britain more, than the consideration of the daily Calamities undergone by his Brother-in-Law the Prince Elector, his Wife and Children. That no place was more expedient to Treat of Peace, Reconciliation, and Re-establishment than in the Diet; therefore he made it his ardent Request to his Imperial Majesty, That having regard to the many intercessions of his late Father, and other Kings and Princes, he would remit the Displeasure conceived against his Brother, and recal the Proscription issued out against him.

'True it was, his Brother had offended, and was inexcusably guilty, unless the rashness and precipitation of Youth might somewhat plead for him; but others had been as culpable, whom yet his Imperial Majesty had received into favour.

'And would he be pleased to extend to him the same Clemency, it would oblige his Master to demonstrations of the greatest Gratitude, and raise a glorious Emulation in others, to imitate so excellent a Pattern.

'That the Palgrave would entertain this Favour, with an heart so firmly devoted to his Service, so as all the intentions of his Spirit should be disposed to Compensation and Reparation of his former Miscarriage.

'That his Majesty held nothing so dear as the Affection of his Imperial Majesty, and establishment of a durable Peace between them; and as upon all occasions he hath been forward to represent himself solicitous for it, so at this time he was ready to give more ample Testimony, if his Imperial Majesty was pleased to incline to a Treaty.

1630. All this being fair and full of respect, gained Civilities to the Ambassadors: but it was answered,

That the present Affairs of Germany, which occasioned the Diet, were so important, as not to admit of any Foreign Debate; and yet upon opportunity and leisure, the King of Great Britain should receive such satisfaction as would be agreeable to their Honour, and Confidence his Majesty had in him.

After that Caesar had granted Audience to the Ambassador of the King of Great Britain, an exact account was brought to his Imperial Majesty, that he had no reason to hope for any peace from the King of Sweden, who had made himself Master of Pomerania, and had put to flight the Imperialists, and was now possessed of Stettin; Hereupon the Catholick Princes and States advise the Emperor to continue the War, and promise him Assistance in it; and withal, that he should endeavour to get his Son Ferdinand chosen King of the Romans; which thing was much opposed by the Protestant Princes and States, as a thing against the Laws of the Emperor; that they had not now been called hither for that purpose; that Frankfurt was the proper place for that Election; and thus they endeavour to excuse themselves, and put off that Matter for that time; which being ill resented by the Emperor, therefore to be quit with them, he Decreed,

That those Gentlemen of the Upper and Lower Palatinate, Frankenhalm, and other Counties who had born Arms under Count Mansfeld, Duke of Brunswick, and others, that their Estates should be condemned as Confiscated. And with the Profits thereof, the Emperor did gratifie his Privy Council and others with Pensions for a Reward of their Services.

The Princes and Estates Protestant protest against these Proceedings as illegal; these Fees and Estates by ancient prescription belonging to those Noblemen, so proscribed and divested of their Inheritances; but all in vain; for he would not hearken thereto, declaring, that he was concerned in Honour and Justice so to do, that it might be a Terror to succeeding times to bear Arms, or raise War against his Imperial Majesty; and therefore he made a Decree for the restitution of Church-Lands; and published it by Proclamation; which was followed by a Decree against the Duke of Brandenburg, of Wittenberg, and the Count of Hohen, that they should surrender the Estates they had held ever since the Agreement at Passaw, which was in the Year 1555. In which there was an Article to this purpose; That those who should at any time violate that Agreement, should be accounted Enemies of the Empire: however the Catholick Princes seemingly interpose with Caesar, as fearing another War would hereupon ensue in the Empire: but at last these also were brought over from soliciting the Emperor, by the prevalency and Interest of their Popish Clergy; and more particularly, of the Jesuits. And on the Third of November the Diet broke up in great disorder, instead of a Settlement that was expected.

However, the Catholick Princes and Estates prevail with Caesar to call a Diet at Frankfurt, that an Accommodation might (if possible) be made; and in the mean time the Protestants meet at Leipsick, and agree upon a Letter to be sent to Caesar, to the effect following:

That they take notice that there had been a Conference between the Protestant and the Catholick Princes at the former Diet concerning Church-Lands, and that the further Treaty thereupon was referred unto a Diet to be held at Frankfurt in August following, and therefore besought his Majesty to give liberty to the Protestant Princes to hold a Diet by themselves in some convenient place, that so by their united Council, they might be provided with an Answer to the Catholick Princes, at their Meeting in the Diet at Frankfurt, concerning the said Church-Lands. The Address to the Emperor was recommended, with the Mediation of the Elector of Adria and Bavaria; and the Emperor agreed to what was desired; and Leipsick was the place appointed for the Meeting of the Protestant Princes, and the time was Feb. 8. then next following.

And at the appointed place they all met at the prefix'd time; when the Elector of Saxony proposed the Heads of their present Consultation; which were,

1. 'How the Church might be with a good Conscience maintained in her ancient Liberty and happy Estate.
2. 'How to keep their Obedience to the Emperor, and yet preserve the ancient Constitution and Peace of the Empire.
3. 'How to maintain Correspondency with the Catholick Princes, in order to the peace of the Empire.
4. 'What to answer for themselves, both in general and particular, as well concerning the Maintenance of the Reformed Religion, as to the Emperor's Edict concerning Church-Lands, when they should come to meet at the Diet at Frankfurt.

And after long Debate, they propose their Grievances to Caesar; and these were,

1. 'That the Golden Bull, or Magna Charta, and Constitution of the Empire might be firmly observed, which hath been violated by the Emperor's late Edict for the restitution of Church-Lands, and through his Endeavours, to root out the Protestant Religion; which hath been the main Cause of the late miserable Wars and Troubles.
2. 'They complained of particular Injustice done to particular Princes and Cities, by the violent taking away of the Church-Lands, as the Duke of Wurttemberg, the Duke of Brunswick, the Prince of Anhalt, and others.
3. 'And that some were hindered in the exercise of their Religion; as, Augustus and Frederick, Princes Palatine, and others; and that forty eight had their Estates confiscated, as the Lady Eleatrix Palatine, and her Son Lewis, Prince Palatine; the one being the Mother, the other the Brother of the King of Bohemia, and the Duke of Mecklingburgh, &c. For whom the whole College of Electors had interceded in the last Diet, but prevailed not.
4. 'A Complaint of the violent altering of the Feods of their Lands and Lordships, into which the Imperial Commissaries had by Force and Arms entered, changing the Tenure of the Tenants, and altering the Religion.
5. 'That their Lands had been given to Souldiers, as if they had been Conquered.

Grievances laid open to the Emperor.

Anno 1626. 6. That treble more Contributions have been raised against no Enemy, than ever were when the Turks were in Germany, with many other Particulars. Concluding, That all this is contrary to the Oath of the Emperor, and unto the Laws of the Empire, the Privileges of the Princes, and against the Honour and Safety of the Empire; of which the several Electors and Princes had complained, and which by them were protested against in the late Diet at Ratisbon.

Wherefore they now humbly Petition his Imperial Majesty to be relieved, protesting otherwise they are not able to endure the Burden, but shall be enforced to defend their Persons, Consciences, Estates and Subjects; resolving notwithstanding to continue their due Loyalty and Obedience to his Imperial Majesty; yet in the mean time to prepare for a War, in case the Matters complained of by them should not be redressed. This bore Date at Lipswick, March 18, 1631. and the Diet broke up upon Palm-Sunday following.

Communicated to the Catholick Electors. The substance of what they writ to the Emperor, they sent unto the three Catholick Electors, informing them, That War would undo all, that the Insolencies of the Commissaries and Souldiers were not to be endured.

Case hereof. Storms and makes ready the Ban Imperial against them, forbidding any persons to Assist them with either Money, Quarters, or Aydes, and commanding every one to destroy, pursue, take and kill them, as the publick Enemies of the Empire; and accordingly he orders Tilly to March against them, and the Count of Pappenheim to attack Magdenburgh, of which you may hear more in the next year.

Dr. Land, Bishop of London, as Dean of the Chappel, Christens Prince Charles, our now Gracious Sovereign, at St. James's; his Godfathers were the King of France and the Prince Elector, Represented by the Duke of Lenox and Marques of Hamilton, and his Godmother was the Queen Mother of France; and for her stood the Dutches of Richmond.

There was yet in being a Statute Termed De Militibus, and from time to time of all Kings and Sovereigns more or less put in execution since Edward the second's time; framed then more for the ease of the Subject, than profit of that King; then reduced to such to be Knights, that had twenty pounds per Annum; but before that time, all men of fifteen pounds per annum were required to take it, to appear at the Coronation, (ad Arma gerenda) and to be Knighted. The Statute is Entituled, Statutum de Militibus; as followeth.

That our Sovereign Lord the King hath granted, that all such as ought to be Knights, and be not, and have been distrained, to take upon them that Order before the Feast of the Nativity of our Lord, shall have respect to take upon them the foresaid Arms of Knighthood at the Vigil of St. Hilary, &c.

And certainly it was their quality of 40 Pound Rent per annum, a plentiful Revenue in those former times, made them capable, not their sufficiency of body to bear Arms, when thousands more of less Estates might be found fitter for Fighting;

But being in force now, notwithstanding those that refused it, they were brought into the Exchequer, and did pay above one hundred thousand pounds. And the long Parliament that succeeded, to please the People, repeal'd it; so that all the Advantages the King had to help himself, were either condemned as done but according to an old Law of the Land, or else some new Law must be made to deprive him of the other; that wanting all other means to support himself, (as one saith) he might be forced upon the Alms of the Parliament.

The original Ground was heretofore, when the Services were done by these men, and were taken in kind, it was then thought fit there should be some way of Trial and Approbation of those that were bound to such Services, after they came of age, and had possession of their Lands, and should be made Knights, that is, publicly declared to be fit for Service, divers Ceremonies and Solemnities were in use for that purpose; and if by the parties neglect this was not done, he was punishable by Fine.

And now his Majesties Affairs requiring all lawful Supplies from his Subjects, he calls upon those who held their Land by such Service, to appear, &c. and in regard it was for their conveniencies mostly to Fine off this Duty, he appoints Commissioners, as followeth.

That whereas the King having formerly sent forth Writs to several Sheriffs of the several Counties for the summoning of all that had forty pound Land or Rent by the year, to appear at the day of his Coronation, and prepare themselves to receive the Order of Knight-hood, did now award a Commission to certain Lords and others of his Privy Council, to treat and compound with all those who then made default, as well for their Fines and their Contempt, as for their Respite to take that Order upon them. Whereupon Multitudes were summoned to give attendance at the Council-Chamber at Whitehall.

The Names of the Commissioners of the Privy-Council touching the Order of Knight-hood were these.

Lord Keeper.
Lord Treasurer.
Lord President.
Lord Privy-Seal.
Lord High-Chamberlain.
Earl Marshal.
Lord Steward.
Lord Chamberlain.
Earl of Suffolk.
Earl of Dorset.
Earl of Salisbury.
Earl of Exeter.
Earl of Northampton.
Lord Vicount Dorchester.
Lord Vicount Wimbleson.
Lord Wentworth.
Mr. Vice-Chamberlain.
Mr. Secretary Cooke.
Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The

Anno 1630. Car. 1. The General Instruction which was given to the Commissioners was this; to take no less than after the Rate of thrice and a half as much as the persons compounding were Rated in the Subsidy, which was no immoderate Taxation, but repined at, and some put in Pleas in the Exchequer to the Kings Demands. The persons named of the Nobility as Commissioners to transact the Matter, were,

Lord Marquess of Winton.
 Earl of Arundel.
 Earl of Essex.
 Earl of Huntingdon.
 Earl of Peterborough.
 Earl of Kingston.
 Lord Vicount Say and Seal.
 Lord Vicount Montague.
 Lord Brook.

The Summons to the Refusers were as follow;

VHereas his Majesty is given to understand, that you whole Names are here under-written, dwelling in the County of have either neglected to appear, or appearing, refused to compound with his Majesties Commissioners appointed to treat with you in that behalf, for your not attendance at his Majesties Coronation, to receive the Order of Knighthood, according to the Law; you being all, as we are informed, Men of good Ability; at which his Majesty doth much marvel, considering that you cannot be ignorant how legal this Demand is; and consequently how much the said Commission is in your favour, that nevertheless you should refuse to accept of his Majesties Grace therein: His Majesty notwithstanding, out of his accustomed Goodness, is rather willing that those who out of mistake, or ill example of others, than out of their own wilful opposition to his Majesties Service, have been herein misled, should be reduced to conformity by fair means, and with least charge or trouble to them, than by any compulsory course of Law, which his Majesty in all cases between him and his People, doth in their favour, desire to avoid as his last Resort: We are therefore, in his Majesties Name, and by his expresse Command, hereby to signifie unto you, That his Majesty expects and requires you should (accordingly within ten days next after notice hereof) make your repair unto us at Whitehal, to the end that in pursuance of his Majesties pleasure, we may treat with you concerning your said Composition, before any further or more compulsory proceedings be had against you.

And because there had been resistance made to the Lord Mayor in Fleet-Street, on occasion of some Arrests made in Fleet-Street by the Sheriffs Officers, and on that occasion a great Riot and uproar was made, to the Breach of the King's Peace, his Majesties Proclamation was issued for the Discovery of the persons concern'd therein; and at last, besides the Gentlemen-Students of the Law, there happened to be concerned one Captain Vaughan, and one Stamford; the latter whereof was found guilty upon his Trial, and executed accordingly.

In Michaelmas Term one Mr. Vassal a Merchant put in his Demurrer into the Court of Common-Pleas, against an Information exhibited against him in the Exchequer for Non-payment of the Car. 6. Duty of 4 s. 10 d. by the Hundred on Currans, and brought his Habeas Corpus in the King's Bench, but he was notwithstanding (for that Judgment in this matter had been before given for the King, and he committed in that Court in a Cause properly by them cognoscible) sent to Prison, by award of the Court.

In the same Term Mr. Selden's Case, for not putting in Sureties for his good behaviour, came to be argued, and the Process was as followeth.

John Selden was committed to the Marshalsey of the King's Bench, for not putting in Sureties for his good Behaviour. There were with him in the same Prison Hobart, Stroud and Valentine. In the end of Trinity-Term, 6 Car. the Sickness encreasing in Southwark, the three last named made suit unto the Judges of the King's Bench, to be delivered over to the Gatehouse in Westminster, to avoid the danger. The Judges thought it Charity, and by Writ to the Marshal of the King's Bench, commanded him to deliver them to the Keeper of the Gate-house, and sent him a Writ to receive them. Mr. Selden never sent unto them whilst they were in Town, but when they were all gone, made suit to the Lord Treasurer, to move the King, and to avoid this danger, he might be removed to the Gate-house; which he did, and sent a Warrant under his hand to the Marshal, signifying his Majesties pleasure to remove him to the Gate-house; accordingly he was remov'd. Thereupon when the Judges came to Town in Michaelmas Term, they called the Marshal to account for his Prisoner Mr. Selden; and he presenting unto them the Lord Treasurer's Warrant by the Kings direction, the Judges told him it would not serve, for he could not be removed but by Writ, and upon his Majesties pleasure, signified it might so have been done. And although the Judges were out of Town, yet the Clerk of the Crown would have made the Writ upon so good a Warrant, and it might have been subscribed by the Judges at their return. And to avoid the like Errour hereafter, the Court sent Justice Whislock to the Lord Treasurer, to let him know that Mr. Selden never looked after any of the Court, but sought a new and irregular way to be removed without them. The L. Treasurer made a very honourable Answer; That he would not move the King for Mr. Selden to be removed by this means, until he sent him word, on his credit, that it was a legal way; and told that Judge, that Mr. Selden was at the Judges dispose; to remove back when they would; for it was not the King's meaning to do any thing contrary to the Order of the Court, or their formal Proceedings: So Writs were sent this Michaelmas Term, to remove the four Prisoners back again to the Marshalsey.

And now to see the great and noble mind of Dr. Laud Bishop of London, these ensuing Acts of his Munificence and Piety, whereof some were by him performed in his Life-time, and the rest intended by him, had he not been cut off in the succeeding evil times, by the hands of Violence and Injustice. 16. Then to settle the Impropriation of the Vicarage of Cudsdon to the Bishop of Oxford. Wednesday, April 19. 1637. and so the house built by the new Bishop of Oxford, Dr. John Bancroft, and settled for ever to that Bishoprick.

17. To get a Book in Vellum fair written, containing the Records which are in the Tower, concerning the Clergy. This Book he got done at his own Charge, and left it in his Study at Lambeth, for Posterity, June 10. 1637. ab Anno 20. Edw. 1. ad An. 14. Ed. 4.

18. To procure a new Charter for the College near Dublin, and a Body of new Statutes made to rectifie that Government.

19. A Charter for the Town of Reading, and a Mortmain of---

And in regard several Merchants of England minding their own private Lucre and Gain, had against the King's Proclamation, sold Arms to the Salvages and Natives of New-England, to the destruction of the English there, a Proclamation was issued out, Dated Decemb. 5. to prohibit the like bartering for the future: And on the same day came forth the Articles of Peace formerly sworn to by his Majesty betwixt Engl. and Spain; whereby it was signified by his Majesty to his loving Subjects, That all Acts of Hostilities were from henceforward to cease.

On the 5th. of January his Majesties Commission came forth in Print, for putting in execution the Statutes and Laws for the Relief of the poor, and the punishment of Rogues, and employment of Gifts to charitable uses; they were as followeth.

cipal Secretaries of State.

Sir Francis Cottington, Baronet, Chancellor of our Exchequer.

Sir Julius Caesar, Knight, Master of the Rolls.

And Sir William Alexander, Knight: Greeting.

Whereas diverse good Laws and Statutes, most necessary for these times, have during the happy Reign of Queen Elizabeth, and of our late Father of Blessed Memory, and since our coming to the Crown of England, been with great Wildom, Piety, and Policy, made and enacted in Parliament, as well for the charitable Relief of Aged and Impotent poor People, not able by their Labours to get their Livings; and for the training up of Youth in honest and profitable Trades and Mysteries, by putting them forth to be Apprentices, as also for the setting to work of Idle Persons, who being of ability to work, in some kind or other, do nevertheless refuse to labour, and either wander up and down the City and Country begging, or, which is worse, maintain themselves by filching and stealing; and for the Punishment of sundry Rogues and Vagabonds, and setting of them to work: and for the suppressing of that odious and loathsome sin of Drunkenness, and the repressing of Idleness, the root of so many Evils; the due Execution of which, and the like Laws and Statutes would prevent and cut off many offences and crimes of high Nature.

And whereas we are informed that the defect of the execution of the said good and politick Laws and Constitutions in that behalf made, proceedeth especially from the neglect of Duty in some of our Justices of the Peace, and other Officers, Magistrates, and Ministers of the Peace within the several Counties, Cities, and Towns Corporate of this our Realm of England, and Dominion of Wales, to whom the care and trust of seeing the said Laws to be put in execution, is by the said Laws principally committed; which remisness and neglect of Duty doth grow and arise from this, That by the most of the said Laws, there are little or no Penalties or Forfeitures at all inflicted upon the said Justices of the Peace, Magistrates, Officers, and Ministers for not performing their Duties in that behalf; or if any be, yet partly by reason of the smallness thereof, and partly by reason of their Power and Authority in their several Places, whereby they hold others under them in awe, there are few or no Complaints or Informations made of the neglects and want of due execution of the Offices of the said Justices and other Ministers; and although the care and diligence of our Judges and Justices of Assize be never so great, yet by reason of the shortness of their Assizes and Sessions in every County, and multiplicity of Business, they never have due information of the said neglects, nor in those times can take such exact courses as were requisite for redress of such general abuses and inconveniences, so highly importing the publick good of this our Realm, by reason whereof the said Justices of Peace, Magistrates, Officers and Ministers are now of late in most parts of this our Kingdom grown secure in their said negligence, and the said politick and necessary Laws and Statutes laid aside, or little regarded as Laws of small use and consequence, whereas upon the present making of the said Laws, the same being then duly executed, as also at this day in some Counties and Parts of this our Kingdom: (where some Justices of the Peace, and other Magistrates do duly and diligently execute the same) there evidently appear-eth great reformation, benefit and safety to redound to the Commonwealth. And likewise, whenas there was care taken, and diligence used to have the Laws concerning charitable uses, well executed, and all pious Gifts to be employed according to the good intent of the Donors, these poor people were better relieved than now they are. All which we taking into our Princely care for the preservation of the common Peace of this Realm, the performance of mens pious Intentions in their Gifts of Charity, and the general Good and Quiet of our Subjects.

After long and mature Deliberation, finding that there is no better ways or means to have the said Laws and Statutes put in full execution, than by committing the trust and oversight thereof to the special care and industry of certain Persons of principal place, dignity, and order near unto Our Person: Who upon their diligent enquiry how the said Laws and Statutes are put in Execution, may be able upon all occasions from time to time to give us particular information thereof, and by their approved Wisdoms, Experience and Judgments, give directions, and instructions from time to time for the better Execution of the said Statutes.

Know ye therefore that We out of that long Experience and full Assurance We have had of the great Integrity, Wisdom, Fidelity, and Industry of you, and every of you, and have Constituted, Authorized, and Appointed you to be Our Commissioners, and by these pre-

Anno
1630. presents do Constitute, Authorize, Appoint, and strictly require you, or any 4 or more of you Our Commissioners, either by Examination upon Oath, or without Oath, or by all and every such good and lawful means, as to you, or any 4 or more of you, in your Wisdoms and Judgments shall seem convenient and requisite from time to time from henceforth to make Enquiry, and thereby to inform your selves how all and every the Laws and Statutes now in Force which any way concern the Relief of impotent or poor People, the binding out of Apprentices, the setting to work of poor Children, and such other poor people, as being able or willing to work, have no stock or means to employ themselves; the compelling and forcing such lazy and idle persons to work, as being of bodies able and strong, do nevertheless refuse to labour; the maintenance, government, and well ordering of Houses of Correction, and other places for Relief of poor, indigent and impotent people, the Rating, Collecting, and Imployment of all such Sums as by the Statute of the three and fortieth of Elizabeth are appointed for the Relief of Souldiers, and Mariners, the punishment, or setting on work of Rogues and Vagabonds: and all Laws and Statutes now in force for the repressing of Drunkenness and Idleness, the reforming of Abuses committed in Inns and Ale-houses, the Abridging of the number of Ale-houses, and the well-ordering of such as are Licensed, the keeping of Watches and Wards duly, and how other publick Services for God, the King, and the Commonwealth, are put in practice and executed.

To which end and purpose, to you Our Commissioners, or any six or more of you, We give full Power and Authority from time to time hereafter, to give such Directions and Instructions, and by all other good and lawful means to set down, and give such Orders and Directions as that all and every the said Laws and other necessary Statutes may be duly and effectually executed, and the pains and penalties thereof levied and employed according to the purport and true meaning of the same Laws.

And whereas no Nation of the world hath provided more liberally, or ordained better Laws for due employment of Lands, Goods and Stocks of Money, given to Charitable uses, than this Our Kingdom of England hath done: yet nevertheless the said Bounties and charitable Gifts have not been employed according to the mind and intent of the Givers, by reason of some Devices, Frauds, Breach of Trust, aim at private Gain; and partly by the negligence of those that have been trusted to perform the same.

Therefore our Will and expresse Pleasure is, that those Statutes of 39. and 43. Eliz. and all other Laws and Statutes concerning Hospitals, Almshouses, Maisons de Dieu, and other pious Donations, Collections, or publick Gifts for the benefit of the poor, or publick works, be strictly enquired and put in execution. And all Deeds of Foundations, Charters, Wills, Devices, Dispositions of Lands, Goods, Annuities, or Rents, given, appointed, or intended to any the Houses aforesaid, or to any charitable use or publick work, be diligently sought out and discovered, to the end there may be an employment of all the Profits, according to the Will and Mind of the Donors or Founders.

And we do further by these Presents, give full Power and Authority unto you, or any six, or more of you, to call unto you for your assistance in the Premises, when you shall see it needful, all, or any of our Justices of Assize, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol-delivery, for their several Circuits; as also to our Justices, Mayors, Bayliffs, and other Head-Officers, within Cities and Burroughs, Clerks of the Assize and Sessions, and other Officers and Ministers within our several Counties and Shires of this our Realm of England, and Dominion of Wales, and the several Divisions of the same, as to you, or any six or more of you in your wisdom shall seem meet and requisite, and shall be agreeable to the Laws and Statutes of this our Realm for the better execution of the Laws and Statutes in the time to come. All which Directions, Instructions and Orders at any time or times hereafter so to be made or taken by you or any six or more of you, by force of these Presents; We will and straitly charge and command you by these Presents, to be sincerely and duly from time to time obeyed, observed and kept by all and every Officer and Officers, Justice and Justices, Person and Persons, to whom it shall appertain.

And we do hereby further will and require you, that you, or any four or more of you, do from time to time give unto Us particular and true information of the care and industry of our Justices of the Peace in their several Divisions, Mayors, Bayliffs, and head Officers, in their several Cities and Towns Corporate, as upon the said enquiry you shall find to be diligent in putting the said Laws, Statutes, Orders, and Directions in Execution, that so by their service, and your report, they appearing to deserve well of their King and Country, may receive not only good acceptance at our hands, but all due encouragement and comfort to continue in their well-doings; and if contrariwise you shall find any of our said Justices of the Peace, or others the persons before-named to be negligent and remiss in their several places and duties touching the performance and execution of the said Laws and Statutes committed to their charge, or the Orders and Directions given by you, or any six of you, for the better execution of the said Statutes: Then our pleasure is, that you do likewise certify the Names of such as you shall find so remiss and negligent, that accordingly Order may be taken for their removing and displacing out of the Commission of the Peace, as men unworthy of their said Trust and Places; as also deserving to receive such further punishment in our Court of Star-Chamber or otherwise, as may be by Law inflicted upon them.

And further We do by these Presents give unto you, or any six or more of you, full power and authority to do and execute all and every other lawful and necessary Act & Acts, thing and things, for the better and more due execution of the premises, or any of them, as you, or any six, or more of you, shall in your Wisdoms and Judgments think to be fit and convenient.

And because you that are Attendants upon Our Person, or otherwise employed in your Services cannot at all times be in person in the several Shires of this our Kingdom to execute this our Commission in such sort as we have appointed it; And for that it will be very fit and requisite for you to have Persons of Trust under you, who may faithfully assist you in the execution of this Our Commission;

We do therefore give unto you for your better aid and assistance, and the better performance of this our Service, full Power and Authority from time to time, to Assign, Appoint, and Constitute 1630. tute by your Writing under your Hands and Seals, or the Hands and Seals of any Six or more of you, such sufficient meet Persons as you, or any Six of you, in your discretions shall from time to time think fit and appoint to be your Deputies in every, or any County, City, Burrough, or Town Corporate of this Our Kingdom of England, or Dominion of Wales.

And We do give unto such Persons, so to be by you Deputed, Assigned, and Appointed, as aforesaid, or to any two, three, or more of them full Power and Authority, to do and Execute in our said Counties, Cities, Burroughs, and Towns Corporate, as well within Liberties as without; all and every thing and things, which by vertue of this Our Commission, is to you Our Principal Commissioners, Intrusted, and Committed, or which you or any of you Our Commissioners, if you were personally Present, might, or ought to do; they your said Deputies pursuing such Directions and Instructions from time to time as you or any Six of you shall give unto them in Writing: And the better to enable them so to do, you shall deliver to such Deputies as you shall make in every County, City, or Town Corporate, as aforesaid, a Duplicate, or true Transcript of this our Commission, Subscribed with your Hands, or under the Hands of Six of you at the least.

And we do further by the Tenour of these Presents, Will and Command, and do give full power and Authority to Our Lord Chancellour, or Lord Keeper of Our Great Seal for the time being, to cause several Commissions to be made forth, under Our Great Seal of England, to such Persons of Trust and Quality as any Six, or more of you shall from time to time nominate unto him, and shall so signifie unto him by Writing under your Hands to the same Tenour and Effect, in every material thing, as in these Our Letters Patents is expressed, with a Clause to be Inserted in every such Commission and Commissions, commanding such Persons so to be nominated, that they certify all their proceedings thereupon to you Our foresaid Commissioners, or to any six of you, at such times and places as you, or any Six of you shall appoint. In witness whereof, we have caused these Our Letters to be made Patents, witness Our self at Westminster the fifth day of January, in the sixth Year of Our Reign.

ORDERS.

I. That the Justices of Peace of every Shire within the Realm do divide themselves, and allot among themselves what Justices of the Peace, and what Hundreds shall attend monthly at some certain places of the Shire. And at this day and place, the High Constables, Petty Constables, and Church-Wardens, and Overseers for the Poor of those Hundreds, shall attend the said Justices. And there enquiry shall be made, and information taken by the Justices how every of these Officers in their several Places have done their duties in execution of the Laws mentioned in the Commission annexed, and what Persons have offended against any of the said Laws.

II. Where neglect or defect is found in any of the said Officers, in making their Presentments, condign Punishment to be inflicted upon them by the Justices according to Law.

III. When Offences are Presented at one Meeting, then the Penalties of the Laws offended, to be levied and brought to the Justices at their next Meeting.

IV. When the Penalties are levied, the Justices are to take care that the same be employed accordingly as by the Statutes are appointed.

V. For encouragement to men that do inform and prosecute others for offending against these Laws, or any of them, liberty to be left to the Justices of Peace that do meet, to reward the Informer, or Prosecutor, out of part of the Money levied upon his, or their Presentments or Information. Car. 6.

Though the Statute do not prescribe this, yet this is not against the Law that gives the Penalty to the Poor, which Penalty, nor no part thereof would else come unto the poor but by this means.

VI. That the several Justices of the Peace of every Shire, do once every three Months certify an account in writing to the High Sheriff of the County, of their proceedings in this way, whom they have punished, what they have levied, and how they have employed it.

VII. That the High Sheriff, within fourteen days after this Account delivered, do send the same over to the Justices of Assize for that County, or to one of them, and the Justice or Justices that receive the same, to certify it in the beginning of every Term next after, to the Lords Commissioners: And if any of the Justices of Peace shall fail to make such account to the Sheriff, then the Sheriff shall certify such default to the Lords Commissioners.

VIII. The Justices of Assize in every Circuit, are to enquire, and specially to mark what Justices of the Peace are careful and diligent in Execution of these Laws, and the directions given, and who are negligent and remiss. And what other things of Note happen in their Circuits, to make report thereof to the King, upon their Return from their Circuits ever half year.

DIRECTIONS.

I. That the Lords of Mannors and Towns take care that their Tenants and the Parishioners of every Town may be relieved by work, or other wise at home, and not suffered to straggle and beg up & down in their Parishes.

II. That Stewards to Lords and Gentlemen, in keeping their Leets twice a year, do especially enquire upon those Articles, that tend to the reformation or punishment of Common Offences and abuses: As of Bakers and Brewers, for breaking of Assizes; of Foresters, and Regraters Against Trades-men of all sorts, for selling with under-weights, or at excessive prizes, or things unwholsom, or things made in deceit: Of People, Breakers of houses, common Thieves and their Receivers, Haunters of Taverns or Alehouses, those that go in good Cloaths, and fare well, and none knows whereof they live; those that be Night-walkers; builders of Cottages, and takers in of Inmates; Offences of Victuallers, Artificers, Workmen, and Labourers.

III. That the poor Children in every Parish be put forth Apprentices to Husbandry, and other Handicrafts, and money to be raised in the Parishes for placing them, according to the Law; and if any party shall refuse to take the said Apprentice, being put out according to the Law, such party as shall refuse to take the said Apprentice, to be bound over to the next Quarter Sessions, or Assizes, and there to be bound to his good behaviour, or otherwise ordered, as shall be found fit.

IV. That the Statute of Labourers, for retaining of Servants, and ordering of Wages, betwixt the Servant and the Master be not deluded by private Contracts, before they come to the Statutes, and the common fashion of Esjoying many absent, not to be allowed of course, as is used.

V. That the weekly Taxations for relief of the Poor, and other purposes mentioned in the Statute of 43 Eliz. be in these times of scarcity raised to higher Rates in every Parish, than in times heretofore were used. And Contributions had from other Parishes, to help the weaker Parishes, especially from those places where Depopulations have been, some good Contribution to come, for help of other Parishes. And where any Money or Stock hath been, or shall be given to the relief of the Poor in any Parish, such gift to be no occasion of lessening the Rates of the Parish.

Anno 1630. VI. That the Petty Constables in all Parishes be chosen of the abler sort of Parishioners, and the Office not to be put upon the poorer sort, if it may be.

VII. Watches in the night, and Warding by day, and to be appointed in every Town and Village, for apprehension of Rogues, and Vagabonds, and for safety and good order.

VIII. And because it is found by daily experience, that the remissness and negligence of Petty Constables is a great cause of the swarming of Rogues and Beggars: Therefore the High Constables in their several Divisions are specially to be charged to look unto the Petty Constables that they use diligence in their Offices, and the High Constables to present to the Justices of Peace the defaults of the Petty Constables, for not Punishing the Rogues, or not Presenting, those that are Relievers of the Rogues and Beggars, the Law inflicting a Penalty upon the Constable for not Punishing them, and upon such Party as shall relieve them.

IX. If in any Parish there be found any Persons that live out of Service, or that live idly, and will not work for reasonable Wages, or live to spend all they have at the Alehouse, those persons to be brought by the High Constables, and Petty Constables to the Justices at their meetings, there to be ordered and punished as shall be found fit.

X. That the Correction-houses in all Counties may be made adjoining to the Common Prisons, and the Gaoler to be made Governour of them, that so he may employ to work Prisoners Committed for small Causes, and so they may learn honesty by Labour, and not live idly and miserably long in Prison, whereby they are made worse when they come out than they were when they went in; and where many Houses of Correction are in one County, one of them at least to be near the Goal.

XI. That no Man harbour Rogues in their Barns, or Out-houses. And the wandering persons with Women and Children, to give account to the Constable or Justice of Peace, where they were Married, and where their Children were Christened, for these People live like Savages, neither Marry, nor Bury, nor Christen, which licentious liberty makes so many delight to be Rogues and Wanderers.

XII. And because the High-ways in all Counties of England are in great decay, partly so grown for that men think there is no course by the Common Law, or order from the State to amend the same: And the Work-days appointed by the Statute are so omitted or idly performed, that there comes little good by them; therefore the Justices of Peace at these monthly meetings are to take special care of: And not only the Surveyors of the High-ways to Present the same, but by their own view to inform themselves, that at the next Quarter Sessions after every meeting they may Present all such neglects and offences, (as upon their own view) and the Offenders there to be Punished according to Law.

The Church St. Catherine Greed being lately Rebuilt and Enlarged, was Consecrated by the Bishop of London, and some Precisians took offence at some Ceremonies used by him at the Consecration thereof, which that sort of Men called Innovations, which afterwards were laid to his charge in Parliament, and by him an answer was made thereto, to which a Member of the Commons House replied after the rate of the Divinity of those times, the whole of it you have in Mr. Rushworths Collection.

At the Bishops approach to the West door of the Church, some that were prepared for it, cried with a loud voice, Open, open, ye everlasting doors, that the King of Glory may enter in! And presently the Doors were opened: And the Bishop, with some Doctors, and many other principal Men, went in, and immediately falling down upon his Knees, with his Eyes lifted up, and his Arms spread abroad, uttered these words: This Place is Holy, the Ground is Holy, In the name of the Father, Son, and Holy-Ghost I pronounce it Holy.

Then he took up some of the dust, and threw it up into the Air, several times in his going up towards the Chancel; when they Approached near to the Rail and Communion Table, the Bishop bowed towards it several times, and returning, they went round the Church in Procession, saying the 100 Psal. after that the 19 Psal. and then said a Form of Prayer; Lord Jesus Christ, &c. and concluding, We Consecrate this Church, and separate it unto thee, as Holy Ground, not to be Profaned any more to common use.

After this the Bishop being near the Communion-Table, and taking a Written Book in his hand, pronounced Curses upon those that should afterwards prophane that Holy Place, by Musters of Souldiers, or keeping Prophane Law Courts, or carrying Burdens through it, and at the end of every Curse, he bowed towards the East, and said, Let all the People say, Amen.

When the Curses were ended, he pronounced a number of Blessings upon all those that had any hand in Framing and Building of that Sacred and Beautiful Church, and those that had given, and should hereafter give any Chalice, Plate, Ornaments, or Utensils; and at the end of every Blessing, he bowed towards the East, saying, Let all the People say, Amen.

After this followed the Sermon; which being ended, the Bishop Consecrated and Administred the Sacrament, in manner following.

As he Approached the Communion-Table he made many several lowly Bowings, and coming up to the side of the Table where the Bread and Wine were covered, he bowed seven times, and then after the reading of many Prayers, he came near the Bread, and gently lifted up the corner of the Napkin wherein the Bread was laid, and when he beheld the Bread he laid it down again, flew back a step or two, bowed three several times towards it, then he drew near again, and opened the Napkin, and bowed as before.

Then he laid his hand on the Cup, which was full of Wine with a cover upon it, which he let go again, went back, and bowed thrice towards it, then he came near again, and lifting up the Cover of the Cup looked into it, and seeing the Wine he let fall the Cover again, retired back and bowed as before; then he received the Sacrament, and gave it to some principal Men; after which many Prayers being said, the Solemnity of the Consecration ended.

It is not inconvenient I hope to transgress in point of time, by acquainting the Reader that this matter was some years after objected against the Bishop of London in Parliament, as an Evidence of his Inclination to introduce Popery, and these matters of Fact before recited were then proved before the House of Lords; to which the Bishop made a learned Defence, by endeavouring to justify the Consecration of Churches from the practice of Moses, Solomon, Hezekiah, and other Princes of the Jews, in the time of the Ceremonial Law: And that it is expressed in the Old-Testament, that the Tabernacle, with all the Vessels and Ornaments thereunto belonging, were all solemnly Consecrated by Moses; and afterwards when the Temple was Built, was solemnly Dedicated and Consecrated to God by King Solomon, and all his Princes and People; He also argued out of Eusebius, in the time of Constantine and other Christian Princes, of the Antiquity of Consecrating Churches, and then he descended more particularly to answer the Charge as to the Consecration of Creed-Church.

1630. It was Testified (saith he) that I came thither in a Pompous manner. I deny it, it was only in a grave and seemly manner. It is objected, that as soon as I came within the Church door I fell down upon my Knees; True, It was no more than my Duty, being an Oratory. Moses and Aaron fell down on their Knees at the Door of the Tabernacle. Hezekiah and the People Bowed and Worshipped, as I have proved at large in my Speech in the Star-Chamber. And, O come let us Worship and fall down before the Lord our Maker, is the common Introitus in our own and other Liturgies. It is objected, I pronounced the Place and Ground Holy, I did so, and it is an ordinary and legal Speech, there being a Relative, though not an Inherent Holiness in Churches dedicated to God's Service. Whereas it was said, I threw up dust in the Air, This I deny, and where it was alledged that this was an Imitation of the Roman Pontifical; that (saith he) is a mistake: for the Pontifical Prescribes, (Cinis) Ashes, not Dust to be cast abroad. For my Form of Consecration, Bishop Andrews made it, from whom I desired a Copy, and had it, which I observed. It was objected that the form of Prayer I used, is in the Mass-Book and Roman Pontifical. It may be so, he replied, and many other very good Prayers are in it.

After the Bishop had made his Defence, a Reply was made by a Member of the House of Commons, appointed to manage the Evidence.

1. That Moses had an express Command from God himself to Consecrate the Tabernacle, with all the Vessels thereof, by Anointing them with Consecrated Oyl, Exod. 40. 10, 11, 12. they being Types of Christ to come: But we have no such Command from God to Consecrate Churches, Church-Yards, Chappels, Altars, Vestments, which are no Types of Christ already come.

2. This Consecration was made by Moses the Temporal Magistrate, (not by Aaron the High-Priest) without any other Ceremony than meer Anointing the Tabernacle and its Vessels and Implements with Oyl; therefore this was no Warrant for Bishop's Consecrating Churches, Church-Yards, Chappels, Altars, Vestments, with other Ceremonies, without any Anointing them with Oyl.

3. This Consecration was only Temporary, Jewish, Ceremonial, abolished by Christ's death, Col. 2. 14. &c.

4. King Solomon did not Consecrate the Temple, nor the Vessels and Court thereof with Oyl, as Moses did the Tabernacle, but after he had brought the Ark, Tabernacle, and all the Holy Vessels into it, with Praises, Thanksgiving and Instruments of Musick, and after the Cloud and Glory of the Lord had filled the House, he made an Heavenly Prayer only in the midst of the Court, not in the Temple, before all the Congregation of Israel.

1. That the most Holy Place was so stiled, though never Consecrated: So Jerusalem is very frequently called the Holy City, Matt. 4. 5. and 27. 53. though never Consecrated, and God told Moses, The place whereon thou standest is Holy Ground, Exod. 3. 5. though never Consecrated by a Bishop.

2. Our own Homilies inform us, That the Church is counted and called Holy, not of it self, (nor yet for its Consecration by a Bishop) but because God's People resorting thither, are Holy, and exercise themselves in Holy and Heavenly things.

3. The Hearing and Preaching God's Word, Prayer and receiving the Sacraments therein, are sufficient of themselves to sanctifie, and make it Holy without any other Consecration.

4. Sanctification in its own nature, is nothing else but a sequestering of any thing from a common or ordinary use, to a Religious and Sacred purpose, and this may be done without a Bishop's Exorcism or Conjunction.

For his throwing up of Dust, two Witnesses expressly depose it, which must over-balance his bare Negotiation, and there is so little difference between Dust and Ashes, as they are usually coupled together as Synonymous in Scripture and Authors. That he took his Form from Bishop Andrews, is only averred by himself, not proved by any Witness; but that it agrees with that in the Pontifical, which we found in his Study even in terminis, is most clear, and therefore we cannot but presume he derived it from thence: However if Bishop Andrews imitated the Pontifical, and he Bishop Andrews, the Charge is much alike.

An Information being Exhibited in the Kings Bench against Sir Miles Hobert, and William Stroud Elq; about an Escape, the case afterwards to be Argued in that Court: These Persons being removed, they being formerly Committed to the Marshalsey, for Mildemeanours in the Parliament 28 Car. 1. from that Prison to the Gate-house, the Keeper whereof gives the Prisoners leave to go out of the said Prison, and both he and the said Prisoners, were Judged both of them by the Judges of the said Court, Punishable, though it could not be proved that they ever were Prisoners in the old Prison of the Gate-House; but only in the Keepers House Adjoyning, except it was by their Voluntary withdrawment to give themselves the benefit of Nature, at the stool in the Adjoyning old Prison, and this was, as I before said, an Offence Punishable in both the Goaler and Prisoners, the Judges likewise then determin'd that the Kings Bench Prison is not a Local Prison, but that every place where any person is restrain'd of his Liberty is his Prison, and if a Man enter Sanctuary, and thence depart, he may be said in Law to break Prison.

There had been a Project on foot, for the buying of Improprations, but there being a Snake in the Grass detected, by Authority it was dashed.

Concerning Mr. Sanderson gives us this account, that in the Year 1627. Feoffees were legally intrusted to purchase in the Improprations with their own and other good Mens Money, and with the profit to maintain a constant Preaching Ministry, where the Word was wanting. They consisted of four Divines to perswade the Conscience, 4 Lawyers for the Conveyances, and 4 Citizens, for no other end but their Money,

There are in England 9284. Parish Churches Endowed with Glebe and Tithes, but 3845 were either Appropriated to the Clergy, or Impropriated (as lay Fines) to private Persons, which latter these Feoffees endeavoured to redeem, and might have done it in Fifty Years, by the large Sums soon advanced: And no wonder, the Subtlety was not then discerned, for in time the Purchasers would become the prime Patrons, for number, and greatness of Benefices, multiply their Dependence, and increase Nonconformity, and therefore the Attorney General Noy, Exhibited a Bill in the Exchequer to overthrow their Apo-crypha Incorporatum. First, breach of Trust, for Erecting a Morning Lecture at St. Antholines, London, (the Land of Goshen,) and not in other places far distant, were Souls Famished for want of Food.

Secondly, Preferred Nonconformists, and so their Proceedings were Censured, as dangerous to the Church and State, pronounced illegal, and dissolved, and their Money Confiscated to the King, which yet of late was accounted a Pious Project.

And now that the World might see that the King did really (more than his late Parliaments who only gave Words and not Money for the Recovery of the Palatinate) mind the concern of of his only Sister the Electress Palatine, he gave out Commissions for raising six Thousand Men more, for the Assistance of the King of Sweden, in so good a work, who as we shall afterwards see never really Intended it. The Colonells were these, Sr. Jacob Astley, Sr. James Hamilton, Sr. James Ramsey.

After which His Majesty was busied about a good work, the Repair of St. Pauls Church London, that most Venerable and August piece of Antiquity, which Mr. Rushworth by way of Jeer, saith the Devotion of those times caused him to undertake, but in truth the thing was Intended by King James, as may appear by His Majesties Letter to the then Bishop of London, Anno Regni sui sexto, which followeth.

To the Right Reverend Father in God our Right Trusty and well Beloved the Lord Bishop of London.

JAMES REX.

Right Reverend Father in God, Right Trusty and well Beloved, we Greet you well. The desire we have to Remove the Scandal that hath long lyen upon our City of London especially, but in a manner upon the whole Realm, for the neglect of the Repairing of the Steeple of St. Pauls Church, moved us to quicken them by our Letters to think upon some means how the same might be taken in hand, and to offer of our own Bounty to Contribute Liberally towards it, by occasion whereof we have been Informed that the whole Body of the Church is not only in decay, but in some danger of Ruine in some parts thereof, if the same be not in time prevented, which grieved us not a little that in a time of Peace and Plenty, which this Realm hath of late Years enjoy'd, and in the Flourishing Estate of a Church, so much Neglect should be used by those, to whose care it Appertaineth to preserve in their Estate and Decency, such Monuments as though they be not of the Essence of Religion, yet never were neglected but with Blemish and Disgrace as well to the Ministers as to the Religion it self, to the use whereof they are Dedicated, and do not leave Unattainted the Honour and Zeal of those Princes in whose times such Errours happen, because it is no small part of their Charge to have an Eye to the Preservation, as in general, of all Publick Monuments, so especially of those that have been Designed to the Honour and Service of God, from the sense whereof it ariseth, that at this time we Summon the Duties of you whom it concerneth, and require you to enter into present Consideration, how the Decays of that Church may be forth with Repaired, and the same Restored not only to Strength and Safety, but to such Decency as is comely for so Worthy and Famous a Monument of the Piety of our Ancestors: for it is not unknown to us that amongst the Possessions which Appertain to that See, there be Lands especially Appropriated to the Fabrick of the Church, which if they had been continually employed to that use, those Decays could not have got so far, notwithstanding if the former neglects have made the Decays greater than the Yearly Revenues of those Lands can Repair; we shall be willing to give furtherance to any other means of Supply; which shall be Presented unto us. But because we would not have their Ruines to run on, but some speedy cause to be taken for the Redress thereof and to the end we may understand what the State of the Structures of that Church is, we Require you to cause the same to be Viewed by Skilful Persons, and a Survey to be made in Writing, of all the Decays thereof, and what the Charge of the Reparation may amount unto, and likewise a Certificate to be made to us of such Possessions of the Church as be Appropriated to the Fabrick thereof, and what Yearly Rent they be of, that we may see how the means do stand in Proportion to the Charge, and what will be Requisite for Supply, all which to be Presented to us at our Return and settling at our Winter abode, and assuring your self that we will not fail to call for an account thereof, given under our Signet at Tud-dington the 24th. of July, in the Sixth Year of our Reign of Great Britain, France and Ireland.

Concerning the Decays and Repayrs of this Venerable Structure, take what followeth from Mr. Sanderfon.

THE Famous Fabrick of St. Pauls Church and Steeple, made so in Process of time, from the Piety of Primitive Christians, and their Devout Zeal to good works: And since by several Additions of Benefactors, Raised to a Structure of Admiration, a Pile huge and honourable. Not the like left to our last Age to be Sampled in the whole World. What the hands of Good Men had made wonderful, the hand of Wasting, had extremely Decayed. Only the Hand of Heaven, by Accident of Lightning had Burnt down the High Spire, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, who then had Designed not only to Rebuild that, but to Repair the whole Church, and to that end some materials were provided.

Afterwards in the time of King James the Religious Patriot Sir Paul Pindar of worthy memory returned into England some years since, from his Ambassie, Lier in Constantinople, and afterwards one of the great Farmers of the Kings Customs, and of ample fortune, the most in money, he became the great example of Charity to many, and the Patron of Piety to all, in his magnificent re-edifying re-edifying of this Church. First, he repaired the Entry, Front and Porches to all the upper Church, Quire and Chancel, and enriched them with marble Structures, and Figures of the Apostles with Carvings and Guildings far exceeding their former beauty, which cost above Two thousand pounds, the act of a good man, as King James said, but the main Fabrick fit for the work of a King.

And therefore King Charles having a pious resolution to begin the repair of the whole Church & Steeple, made his humble Entry at the West end of the Church to the Body, Quire, & Chancel, where after a Sermon of Exhortation to that Christian Intention, he made his Pious Procession about the inside Circumvelation thereof, and viewing the Decays, gave up his Promise with his Devotions, speedily to settle the beginning of the work.

And this Year issued out his Commissions, under his Great Seal, to the Lord Major, Sir Robert Drevy, the Two Arch-Bishops, the Chancellour, Treasurer, Privy Council, and always the Bishop of London for the time being to be one, who was then William Laud, and the first Man, but not the chief promoter, being promoted and attempted by others before he was of note, yet indeed he became a diligent and powerful Actor therein, and the first Benefactor, who gave 2 hundred pounds per annum, whilst he should be Bishop of London; by whose pious endeavours and forward example, and sundry contributions of good and godly men, and by Commissions of protection for Breves and Collations in all Churches of England and Wales, there was gathered in time, the sum of Four score thousand pounds in all.

A large consideration was had, to begin with the Steeple and Body, and so to descend to the Isles, presuming that when the Steeple should be finished, the Contributions would necessarily invite the compleating of the whole, but it was otherwise resolved, and they began at the West end, and first the Out walls, which being cluttered with petty Tenements, even to the stopping of the Church-lights, that clouded the beauty of the first Foundation, these Houses by Lease or Rents were purchased and pulled down, and the little Church called Saint Gregories builded up at the West end, South of the Foundation, was willingly taken down to the ground, and a very necessary place ordered for the erection of another Church for that Parish.

And to this excellent good work the fore-remembered Sir Paul Pindar, besides his former expences, took upon him also at his own proper cost and charge (and did effect it before he died) to repair, or rather new build the great South Ile, far more beautiful than it had been at the first erection, which cost him above Seventeen thousand pounds.

The Contribution-mony was entrusted to the Chamber of London (then supposed the safest Chest) from thence to be issued out for materials and workmanship, the West end or entrance was finished more sumptuous and stately than at first, a graceful stately Porch was raised the whole breadth of the West end, upon Pillars of Stone of the Ionick work supporting the Roof, on the top whereof, in seemly distance was erected the Figures and excellent postures of King James, and King Charles, mounted on Pedestals, leaving room and space for other succeeding Sovereigns, then they had new cased the whole entire out-walls more nobly to the Roof, with large Figures of Pomegranates set upon Pedestals, at equal distance to grace the room, which was overlaid with lead, the Windows with admirable painted Glass of Figures of the Fathers, Prophets, and Apostles, with several Historical pieces of Scripture, then they had Vaulted the Roofs with massive supporters of Timber, and Scaffolds raised for re-edifying and beautifying the Roof; Lastly, they had raised outward Scaffolding from the body of the Church, to the very top of the Steeple, and were going on with the Spire, and some monies in stock towards the finishing of all, which most Artisans supposed might be finished for Forty thousand pounds.

When on a suddain, William Laud late Archbishop of Canterbury was impeached by the late house of Commons in their Long Parliament, and our civil uncivil Dissentions seized the whole stock of money, and so the work ceased, the Church forthwith turned into a Prison or Goal of malignants, then into a Garrison of Foot-Souldiers, then into a Stable of unclean Beasts, and then to the sale of all materials; Stone, Lead, Glass, Iron, and last of all the very Scaffolding of Timber, which cost forty thousand pounds, sold for six thousand, and the money never paid, the end and ruine of that most glorious and Christian design.

After-ages may conceive this final and horrid ruine to be the effects of a cruel War, which devastates all, but at the beginning of this design of repair, it is most true [that many had on fancy thereto] the whole gang of Presbyterians utterly disliked of it, and when the Earl of Holland, Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, was commanded by the King to write his Letters to that University for Contributions of the Heads, Fellows and Students; a wonder it was what Plots and Devices of some (afterwards busie bodies in Parliament) for a time, obstructed those Letters, and other pious intentions of sundry Contributions, and were the only causers of that desolation, and earnestly urged the ruine of all Cathedrals, as it is well observed, that Doctor Bastwick (whom he examples for one, and a known Schismatick) grudging at the great expence in the repair, observes his base and irreverend expression, alluding to the Name Cathedral, that all that mighty mass of money must be spent in making a Seat for a Priests Arse to sit in; See Bastwick's second part of his Litany.

And now likewise a Commission was issued out for the accomplishment of the pious and good work, to the Arch-bishops of Canterbury and York, the Bishops of London and Winchester, to all the Lords of the Council, and all the prime Ministers of State, to the Lords Chief-Justices of the Courts at Westminster, and to the Lord Mayor, divers Aldermen, and the Chamberlain of the City of London, and to the Dean, and Residentiaries of that Cathedral.

His Majesty therein declaring; that he had taken into his serious and Princely consideration the great decays of that Building, the same being the goodliest Monument, and most eminent Church in all his Dominions, and a principal Ornament of the Royal City; that in respect of his Zeal to God's Glory, and for the Honour of his Government, he had an earnest desire and purpose to provide for the Repairing and Upholding of that magnificent Structure, and restoring the same to its antient Beauty and Glory, according to the pious intention of his Royal,

Anno 1631. Royal Father, who granted a Commission to begin and set forward that great and Honourable Work. And duly weighing, that as this chargeable Fabrick in the first founding thereof, could not but require many Years of time, and large supplies of publick Charity; So the substantial Repairing and Adorning thereof is not to be effected out of any Rents, or Revenues heretofore pretended to have been given to that use, but will require a Stock of money and materials to begin the Work, and a constant yearly supply to bring it to an end. Wherefore it was his Majesty's will and pleasure, that all monies to be raised or recovered for this Work, should be paid into the Chamber of London, as the fittest and safest Chest whereinto the same can be put, and the materials which already are or shall be brought in, shall be laid in Store-yards, Houses, and Places, by Officers appointed for that purpose. And the Bishop of London was authorized to keep a Register, wherein to take the several Subscriptions of the Nobility, Bishops, Judges, Serjeants and Counsellors at Law, Officers and others of Quality and Ability who shall willingly contribute. The Judges of the Prerogative Courts of both Provinces, and the Vicars General, and the Officials of the several Bishopricks of the Kingdom, were commanded to take special care, that out of such Monies as shall fall into their power upon the Deceases of Persons intestate, to be distributed for pious uses, some convenient proportion thereof be assigned to the supply of this Charge. And the Letters Patents, for the general Contribution of all Subjects in the Kingdom, were to be drawn in a more special manner, according to the extraordinary nature of this Case. Also the Commissioners had Authority for taking of an exact Survey of the particular decays of the Church, and calculating the Charge thereof, for the discovering of all such Legacies, Gifts, and Sums of Money as were given, or intended, for the Maintaining, Repairing, and Adorning thereof; and for Advising and Agreeing upon the Forms of Letters Patents for Publick Collections throughout England and Wales; and for the orderly bringing in of all such Monies as should be Collected, Raised, or Recovered for this publick Use, and of all Materials thereunto belonging, and for the well disposing thereof; and for making of meet Orders and Constitutions for the Preservation of that Cathedral, and suppressing and preventing all present and future Annoyances, Purprestures and Encroachments, which tend to the Damage and Disgrace thereof. And that the Proceedings herein may be firm and inviolable, and remain in perpetual memory, this Injunction was added, That a Certificate thereof be made into the Court of Chancery, there to remain on Record.

Briefs for Contribution issued forth for that effect.

According to the directions in this Commission, Briefs for Contributions were issued forth under the Great Seal, in different manners, according to the different condition of the places unto which they were directed. Resolutions were taken by the Lords Committees, that once a Year a Certificate be made of the Mony given, and of the Donors names; and that the Work should not begin till there were 10000 l. in Bank; and when the Scaffolds were up, and the Work begun, that two or three Chests should be set in the Church, in convenient places, for receiving the Benevolences of well disposed Persons.

And in regard persons in some Countries were backward in their Contributions thereto, they were invited thereto by Letters from the Council Board, and the Commissioners meeting ordered,

1. That once a Year Certificates be made of the Monies given, and the Donors Names.
2. That a Clerk of the Work be chosen, and a Pay-master, and a Purveyor.
3. The Work not to begin till there be Ten thousand pounds in Bank. That when the Scaffolds are up, and the Work begun, two or three chests be set within the Church, in such places as shall be thought fit, for receiving the Benevolences of well-disposed Persons to the said Work.

And the Council received information that the Church was abus'd, & made at it were an Exchange or place of meeting for persons to talk of their Worldly affairs; his Majesty published in Print the Order following,

The Council Board by special Direction and Commission from his Majesty, taking into consideration the ways and means for the Reparation of the Cathedral Church of Saint Paul's, were informed at sundry hands, of a long continued abuse of the place, which might give a great impediment to Mens liberal Offerings to so pious a Work, if care were not taken, as well for the Religious and decent use of the inside, as repairing of the outside. The offence that is taken as well by Foreigners, as those of our own Nation, is, that in time of Divine Service, while the upper part of the Church is used for Praying and Preaching, the nether part of the Church is used as an Exchange for Men to meet in, to walk, talk and discourse of all things; and the Church itself, though by situation it stands convenient for passage to and from all yarts of the City; yet by that liberty is so far profaned, as it is used like a Street for carriage through of all Burthens, Provisions and Necessaries Men have to use, or pass from place to place; whereat good Men are much scandalized. Their Lordships finding this to be so unfit (the Dedication of that place considered) besides the coldness it may make in Men, otherwise well affected to this Work, if the better part be not cared for, as well as the material Work provided for, have thought fit to declare themselves thus far, to the Dean and Chapter of that Church, that they thereupon may seriously enter into consideration how this abuse may be reformed, and propound to the Board a fit Expedient. Their Lordships for their parts offer this unto the said Dean and Chapter; That in time of Divine Service, Prayers, or Preaching none should be suffered to be walking or talking in the Church, or nether Isles thereof; And at no time to have any part of the said Church used as a thoroughfare or passage for Burthens, Provisions, or other common necessities to be carried through the Church, but for all those things to take the common way of the Streets. What more of other things the Dean and Chapter shall find fit to add, they are prayed and required to represent unto the Board with all conveniency, that such course may be therein taken as shall be fit, and this pious and worthy Work encouraged by all the means that may be.

And pursuant hereto other Orders came out, June 25.

I. That no man of what quality soever shall presume to walk in the Isles of the Quire, or in the Body or Isles of the Church, during the time of Divine Service, or the Celebration of the Blessed Sacrament, or Sermons, or any part of them, neither do any thing that may disturb the Service of the Church, or diminish the Honour due to so holy a place.

II. That no Man presume to profane the Church, by the carriage of Burthens or Baskets, or any Portage whatsoever.

III. That all Parents and Masters of Families do strictly forbid their Children and Servants to play at any time in the Church, or any way misbehave themselves in that place, in time of Divine Service, or otherwise: And if any Children or Servants shall be found so doing, besides the punishment of the Delinquents, their Parents and Masters shall be subject to such Censures and Punishments, as shall be thought fit to be inflicted.

These Orders by command of his Majesty are now published, to the intent that no Man may hereafter pretend ignorance for his excuse in any of them.

Also the Houses and Shops are ordered to be taken down about Pauls Church (viz. adjoining to it) and Commissioners appointed to buy the said Houses, out of the contributions advanced for that work, and in regard Saint Gregories Church also was deemed an impediment to this great work, the Parishioners thereof after some refusals on their part, were ordered by the Council to assemble and meet for Divine Worship in the West end of Christs Church London, and whereas those of Christs Church refused to admit them, but upon hard compositions, though that Christs Church was large enough for them both, it was made an Order of the Council, that notwithstanding the reluctancy of the Parishioners of Christs Church, they should and might freely meet there for the Service of God, &c.

In April began the Arraignment and Tryal of Mervin Lord Audley, Earl of Castlehaven; and accordingly the Lord Keeper summon'd the Judges for that purpose, the Three Indictments were found before them at Salisbury; the first whereof was for a Rape upon his own Wife, the other two were for the unnatural sin of Buggery, but before he came to Tryal the Judges were convened at Serjeants Inn in Fleetstreet, and the Kings Attorney Sir Robert Heath proposed the Question following to them,

1. Whether a Peer of the Realm may waive his Trial by Peers, and plead he will be Tried by God and the Country?

Answer. He may not. For his Trial by Peers is no Privilege, but the Law, declared by Magna Charta; and if he will not plead to Trial by his Peers, it is a standing Mute.

2. Whether a Peer may challenge his Peers, as in the Case of common Jurors?

Answer. He may not (which I think is so, said that Judge) because they go not on their Oath, but on their Honour, and a Challenge is tried, whether he stand indifferent as unsworn.

3. Whether a Peer may have Counsel any more than a common Person?

Answer. If Matter of Law appear, he may; not for Matter of Fact.

Certain Examinations being taken by the Lords without Oath; It was resolved,

These could not be used until they were repeated upon Oath, unless of the Party to be tried, Car. 7. which may be read without an Oath.

4. Whether the Wife in this Case may be a Witness against her Husband for the Rape?

Answer. She may, for she is the Party wrong'd; otherwise she may be abused. In like manner a Villain may be a Witness against his Lord in such Cases.

5. Whether the Witnesses are to be produced viva voce, if the Lord Steward require it, or the Prisoner?

Answer. If he stand Mute in the case of Rape or Buggery, he may have his Clergy in either.

6. Then if he may not be put to Trial on the other Indictment, may not he be for a later Buggery, and be denied his Clergy?

Answer. On that he may, by 18 Eliz. 1.

7. Whether in Case one standeth Mute, Evidence may be opened by command of the Court concerning the Fact, though the Delinquent be to be pressed to death for his Contempt? But it is a matter in the discretion of the Court.

8. Whether in Cases where Clergie is allowable, the party may pray it before he answer, and deny to answer, otherwise? for this is a Confession.

9. Whether in Rape there must be Penetration? The Answers was in the Affirmative.

10. He having made suit to be bailed, whether it might be granted?

Answer. Let the King, as King, advise of it. The Judges certified the Lord Keeper that he could not in justice require it; yet he might be bailed ex gratia, which was not fit in this odious Case.

And at another meeting of the Lord Judges, several matters were debated by them, and then concluded as,

A difference was made between a Buggery and a Rape, in point of having Clergy, if he stood Mute: for it was argued he might have his Clergy if he stood Mute in Rape, but not in Buggery, because by the Stat. 25. H. 8. Buggery is made Felony, which by the Common Law is not. And in the very creation of the Offence, Clergy is taken away; whereas Clergie did lie for a Rape, until it was taken away by a Statute.

It was concluded that the Lords might Eat and Drink before they were agreed, but they could not separate nor adjourn the giving up of their Verdict. This appeared out of the Report of the Lord Dacres of Gregstock's Case, who was tried for Treason, and acquitted by his Peers, 26 H. 8.

It was agreed by the Justices in that Case of the Lord Dacres, that a Verdict cannot be given by a lesser number of the Lords than Twelve; and if Twelve be for the King, and Thirteen for the Prisoner, the Prisoner shall be acquitted.

In an Appeal, if the Defendant be Mute, he shall be hanged, and it is an Attainder, it being not within the Statute of Westminster, cap. 12. De paine fort & dure. No more is Treason. vide Stamf.

It was agreed also, That a Lord of the Parliament is within the Statute Westminster. 1. in case of Felony, and shall be pressed to death.

It was agreed, If the Lord Audley should have his Clergy upon his being Mute, yet he might be tried upon the other Indictments of Rape and Buggery, and should not have his Clergy, by the Statute 18 Eliz. because the admitting him to his Clergy, would be a Superfedeas to all Indictments of

For by the Common Law, he that is admitted to his Clergy, is discharged from answering any other Offence; for by indictment of that Law, he is taken from the Power of the Secular Judge, and put into the hands of the Ordinary, whose Prisoner he is all his life after.

It was resolved from the Lord Dacre's Case, That the Lord Steward, after Verdict given, might take time to advise upon it for any point in Law; and that his Office did continue unto him until his Judgment and Resolution, and it was but a Commission hac vice notwithstanding.

The Peers that assisted at the Trial, were as followeth.

1. Richard Lord Weston, Treasurer.
2. Henry Earl of Manchester, Privy Seal.
3. Thomas Earl of Arundel and Surrey, Marshal.
4. Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, Chamberlain to the King.
5. Henry Earl of Kent.

And for the manner of his Trial Mr. Rushworth gives us the ensuing Account.

There was prepared in Westminster-Hall a long Gallery, ascending with twelve Steps, beginning directly over against the Common-Pleas Bar; extending in length to the top of the King's-Bench-Stairs. At the higher end of the Gallery there was a long fair Table, with Benches on each side, for the Peers to sit on; and at the upper end thereof there was a Cloth of State for the Lord High Steward; also at the lower end another short Table, for the Lords and Judges to sit at. And there was also a place provided for the King's Learned Council, and Officers of the Court; and below that, the Bar for the Prisoner: Scaffolds being also erected on each side of the Hall, for People to stand and hear the Trial.

On the Day appointed the Peers came into the Hall, and took their places according to their Degrees; the Judges likewise came and took their place in order: After them the King's Learned Council, and the Officers of the Court.

Thomas Lord Coventry, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal; being by Commission under the said Great Seal, Dated the 13th. of April 1631. constituted Lord High Steward for the time being, about Nine of the Clock in the Morning entred into the Hall uncovered, with seven Serjeants at Arms carrying seven Maces before him, and attended upon by Sir John Burroughs King at Arms, and Mr. James Maxwell Usher of the Black Rod.

The Lord Steward, after he had saluted the Lords the Peers, who re-saluted him, ascended the State; and being seated in the Chair, was presented with his Majesties Commission by Sir Robert Rich, one of the Masters of the Chancery, which was openly read by Sir Thomas Fanshaw, Clerk of the Crown. Then Mr. Maxwell kneeling down, presented his Lordship with a White Staff or Rod, which he gave to one of the Serjeants at Arms, who held up the same by the Chair of State, on the right hand thereof.

Then the Lord Steward gave leave to all the Peers, and to all the Lords, and Judges, and Privy-Councillors there present, to put on their Hats and be covered; and Command was given, that none under those Degrees should be covered upon pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Peers were severally called by their Names, and each of them answered particularly.

The Kings Council there present, were,

Sir Robert Heath, Attorney General.
Sir Richard Shelton, Solicitor General.
Sir John Finch, Queen's Attorney General.
Sir Thomas Crew, the King's Serjeant at Law.

The Officers of the Court, were,

Sir Thomas Fanshaw, Clerk of the Crown.
And Mr. Keeling, his Assistant.

Then the Lord Steward commanded the Indictments to be certified and brought in; This being done, the Lieutenant of the Tower was called by a Serjeant at Arms, and commanded to bring forth the Prisoner; who accordingly being brought to the Bar, attended by divers of the Guard, he made obeysance to the Lord Steward, and the Peers, by whom he was re-saluted.

The Lord Keeper Coventry then Commissioned High Steward for the Trial, spake to the Prisoner, as followeth.

My Lord Audley,

THE King hath understood, both by Report, and the Verdict of divers Gentlemen of Quality in your own Country, that you stand impeached of sundry Crimes of a most high and heinous Nature. And to try whether they be true or not, and that Justice may be done accordingly, His Majesty brings you this day to your Trial; doing herein, as the Mighty King of Kings, in the 18th. of Genesis, verse 20, 21. who went down to see whether their Sins were so grievous as the Cry of them; Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and their sins grievous, I will go down, saith the Lord, and see whether they have done altogether according to the Cry of it. And the Kings on Earth can have no better Pattern to follow than the King of Heaven: and therefore our Sovereign Lord the King

King, God's Vicegerent here on Earth, hath Commanded that you should be here tried this day; and to that end he hath caused these your Peers to be Assembled: And the Desire of his Majesty is, That your Trial should be as equal as Justice and Equity it self: And therefore these Noblemen, your Peers, whose hearts are as full of Integrity, Justice and Truth, as their Veins full of Noble Blood, are this day to try you; wherefore if you be innocent, speak boldly and confidently, and fear not to justify your self: And be assured, that those that accuse you, if you be free your self, shall not escape free: but if you be guilty of these Crimes, I advise you to give honour to God and the King, and confess your Faults; for it is not vain Confidence, nor Subtilty, nor standing out in denial, that hides the Truth; and all Shifts and Subtilties against it are but Concilia adversus Dominum.

Therefore if Truth touch you at the Heart, and your Conscience, which is your Witness, and God's Grace, which is greater than both; stand not against it.

The Lord Audley's Answer.

May it please your Grace,

I Have been a close Prisoner these six Months, without Council or Advice; I am ignorant of the Law, and but weak of Speech at the best; and therefore I desire to have the liberty to have Council to speak for me.

The Lord Steward replied; That his long Imprisonment was a special Favour; for that it gave him time to bethink himself, and more than ever any Man had, that had been committed for such Offences; and that he should demand nothing which the Law can allow, but it should be granted.

Then his Grace desired to be resolved of the Judges, whether the Prisoner's Demand to have Council to plead for him, might be granted or not? The Judges answered, That in Criminal Causes Council is not to be admitted in matter of Fact, but in matter of Law it may.

Then the three Indictments were read; whereof two were for Sodomy with his Footman, and the third for a Rape committed upon his own Wife. Unto all which the Earl answered, Not Guilty; and being asked, how he would be tried, he answered, By God and his Peers. Whereupon all the Peers put off their Hats, and the Issue thereof was joyned.

The Lord High Steward addressed his Speech to the Peers, and said, My Lords, the Prisoner stands indicted for a Rape by one Indictment, and for Sodomy by two, and he hath pleaded Not Guilty to them all.

It is my Duty to charge you with the Trial of it, and you are to judge of it. The Offences wherewith he standeth Charged are to be proved by Evidence. And because the Crimes that come this day before us, may in some breed Detestation, let your Reason sway your Judgments, and let that rule your Affections, and your Hearts and your Heads; for neither of those ought to be put into the Ballance, if a Grain on either side may sway the Scale.

You are to give attentive Hearing, and then to weigh equally, that the Scale may lean the right way. The Judges will assist you in point of Law; which if you doubt of, you are to propound it to me, and I to them, and this your Lordships are to do without Corporal Oath; for the Law conceiveth you of such Integrity, that you will do that for Justice, which others do upon their Oaths, and therefore admit of no Challenge. And God direct you to do as you ought.

Sir Thomas Crew, the King's Learned Council, opened the Charge against the Earl, to this effect;

The person is Honourable, the Crimes Dishonourable, so foul as Poet never invented, nor Historiographer wrote of: the one is a Crime of such rarity (let it be spoken to the Honour of our Nation) that we seldom or never knew the like; and the other such, the like hath scarce been heard of.

But they are of such a Pestilential nature, that if they be not punished, they will draw vengeance from Heaven upon this Kingdom. His Majesty would have the Prisoner at the Bar heard with as much Favour, as Crimes of this nature will admit. And when he first heard thereof, he gave strict Command that the Truth should be searched out, that his Throne and People might be cleared from so heavy and heinous Sins. Thereupon the Prisoner was Indicted in his own Country according to the Law, and by Gentlemen of worth the Bill was found; and now he is personally brought to this Bar, to be tried by his Honourable Peers, of whose Wisdom and Sincerity there can be no question, but he shall have a just and honourable Hearing.

To begin with the Indictment of Rape, Bracton tells us of King Athelstan's Law before the Conquest; If the party were of no chaste life, but a Whore, yet there may be a Ravishment: But it is a good Plea for a man to say she is his Concubine.

In an Indictment of Rape, there is no time of Prosecution necessary: for nullum tempus occurrat Regi; but in case of an Appeal of Rape, if a Woman do not prosecute in convenient time, it will bar her. If a man take away a Maid by force, and Ravish her, and afterwards she give her consent to Marry him, yet it is a Rape.

For the Crime of Sodomy, Our Law had no knowledge of it, till the 15th. of Henry the 8th. by which Statute it was made Felony, and herein there is no more question but only this, whether it be Crimen Sodomiticum sine penetratione. And the Law 15. Eliz. sets it down in general; and where the Law doth not distinguish, neither must we.

Your Lordships will be curious how you give the least mitigation to so abominable a Sin, which brought such Plagues after it, as may be seen in the 19th. of Gen. 19th. of Judges, & the 1st. of the Romans.

It may seem strange how a Nobleman of his Birth and quality, should fall into such abominable Sins; but he had given himself over to Lust. And when men once habituate themselves unto Evil, no marvel if they fall into any Sin.

Anno 1631. 'Also he was constant in no Religion, but in the Morning would be a Papist, and go to Mass, and in the Afternoon a Protestant, and hear a Sermon. He believed not in God, he feared not God; he left God, and God left him to his own wicked way; and then what might not he run into?

'Things are found in him beyond imagination, his intentions were bent to have his own Wife naught; if she love him, she must love A. his Page; and he gives this Reason out of Scripture, She was now made subject to him; and if she did evil at his Command, 'twas his fault, he must answer for it.

'His irregular Bounty towards S. is very remarkable; him he loves and honours above all, not in any honest, but a dishonest love; he calls him his Favorite, and lets him spend several thousand pounds a year; and if his Wife or Daughter will have any thing, they must lie with S. and have it from him; saying, that he had rather have a Child by him than any other.

Witnesses produced. The Witnesses were produced, who testified upon Oath, that A. coming to his Bed-side, when he was in Bed with his Lady, the Earl told her, that her Body was now his, and if she loved him, she must love A. and if she lay with another man with his consent, it was not her fault, but his; and that if it were his will, she must obey and do it. And then he held both the hands of his Lady, and one of her legs, till his Servant did lie with her. Immediately thereupon, the Lady would have killed her self with a Knife, but was prevented. It was proved that he used the Body of one of his Men-servants as the Body of a Woman. Also there were proved against him, such other particulars as are not fit to be named, nor come to the knowledge of the World, nor to be heard among Christians.

The Kings Council concludes. Afterwards the Counsel for the King spake to the Lord High Steward and the Peers to this effect: 'That in so dark a business, a clearer proof could not be had. For let a man be never so wicked, or never so impudent, he will not call Witnesses to see his wickedness, yet even this point is fully proved. And citing Levit. 18. they shewed that by these Abominations the Land is defiled, and that God will visit the Land for this iniquity; and so concluded, That God may take away his Plagues, let this wicked Man be taken away from among us.

The Lord H. Steward. Then the Lord High Steward directed his Speech to the Earl, and told him he should be heard in his Defence, with as much patience as was admitted in his Charge, and advised him to speak pertinently.

The Prisoners objections. The Prisoner alledging that he was a weak man, of a bad Memory, and desired he might not be interrupted, began his Defence with Exceptions against his Wife, That she was by her own Testimony dishonest with Broadway. The Lord High Steward answered, That this made against him; he ought not to alledge that Fact as an Imputation to his Wife, which he forced by violence.

'Then he objected the Incompetency of the Witnesses, his Wife and his Servants, that were drawn by his Son's practice, who sought his Life; and he desired to know if there were not a Statute that expressed the incompetency of Witnesses.

The Judges Answer. The Judges resolved, That there was none touching Witnesses; but in Cases of High Treason

there was a Statute concerning Accusers. Then he demanded if his Wife was to be admitted a Witness against him? The Judges answered, That in Civil Cases the Wife may not, but in Criminal or Capital Cases of this nature, where the Wife is the party grieved, and on whom the Crime is committed, she is admitted against her Husband. It was further propounded, whether it being proved that the party Ravished was of evil Fame, or unchaste life, it will amount to a Rape? The Judges resolved it a Rape, though committed on a common Strumpet: for it is an enforcing of the Will that makes a Rape; and a common Whore may be Ravished against her Will, and it is Felony to do it.

'It was also propounded, whether it was to be judged a Rape, when the Woman complained not presently? and whether there be a necessity of accusation within a convenient time, or twenty four hours? The Judges resolved, that in as much as she was forced against her will, and then shewed her dislike, she was not limited to any time for her complaint; that in an Indictment there is no limitation of time, but in an Appeal there is.

'Lastly, It was propounded, Whether Men of no worth may be admitted as sufficient proof against a Baron? The Judges resolved, that any man is a sufficient Witness in case of Felony.

The Lord High Steward speaking to the Prisoner, said, My Lord, you have been graciously dealt with in this Proceeding; for it is not an usual favour in so capital and heinous Causes to bring the Parties and Witnesses face to face before Trial; but you have heard their Examinations long before, questioned and opposed them to their Faces, and are thereby better enabled to make your Defence. And his Majesty is still graciously pleased to continue his Goodness towards you, and hath commanded that you should be heard at full; If therefore you have any thing else to say for your self, speak it.

'Whereunto he answered, and first made a solemn Protestation of his Innocency: but nevertheless implored the Mercy of God and his Peers, and presented to their consideration three Woes.

'First, Wo to the Man whose Wife shall be a Witness against him.

'Secondly, Wo to the Man whose Son shall prosecute and conspire his Father's Death.

'Thirdly, Wo to the Man whose Servants shall be allowed to be Witnesses to take away his Life.

'And he willed the Lords to consider, that it might be their own Cases, or the Case of any Gentleman, or Man of worth, that kept a Footman, or whose Wife was weary of him, or whose Son being attained to Age, had a mind to draw his Servants into a Conspiracy.

'That his Son was now 21 years of Age, himself being old and decayed, that his Son would have his Lands, and his Wife a young Husband: And that by their Testimony, and the Testimony of his Servants added to theirs, they had conspired his Death.

After this, the Prisoner, being so required, withdrew himself from the Bar.

The Lord High Steward spake to the Peers, That they having heard the proofs, the Prisoner's Defence, the Doubts and Questions resolved 1631. solved, might withdraw, if they were satisfied.

The Peers withdrew, and after an hours Debate, with several Advices and Conferences with the Lord Chief Justice, whom they consulted four times; having also in that time sent the Earl of Warwick, and the Lord of Dorchester, together with the Lord Chief Justice, to consult with the Lord High Steward, they returned to their places.

Then the Lord Steward asked them one by one, beginning at the lowest, and so ascending, Whether the Lord Audley were guilty of the Rape whereof he stood indicted? and they all gave him in Guilty, the Lord North only excepted. Then, whether he were guilty of the Sodomy? and in this, Fifteen of the Lords Condemned him, and the other Eleven freed him.

The Verdict being thus given up, the Prisoner was brought to the Bar to hear his Sentence, and the Lord High Steward spoke;

'Forasmuch as thou Mervin Lord Audley hast been indicted for divers Felonies, by three several Indictments, one for a Rape, the other two for Sodomy, and hast pleaded Not Guilty to them all, and for thy Trial hast put thy self on God and thy Peers; which Trial thou hast had, and they have found thee guilty, What canst thou say for thy self why the Sentence of Death should not be pronounced against thee?

Whereunto the Prisoner made Answer, That he had no more to say, but referred himself to God's and the King's Mercy.

Then said the Lord Steward, 'My Heart grieveth for that which my Tongue must utter; but this is the only way to cut off Wickedness; hear therefore thy Sentence.

Thy Sentence is, That thou go from hence to the Prison from whence thou camest, and from thence to the Place of Execution, there to be hanged by the Neck until thou be dead; and the Lord have mercy on thy Soul.

And having thus pronounced the Sentence, he continued his Speech, and said, 'O! think upon your Offences, which are so heinous and horrible, that a Christian Man ought scarce to name them, and such as the depraved Nature of man, which of it self carries him to all sin, condemns as unnatural. You have offended, not only against Nature, but beyond the Rage of a Mans Jealousie; and though you do not suffer for abusing your own Daughter, and that having Honour and Fortune to leave behind you, you would have had the spurious Seed of a Varlet to inherit both, yet these are horrid Crimes. But, my Lord, it grieves me to see you stand out against the Truth so apparent. God might have taken you away when you were blinded in your sins, therefore I hope he hath reserved you as the Subject of his Mercy. He sends you to see this day of shame, that you might return unto him; and seeing he doth thus lovingly draw you to his Service, spend the remainder of your time in Tears and Repentance; and this day's work, I hope, will be the correction of many Crimes and Corruptions.

At last the Lord Audley descended to a low Petition to the Lords, and very humbly besought them to mediate to his Majesty, that he might not die, but be banished; at least, that his Maesty would not suddenly cut him off, but give him time of Repentance.

Car. 7.

In Trinity-Term following Broadway and Fitz-Patrick received their Trial, and were found guilty on the 28th. of June; but had a Reprieve of a Weeks time to fit themselves for their Deaths; and on the 4th. of July they were executed accordingly.

In the Month of July the Marquess Hamilton embarks in Tarrmouth-Road, with the Army for the King of Swedens Assistance; in the latter end of that Month they arrived at Elsenore in the Sound, where the Marquess went on shore to pay his respects to his Majesty of Denmark, and embarks again; and on the 31th. of that Month arrived in the Mouth of the River Oder, his Men in very good health; they were set on shore near Wolgast, and there Quartered in the Villages; where they staying in expectation of the Swedes to join them, and bring them up to the main Army of that King, who could not spare his Men for that purpose, he engaged the Enemy before at Leip-sick; and here they contract a Camp distemper-ed, and the Marquess loseth one third part of his men in that Disease.

Presently after the Condemnation of the Earl of Castlehaven, as you have heard of before, there followed a Sin of some similitude with the former Crimes of that Earl; Sir Giles Allington's Incest with his Niece, which he had put to the question of Council, before he Married her, not without great suspicion of too much familiarity before; and had Advice of the Archbishop and other Divines, as to the Incestuous Nature of such copulations. She was Daughter to Mr. Dalton's Wife, Sister to Mr. Gibbes, and so his own Niece: His wicked Passion was supported by his great Estate, which under question of the High Commission, was his best Support; where his Purse buoy'd him up a long time.

The Levitical Law interdicts the Marriage of the Nephew with the Aunt, but not of the Uncle with the Niece, which seems to be the same in reason; No, saith Bellarmine; The first changeth the natural Subjection due from a Nephew to his Aunt, who must be under Covert by the Duty of a Wife; whereas, if a Niece marries her Uncle, the Natural Subjection is rather doubled, than destroyed; the Moral Law was writ by Moses in Stone, and Positive Laws besides were given to the Jews, both Ceremonial and Judicial; the latter ceased in Christ's Death, unless a Moral Equity were in them, that there is inter Ascendentes & Descendentes, a kind of Paternity and Filiation; therefore some thought Allington's Case was a Crime against the Moral Law; and if the Aunt had Match'd with the Nephew, he being by that Contract Husband to her, was superior to his Parent; and so an aggravation to the Offence; but Sir Giles flew from the Civil Courts to the Common Pleas, where he procured a Rule Requiring the High Commission, to shew cause why a Prohibition should not be granted, and until then, if they proceeded, Prohibition was granted; this, was judged too bold to so high a Court of Commission, the King interposed, and by the Lord Keeper blamed the Judges, who proceeded no further in fear of Doctor Lawd Bishop of London, who protested to Excommunicate the Judges in his Diocess, and to declare it at Pauls Cross-Pulpit, in case the Archbishop of Canterbury did not.

not do it in his Province, who did somewhat connive, as some stickt not to say.

It was too hot for Allington to hold out there, which returned him back a submissive penitentiary to the incensed Commissioners, Eight Bishops, and Four Civilian Judges, who in full Court, with serious Ceremonies, sentenced him Twelve thousand pounds Fine to the King, and to stand penalty bound in 20000*l.* not to cohabit or be in private with her, to be imprisoned (or sufficient bail) till both of them had performed Penance at Saint Pauls Cross London, and great Saint Maries in Cambridge at a day assigned; they did so; but yet no penalty of the Purse, or shame of the sin could keep them long asunder; though the pragmatick Inquisitors, and other Officers narrowly watcht them, for of all sins (saith one) those of uncleanness want not their agitant Spirits from below, to cooperate with their wonderous subtil ways, to the working this kind of wickedness; and so did this Couple, with the aid of their Confidants, Pimps and Panders.

A Complaint being to his Majesty in Council, that the Lord Lieutenants of the several Counties were not overforward to cause payment to be made of the Muster Masters their Fees, there were Letters directed to them respectively to assesse their pay, and several persons in the County of Bucks and elsewhere, were sent for up to the Board, to answer the non-payment of them, but they submitting, they were presently dismissed.

And now we come to speak somewhat of the Marquess of Hamilton's Conspiracy [it was so called by the Lord Rea] who was accused of affecting Sovereignty in the Neighbour Kingdom of Scotland; this was told to Rea by Ramsay who was sent to the King of Sweden by the Marquess of Hamilton; but Ramsay denies the matter, and Rea as confidently asserts it for truth. Thus when Friends fall out, their faults are found out, as appears by the Quarrel between Donnald, Lord Rea, a Scottish Highlander, or rather more Northward of the Isles Orkney, and that David Ramsay, a true Scottish Courtier; concerning words and designs of Treason against the King of England, which as before Ramsay denied, they are admitted the Trial by Combat, the manner being as followeth.

The Day prefixt for Trial was the Twenty Eighth of November, 1631. before Robert Earl of Lindsey, Lord high Constable of England.

Tho. Earl of Arundel, Earl Marshal of England.

The Earl of Pembroke, Lord Chamberlain of the Kings Household.

The Earl of Dorset Chamberlain to the Queens Household.

The Earl of Carlisle.

Earl of Mulgrave.

Earl of Morton.

Viscount Wimbleton.

Viscount Wentworth.

Viscount Falkland.

Sir Henry Vane.

The place was the Painted Chamber at Westminster; at the upper end thereof a Bench was erected Four Foot high, for the Constable, and Marshal, and Lords Assistants, under them Seats about a square Table, filled with the Heralds of Arms, and Serjeants at Arms, and other Officers of the Court; directly under the upper Bench fate the Register Doctor Derbick, and over against him Doctor Duck the Kings Advocate for the Marshals Court, behind him at the Bar were two Pews for the Appellant and Defendant.

At Eight a Clock comes the Earl Marshal (ushered in with Nine Heralds, and Three Serjeants at Arms) bearing his Marshal Truncheon of Gold, tipped with Black, and commanding Room, and giving Orders, retired into the upper House of Parliament, and then returned into the Court as to make way for the High Constable, who followed, and all took place in their degrees.

The Earl Marshal rises, makes obedience to the Constable, and passing forward meets Sir William Leager King of Heralds, and both of them present to the Constable his Commission, which he received with his Hat off, and delivered it to the Register to read, in effect,

That his Majesty being informed by Donnald Lord Rea, how David Ramsay Esquire had plotted, and was privy unto divers Treasons and Conspiracies against his Majesties Royal Person, Government and Kingdoms, in the search whereof the King had used all ways and means for the discovery of the truth, the one of them accusing, the other denying, and so no certain security to his own Person and his Subjects: therefore he doth Authorize the said Robert Barne Earl of Lindsey Lord High Constable, for to call unto him Tho. Earl of Arundel, Earl Marshal, and with him such other Peers, Sheriffs, and Officers as he thinks fit, to hold a Marshal's Court, for sifting the truth between the said parties, &c.

Then the King of Heralds deliver'd to the Constable, his Silver Verge or Staff, half a Yard in length, headed with a Crown of Gold, then the Earl Marshal delivered a Key to a Herald, to fetch in the Appellant, ushered in by the Herald and accompanied with his Sureties Sir Pierce Crosby, Sir Walter Crosby, Sir William Forbes, Sir Robert Gordon, and Sir William Evers, he was Apparelled in Black Velvet, trimmed with Silver Buttons, his Sword in a Silver Embroidered Belt in his Order of a Scottish Baronet, about his Neck, and so with reverence entred into the Pew, his Council Dr. Reeves standing by, his behaviour like himself, tall, swarthy, black, but comely, very port like, and of staid countenance.

The Defendant was alike ushered in by another Herald, his Sureties were the Lord Roxborough, and Lord Abercorn: and his deport like himself, stern and brave, a fair, ruddy, yellow headed bush of Hair, so large, and in those days unusual, that he was called Ramsay red Head, his Apparel Scarlet, over laced with Silver, the Ground hardly discerned, and lined with Sky-colour Plush, but unarmed, without a Sword; after his reverence to the Court, he faced the Appellant, who alike sterned a Countenance at him.

After Oyes, the Earl Marshal told them the effect of the Commission, and the power of his Court, which was not of any strange nature, but legal and justifiable as any other Trial in Westminster-Hall; and, that there had been no more nor other Trials of that kind of late, we were to attribute it to Gods goodness, the Justice of the King, and loyalty of the Subject with the Providence of State, and wished there might be no more in time to come, and that to expect any combate, this Court he hoped would prevent it, by the discovery of the light, and so magna est veritas, & praevalabit; he referred the further proceedceedings unto Doctor Duck, the Kings Advocate, who spake thus in effect,

The Kings Majesty had committed the Trial of the business to your Grace my Lord High Constable, the Earl Marshal, and this Court, which course was warrantable by the Laws of other Nations, and also by our own, who have used the same manner of Trial.

That our Law admitted sundry proofs for Treason, which in other matters it did not; that all Subjects were bound to discover Treasons, and cited two ancient Civilians Hieronymus and Tiberius, who gave their reasons for this kind of Trial, and he mentioned several Records of our own Chronicles and Examples herein, as the Duke of Norfolk combating against the Duke of Hartford in Henry the Fourth his time. John Ely, and William Scroop against Bellamon at Burdeaux, the King being there, the Lord Morley impeached Mountague, Earl of Salisbury, and that Thomas of Walsingham, and Thomas of Woodstock in their learned Writings expressed sundry precedents for this manner of proceeding; wishing the Court in Gods Name to go on to a Trial, and the Appellant to give in his evidence.

Then the Appellant came up upon the Table, to whom the Earl Marshal delivered the Petition, which he had the day before exhibited to the King, and the Defendant being also called up, the Petition was read; which was in effect, that he having accused Ramsey of Treason, and also Meldram his Kinsman, and of confederacy against whom Captain Borthwick was Witness, therefore had desired that the Court should proceed against Meldram first.

But he was told by the Court, that their Cases differing, the Appellant was ordered to deliver in his charge against the Defendant; which he did, in writing, by Bill containing sundry particulars, viz.

That in May last in the Low Countries, Ramsey complained to him against the Court of England, that the matters of Church and State were so out of frame, as must tend to a change, if not desolation. That therefore he had abandoned the Kingdom, to live where now he was, and to expect a mutation forthwith, to which end he had brought present Monies to maintain him at Six pounds a Day for Three years, that Marquess Hamilton had a great Army promised to him, for pay whereof the King had given in hand Ten Thousand pounds, and all the Wine-Customs in Scotland for Six years, presently to be sold for the Armies subsistence, and that he staid but for Ammunition and Powder to come over, for which his Lordship was to mediate with his Majesty of Sweden and the States, and then link themselves together, whose mind Rea should know hereafter.

That their Friends in Scotland had gotten therefore Arms and Powder out of England, and that what he should procure in Holland, was to be brought over by the Marquess, and that all Scotland were sure to them except Three.

That France and Spain thirsted for England, but Hamilton would defeat them for himself, his only fear was of Denmark, where he meant to land, and either to take him off, or make a party.

That afterwards at Amsterdam, Ramsey with Alexander Hamilton solicited him the Lord Rea to be true to him, and to be of their Counsel, though as yet they durst not reveal too much of Hamilton's secrets, but if he repaired to England, he would entrust him with Letters, and that his Brother-in-law Seaport knew all.

This being the effect of the charge, he added, That if Ramsey should deny it, he was a Villain and a Traitor, which he would make good, and therewith cast him his Glove.

Ramsey denied all, and said, Rea was a Liar, a barbarous Villain, and threw down his Glove, protesting, to gar him dye for it, if he had had him in place for that purpose.

Rea was temperate, without any passion, but smiling replied, Mr. Ramsey, we will not contend here, answer to my Bill.

Then Ramsey offered some reasons of the impossibility of the charge, the slender numbers of men from England, but Six thousand raw Soldiers, against three Kingdoms, whom the first Proclamation might dissipate, that the Marquess was neither so wicked, nor weak in Judgment, and if he should consent to surprise the King, what hope had he against his Children and Kindred, and therefore (saith he) my Lord Rea is a barbarous Villain, and a Liar, and he will gar him dye for it, or lose his dearest blood.

He was interrupted by the Earl Marshal, telling him; he must not stand upon conjectures; but answer the Bill of form according to Law, and was advised to take Counsel therein.

Then Ramsey in general acknowledged all the particular circumstances of time and place alledged by Rea, and the Discourse to that effect; but concluded, that no Treason was intended or uttered, and craved Counsel to answer, which was granted.

And so the Court Adjourned till the Fifth of December, but upon a fresh Arrest by the Earl Marshal, they were to put in Bail for appearance, which were the old security; and Ramsey ordered to answer upon Oath; at which day appearing, the same of the Cause brought thither such a crowd of People as was not imaginable, Rea entred as before in manner and habit: but Ramsey was now suited in Black Satten, and presented his Answer in writing, to this effect:

That having considered the time, place, and communication with the Lord Rea, beyond the Seas (as before urged) he confesses;

That Rea demanded of him, whether the Marquess Hamilton intended to come over and follow the Wars? he said yes, and told him of his Force, Six thousand men, and of the Ten thousand pounds in money, and Wine-Customs in Scotland, which he would sell to maintain the Army, and that he would come so provided with Ammunition, that being joyned with his Friends, he valued no Enemy; upon which Rea replied, that his own two Regiments should wait upon him: but the place of these Forces to meet, was at Sea, and there to receive directions from the King of Swedeland where to Rendezvous; upon which Rea said, that his Life and Fortunes should wait on the Marquess; who being told of his Friendship, wrote a Letter to Rea, which Ramsey delivered; in effect, that Rea should get some Ammunition from the King of Swedeland, which was wanting; and that, speaking in general, of Matters amiss in England, Rea answered, God amend all; to whom Ramsey replied, By God, Donnold, we must helphim to amend all: And to all the other matters and things he utterly denies, and craves revenge upon Rea's person by dint of Sword.

Then Dr. Eden, of Counsel for Ramsey, spake to the Court; That being assigned his Counsel, his

Car. 7.

Anno
1631. his Opinion was, that the Defendant might decline the Combat, and reply to the Appellant's Bill in brief, with these Reasons :

First, That by the Words in the Bill, no man can be charged a Traitor by one that is guilty in his own particular, and so is not tied to be Defendant, nor to answer such a Bill.

Secondly, The Incertainty and Doubtfulness of the Words in the Charge; so that till the Court doth censure them to be Treasonable, the Defendant is not tied to answer.

Thirdly, The Appellant refers the Combat till the last; if he cannot in the mean time prove the Charge by any other ways, then he offers to make it good by his Body: so then the Defendant may forbear his Answer, and decline the Combat.

And now, My Lords (said he) I humbly shall acquaint you with the Defendant's Answer to me in private; which was,

That though in Law he might, yet in Honour and Innocency he would not decline the Combat; but being by his own consent his Advocate, hath the less to say for him; and so time was given for Rea's Replication till Friday after.

Rea's Counsel moved, Whereas Dr. Eden had excepted at some Words in the Charge, he answered, That whoever was accused of Treason, was not to insist, how polluted the Answer was; but how to approve and clear himself: then to refer the Combat to the last, was well done; the Ultimum Refugium, to expose his Life, for God, the King, and his Countrey.

This Speech being somewhat peremptory, and directory to the Court, he was told,

That the Court needed not his Direction, as to the Trial of Combat; their Wisdoms would consider of that when it was time; and so the Court Adjourned; both parties being admitted to have common Lawyers, but to plead only by Civilians.

This Day came; Rea appears as before; but Ramsay in a new Suit of Ash-colour Cloth, opened with Scarlet-colour, the Cloak Scarlet Cloth, lined with Ash-coloured Velvet, and the whole Suit and Cloak overlaid with Silver and Sky-coloured Lace.

The former Proceedings were read by the Register, and thereupon the Appellant's Replication presented to the High Constable: in effect,

That Ramsay in his Answer, had cunningly slipt over a part of the Charge; which was, that the Lord Rea protested, he was not engaged in Wars, for want of subsistence, and therefore would not hazard in any Design, without sure knowledge; upon which words; depends much of the Matter, and Main of that part of the Bill, and so ripping up the several charges of the Bill, the Strength, Reasons, and likelihood, and the Defendant's Defects, in not clearing the chief Points, they went on with the Counsel, It was his part to inforce the charge against Ramsay, in this effect; he observed, that the first Day Ramsay denied all the Charge, while he stood upon private resolution; but afterwards his Counsel brought him to particulars, and taught him to answer superficially; first he knew nothing, and yet now so much.

No doubt there was some stranger Enterprize by the Marquess Hamilton, than to serve the King of Sweden, by Ramsay's professing that Hamilton was a Protestant, and bore Arms for Religion, not caring with whom to grapple; from hence observing, that they intended somewhat to attempt of themselves; Ramsay styled the Marquess his Master in Discourse, and in many of his Letters produced much of his Discovery by Rea, was to fish out of Ramsay the Truth of his doubtful words; how unlikely it was that Rea, having two Regiments of old Souldiers, Captain of the King of Sweden's Dragoons, in good pay for all, should offer to serve Hamilton, who was to be Commanded by the King, and that Ramsay might decline the Combat, or forbear answering till the last, was a strange Opinion of Counsel, because Combat was to be reserved till all other means of Discovery failed; and therefore Rea's Reasons were supplemental proofs, and requiting Meldram's Testimony; but however he was now ready, if the Court think fit, to give the Combat presently.

And concluded with an Example in case of Murder; Two men fight in secret; the one is slain, the other flies; and though without any witness of the Fact, his seeking to escape condemns him guilty; so Ramsay having been accused of Treason above three Months by the Lord Rea, and both confined, Ramsay despairing of his Cause, seeks his flight from Justice, by sending to Rea a private Challenge, being a sufficient Conviction in Law; as appears by ancient Precedents in this Court, viz. Kirtles after an Appeal, sends a Challenge to Scroop, and was therefore adjudged Guilty.

Doctor Duck answered to all, That first it was Prudence for Ramsay to Answer in general Negatively, having been newly Landed from Sea; and might be excused till he had Time and Consideration, to refresh his Memory, being not upon Oath, and as yet, the Defendant need not answer perfectly, till further Time and Favour, to view the Exhibits in Court by Copies, which he desires.

And directly urged against the Lord Rea's Replication, not to be allowed, because, Rea referring himself now to proofs, might have saved the trouble of this Court of Honour and Chivalry, and hazard of their persons by combat, which intends the Trial without proofs, and that the Defendant having engaged his Sureties, but to this day, he humbly desires the Time and Place to be Ordered for the sudden Combat, according to the Law of Arms, and Customs of this Court; saying, that the Duel foreseen must ensue upon the Appeal and Denial, and therefore ought now to be granted.

Doctor Reeves moved for continuance of the Replication, and consented to the Combat; the Court admitted the Replication, and Ordered Time till Wednesday for exceptions thereto.

Doctor Duck offered some Reasons to satisfy Rea, and extreemly to censure Ramsay; where he was interrupted, and told by the Earl Marshal, that the Court will save him the Labour and Counsel, till the Rejoinders be put in, and then to be Ordered.

Doctor Eden shewed that the Copies of the Letters exhibited, were not given out; nor shall, sayes the Earl Marshal, till the Court have considered of the Contents; and so they were read.

The one was from Ramsay to Rea; certifying him of Passages in the Low-Countreys since their parting; to put the Marquess in mind of directing him how to dispose of the Ammunition and Arms in his custody: Subscribed,

Your Servant, R A M S E Y.
The

1631. The other from the Lord Marquess, to the Lord Rea, congratulating his Love and Affection; expressing a great desire to meet him in Germany, upon any terms he would propose; and that Ramsey the Bearer, was instructed for him to Treat with the King of Sweden; whom he desires to favour and assist; which will oblige him his Friend and Servant;

HAMILTON.

Dr. Duck opened the whole Matter, and each particular, insisting, that my Lord Rea's Evidence being for the King, and he a Person of Honour, and Peer of Scotland, his Testimony was sufficient: and moves, that Mr. Meldram might be admitted for Supply; for though they were not joyn-t-witnesses together of the words which made the Charge; yet forasmuch that they were spoken asunder, and agreeing together, made up a full proof; That no Testimony may be neglected in Matters of Treason; That if any part of the Charge was denied by the Defendant, and proved by the Appellant, it might convince him in a manner of the whole; and urged the offence of Ramsey's Challenging Rea. But more of that hereafter.

But Dr. Reeves prosecuted the Matter; for that Ramsey's Counsel endeavoured to prove that he might decline the Combat, or forbear answering, because of some Words which reflected upon my Lord Rea, as matter of Reproach, that Rea had uttered Words of Treason to catch Ramsey, and then to turn Informer; but (said he) no Office can be accounted base, when the King and Kingdoms Safety is concerned; citing a Story out of Livy, that the Romans, confederate with the Samnites, were to undergo a base Office that stood not with Honour, and resolved, so long as it was advantageous to the Roman State, it might with honour be undertaken.

Dr. Eden was earnest to excuse himself for putting in these Words against the Lord Rea, saying, that his Client enforced to have them inserted.

But being a Point of Honour, the Earl Marshal interposed, That true it was, the best man may not refuse the basest Office to preserve a King and Nation; but again, it was most unworthy the Degree of Honour, for any man to Angle and Entrap another, and then to present him to the King's Justice.

Then the Pleaders argued concerning Meldram's Testimony, That no Proof ought to be omitted for the King; but it was offered for Ramsey to joyn Issue upon that Point in Law; for the Bill was laid against him not in general, but particular, to Place, and Time, and Matter, viz. That in May last, in a Ship, and afterward at Amsterdam, then again at Delph, Ramsey should say such and such words; which if Meldram would justify, besides himself, they ought to be admitted, otherwise it was no good matter, but must refer to a new Bill.

That the Defendant had answered fully, for that the Lord Rea proffered his Service to the Marquess, without pressing to know any Design; that nothing in the Letters could convict Ramsey; that the Lord Rea standing upon his great Offices under the King of Sweden, and so that necessitated to serve the Marquess, he had not those places of Command then, but since; and that since his coming into England, he said that he would have served under the Marquess, and concluded, that Ramsey and the Marquess might use such words, and yet not intend Treason to his Majesty.

But having in this Trial medled so much with the Marquess, the Court was fain to enter an Order or Protestation, to clear the Marquess his Words or Actions from dishonour.

Then the Court proceeded to examine Witnesses viva voce.

Archibald Rankin was to prove the Challenge, as the Bringer; upon those Questions he confessed, that he was in Ramsey's Chamber at Richmond, the last of October.

That Ramsey did not employ him to carry any Challenge to the Lord Rea, but at that time Ramsey told him, that it was his grief to be restrained not to meet Rea, who was a Traiterous Villain, and wished to meet him in the open Fields at Barn-Elms, he would make him die for it, and tear his heart, with other such words of Reproach, and wished the Deponent to tell Rea so much; which he did; but it was three weeks after; and then, not until the Lord Rea told him, that Ramsey had sent him a Challenge; so that, said Ramsey, my Message was but a Relation, not a Challenge.

But Rankin was observed to falter from what he affirmed before Dr. Reeves and others, viz. to have carried the Challenge, and that Ramsey could not deny it; so that Rankin was threatened not to accuse Ramsey, Gilbert Seaton deposed, that Ramsey said, he had made it to come to Rea's Ears, to have ended this Business without troubling the King or Lords.

Then Dr. Duck summon'd up all the Proceedings, observing, that formerly, in the presence of the King, Ramsey had with deep Protestations and Oath, denied the Time, Place, and Matter, which he now confesseth; and though then not examined by Oath, yet in France and other Countreys, the very holding up of the hand is an Oath; and so Tertullian sayes of the Romans; and Ramsey confessing part, he might be guilty of the whole Charge.

Dr. Eden said, That Rea was not a competent Witness against Ramsey, though for the King; for he was Particeps Criminis, Capitalis Inimicus: for the first, his Bill made him so, for if Ramsey spake Treason, so did Rea. For the second, it appeared by Rea's violent prosecution; and if all failed, his Sword must make it good; and so the Defendant was not bound to Answer, nor to accept the Challenge unless he will, to which he is so willing.

But Dr. Duck said, these Reasons did not Currere quatuor pedibus; some of the Conspirators with Cataline, were Revealers of the Treason, and allowed as Witnesses.

Dr. Reeves concluded, That although some of the Lord Rea's Witnesses did not affirm what they might, it would encourage him to set a sharper Edge upon his Sword when he entred the Lists; and that the God of Right would so weaken the heart of Ramsey, that it should fail him when he took his Sword in hand.

The Holidays of Christmas drawing nigh, the Court Ordered, That either Party might repair to Sir Henry Martin, and possess him with further proofs out of these Witnesses already examined, but of no other; and so Adjourned the Court till Monday the Ninth of January; when after some small Debates, but no further Matter or Proofs, the Business was briefly determined, to be referred to the King's Pleasure.

Which came to this Account, That Hamilton's power with the King, got all Favour for Ramsey, and was well rewarded in due time; and

Anno 1631. Rea having done the Duty of a Loyal Subject, left the Court and Kingdom, and returned to his Command in Sweden: but this Story, though tedious, will enlighten us further to the Truths of the Scotish Affairs hereafter.

I have seen a Memorial of the Lord Chief Justice Whitlock's, concerning this Tryal.

Judges-opinions concerning Rea &
Ramsay.

Presently after my Return from this Circuit, my self and the rest of the Judges of the King's Bench, were sent for by the Lord Keeper, to London, to advise with him about the Affairs of his Majesty. We came thither on Monday, Aug. 22. except the Chief Justice, who was sick. The Matter consulted of, was to give our Opinion concerning the conference had in Germany between certain Scotish Gentlemen, about the making the Marquess of Hamilton the Head of a Party against the King and his Kingdoms of England and Scotland.

The Lord Rea, a Scotish Baron, did Impeach Ramsay and Meldrum for moving him to this Conspiracy: They denied it punctually, and no Witness could be produced. Ramsay, a Soldier, offered to clear himself by Combat, that he was Innocent; and the Appellant accepted of his Offer. The King was desirous it should be put upon a Duel; and we were consulted with, First, What the Offence was? Secondly, Where the Trial might be?

We all with the Lord Keeper, were of the Opinion, First, That it was an high and horrible Treason, if that in the Examinations were found true. Secondly, That the Trial might be by an Appeal of Treason, upon which the Combat might be joyned: But the King must make a Constable, durante beneplacito; for the Marshal could not take the Appeal without him: That it must be after the manner of the Civil Law, and we were not to meddle in it. Likewise we were of Opinion that this Proceeding before the Constable and Marshal was, as it was before the Statute of 35. Hen. 8. cap. 2. and that Statute devised a way how to try these Foreign Treasons in England, but did not take away the other. We were also of Opinion that the Stat. of 1 Mar. 1. 10. did not take it away nor intend it: And that a Conviction in this Appeal was no corruption of Blood or Forfeiture at the Common Law, See Doughties Case in Coke's Commentaries, fol. 75. Sect. Escuage.

Sir Henry Vane was dispatched Ambassador about this time to the two Northern Crowns, and arrives at Gluckstadt on the Elb, and being on his Journey to the King of Sweden's Camp, his Majesty of Great Britain did sometime before receive an Account from the King of Sweden himself, of the great Overthrow he had given to Tilly at Leipsick; it was by Letter, as followeth:

Gustavus Adolphus, &c. Since we are satisfied of the constant Propensity Your Serene Majesty hath for Us and the Publick Good, and that which happened to Us successfully, and for the Good of endangered Christianity, that Your Serene Majesty did also bear a part therein, We would not omit the certifying Your Majesty of the memorable Victory, which Divine Goodness afforded Us. After the Elector of Saxony had joyn'd his Forces with Ours, We marched against the Enemy with both Armies, and the Enemies Army, under General Tilly, opposed us, Septemb. 7. having drawn out all his Forces a Mile from the Fortress at Leipsick. The Battel being begun, the business was briskly managed on both sides for the space of four hours and upward, till at last, by the singular Blessing of God, the Enemies Army, by the indefatigable Valour of our Men, was put to flight, and dissipated, we pursuing them to the very Walls of the City. The Enemy left us their Canon and Baggage. The General retired into the Bishoprick of Halbestadt, having received a Wound; they whom we pursued, being left to our Souldiery and Mercy. Many of the Enemy lay dead in the Field where the Battel was fought; and among them, the Serjeant Major General, and other Commanders in the Army. Among some thousands of Prisoners, the Duke of Holstein was one, and some others of the most eminent quality. The praise of which Successes is due to Almighty God, and ought deservedly to be attributed to his Goodness; and We hope, not only the so much desired wishes of so many thousand People of restoring Religion and Liberty, but also the facility of setting up the afflicted Cause of the King of Bohemia, shall now manifestly appear. We do not therefore distrust but that Your Serene Majesty will prosecute this Victory, not only with Joy and Affection, but also make use of so fair an opportunity, and that it will be Your Royal Care, to judge of all things henceforward to be conferr'd upon, and to consult of those things which relate to Christianity, and their Safety by Your Heroick Counsels. We will not any farther trouble You, but commend Your Serene Majesty to the Divine Protection, for the happy increase of all things.

Dated at Hall of the Saxons, the 15th. of September, 1631.

Your Serene Majesty's

Good Brother and Allie,

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS.

And for a Particular Account of that great and Signal Battel, take it from the Relation of the King of Sweden's Marshal, Gustavus Horne; which was as followeth:

AS soon as the King of Sweden had resolved to give assistance to the Duke of Saxony, whose Countrey the Enemy had already invaded, upon the Third of September, he passed his Army over the Bridge at Wittenburgh, and joyned himself with the Armies of the Dukes of Saxony and Brandenburg, at Tuben, the 5th. ditto, where first they deliberated and consulted in what manner they might best encounter the Enemy, and whether it were wisdom to bring it to a Battel presently, or by delay of time to break and weaken the Power of the Enemy. His Majesty was of opinion not to set all upon Fortune, much less to put their whole State in danger by the event of an uncertain Battel; yet for all that, the Duke of Saxony insisted still for a Battel, saying, That there was no other means to drive the Enemy out of his Country, much less was it possible that both those Armies could be furnished with all Necessaries, especially because the Enemy hath incorporated the best part of the Country. And therefore he thought fit to approach towards the Enemy at Lipsick,

Lipsick, and to encounter him with all their Might. Whereupon the King, with the said Duke, upon the 6th. of September, marched with their Armies within two Miles of Lipsick; which Town Count Tilly by Composition had taken in, as also the Castle, both which, by reason of bloody threatening, submitted themselves to Tilly: Whereupon we followed the 7th. ditto, and met the Enemy a Mile from Lipsick. Notwithstanding the Enemy had both the Wind and higher Ground of us for his advantage, yet for all that we skirmished very lustily with each other in good order, both with Ours, as also with the Saxon's Army. The King's Army upon the right hand, and the Saxon's Army employed upon the left hand. The King's Army was divided into the Avant-guard of the right Wing, which the King himself commanded; and there stood also the most and best Armed Horsemen, interlaced with certain Musketers, in the Reer-guard of the said Wing, Commanded by General Bannier. In the Vaunt-guard of the Battel stood four Squadrons of Pikes and Musketers, who were Commanded by these Chiefs, Monsieur Duivell, Acke, Oxenstern, Erentruiter, Hardt and Winckle. In the Reer-guard of these Battels, there stood three other Squadrons, the Count of Thurn, Herbrun, and Virsdum; and after these, two Regiments of Horse upon the left Wing, over whom his Majesty appointed Gustavus Horn. The rest of the Horse were divided into the right Wing, the Avaunt-guard and the Reer-guard mingled with Musketers. In this Order was the whole Army set, so that we got half-wind of the Enemy; yet they kept the Advantage still of the higher ground, where he had planted his Artillery. We marching thus in their sight, through a foul Passage; the Enemy did some harm with his great Peeeces on our Troops, chiefly among those that were with Gustavus Horn upon his left hand. And hereupon with his left Wing, (where the greatest strength of his Horse was) fell upon our left Wing. But whilst they were thus busied to gain Ground more and more of us, and to get the Wind, as they thought; the Horse and the Foot-Regiments of the Duke of Holstein retreated from the Battalia; and the right Wing perceiving that the Commanded Musketers of our right Wing were mingled among the Horse, and had hard Entertainment of the Enemy, they drew more to their left hand; and so the Enemy Charged more upon the Reserve of our right Wing, than upon the Vaunt-guard, which his Majesty caused very seasonably to be seconded with some Troops, in such manner, that the Enemies left Wing with little ado was broken and put to flight. The Enemies Battel, consisting of all his Foot, being divided into four great Spanish Battalions of sixteen Regiments, upon this marched from the Hill, together with their Horse. But in regard they were so annoyed with our Artillery which were placed upon our left Wing, they so turned their Order, that most of them fell upon the Duke of Saxon's Army, to their disadvantage; but all their Horse fell upon our left Wing, who were soon dispersed and put to flight. And contrarily the Foot-men of the Duke of Saxony almost fled the Field; yet whilst the Enemy pursued the Saxons, our left Wing Charged into their Flank, and upon the two Troops of Reserve; and in this posture we fought long and lost many of our Horse. Yet finally, after Gustavus Horn had soundly Charged the mies Battel with that Regiment of Gotland-Horse which his Majesty sent him for an Assistance and Succour, together with the Commanded Musketers which had been placed in the left Wing by the King, so that they began to grow very thin, and were diminished; their Battel presently broke, and they were all put to flight, excepting four Regiments; who, by reason of the Smoak and Dust, were so shadowed from our sight, that they saved themselves.

After this Defeat, his Majesty Marched to Hall, and took in the Town and Castle; then marched forward, and took in Pesewald and Querfurt. The Duke of Saxony marched towards Bohemia. His Majesty took in Erfurt, Gota, Hamelburg, Mulbosen, and Werburch. The 20th. of October his Majesty came to Franken, took Carelstadt, with the Bishopricks of Wittsburgh and Bamburgh. The Landgrave of Hessen took Fulda, Vach, and Fritzlaer; he came into Westphalia, and took Paterborn, with some other Places; Rostock rendred upon Composition to the Duke of Mecklenburgh. The King's Forces took in Dunckenspil, Nortlingen, Rotenburgh. Magdenburgh was strongly besieged. His Majesty took in Hanaw, Frankford and Hougt. The Saxons took in Glockow, and defeated the Emperor's men by Crosten. The Count of Thurn took in Prague. The King's Men beat the Emperor's Men by Warheim; defeated also the Souldiers of the League by Swynfurt, and also by Elleboghen. His Majesty passed the River of Rhine, and took in Mentz, Worms, Oppenheim, and almost all the Towns of the Lower Palatinate.

Much about this time there happened some Differences in the University of Oxon, about the five controverted Points; and several Divines, viz. Mr. Hodges, Fellow of Exeter College, Mr. Thorne, Fellow of Baliol College, and Mr. Ford of Magdalen-Hall, having in their Sermons at St. Maries, Preached against the Remonstrant Opinions, terming them Pelagians and Semi-Pelagians, against the purport of His Majesties Declaration; whereby the entreating of those Points in Popular Sermons, were straitly inhibited; they were Convented before Dr. Smith Warden of Wadham, then Vice-Chancellor, for the Offences aforesaid; and they appealing from the Vice-Chancellor, to the Proctors, Mr. Bruch Fellow of Brazen-Nose-College, and Mr. Doughty Fellow of Merton College, they received their Appeals, as if their Crimes had not been Perturbatio Pacis; hereupon the Vice-Chancellor complains to His Majesty, then at Woodstock, where the whole Matter was heard before the King and Council, Aug. 23. 1631. And the three Preachers before-named were banished the University, and the Proctors were enjoyn'd for receiving their Appeals contra formam Statuti, to resign their Offices in the Convocation-House; and Dr. Pruden Rector of Exeter College, and Dr. Wilkinson Principal of Magdalen-Hall, were reprov'd for abetting the said Preachers: But Mr. Hodges afterwards publicly Recanted in St. Maries, and did acknowledge, That he fell upon the Delivery of those Points, which by His Majesty's Royal Injunction were forbidden him to meddle with at all; and particularly did acknowledge that he let fall some Passages, which might be taken to the disparagement of the Government of the Church, in making Erroneous and Heretical Opinions the way to Preferment; craving the Pardon 1631. Pardon of the University in general, and more especially of the most Honourable Chancellor of that University.

Anno

But Mr. Ford utterly refused the Recantation enjoyned him; and afterwards being likely to be chosen Lecturer at Plimouth, a Letter was procured from His Majesty to stop his Preferment.

We left, as you may remember, the Marquess Hamilton's Army in their Quarters about Frankfort on the Oder; His Majesty of Sweden excusing himself, that he had not according to his Promise, sent him the Forces to make his way to him to Lipsick; for that he should weaken his Army by so doing. As things thus stood, he was Ordered with Bannier the Swede, to advance and besiege Magdenburgh, held then by Count Mansfield for the Emperor; which Place having been much straitned by their Siege, Papenheim haltes to the Relief of the Town (they being before in Parley) Bannier, contrary to the Opinion of Sir Jacob Astley, who thought they might very well have fought Papenheim, and made a safe Retreat, draws off the Army, whereby the Imperialists got into the Town, and removed Souldiers, Ammunition, Ordnance, and all; though afterwards for his want of Draught-Horses, all the Great Guns were not taken along with him; hereupon the Marquess again is Ordered into Quarters near Halberstadt.

Sir Henry being, as before we intimated, on his Journey to the King of Sweden, had received these Instructions from His Majesty of Great Britain:

1. By all means to beget and maintain a good Understanding betwixt the two Northern Crowns.
2. To procure all the Protestant-Princes and States to joyn with the Swedes.
3. To make a firm Peace twixt the Swede and the Pole. And, if need should, to enter into a more strict League with the Swede, if he should see occasion.

Our Ambassador was now at Erford; from whence he writes the Letter following to the Marquess of Hamilton.

My Lord,

The first of mine which this Bearer will give you, Lordship, will tell you the extreme regret I have had since my coming into these Parts, that I could not have the honour to hear from your Lordship; and, I fear, hear of you. I received your Lordship's of the 20th, delivered me this Evening by one I sent to Lipsick, my self being hindered from going that way, in regard the Enemy lay between Brunswick and Lipsick, so as I could not pass without danger, which causeth me to take the way of Erford. To morrow I set forward toward Wirtzburg, which his Majesty of Sweden hath assigned me for my Audience; which as soon as I have had, I shall dispatch an Express to your Lordship, and be glad to receive your Lordship's particular Commands, of which I shall be vigilant and careful, as if they concerned my self. I hope yet some one of your Lordship will overtake me before I shall see the King; for it will be Thursday before I shall arrive at this Court, and I presume it will be four or five days before he will give me Audience.

Erford, Oct. 27. 1631.

He afterward passing through Franconia, came to Wirtzburg, and afterwards to Frankfort on the Main; where on the 29th. of January he had Audience of the Swede; the Substance whereof followeth.

The Ambassador at his first Audience with the King of Sweden, on January the 29th. according to our Style, told the King, That he had come sooner, but that His Majesty's Command staid him at Mentz. The King bid the Ambassador welcom, and told him, He heard the King of Bohemia was upon his way to come up to him; and asked him, when he thought he should be here? To which the Ambassador answered, he thought to morrow. At which the King started, and said, it could not be: The Ambassador replied, he thought yes; for he had received such Advertisement from the States Agent at Collen; and said further, the King of Bohemia was come in conformity to his Majesty's desire unto him; and that he hoped his Majesty would take his Cause actually in hand, according to his publick Manifesto, whereby he would acquire to himself much Honour, because none was so much wronged and oppress'd as he. The King replied, he would first make an Alliance with the King of Bohemia, and would be also glad that the Alliance between himself and the King of Great Britain should proceed; and asked the Ambassador, whether he had plenary power? and whether the King of Great Britain would make the Confederation personal with him, or not? and whether he would be content to give Money and not Men? To the first he answered, he had plenary Power; and that for the Personal Confederation between the two Crowns, his Master was content to accept it; and for Money in lieu of sending Men, he thought an expedient might also be found for that, provided his Majesty would undertake the restitution of the King of Bohemia unto his Estates and Dignities, and not to lay down his Arms untill both were effected. All but this Condition he liked well; but to that he answered, he could not do that without having War with France and Bavaria; and that in the late Treaty between France and the Catholic League concerning the Neutrality, there was an Article; but as for that of Bavaria, it should be remitted to a future Treaty between the Kings of Britain and France; and for what he held of the Spaniards, he was willing to return. The Ambassador answered, That that Article, and all others in that Treaty, was as much to the prejudice of the King of Bohemia as could be, and consequently to his Master's Ends; and he wished in the end it might not prove disadvantageous to the prosperity of his Affairs, by being too long amused, which could not be but advantageous to his Enemies, and of dangerous consequence to himself and the Cause; that for his part he did not think it counselable for his Master to make an Alliance with his Majesty of Sweden, upon the hopes of a future and contingent Treaty between Britain, France and Bavaria; but if his Majesty would oblige himself to perform the Conditions he proposed, he the Ambassador was ready to begin the Treaty to morrow. And the King replied, that he could not stipulate to make War upon Sweden at this present, but it might be hereafter; and if the King of Great Britain would follow

1631. follow his Counsel, he thought it might either be done by War or Treaty, and said, if he had concluded before the arrival of the French, he could then have undertaken War upon Bavaria, but it was not for him to undertake against the House of Austria, France and the Leagues, if he could by means of the Neutrality lay France and the Catholick League by.

The Ambassador answered; 'For our coming too late, there was no fault to be justly imputed to us; for had his Majesty of Sweden demanded reasonable Conditions, the Alliance had been concluded; but Leagues, and Business of so great importance, could not but have slow motions; yet he besought his Majesty of Swedeland to give him leave to commemorate the Proceedings of his Master towards him since his Majesty's coming into Germany, viz. That he had permitted him to make as many Levies of his Subjects as he had desired; That he had since sent the Marquess of Hamilton to him with a Royal Assistance, and so opportunely, as it could not be denied but that the Marquess Landed his Army at a seasonable time, to the amusement of the Emperor, and the encouragement of the Confederate Protestant Princes, as appeared by the Effects that followed thereupon, by the speedy uniting of their Army under his Command. And that though his Swedish Majesty, next under God, was the only immediate Instrument to whom the Glory of this great Revolution was to be attributed; yet it could not be denied, but that the Subjects of Great Britain had done him great and remarkable Service, both in these and his former Wars, and that these were neither to be concealed nor forgotten, nor the real Assistance now sent unto him.

His Majesty of Sweden acknowledged, 'That the King of Great Britain had proceeded with him as a Friend; That he was a wise and virtuous Prince, and that none could wish more Prosperity to his Person and Affairs than he did, and that he would do his best to assist him in the Business of the Palatinate: but he would then have him follow his Advice; That he had too long depended upon the Spanish Treaty, which was a fault, and had prejudiced us much; That nothing was to be expected from them but Parols. The Ambassador replied, If that were a fault, it behoved him to be wary in his Negotiation, not to make an Alliance that might be disadvantageous to his Master, either in Honour or Judgment; That whatsoever should be the Event, he doubted not but that God would bless both his Counsels and his Actions. His Majesty of Sweden replied; 'That for the present he could not stipulate to make War with Bavaria, though he intended not to let him escape; for that it could not be but of great advantage, if he could secure the Catholicks; which he was in a fair way to effect: for according to his Articles delivered unto Charnassay, the Electors of Triers and Cologne had accepted of the Neutrality. The Ambassador asked, Whether his Majesty had received any Act of their own? He said, No, but the Marquess of Preissay had assured him thereof; that he had not yet heard of Bavaria, neither could he yet say any thing thereunto, until either Charnassay or Horn, whom he had sent into France, were returned.

His Majesty of Sweden then said, 'He would make him two Propositions; which were, He would either oblige himself to restore the King of Bohemia what the Spaniard held, and Treat with France and Bavaria for the restitution of Car. 7. what he possesses; which, if he would not restore, He would then undertake a War with him, so the King would enter into an Alliance with him against the Spaniards, if he should attack him in any of his Dominions. He answered, That was a Point of so great weight, as he durst not take upon him to make any present Answer; but thought that his next from England would give some light.

The Result of all was, That upon the King of Bohemia's Arrival, it was resolved, That the Chancellor of the Swedes, and himself should enter into Treaty.

In this Audience he spake of 12000 Men to be allowed by the King of Great Britain, and 25000 l. a Month, which he demanded for the Maintenance of them; but he insisted not thereupon: and therefore he held not fit to mention it in this Discourse, but by way of Memorial.

He insisted also upon the establishing of the Lutheran Religion in the Palatinate, and the King of Bohemia's Countries.

The Ambassador transmitted to Mr. Secretary Cooke the Passages at this Audience at Frankfurt, to be imparted to his Master the King of Great Britain.

Papenheim, as before we intimated, having quitted Magdeburgh, the King of Sweden placeth a Garrison there, under the Lord Falkenberg Chamberlain of his Household, their Number 4000, to which 2000 more were added by the Citizens, who were Lutherans, of the Augustane Confession; It is an Arch-Bishoprick, now in the hands of Christian William, a Prince of the Electoral House of Brandenburg, who held it as Administrator. This Archbishop was Primate of Germany, and a Prince of great power before the Reformation. The present Prince not willing to part with the Church-Lands, was put in the Ban Imperial, and proscribed; the Town it self rather favoured their Administrator, than the Emperor; refusing to quarter any of his Souldiers in their City, they pretending the Liberty of a Hans-Town; and now they openly joyn with their Administrator, under the favourable Conjunction of the King of Sweden's Arms; the Prince of Saxon Lauenburgh joyning also in the Union. The Country of Magdeburgh it self is situated upon the West of Brandenburg, from which the River Elb parts it; upon the South it touches upon Saxony; upon the West joyning with Brunswick and Halberstadt; and upon the North of it, is the Elb again, with the two Dutchies of Lunenburgh and Lauenburgh; the Country hath the Name from the Chief City Magdeburgh, which is one of the ancient Hans-Towns of the Empire, and that honoured with an Archbishop's See, and be the Primate of all Germany, as before is said.

On the 12th, of April, Tilly appears before the City, draws up in Bataillia, making as if he had an intention to attack the Toll-House, a strong Fort on the Elb; but as yet attempts no more than to beat the Out-guards into the City. The 13th. he with Papenheim, Savelli, &c. begins the place, and having done so, plants twelve peeces of Canon against the Bridge over the Elb, making several hundreds of great Shot against it, designing to prevent any Communication between the Toll-House and the City; but he was prevented in this Attempt, for that the Governor planting his great Guns also upon the said Fort, dismounted Tilly's nance, and this not succeeding (as the Dutch Ordinary gives the Relation; and Mr. Rushworth from him) he falls pell-mell at once upon both these Places, giving eight several Assaults unto them; but the Lord Faulkenbergh with four whole Cannon double Charged with Stones, Old Iron, &c. about 12 a Clock at night made them to give over: some Prisoners, the next day, which were taken; confess there were 2000 Men that day slain of the Assailants. This Toll-House was a notable piece of Fortification, built on the other side the Elb. To this Tilly now turns all his Batter-ry; here falls he to Mining, and all to no purpose.

On the 15th. both by Land and Water he lays at it; but three hundred Musketers being by him sent in Boats, to assail it on the Water-side, were by those of the Fort driven ashore, and drowned, or slain by the Citizens; 200 also at the same time lost their Lives on the Land side.

Now was News brought into Tilly's Camp, of the King of Sweden being upon his March, for the relieving of the Besieged. A Council of War thereupon being called, some Troops are sent towards Wittenberg, and the Dessanbridge, there to stave off the King's Forces; the News of his coming again slackning, April 21. to work Tilly falls again; and giving on upon the Toll-house, that notable Piece is forsaken by the Magdenburghers, who, at their Retreat, offering to fire it, the Place was rescued by the Imperialists. Upon this were all the Forts on that side of the Elb, either taken, or given over; the Bridge also by Tilly burnt, and Approaches made unto the City, which was from thence immediately Battered. Now were the Besieged forced to burn their own New Town, where 2000 Imperialists immediately lodging themselves, fell to Mining, and shooting Granadoes into the City.

The 26th. by a Sally out upon these in the new Town, are about a hundred slain; the Mines do no hurt, until one Farniback, a notable Engineer, takes them in hand, who saps himself under the Town-Ditches to the very hard Walls, which he much shakes by springing the Mine: in reward of which Service and some others, the Emperor makes him a Colonel, granting him a Commission to raise two new Regiments.

May 2. the Imperialists in the New City, having suddenly in the Night-time cast up a Battery, shrewdly punish the Besieged.

May 7. General Tilly comes himself into the New-Town, together with Papenheim, then General of the Ordnance, and the Count of Scomberg, Serjeant Major General, and a great shew of Ladders is made, as if there were a purpose of a General Scalado. Tilly's hope was, that the Town would presently parly upon sight of these Preparations; but they taking the Alarm at it, instantly Man all their Bulwarks.

The Eighth day is spent in shooting at a certain high Tower, from which the Town-Cannon did much plague the Besiegers. This day Tilly sends a Trumpeter to Summon the Town; they send another to him, signifying their willingness to yield, might but their Administrator still enjoy his Bishoprick, and the Town their Privileges. This not consented unto.

The Ninth day, Papenheim attempting to scale the Walls, is by a Sally beaten off; in which some of the Enemies Mines being discovered, are by Counter-Mines in the Town defeated.

That day another Trumpeter is sent into the Town; towards Evening there was much bulling observed, and Carriages to and again in the Enemies Leaguer: yea, they were perceived to rise with their whole Army (as the Town thought) and to March to Ortersleben, half a Mile from them. All that night was the Lord Faulkenberg upon the Walls; who, perceiving in the Morning no danger of Assault, calls the City together into the State-House, to give Answer to the Enemies Trumpet; yea, so secure they were, that the over-watch'd Souldiers are suffered to go from their Courts of Guard, to take some Sleep; and the Townsmen were gone to Church, to give God Thanks for their Deliverance from the Siege. Thus, the Walls being found empty, about seven on the Tuesday Morning, May the 10th. Papenheim, having given the Word Jesu Maria to his Souldiers, and a white String about their Arms, makes towards the Heydecker-Port; where having thrown Turfs and Faggots into the Ditch, to fill it up to the middle, the Imperialists run with Scaling-Ladders upon their backs, the Walls are in a trice mounted, the Town entred, and the Souldiers fall to killing. Faulkenberg, now flying in upon them, beats them back to the very Walls again; but a Port being by this time opened, and the Enemies Horse let in, the Valiant Faulkenberg is slain with a Shot, the Administrator hurt, both in the Thigh and Head, and so taken. Whilst all thus goes to wrack, a mighty Fire breaks out (how none knows) and it being a great windy day, all was on the sudden become one great Flame; the whole Town was within twelve hours space utterly turned to Ashes, excepting 139 Houses, six goodly Churches are burnt; the Cathedral, together with St. Maries Church and Cloister, were, by the Monks and Souldiers diligence, preserved. Twenty thousand People at least were here killed, burned and smothered; whereof 6000 were drowned in the Elb. Tilly's Walloons would give quarter to few; and the Crabatts never use to give or beg any.

May the 12th. came Tilly into the Town; and finding some Hundreds of Women and Children in the Church, he gives them their Lives, and some Bread to maintain them; next day he forbids pillaging.

Upon Sunday, May the 15th. he caused the Cathedral, stain'd with the Blood of the slain, to be new Consecrated, and cleansed from the Stench of the dead Bodies, and other Nastiness.

We before told you, That ancient Statute of making Knights, was now put in execution; at which, afterwards exceptions were taken; and in regard James Maleverer Esquire, of the County of Tork, and others in other Counties, were proceeded against upon the said Statute, the afore said Mr. Maleverer and others, became Petitioners afterwards in Parliament, for the recalling of that Statute; whereby Proceedings against Defaulters were taken off, and the Statute repealed; as afterwards it was.

About this time the King erected the New Corporation of Sope-makers, under the Great Seal of England: The persons first named were Sir Henry Compton Knight of the Bath, Henry Gilford, Nicholas Fortescue, Basil Brook, Edw. Stradling, Richard Weston, William Ford, Sir James Banks, Knight; George Gage, Francis Townly, Beverly Bretton, Thomas Jones, and Thomas Russel, Esquires, and their Successors; and to remain as a Society or Body Corporate, by by the Name of the Governor, Assistants, and Society of Sope-makers, and that they shall have the same to them and their Successors.

1631. Giving them and their Successors power to erect and admit Persons into their Society, and to purchase Lands and Hereditaments to them and their Successors, in Fee and Perpetuity, for Life or years, and dispose of the same as they shall please.

And the King by the said Patent doth nominate and appoint Sir Richard Weston Knight, to be the first Governor of the said Society; and the said Sir Henry Compton, and others, to be the Assistants.

And for the Encouragement of the said Corporation, all Sope-Boylers are prohibited the making of Sope, who do not incorporate with the Corporation; a very considerable Revenue of 8*l.* per Tun, was ordered to be yearly paid into the Exchequer, and the Company paid by way of Advance 10000*l.*

1632. In this Year happened the great Fire on the North part of London-Bridge, part whereof was since repaired, and that very ornamentally, being a good Pattern for the Re-building of the Residue. And now His Majesty was visited with the Small Pox, which were at this time more than ordinary mortal; so that the Prayers of his good Subjects were every where offered up to the Divine Majesty for His Recovery; who in great Mercy to the Kingdom, restored Him to health again, without any Marks or Blemish of usual Spots to others in the like Distemper.

At this time was sent hither Ambassador from Sigismund King of Poland and Swedeland, Ossolinski Count Palatine of Sendomiria; of whose Negotiation and the Reasons of his Embassie, Mr. Sanderson gives us a very large and exact Account. 'How that the Affairs of Europe were now on all sides involved in the miserable effects of a cruel War; but more particularly in the Eastern parts thereof Sigismund King of Poland and Swedeland, the Bulwark of Christendom against the Turks Tyranny, had been hertofore enforced to sue for Succours of Neighbour-Princes by several Embassies; of King James, by Ossolinski Count Palatine of Sendomiria, who so well performed his Employment by his eloquent Orations and excellent Behaviour, that he procured from thence two thousand Men and Money, Voluntiers for the Guard of that King's person.

This Count was initiated a Civilian, bred up in Court to become Chancellor, and now a Commander in this War; certainly a man of singular Merit, and to boot, very handsom, and of most obliging Demeanor, which took with the King, and all our Court of high concernment, to chuse a person proper for this Errand.

And because the Quarrel came to mighty execution of both parties, I may not omit the occasion of much concerning those miserable Neighbour-Nations bordering the Turks Dominions, especially the Pole, who (it seemed) in those days deserved better of all Princes than to be worried out of his own Inheritance, by a Christian, now of late, 1655, more cruel now than the Turk was then; and so by this Entrance we shall bring the brief History to our time.

Mahomet, the Author of their Alcoran, enjoined the Race of Otomans, two special things to propagate the Empire, by some mighty Attempt of War; the other, to glorifie their Religion by some wondrous Action in Peace, or stupendous Structure of Amazement to the World.

For the first; Their Territories extend to the Asian and African Shores; from Trebizond, the bottom of the Black Sea, to Argier, neighbouring the Straights of Gibraltar, 6000 English Miles; besides the possession of Greece and her Islands, with this Intrusion into Hungary; and have Auxiliary Friendship of the Great Tartar Chrim: from whose Ancestors Tamberlain proceeded, who thought himself the Turks Scourge; yet of late the Tartar takes Affinity from the first Scythian Ottoman, and if the direct Line fail, he challengeth the proximity of Succession; for which purpose he keeps Correspondence with the Grand Signior, assisting him sometime with one hundred thousand Tartars; by whose, and his own Multitudes he hath prevailed against Jews and Christians, possessing Jerusalem in Asia, Grand Cair in Africa, and Constantinople in Europe.

And for the Second; Their admired Mosques (Churches) of Ostentation, Works of Charity, and observant Holiness (and Piousness) demonstrate not only their Opinion of a Deity, but their Obedience also to their Mahumetan Constitutions, employing their Time and Wealth to merit the more of the Joys of Paradise, as they augment their Piety upon Earth. So it seems by that wonderful History of Solyman the Magnificent, and the fair Roxellana, contriving her Manumission, and obtaining to be dismissed under a dissimulated Sanctity of erecting a Mosque in Honour of that Prophet. The Principal Mufti (Church-men) with the Doctors of their Alcoran have greater access to the Emperor than either the Viziers or the Bashaws, and they more awed by them, than by the Revolts and Mutinies of the Tumultuary Janizaries, by whom alone the Atlas of his Monarchy is maintained secure from any daring Attempts to disjoint that Frame.

But the Occasion of the Polish War was thus; Whilst Sir Tho. Glover was Ambassador at Constantinople, one Jaspardo Gratiano, a mean man, his Drogoman (or Interpreter) born in Austria, and the Emperor's Subject, and heretofore Servant to the Prince of Moldavia, dispossessed of his Inheritance by Contrivement, both of them became imprisoned in the Black Tower, for complaining against the Vizier, to take part with the Princes Competitor; but both of them escaped out of Prison, and became Suitors to most of the Christian Princes, and here in England; and had relief of Ten thousand Dollars, by Credit of our Merchants, and so made his great Virtue umbragious with the Malignity of Time, and covertly got from Venice to Constantinople again; renewing his Complaint by favour of Glover: yet the Issue was, an Edict of the Grand Signior to establish the Usurper in his Possession.

Some time after, Gratiano finding Glover's Fortunes (which he counted) to be obscured, he went another way to wind up the Pullies of his own Advancement, suddenly so auspicious, as to be sent with Letters to the Emperor, whether by betraying his Princes Secrets, or by his Brother, a Renegado Chamse, in some account with the Vizier, and his Sister a Pilgrim Prisoner, reserved for the Turks Use, or a Bashaw's Concubine, and returns of his Errand at the time that

Glover

Anno 1632. Glover was called home, and Sir Paul Pindar confirmed Ambassador there, who had been Consul at Petrof and Aleppo, and many years conversant in those parts; a person of so much Merit, that his worthy Memory may give grace to History, as we shall have occasion after to mention.

But Gratiano returns, and instantly is employed by the Vizier into Moldavia, a fresh Adversary to the unfortunate Prince his Master, who was there mischievously imprisoned amongst them. This Villain deals treacherously against the King of Poland, certifying underhand to the Grand Signior Achmat, that he supported the Pyrates of the Black Sea, and the intestine Broils of Moldavia, in favour of the late Prince and his Successors; which enraged Achmat into Threats, and with some IncurSIONS upon his Territories, but with no main Army as yet; but he engaged the Mufti, as his last Will, to mind his Son and Successor herein, who afterwards brought forth the Fruits of his Vengeance to act that part, which Achmat's short Life could not effect.

This Achmat came to his Empire at fifteen years of Age, and until thirty surfeited on Ease and variety of Luxury; in heat of which, he resolves to murder his Brother Mustapha, a Prince of wondrous hopes, as yet reserved by Supernatural Providence from the common Custom of being strangled; for the night before the period of his Destruction, a fearful Vision diverted his purpose; which wrought so powerfully upon him, that the very next day he sent for the Mufti and Schander-Bashaw, a person of high esteem and power in the Empire, and now delegated General against the Polonians; and with them was brought into his presence his Brother Mustapha, whom he discharged of his Mutes (the Officers of Death) allows him a Guard of Capuchins, and appoints him a Caska, or Banqueting-House.

Brother, said he, The Law of Mahomet, and Policy of this Government destined you a Sacrifice for security of Succession to our own Children, lest we should leave a hand uncut off, which might in time cast defiance in the face of an Emperor; but I am told in my Dreams, that there is no Religion in Bloody Revenge; therefore thou shalt live and Reign, when the Thread of my Life is spun; even now winding up on the Wheel of Destiny: Remember the Ottoman Glory; let it be thy Virtue to be thankful, and my Fortune to impart this Grace and Benefit to a worthy person; and instantly sends for the Vizier and Bashaws, adjuring them to the Ratification of this his Will and Pleasure, though he had Children; and so died a short time after. Mustapha is forthwith advanced to the Diadem; which he enjoyed a while undisturbed, until Schander-Bashaw, perceiving his own Power in some Diminution under this gallant Prince, plots his Designs to be Vizier, to Depose Mustapha, and to set up the Son of Achmat, especially the loving Osman of Nine years old, and asks him, if he be not the Eldest Son of his Father? disputes with the Bashaws their too hasty Enthroning of Mustapha, confers with the Vizier and principal Mufti, to depose the other, and set up Osman, giving a Largeſs to the Janizaries, sends for divers Casawcks and Tymorits; and all things prepared, brings forth Osman, and presents him to the People; with wonderful applause they invest him in the Robes, and proclaim him Emperor, imprison Mustapha with a Guard of Capuchins, and instantly proposes the War against Polonia, and remembers them all of the Charge of Achmat, to revenge their Darings, to defend Moldavia and the House of Austria; for the Emperors of Germany banding against the Peace of Europe, would be an occasion to advance their Design, and so the War was determined, and Osman to go in person.

But first, let us Story out the State of Poland: About the Year 1609. one Stephen, living then with the Vizier at Constantinople, pretending Right to the Principality of Moldavia, and either by Favour, or Bribes (feldom asunder) had Assistance of Twenty thousand Turks; whereby he prevailed against the Sons of the late Prince of Moldavia, whom they barbarously murdered, and slew their Uncle Simeon; and because the Sons of Jerſay were reputed Bastards, the King of Poland, by Contract with the Turks, had the Naming of a Successor, and elected Constantine, the younger Son to the Vayvod; which so displeased Mahomet Bashaw, designed to rectifie their Disorders, that he slew Constantine, and set up another of his own Faction; which Indignity to the Pole, caused that King to assist the distressed People.

These Wars lasted till Sigismund King of Sweden was Elected King of Poland; a Warlike Prince against the Muscovites, and a continual Friend to the Moldavians; so that about the year 1618. the time of the Blazing Comet in the Heavens, Osman Mustered up a wondrous Army of Tartars, the natural Enemies of Europe; to them were united the Countries of Dacia, Servia, Bulgaria, Illyria, Thracia, Epirus, and the Tributary Provinces of Christians themselves, forced thereto in fear of more Slavery. They march to the Fields of Dacia and Bulgaria, where the Polacks, with some Assistance of the Russ, encounter them, and with the Fortune of Noble Sigismund and his excellent Son, in all their Battels to have the Victory.

And in 1620. they gave the Tartars and Turks an Overthrow, as they transported their Army over the River, that their Numerous Bodies stopped the very Stream, and Twenty thousand were slain in three Encounters; which so enraged Osman, that he resolves to go himself in person with an invincible Host. The first Year he was intercepted by Plague in his Army; the next year a terrible Earthquake at Constantinople shook the Ground, overturning Tops of Houses, and many Mosques, amazing the Multitude; with some other several Mischances to the Person of Osman, which retarded his Speed.

But resolved it was, with threatening Protestations, and Vows, and Invocation of Mahomet, first to send Schander-Bashaw his Fore-runner, with an Army of two hundred thousand into Bogdania.

Sigismund foresees this Storm in earnest, acquaints the Princes of Europe, by Embassies to the Emperor at Vienna, by way of Intercession of a Peace between him and Bethlem-Gabor; and to other Princes in great Discord with the Empire; and to other Ambassadors also, to other Nations, and Ossolinski into England.

But after that the right Noble Sigismund, in four several Encounters had bravely defeated Forty thousand Enemies, and sundry Triumphs had passed in Honour of his Glorious Victories, the the Polonians, over-presumptuous in their last Battel of Bogdonia, disfranked themselves, over-secure, giving Occasion and Courage to the Famizaries and Caphies to rally the Tartars with fresh Numbers, that inforced the Polonians to give ground, and the Enemy Advantage of their Retreat, and totally to rout as far as Poldavia, with the fearful execution of Thirty thousand, besides Cruelty, Murders, Rapines, Barbarously inhumane.

And thus stood the State of Poland in the last time of King James; and now let us see their Proceedings at this time.

Uladislaus, the Fourth King of Poland, was, after the Death of his Brother Sigismund, by Consent of the States, preferr'd to the Throne, and a fair Occasion was offered to Signalize his Inauguration, and to be the Terror of his Enemy, the Muscovite; who having done much spoil in Lithuania, besieged the Polish Town of Smolenko; the War was high, and either Party endeavour their Succour; both of them in this Quarrel indifferent to Great Britain's Interest, unless the Scots will afford the Pole their favour, for countenancing their Pedling Trade of Land-Merchandizing from Fair to Fair. And indeed they have Reception there also for such of them as have been Souldiers of Fortune; but the English upon a double account have increased their Naval Trade to the Muscovite, and our Merchants thereby enriched into an incorporate Company, settled in the time of Queen Elizabeth: And so that Great Duke (or Emperor) solicits King Charles for Assistance in his intended War, and Siege of Smolenko; where, because the English and Scots both, had Entertainment on either side, they shall not want a Remembrance.

The King of Sweden, at his first Descending into Germany, fomented this Quarrel; willing he was to engage Poland, and all his Neighbour-Princes and States in any War, the better to prevent their Assistance to the Emperor, countenancing and encouraging divers of his own Officers, Strangers, to take pay on either side. The Muscovite sends abroad Ambassadors for Aid; with particular Letters to King Charles, for Men and Officers, who recommended Col. Thomas Sanderfon; which, for a compleat double Regiment of Two thousand English, by the North Cape, was the first that ever transported Military men to that Nation, by Sea, to the Town of Arch-Angel, the North-part and Port of Muscovia, and the Place where all Merchants, Strangers, keep their Staple; there they Land, Aug. 6. 1632. Commissioners are appointed to receive them, upon such Conditions, as never were more noble for Souldiers; the Colonel's own single Pay near 200 l. Sterling a Month, and being received and caressed at Mosco, the whole Army March to Smolenko, a strong Town in the Borders of Poland, formerly taken by Sigismund, from the Muscovite, with a two years Siege, like that of Ostend in Flanders, if we consider the length of the Siege, and the number of the slain, which amounted (as Authors reckon) to more than twenty thousand Men; and now as the Muscovite resolved to bid fair for the Game, with an Host of fifteen hundred thousand Souldiers; and being come, after some Skirmishes, the King of Poland in person draws down his whole Army to Besiege the Besiegers; intrenching himself, which was all he could do for the present, against such a powerful Army of 120 thousand; and so by degrees, he cuts off all Provisions; which put the Musco-General to quicken the Siege, and to make several Attempts upon the strong Town; and at last, having summoned his Council of War, and amongst them, of several Nations, Colonel Sanderfon, Colonel Alexander Lesly a Scot, differing in Opinions, fell to quarrel; which the General opposed, saying, Those that will not fight the Enemy, let them keep their own Quarters; but gave Command to countenance Col. Sanderfon with 3000 Foot, to fall upon the Polish Quarters, weakened by drawing off their choicest Horse and Foot to Dorogabuse, to prevent the Muscovites Provision of Relief; and the General privately took Sanderfon cross the River, to get a secret view, for the best advantage of the Design; when suddenly an Alarm came to the General, who commanded Sanderfon with speed to his Quarters; who passing by the Brow of an Hill, where Lesly drew out into Order; and seeing Sanderfon without any Guard, with a dozen of Horse, following him that took no heed of any Treason, but minding his Enemy before his Face, Lesly came close behind him, and with a Brace of Bullets shot him by the Nape of the Neck, into the Head, stark dead, the second day of December, 1633.

Upon which Murder, the English drew into a Body, with resolution of revenge upon Lesly and his Scots; but for the instant, were both Commanded into a Truce, with great Protestation, That the Murderer should be subject to severe Punishment; and so submitted him to a Guard; of which the Enemy having Notice, takes the Advantage, falls upon the Muscovites, and in this Disorder, put them to great Loss, and kill six thousand, enforcing them to a Parly; and to these base un-heard-of Conditions; That an Army of an hundred and twenty thousand should cast their Arms and Colours at the feet of this King; Monster of Victory! he pardons them all; the Strangers, near Fourteen thousand, are never to bear Arms against the King of Poland, and all Arms and Ammunition submitted to the Conqueror: And not long after, the General Peace was ratified between them; That the King of Poland should relinquish his Title and Pretensions upon the great Datchy of Musco, and the Great Duke his, upon Smolenko, and other such Places formerly depending on the Muscovite.

These Dishonourable Conditions fell heavy upon the General; who was, at his return home, soon beheaded, his Son, the Lieutenant General, whipt to death about the Streets, and his Family banished for ever into the Country of Iberia, there to catch Sables, for the Emperor's Profit; a customary Punishment of such as have Relation or Dependence upon Traytors.

Nay, the King of Sweden had called in the Turk, who to besiege Poland, was entred into the Countrey; but the King had timely enough gotten his Victory, to put Fire in the Turks Tails; beating them out again, and forcing them also to beg a Peace upon most Honourable Terms for the King; at that same time, when the third part of Constantinople was burnt to the Ground with incredible Loss, a Prodigy threatening the Turk with that Misfortune which afterwards befell him.

The Murderer Lesly, after some time of Imprisonment, with great Sums of money wrought his Release, and to be sent Prisoner to the Anno 1632. the Justice of King Charles, whose Subject he was; here he was cast into Prison, and suffered under the Trial only of the High Court of Honour; where, being Arraigned, he produced the King's Pardon, who was pleased thus to excuse, and that truly, That being the Murder was committed in a foreign Nation, the Laws of England could not reach to punish with Death; which said, the King having passed a Formal Trial, may give Caution to his Subjects not to execute the like; the Pardon being only to shadow from publick Knowledge the Weakness of our Laws against such Foreign Offenders: But the Hand of Heaven persecuted this Murderer; for he wandring in Foreign Wars, came over hither again, with some Command in the Queens Forces; which She brought over from Holland, for assistance of the King in the late Civil War; where, upon his first Service, he was shot and maimed in his Murtherous Hand; then he returns into Muscovia, where, but for that Suspicion of Treachery, he was imprisoned in a Tower, and from the Top, was flung upon sharp Stakes, and lingred out a reasonable time of execution, e're he wretchedly died.

But let us return to our Country: and as to Church-Affairs, we find Four Promotions of Bishops to have been now made, viz. Dr. Walter Curle was removed from the See of Bath and Wells, to that of Winchester; Dr. Wright, from that of Bristol, to the See of Lichfield and Coventry; Dr. Augustine Lindsey was Consecrated Lord Bishop of Peterborough; and Dr. Pierce, formerly Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxon, of Bath and Wells.

At this time, there wanted not those, who being of an unquiet Spirit, laboured what in them lay, to make the World believe, That the Doctrine of the Church of England began now to be mixed with Pelagian and Romish Errors: and I find the Author of the Historical Collections, in the Beginning of this Year, p. 140. very untruly and unhandsonly reflecting upon the Government of the Church; though in the Title-Page of his Book, he saith (but how truly, let himself and the Reader judge) these Collections are by him made without Observation and Reflection. His Words are these;

There were at this time some who were averse to the way of the Times, and did not forbear to speak against New Doctrines and Ceremonies; as appears by the following Proceedings in the High Commission.

Which Words, if they have any Sence in their Construction, it is this; That it was now the way [or Use] of those times to introduce New Doctrines and Ceremonies; and these were such: For Mr. Bernard, Lecturer of S. Sepulchres, London, was Censured (as he there saith) for Preaching against Pelagian Errors, and Romish Superstitions.

Now I would gladly know of Mr. Rushworth, what Pelagian Errors, and Romish Superstitions were introducing into the Church of England. If there were none such, this Reflection is not only false, but scandalous; and it will highly concern the Author of those Collections to do the Injur'd Church of England, the Church wherein he was made a Christian, Right, by publicly recanting what he hath so publicly aspersed her with; if he speaketh of those Mr. Bernard mentions; These were not to affirm,

That God worketh in the Conversion of a man by an Omnipotent and Irresistible Power; for which Recantation was enjoined him. 2. He said or seemed to imply, That Romish Doctrines, which were now introduced into the Worship of God, naming High Altars, Crucifixes, and Bowing to them, in plain English (saith he) Worshipping them; now whether any such, either Doctrines or Practices, as Worshipping either Altars or Crucifixes, were ever in those times introduced into the Church, the Collector, who is very industrious and particular in any thing that is aspersive of the Church, ought more expressly and particularly to have declared himself.

A period being put, as before is said, to the Combat betwixt Mackay and Ramsey, the King himself acquainted the Marquis Hamilton, by Letter, of his Opinion of the whole Matter, giving him Advice how to comport himself hereafter, as to Ramsey. The Letter followeth.

JAMES,

Since you went, I have not writtē to you of Mackay's Business, because I neither desire to prophesie, nor write half News; but now seeing (by the Grace of God) what shall be the end of it, I have thought fit to be the first Advertiser of it to you. I doubt not but you have heard, that (after long seeing of Proofs for clearing the Business as much as could be, and Formalities which could not be eschewed) the Combat was awarded; Day set, Weapons appointed: But having seen and considered of all that can be said on either Side, as likewise the Carriage of both the Men, upon mature deliberation, I have resolved not to suffer them to fight. Because, first, for Mackay, he hath failed so much in his Circumstantial Probations, especially concerning Muschamp, upon whom he built as a chief Witness; that no body now is any way satisfied with his Accusations. Then for David Ramsey, though We cannot condemn him for that which is not, yet he hath so much, and so often offended by his violent Tongue, That We can no ways think him innocent, though not, that way guilty whereof he is accused; wherefore I have commanded the Court shall be dismissed, and Combat discharged, with a Declaration to this purpose, That though upon want of good Proof, the Combat was necessarily awarded; yet upon the whole Matter, I am fully satisfied that there was no such Treason as Mackay had fancied. And for David Ramsey, though We must clear him of that Treason in particular, yet not so far in the general, but that he might give occasion enough by his Tongue of great Accusation, if it had been rightly placed, as by his foolish, presumptuous Carriage did appear.

This is the Substance of the whole Action, and so short, that it is rather a Direction how to believe others, than a Narrative it self; one of my chief ends being that you may so know David Ramsey, that you may not have to do with such a Pest as he is, suspecting he may seek to insinuate himself to you upon this Occasion: Wherefore I must desire you, as you love me, to have nothing to do with him.

To conclude now; I dare say that you shall have no Dishonour in this Business; and for my self, I am not ashamed that herein I have shewed my self to be,

Land. May 8.

Your Faithful Friend,

1632.

and Loving Cousin,

CHARLES R.

His Majesty put forth a Proclamation much about this time for the well making of Sope; to this effect:

His Majesty intending by all good means the Advancement of the Native and Useful Commodities of this Realm, and the prevention of divers Deceits commonly used in the making of Sope, with foreign and unsweet Materials; and of the excessive Rates in the Sale of ill Sope, at the pleasure of the Sope-Boylers, being no Body Politick, nor governed by any good Order: And resolving to make the Manufacture of Sope and Pot-Ashes a Work of his own People, did, by Letters Patents, Dated the 20th. of January last past, incorporate divers Persons, by the Names of Governors, Assistants and Fellows of the Society of Sopers within Westminster and Middlesex; and that it should be lawful for them and their Successors, to exercise the said Art and Mystery; and that they should chuse skilful Persons out of the said Society, to oversee all Works, Workmen, &c. using the said Art and Mystery, and to prevent Fraud and Deceit therein. And that none of the said Sope shall be put to Sale, before the Overseers have overseen the same, and have marked it for good; and to punish the Gainsayers and Rebellers of His Majesty's Proclamation.

And the Governors, Assistants, and Fellows of the said Society, did by Indenture, sealed with their Common Seal, made between his Majesty on the one part, and them of the other part, Covenant, to Erect and Maintain such Work-houses as might make 5000 Tun of good Sope, and a further proportion, if need should require.

And His Majesty, by his Letters Patents did Erect an Office for keeping of Paterns, and making the Essay of Sope to be made by the Governors, Assistants, and Fellows of the Society of Sopers of Westminster; and appointed F. C. to be the first Essay-Master, and to take an Oath for the true Execution of his Office.

His Majesty therefore did charge and command the said Society, That they use no other Oil in making of their Sope, but Olive-Oil, and Rape-Oil; by which means the Sope may be sweet, good and serviceable; and that none do put to Sale any Sope, Pot-Ashes, &c. before they be essayed, and tried, to be found good and serviceable, and so marked by the Deputies of the said Society.

And being informed that many of the Wealthier and abler sort of the Nobility and Gentry did usually resort to the Cities of London and Westminster, and parts adjoining, where they had no Employments, and were altogether useless to His Majesty; drawing their Moneys out of the Countries, and spending it in Excess of Apparel, &c. and Provisions; therein enriching Foreign Nations, to the impoverishment of their respective Countries, and ruining of their own Estates:

His Majesty, to prevent the like Resort for the future, touched with a deep sense of those Inconveniences, doth straightly Charge and Command, that before the end of Forty days, His Lords Spiritual and Temporal, Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants of Counties, Justices of Peace, Baronets, Knights, Esquires, Gentlemen, and all Clerks having Benefices with Cure, Prebendaries, or Dignities in Cathedral or Collegiat Churches, that have Mansion-Houses, and Places of Residence in other Parts; that they do resort to the several Counties where they usually resided, and there keep their Habitations and Hospitality, &c. except such as are of His Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, or bound to daily Attendance on the King, Queen, or their Children.

Further declaring, That it was his firm Resolution to withstand this great and growing Evil, by a constant severity towards the Offenders; and therefore gave this timely Warning, that none hereafter might presume to transgress.

And taking into His Royal Consideration the State of His Majesty's City of London, His Royal Chamber, and Seat Imperial, to prevent all Decay thereof, He issued out His Royal Proclamation against laying any new Foundations about the City of London, and Building thereupon.

Foreseeing that the Honour, Government, Health and Safety of the City, is of great consequence unto his Majesty and the whole Kingdom; and that his Royal Progenitors, in former Times, especially his Royal Father, of Blessed Memory, King James, and the most excellent Princess Queen Elizabeth, in their Times had carefully provided for the same, straightly prohibiting the Erecting of Houses and Buildings upon new Foundations, and the entertaining of Inmates in and about this City, which would multiply the Inhabitants to such an excessive Number, that they could neither be governed nor fed; and for putting these his Majesty's Commands in due execution, he did make, and several times renew Commissions, directed to the Lord Mayor of the said City, and divers other Persons of Honour and Worth, grounding the same upon the Rules of Law and Justice, as against publick and common Nuisances, as well as upon Reasons of State and Government, all tending to the publick Good of the People; but that taking not so full effect hitherto, as the King expected, his Majesty hath now again resolved to renew that his Commission to divers Honourable Persons, and others of Worth and Understanding, requiring them forthwith in their own Persons, as by other good ways and means, to enquire and find out the Offenders, and Offences against this his Majesties Declaration, and to make Certificate thereof to the Council-Board, or in the Court of Star-Chamber, to the end that such Proceedings may be had against them, as may stand with the King's Honour, and the Laws of the Land. See more of this at large in the Appendix, which contains also his Majesty's particular Rules for the putting this Commission in execution, which are very large.

About this time a horrid Murder was openly committed in the Streets of London, upon the Person of one Lamb, commonly called Dr. Lamb, a Person against whom, upon no Ground ever alledged, the Rabble had taken a Distaste; some called him a Conjuror; one whom the Duke of Buckingham, not long since assassinated (as you have heard) by Felton, made use of. The Tumult continued three hours, and the poor decrepit old man, of above 80 years of Age, was pursued from Street to Street, and Anno 1632. not so much as an Officer of Justice once appearing in his Rescue: The man died hereof, and no Inquisition was taken thereupon, or any of the Malefactors enquired after, or punished; for which very gross Negligence (to say no worse) an Information was preferred against the Mayor and Citizens of London, in the King's Bench, by the Attorney General Noy; and there was a Fine of 1500 Marks put upon the City, for the Crime, by the Court. The Mayor and Citizens submitted to the Favour of the Court, and craved Pardon. The Fine was imposed by the Common, not Statute-Law.

That whereas they the Lord Mayor, &c. were Incorporated and made a Body Politick by that Name, &c. and the City of London was a Walled City; reciting the Statute of 2 Edw. 4. That the Mayor for the time, and all who have been Mayors, should be Justices of the Peace within the City; and that the Sheriffs are made among themselves, and Coroners appointed by themselves, and that by Law they ought to suppress Riots and unlawful Assemblies. Notwithstanding, in Jun. 4. Car. in the day-time, That one John Lamb, alias dict. Dr. Lamb, was slain in a Tumult, and none of the Offenders taken, nor any Person known or indicted for that Felony. And upon this Information, the Mayor and Commonalty appeared, and confessed the Offence, & posuerunt se in gratiam Curia, &c. For which they were amerced to 1500 Marks; for it was conceived to be an Offence at the Common Law, to suffer such a Crime to be committed in a Walled Town, tempore diurno, and none of the Offenders to be known or indicted; Vide 3 E. 3. Coron. 299. 22 E. 3. Cor. 238. 8 E. 2. Cor. 425. Stamf. fo. 33. Cok. l. 7. f. 7. 3 H. 7. 15. Dyer, 210. And Noy, Attorney General, shewed a Record, Mich. 18. E. 3. Rot. 132. an Indictment of a Town in Devonshire, for suffering an Assembly, as it were, to hold Allizes in Mockery of Justice. And 21 H. 6. a Presentment before Fortescue, against the Town of Norwich; That there was a great Riot in Norwich, and one Gladman took upon him to be King, and went with a Crown of Paper, in a Riotous manner, to the Priory of Norwich, &c. And although it appears not upon the Roll, Quid inde venit; yet per Rot. Patent. 27. H. 6. Memb. 13. Their Liberties, for that Cause, were seized, and re-granted, &c.

And now the Spirit of Reformation began to work, and put private persons upon Works of Reformation in Churches; more particularly, one Sherfield Esq; of Lincolnes-Inn, having by his own Authority, made a Reformation (well, no doubt, as he thought at least) he so pleaded the Matter at his Trial in the Star-Chamber) in the Church-Windows in a Church in New-Sarum; whereof He was Recorder; the Name of the Church was St. Edmonds. The Information was preferred against him, not only by the King's Attorney General, but by sundry other persons; setting out in brief, How that in Churches, and Chappels, and other Consecrated Places within this Realm of England, no private Person, being not otherwise enabled thereto, should or ought to innovate, alter or displace any thing in the Fabrick or Ornament thereof, without special Licence from his Majesty, or the Bishops in their several Diocesses; much less deface or diminish any part thereof against their direction: but the Defendant, Sherfield, Recorder of New Sarum, and dwelling in the Parish of St. Edmonds, being evil affected to the Discipline of the Church of England, and encouraging such as oppose the Government thereof under the Reverend Bishops; and the other Defendants, being of the same Opinion and Practice, and of the same Parish, did by Combination, about January, Anno 1629, irreligiously conclude to deface and pull down a fair and costly Glass-Window in the Church aforesaid, containing the History of the Creation of the World; which had stood there for hundreds of Years, and was a great Ornament to the Church. And the Reverend Father in God, John Lord Bishop of Sarum, having heard the Report of this purpose, sent a Messenger to Mr. Sherfield and the other Confederates, to admonish them to forbear to put it in execution; and to that end he wrote a Letter to Sherfield, which came to his hand. Nevertheless Sherfield, with the Confederates, and other Riotous persons, did unlawfully, riotously, and prophanely break down that Glass-Window, in scorn of his Majesty's Government and Authority: And when that prophane Act was done, they wickedly boasted thereof, saying, He that had done it, would shortly take down all the rest. That by this evil Example, other Wicked and Schismatical Persons, ill-affected to the Established Government of the Church of England under his Majesty, are animated to use the like violent and outrageous Courses; and the passing by of such an Offence, committed by a Person of such Place and Quality in that City, and by a Combination of other Confederates, being also Persons of Note, would be of perilous example for the future, and of evil Consequence, &c.

To this Information Mr. Sherfield put in his Answer, May 20. following, to this effect:

That the Church of St. Edmonds in Salisbury, Mr. Sherfield's Defence about the Reign of King Henry the Third, was ordained to be a Collegiate Church, to consist of a Provost and thirteen Priests, who were to dwell in a College-House adjoining to the Church-yard, having a certain Revenue appointed to the Maintenance of the said Collegiate Church; which continued in Succession, and the Priests attended the Service, and celebrated Masses, and Divine Offices and Rites to the Parishioners of St. Edmond's Parish. This College and Collegiate-Church, with the Possessions and Revenue thereof, came, by Act of Parliament, into the Hands of King Henry the 8th. and remained in the Crown till the 7th. of King James. About which time, the King, by Letters Patents under the Great Seal, did grant that Church, by the Name of the Rectory of St. Edmonds, Appropriate, as parcel of the Possession of the late College of St. Edmonds, unto Anthony Gooch and William Lloyd, and their Heirs; who, within, or about the same Year, conveyed the Church unto John Bailly and his Heirs; who, together with John Buckingham, in the Year following, did convey it unto Bartholomew Tooke, one of the Defendants, and to his heirs, except the Church-Yard, Ditch, and Walks about about the same, and Trees growing thereupon : Anno 1632. Which excepted Premises, Giles Tooker Esq; and Edward his Son, have ever since enjoyed under Baily's Title. And that in the 13th. of King James, the Defendant Tooky did agree for a competent Sum of Money, to instate and convey the Church, for the behoof of the Parishioners of St. Edmonds, for ever; and made them an Instrument of Conveyance, by virtue whereof, the Persons intrusted were seized of the Church, as of a Lay-fee upon Trust.

That the Church is a Lay-fee, and hath so continued ever since it fell to the Crown; and that from the same time it hath been legally exempted from the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of the Diocese; and the Defendants, with the rest of the Parishioners, had lawful Power, without special Licence from the Bishop, to take down the Glafs of the Window, and to make up the same with white Glafs.

That according to the Orders and Agreement of the Parishioners, made in the Vestry, the Steeple of the Church hath been taken down, and turn'd into a Tower; and also a part of the Wall hath been taken down, to set a Glafs-Window in the room; and the Glafs of other Windows hath been taken down to set up new.
 The Reading-place hath been removed from the Quire, into the Body of the Church, and the Pulpit from one place pull'd down, and a new one set up; which alterations were done from time to time, by the Parishioners Agreement and Order, without special Licence from the King, or his Royal Predecessors, or the Bishop of the Diocese; and that sundry of them were made in the time of the Bishop that now is.

That it was agreed, by an Assembly of the Parishioners in the Vestry, Jan. 16. 1629. That the Defendant might take down the Glafs mentioned in the Information; and about the time therein mention'd, he took down some small Quarries of the Glafs, that the Glasier might know, that that was the Window to be made new, and not any other.

But the Window yet remaineth, with a few Holes therein; so that the described Story may be plainly discovered: That it was not fair, nor costly, but of very rude Work; That it was but of four Lights only, and not any of the fair Windows of the Church; That the Painting thereof, when it was made, did not cost above forty Shillings; and that he shall be ready to new-make it, according to the Order of the Vestry. He denieth all Confederacy with the other Defendants, and the riotous breaking of the Window; for that he took down a few small Quarries in a quiet and peaceable manner.

And whereas his Religion and Fidelity to Almighty God, and his Duty and Allegiance to his Sovereign Lord the King's Majesty, are brought in Question; he saith, The true History of the Creation of the World was not contained in that Window, but a false and impious Description of the same; which he hop'd to make appear.

The Painter, to express God the Father, had painted the Forms and Pictures of divers little old Men seeming bare-footed, and cloathed in long blue Coats; and so setting forth every of the six Days Work of God in the Creation, he had distinctly placed one such Picture of an Old Man, made to represent the Creator of Heaven and Earth, in six several places; with the joyning near to them the Likeness of some Created Thing, to denote thereby what was made on each of the six Days: And to shew the third Days Work, he had painted the Sun and the Moon, which were created the fourth Day, and had placed in the Hand of one of those Pictures, representing God the Father, the similitude of a Carpenter's Compass, as if he had been com-passing the Sun; to give the true proportion thereof. To express the fourth Days Work, he made the likeness of Fowls of the Air flying up from God their Maker; whereas God created them on the fifth Day. To express the fifth Days Work, he painted the similitude of a Naked Man lying on the Earth, as it were Asleep, and so much of the similitude of a Naked Woman, as from the Knees upward, seeming to grow out of the side of a Man, whereas God did create Man on the sixth day; neither did the Woman grow out of the Manside, but God took a Rib from the Man and made it a Woman. To represent the Seventh days Story, he painted the Seventh Picture of a little Old Man, to resemble God in the Habit of the other six, but had formed it sitting, to represent God's Rest.

That this was an impious Falsification, and a most prophane Abuse of the History: And he holdeth it ungodly, and altogether unlawful to frame any Image or Similitude of God the Father, Creator of Heaven and Earth, and the first Person of the Holy Trinity; and that it is more un-godly and prophane to set up any such Image or Picture of God the Father in the Windows, Walls, or other Parts of any Church Dedicated to the Service of Almighty God, which he hopeth he shall be able in most humble manner to make appear to the Court, by the Holy and Pure Word of God, let down to us in the Books of the Old and New Testament; by the Canons of sundry Ancient Councils of the Church of Christ; by the Decrees and Mandates of sundry of the Christian Emperors; by the Opinions and Writings of many of the Ancient Doctors and Fathers of the Church; by many Godly Writers of our Church, since the time of Reformation of Religion within this Kingdom; sundry of whom did seal their Belief with their Blood; by the Works of sundry Godly Writers of our Church, yet living, whereof some are now Reverend Bishops; among whom the Defendant hath cause to relie, in a special manner, upon the Doctrine of his Learned Dio- cesan, the now Lord Bishop of Salisbury, in his Exposition on the Epistle to the Colossians, pag. 97, and 98. Also by the Royal Determination of King James, in his Premonition to all Mighty Monarchs, Kings, Princes, and Free-States of Christendom.

That the same his Belief, is according to the Doctrine of the Church of England, established by Act of Parliament, 13 Elizabeth, expressed in the Book of Homilies, set forth by Authority; That the Pictures of God were Monuments of Superstition, and ought to have been destroyed, by the Statute made 3 and 4 Edw. 6. That Queen Eliza- beth, An. 1. according to an Act of Parliament then made, for the suppressing of Superstition in all her Dominions, did publish her Injunctions, whereby all that had Cure of Souls, were commanded to instruct their Parishioners to destroy all the Pictures and Monuments of Idolatry and Superstition; that no memory thereof might remain in Walls, Glafs-Windows, or elsewhere.
 And that it was to be enquired of in the Visitations, Whether all Images, Pictures, Paintings, and all other Monuments of Idolatry

Anno 1632. were removed? And that the same Injunctions being grounded on the Statute 1 Eliz. are yet in force. Also that the same was lawful by the Canons of this Church, set forth 13 Eliz. and agreed upon by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and all the other Bishops of that Province.

And besides the Indignity and Contempt offered to Almighty God, by such unworthy Resemblances of his Majesty and Deity, in the fore-said Window, there was a Speech, That some ignorant Persons had committed Idolatry, by bowing before the same Resemblances of God.

Lastly, He denied that he was ill-affected to the Discipline of the Church of England, or had encouraged any, to his Knowledge, to oppose the Government thereof under the Reverend Bishops; or that the Bishop of Sarum did send any Messenger, or write any Letter to him, to admonish him to forbear to put the Agreement of the Vestry in execution; or that any such Messenger, or Letter came to him; or that his Lordship, though he had frequent Conference with him, used any Speech touching his pleasure to have that Window stand as it was; or not to be taken down.

The Cause coming to a Hearing, he received his Sentence, much to the Regret of that party of men; and he was condemned in 1000 l. Fine by some of the Lords Commissioners of that Court; and by others, who were the Majority; in 500 l. And further the Court Ordered,

That Mr. Sherfield should be fined 500 l. and be removed from the Recordership of that City; make a publick Acknowledgment of his fault, and be bound to his good Behaviour.

The Decree is self take as followeth.

My Attorney
Regis v.
Sherfield, Armig.

Defacing
a Church-Window, by colour of a Vestry-Order.

THE Defendant being troubled in Conscience, and grieved (as he said) with the sight of the Pictures which were in a Glass-Window in the Church of St. Edmonds in New Sarum, one of the said Pictures, to his Understanding, being made to represent God the Father, did procure an Order to be made by the Vestry, (whereof himself was a Member,) That that Window should be taken down, so as the Defendant did at his own Charge Glaze it again with White Glass. And by colour of this Order, the Defendant, without acquainting the Bishop or his Chancellor therewith, got himself into the Church, made the Doors fast to him, and then with his Staff brake divers Holes in the said painted Window, wherein was described the Creation of the World; and for this Offence committed with neglect of Episcopal Authority, from whom the Vestry derives their Authority, and by colour of an Order of the Vestry, who have no power to alter or reform any of the Ornaments of the Church, the Defendant was committed to the Fleet, Fined 500 l. and Ordered to repair to the L. Bishop of his Diocese, and there make an Acknowledgment of his Offence and Contempt, before such Persons as the Bishop would call unto him.

At the pronouncing of Sentence upon Mr. Sherfield, the Bishop of London spake somewhat, not any ways to justify the Painter of that Glass-Window; but to acquaint the Court what might give him occasion for that his Error; How that God in Holy Scriptures is sometimes termed the Ancient of Days; but he would not in the least justify either his Ignorance or Mistake [speaking of the Workman] but said, Mr. Sherfield's fault, in being a private person, and taking upon him an Employment of Reformation, without any Authority, in such an open and insulting manner as he did, was much greater than that of the Painter.

A Commission was in this Year issued forth under the Great Seal of England, having thereto annexed several Instructions; it was for erecting the Council in the North; and directed to Thomas Lord Viscount Wentworth, &c. enabled the said Lord President Wentworth, &c. to hear and determine all Offences, Suits and Controversies, Causes, Things and Matters whatever therein contained, under certain Precincts in the North, therein particularly mentioned; and in regard these Instructions were the Matter of, and Article against that Noble Earl of Strafford at his Trial afterwards, we shall briefly give an Account of those Instructions which were the Main of their pretended Grievances. These were,

1. That the said President, and other the Commissioners therein appointed, shall hear and determine, according to the course of Proceedings in the Star-Chamber, divers Offences, Deceits and Falsities, whether the same be provided for by Act of Parliament, or not; so that the Fines imposed be not less than by Act or Acts of Parliament are appointed.

The said President, and others, as aforesaid, therein appointed, have Power to Examine, Hear, and Determine, according to the course of Proceedings in the Court of Chancery, all manner of Complaints for any Matter within the said Precincts; as well concerning Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, either Free-hold, Customary, or Coppy-hold, as Leases and other things therein mentioned; and to stay Proceedings in the Courts of Common-Law by Injunction, or otherwise, by all ways and means, as is used in the Courts of Chancery.

And that no Prohibition be granted at all, but in Cases where the President and Council shall exceed the Limits of the said Instructions: And that if any Writ of Habeas Corpus by any Court at Westminster be granted, the Party be not discharged till the Party perform the Decree and Order of the said Council.

Hereupon several Witnesses were produced at that Trial, to prove the Matter of Fact. One whereof Deposed, That his Father was Arrested in London, by a Serjeant at Arms in Novemb. 1632. and was kept several Weeks; and conceiving it to be out of the Instructions, did appeal to the Council-Table; That the Earl of Strafford being present, fell on his Knees, and besought the King, That if his Instructions might not be so good, as to bring in a Delinquent that had affronted the Court, if by stepping over the Water, he should go beyond the Precinct of it, he might leave that Service, and lay his Bones in his own Cottage.

Another person at that time attested the Imprisonment of a person for taking forth a Prohibition to stop the Proceedings in that Court: He Deposed, That Notice being given, That a Prohibition was procured by Vaux, and an Affidavit made that the same was served; a Warrant was was directed to the Pursuivant, to arrest the Party that procured it; who, being arrested and rescued, another Warrant was directed for the bringing of the Rescuers from London, and they were accordingly brought to York, and there imprisoned; and an Information was exhibited against them by Sir George Ratcliff, His Majesties Attorney at York. This matter of Prohibition was referred to Mr. Justice Hutton and Sir Robert Heath, by the consent of the Parties that were in Suit at York: but the Lord President being acquainted with it, the Reference went not on that Term, but staid till the President's pleasure was known. The said Witness Deposeth, That the Lord President should further say, That whosoever brought a Prohibition there, he would lay him by the heels. And that as touching the Reference, his Lordship said, It was a Cause that concerned the Jurisdiction of the Court of York, and no private man shall end it; he would try the Jurisdiction, and would go to London, and acquaint the Judges with it, and if they remanded the Cause back again, well; if not, he would appeal to the King in it. That the Lord President and Judges had several Meetings, but could not agree. And the Judges speaking some things concerning the Prohibition granted to Vaux; the Lord President replied, he should not be in England, but he would have his Body; or Words to that purpose. Then a Councillor at Law was produced, who testified that Judge Hutton acquainted him, That the Lord President was angry with him for granting Prohibitions; which the Judge spake with a great deal of passion, to see things carried in that manner; and did further testify, That understanding the Lord President was angry with him, the Deponent for moving for Prohibitions; he went to wait upon his Lordship; who said unto him, I have nothing to say to you, you are one that oppose me; but for the present I have eased you of the Office of Justice of the Peace; so you need not trouble yourself with that.

That afterwards his Lordship met the Deponent in London, who said unto him, I command you not to depart the Town; and applying himself afterwards to his Lordship to know his pleasure, and withal making great Friends, all that he could understand by others was, That he was one that did oppose his Lordship; and the Witness did conceive that the Fault that he had committed, was, for not paying the Knight-hood-money in York-shire, or for moving for Prohibitions, which latter did oppose the Authority and Power of the Court of York. And that after Twelve or Fourteen days stay in Town, by Mediation of a Friend, he got leave to go into the Countrey, and then he paid the Knight-hood-money. And that after this, the Deponent durst not adventure to move for a Prohibition, nor any that had to do with him in those parts, durst retain him till of very late; for he knew very well the price of my Lord of Strafford's Displeasure: And he further Deposed, that he was sent for by a Pursuivant to attend his Lordship at York, who told him, there was an Accusation against him, but they that laid it were not come to Town; and therefore he must attend, and that they were his Betters. That after eight days Custody in the Pursuivant's hands, he was brought to the Council-Table, and his Lordship sitting at the upper end, commanded him to kneel as a Delinquent; and in his kneeling, his Lordship was offended, in that he staid no longer in that posture; and then he understood the Matter to be for speaking some Words at the Sessions in Car. 8. Defence of his Client, about the Travelling of an Indictment; the Question being, Whether a bare Indictment were Evidence to the Petty Jury? He, the Deponent said, it was no Evidence, and he desired to appeal to the Judges. Whereupon, his Lordship was pleased to say, That he would teach him to know, there were other men for him to appeal unto, (viz.) the President and the Council. Whereupon he was put out, and Directions sent, That he must find Sureties, and make publick Submission at the Sessions for saying these words; which he did accordingly. And all this he conceived originally grew, for that he did oppose the Jurisdiction of the Court of York, and not for any the Causes pretended.

To which the Lord-Deputy answered:

First, That the Instructions granted 21 March 8 Car. were not procured by him.

Secondly. The Commission and Instructions to the President and Council of York, are of course renewed upon the Death of any of the Council of the Fee in Ordinary. And Sir Arthur Ingram going out, and Sir John Melton succeeding, those Instructions were thereupon renewed. And as to the execution of the said Commission, from the Date thereof to this Hour, the Defendant did never one Act, or staid one minute as President of the Council of York. The Commission was granted 21 Mar. 8. Car. and he went towards Ireland in July following, and therefore was not concerned therein more than any other person.

At the first Institution of that Court, it had both a Star-Chamber and Chancery-Power, as will appear by all the Instructions before that time; and if there be one Errour in a Judge giving a Sentence, otherwise than a Man of better Understanding conceives reason for, there is no cause it should be heightened to a Treason, to take from him his Life and Honour, and all he hath, meere-ly because he was not so wise a Man as he might have been, nor so understanding as another. If this be pressed in Judges, he thinks few Judges would serve; and for his part, he confesseth, he had rather go to his Cottage, than be upon these terms. The Sentence against Sir Conyers Darcy was just, and he complained not of it; and for the Sentence against Sir John Bouchier, the Defendant was not at all acquainted with it, being then in Ireland. But these two Matters are not insisted upon; yet it may be from hence observed with what uncertainty men may speak, who do inform in such Cases. As to the first Witness, testifying his Father's Commitment at London, and Appeal to the Council, he saith, That was not in his Charge; and as to the Prohibition granted in the Case of Vaux against Musgrave, he says, that also was out of his Charge, and he cannot say any thing to it but by way of Divination; and therefore he conceives that it cannot be able to convince any man of High Treason, hardly of a Trespass; and why the enlarging of a Jurisdiction should be heightened to a Treason, he doth appeal to their Lordships Nobleness, Justice, and Honour, to consider; for he thinks none are in that place of Judicature, but they will desire to enlarge their Jurisdiction as far as in reason and Justice they may; and it is a chaste Ambition, if rightly placed, to have as much power as may be, that there may be power to do do the more good in the place where a Man serves.

1632.

As to the Witness, who said, He the Deponent commanded his stay in London, he hath nothing to say to him of exception, but that he speaks to nothing in the Charge; the Defendant being charged with the execution of the Commission, 8 and 13 Car. and what the Deponent speaks of, is precedent in time; besides his Deposition is by Hear-say from Mr. Justice Hutton.

Then he produced a Witness, who proved that he began his Journey into Ireland the Eighth of July, 1633. and another Witness, That since the Date of the New Commission, he never sat as President of the North in any Cause whatsoever; and that he was in Ireland when the Commission 13 Car. was renewed.

And so he concluded his Defence, saying, That he was charged only with procuring and executing that Commission; both which he denies; and so hoped their Lordships would easily see through the weakness of this Article.

And as to what the Committee replied, That he procured the Commission, and desired the said Power from the King, He said, That the said Court had both a Star-Chamber and a Chancery-Power long before his time; and that if he had desired from the King any enlargement of their Power in any Matter else, he hoped it would not amount to Treason; whereof he was impeached.

'Tis a great Truth, this Court was complained against Anno 1640, and was taken away by Authority of Parliament; and amongst other Persons Mr. Hide, afterwards Earl of Clarendon, and Lord Chancellor of England, spake against the said Court, as followeth:

My Lords,

I Am commanded by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of the House of Commons, to present to your Lordships a great crying Grievance; which, though it be complained of in the present Pressures but by the Northern parts, yet by the Logick and Consequence of it, it is the Grievance of the whole Kingdom. The Court of the President & Counc. of the North, or as it is more usually called, the Court of York, which by the Spirit and Ambition of the Ministers, trusted there, or by the natural Inclination of Courts to enlarge their own Power and Jurisdiction, hath so prodigiously broken down the Banks of the first Channel in which it ran, as hath almost overwhelmed the Countrey, under the Sea of Arbitrary Power, and involved the People in a Labyrinth of Distemper, Oppression and Poverty.

To remember your Lordships of the Foundation of this Court, and of the Progress and Growth of it, will not be unacceptable to your Lordships.

Your Lordships well know, That upon the suppression of all Religious Houses to such a value, in the 27th. Year of Hen. 8. from that time to the 30th. Year of that King's Reign, many (not fewer than six Insurrections and Rebellions were made in the Northern Parts, under pretence of that Quarrel, most of them under the command of some eminent Person of that Countrey; the which being quieted before the end of the Thirtieth Year, that Great King well knowing his own Mind, and what he meant to do with the great Houses of Religion; in the Year following, for prevention of any Inconvenience that might ensue to him upon such Distemper, in the 31th. Year of his Reign, granted a Commission to the Bishop of Landaff, the first President, and others, for the quiet Government of the County of York, Northumberland, Cumberland and Westmorland, the Bishoprick of Durham, the County of the Cities of York, Kingston upon Hull, and Newcastle upon Tyne. But, my Lords, this Commission was no other than a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, only it had a Clause at the End of it for the hearing of all Causes Real and Personal. Quando ambae partes, vel altera pars, gravata paupertate fuerit, Quod ita in quomodo jus sumi secundum Legem Regni nostri aliter persequi non possit. Which Clause, how illegal soever (for that it is illegal and void in Law, little doubt can be made) yet whether they exercised that part of the Commission at all, or so sparingly exercised it, that poor People found ease and benefit by it, I know not; for at that time I find no complaint against that Court. And in the (1st Year of King James, a Commission was granted to the Lord Sheffield, which varied not from the former, only it had reference to Instructions which should be sent, but we find none sent. In June, in the seventh Year of the Reign of King James, a new Commission was granted to the said Lord Sheffield, very differing from all that went before; it being left out, That they should enquire, Per Sacramentum bonorum & legalium hominum; and to hear and determine, secundum Leges Angliae, relation being had only to the Instructions, which were the first Instructions which we can find were sent thither.

I shall not trouble your Lordships with these, or any other Instructions, but descend to the present Instructions and Commissions under which that part of the Kingdom groans and languisheth, since the Lord Strafford came to that Government, which was in Decemb. 4 Car. And since the Commission hath been three several times renewed, in the 5th Year in March; in the 8th. in November; in the 13th. Year of his Majesties Reign. Into that Commission of the 8th. and 13th, a new Clause was inserted for the granting, sequestering, and establishing Possessions, according to Instructions crowded in a Mass of new, exorbitant and intolerable Power.

Though our Complaint be against the Commission it self, and against the whole Body of those Instructions, I shall not trouble your Lordships with the 9th. Instruction, though it be but short; which introduceth that Miseram Servitutem, ubi Jus est vagum & incognitum, by requiring an Obedience to such Ordinances and Determinations, as be, or shall be made by the Council-Table, or High-Commission Court. A Grievance, my Lords, howsoever, Consuetudo & peccatum claritas nobilitaverit hanc culpam, of so pressing a Nature, that your Lordships Noble Justice will provide a Remedy for it, with no less care, than you would rescue the Life and Blood of the Common-wealth.

Read the 19, 22, 23, 24, 29, and 30th, I will not trouble your Lordships with reading more; there being among them in the whole fifty eight Instructions, scarce one that is not against or besides the Law.

Whether his Majesty may Cautenize out a part of his Kingdom to be tried by Commission, though though according to the Rules of Law, since the whole Kingdom is under the Laws and Government of the Courts established at Westminster; and by this reason the several parts of the Kingdom may be deprived of that Privilege, will not be now the Question.

His Majesty cannot by commission erect a new Court of Chancery, or a Proceeding according to the Rules of the Star-Chamber, as is most clear to all who have read Magna Charta; which allowed no Proceedings, Nisi per Legale Judicium Parium & per Legem Terra; for our Court of Chancery here, by long usage and prescription, is grown to be, as it were, Lex Terra. But, my Lords, the 30th. Instruction goes further, and erects such an Empire, such a Dominion, as shall be liable to no Controul.

The Courts of Westminster, my Lords, have Superintendencies over all Inferior Courts, to regulate their Jurisdictions, if they exceed their Limits, as to hold Plea of greater value, or the like.

In the exercise of Jurisdiction, the Judges are sworn to grant and send Prohibitions: But to stop the granting of these Prohibitions, or to neglect them when they are granted, is the greatest and boldest scorn of the Law, and the Law-makers, that can be imagined.

And whosoever gave Directions for these stout Instructions, might have remembered, that no longer since than Michaelmas, in the seventh year of Eliz. Rot. 31. an Attachment was granted against the Archbishop of York, then President of that Council, for forbidding the Gaoler of York to deliver up one Lambert his Prisoner, who was sent for by a Habeas Corpus from the Kings-Bench.

And can such a Court as this, my Lords, deserve to live? What a compendious Abridgment hath York gotten of all the Courts in Westminster-Hall? Whatsoever falls within the Cognizance or Jurisdiction of either Courts here, is compleatly determinable within that one Court at York, besides the Power it hath with the Ecclesiastical and High-Commission-Courts.

What have the good Northern People done, that they only must be disfranchised of all their Privileges by Magna Charta, and the Petition of Right? For to what purpose serve these Statutes, if they may be Fined and Imprisoned without Law, according to the Discretion of the Commissioners? What have they done, that they (that they alone) of all the People of this Happy Island must be disinherited of their Birth-right, of their Inheritance? For Prohibitions, Writs of Habeas Corpus, Writs of Error, are the Birth-right, the Inheritance of the Subjects.

Now these Jurisdictions tell you, you shall proceed according to your Discretion, secundum sanas Discretionem, that is, you shall do what you please; only that we may not suspect this Discretion will be gentler and kinder to us than the Law; special provision is made in the Instructions, That no Fine, no Punishment, shall be less than by the Law is appointed; by no means, but as much greater as your Discretion shall think fit. And indeed in this Improvement, we find Arbitrary Courts are very pregnant; if the Law require my good Behaviour, this Discretion makes me a close Prisoner; if the Law sets me upon the Pillory, this Discretion appoints me to leave my Ears there. To proceed according to Discretion, is to proceed according to Law, which is Summa Discretio; but not according to their private Conceit or Affection: For Talis Discretio (saith the Law) Discretionem confundit: And such a Confusion hath this Discretion in these Instructions produced, as if Discretion were only to act with Rage and Fury. No Inconvenience, no Mischief, no Disgrace, that the Malice, or Insolence, or Curiosity of these Commissioners had a mind to bring upon that People; but through the Latitude and Power of this Discretion, the poor People hath felt; this Discretion hath been the Quicksand which hath swallowed up their Property, their Liberty. I beseech your Lordships rescue them from this Discretion.

Truly, my Lords, these vexed worn-People of the North, are not Suitors to your Lordships to regulate this Court, or to reform the Judges of it, but for extirpating these Judges, and the utter abolishing this Court: They are of Cato's Mind, who would not submit to Caesar for his Life; saying, He would not be beholden to a Tyrant for Injustice; for it was Injustice in him to take upon him to save a Mans Life, over whom he had no power.

And thus did that great Orator declare against that Court; which afterwards was dissolved by Act of Parliament; without Imputation of Treason to the Noble Earl of Strafford, had he procured the said Commission, or acted therein.

The Proceedings of the Swede in Germany, made him proud, and to betray his own Intentions, That they were not for the restoring of the Germans Liberty; for that his Majesty of Great Britain's Ambassador could obtain, notwithstanding all the Succours under the Marquis of Hamilton, &c. sent him such as these:

1. That the Palsgrave should hold his Countrey as a Donative of the King of Sweden.
2. That he should make no Martial Levies without the Swedes Consent.
3. That during this War, he should furnish the Swedes with so many thousand Men upon his own Pay.
4. That two of his chiefest Towns should stand Cautionaries for the performing of Conventions.
5. That he should make no League nor Article with any other Prince without the Swedes Consent.

Our Ambassador was much concerned to hear his Majesty of Sweden offer such hard and unexpected Conditions; and said;

That he hoped the great Success which that King had in Germany, and lately at the Battel at Leip-sick, did not heighten him in making these Demands, so as to forget the Grounds of his Declaration, to restore the Liberty of Germany, or to forget his Master the King of Great Britain, or the Palsgrave, for whose sake those Forces were raised, which the King had sent to his Assistance, being six thousand Men, under the Conduct of the Marquis of Hamilton, and the great Charge the King his Master was at in Raising, Arming, Transporting, and Maintaining of those Men, without any Conditions

ditions of Retribution from that King, and wherein Anno his Master had expended above an hundred thousand 1632. Pounds.

The Swede returns no other Answer than high Words; and did, in plain, but unseemly Terms, say, That he had transgressed his Commission; and that he did look upon him as a Friend to the House of Austria, and not to act the part of a good Subject to his Master in this Affair: However afterwards His Majesty was more particularly informed of the State of all these Matters from the Ambassador's own Hand.

That the King of Swedeland was not so prompt in breaking off the Treaty, and offering me his Recreditive, as he is slow in performing the same, and giving Answer to my Memorial. I have often pressed my Departure, but am still held up with Good Words and Excuses; and find he is not willing I should yet go from his Camp, in that he conceives it may be prejudicial to his Affairs, having often prayed me to stay. I have solicited for a Pass for my Secretary to go for England, which he promised me at first; but delayeth it from day to day, and so hath kept him up there Ten Days. By what I hear, it should seem he hath been too rash in breaking off the Treaty, and would fain set it on foot again; for afar off (not directly) so much hath been intimated unto me; and some of this King's Ministers have been speaking of New Articles they would treat upon; but I not hearkning thereunto, hear no more of it; being resolved whatsoever future Overture shall be made unto me, not to entertain any, but civilly to excuse the same, until I receive his Majesties Pleasure unto this Dispatch; and I do intend to transport my self from this King's Camp towards Strasburgh as soon as I can possibly disengage my self from him, and there to make my Residence, judging it to be the fittest place; for the Armies cannot long stay in these parts; and I know not where they can live, but in the Land of Wirtenburgh and Alsace, all other Countries being already spoiled, so as I shall be near this King, if there should be any occasion for my return towards him if recalled. I am upon the Rhine, and may return either through France or the Low Countries, as his Majesty shall direct.

Both Armies being fast in their Works, without attempting any thing one upon the other, but in little Skirmishes, sometimes upon the Forragers, sometimes upon the Out-guards. But in the end he Ordered Col. Dubartle to go and Petard the Town of Friedstade; where there was a Garrison, and burn the same, it being a Magazine of Corn for the Enemy, and the Post between Regensbergh and their Camp. At Break of Day, being arrived, he put two Petards to the Ports; but they failing, he put Ladders to the Walls, scaled them, and so entred the Town. He found few Souldiers there; those that were, were in their Beds; so as finding no resistance, he set fire on the Town in seven or eight several places, burnt their Magazines, wherein were great Quantities of Corn and Meal, and so retired.

The same Morning, being the 30th. instant, this King had Advertisement that certain Troops were Marched out of the Enemies Camp; he apprehending their intent was to cut off Dubartle's Retreat, Marches with a Party of 300 Musketers, and 4000 Horse, to secure the same; upon the way he understood that Serjeant Major General Sparre was near thereabouts with thirteen Companies of Crosses, and 500 Foot; the King thereupon advances with some Troops; Sparre retires with the Infantry and some Troops of his Horse, and under Favour thereof gives a Brave Salvo with his Musketers upon four Troops of Horse led on by Col. Srife, and upon the King's Foot, where was killed on the King's side Col. Rife, who Commanded the Foot, a Gentleman of the King's Chamber, one of his Pages, and divers of his Musketers. On the Enemies side, it is esteemed that there were two hundred left dead upon the place, and as many taken Prisoners; among which, there was Serjeant Major General Sparre, Lieut. Col. Gorden, and Capt. Lesly Scotch-men, two Lieutenants, and one Ensign, all which were that night brought to the King's Camp, with one Cornet and two Colonels. The king hath of late proposed to the Deputies of Francford, this Town of Nerenbergh, Ulme, Strasburg, to which he would also have joyned the Countrey of Wirtenburg, to take into consideration the present State of the War, that amongst themselves they would think of raising Contributions, the ways and means how to pay his Armies, which he hath declared unto them (considering the present strength of the Enemy) must not be less than three Armies, each one consisting of 27000 Foot, and 4000 Horse, How welcom this Proposition is to them, your Honour may well judge; for the Deputy of Strasburg, excusing that Town, in regard of the Neutrality with other Princes, and Situation, which should they not keep, their Countrey would be burnt and spoiled. This King replied publicly in the Face of the whole Court, That they had proceeded so coldly in the Cause of their Religion and Liberty, that they deserved not only their Countrey, but their Town to be burnt and spoiled.

This King expects within a few days an Ambassador from the French King; it is thought it is upon the old ground of Neutrality for Bavaria, and the Catholick League; but my Opinion is, Bavaria will not upon any Terms fall off from his new Alliances with the House of Austria, though I understand that he is tampering and treating underhand with the Evangelicks, giving them assurance of his Affection towards them, and his Resolution to stand for the preservation of the Liberty of Germany, which is the only Reason that induceth me to apprehend that this Embassie from France, may be to draw the Evangelicks and that Duke to a better understanding, and upon the old ground of removing the Empire from the House of Austria; which, if it be, your Honour may be assured the Swedes have their parts therein also.

The Elector of Saxe hath sent, or permitted four Regiments of Horse and Foot, to join themselves to the Army of William Duke of Saxe-Wismar; they are joyned to him, and are at Sweinsfurt. The Chancellor with his Army at Wurtzberg, and the Landgrave of Hesse joyned to him. This King presses me much to stay with him until his Armies be joyned; which I cannot well refuse, though I desire much to be gone from hence; for Men die fast both in the Town and Camp: I cannot tell what to make of the Business between this King and the Elector of Saxe; for notwithstanding he is Marched into Silesia, as the Letters from Lipsick

Car. 1.

sick say this day, and the last Troops are joyned, &c. This King told Sparre upon the taking of him Prisoner, that he had been much employed between Fridland and Sax; that he knew that which imported him both in his Honour and Safety; that if he would not discover unto him truly all things, he would Pistol him upon the Place. Unto which, he made him this Answer, That he would discover as much as he could do with his Honour.

The Third Instant, Camerarius brought me the Recreditive from this King, the which I have herewith sent your Honour. It is not absolutely in the manner he told me it would be, when he brought me this King's Verbal Resolutions concerning the Treaty, in Answer to my last Memorial. It is usual with this King to repent himself when the blow is given; for he hath often told me, since the Occasion at Munchen, speaking with regret of that Proceeding, That he would give all he had to be Master of his Passions; but that when he begins to be moved, he hath something rises in his Brain, that makes him forget what he saith or doth; and this he finds in himself, and the Inconveniencies that grow thereof, as soon as he is posed again; but yet he cannot get it Mastered, though he hath often designed the same; and therefore he hopes God and all the World will forgive him.

Camerarius told me farther in this King's Name, That he desired me to reside with him; for that if any Overture of Peace should be set on foot between him and his Enemies, he had rather employ his Majesty's Ambassador than any, and me in particular. This King hath that imperfection, that for the present end he can put himself into any shape. This Proposition
I knew not well how to refuse, since his Recreditive is not absolute, but mixt; and that I know not upon what terms stands his Majesty's other Treaties of Restitution, my self judging it necessary for his Majesty's Service, to keep this King in Appetite, and not to be loose of of him, until I receive Answer by this Bearer to this Dispatch: and therefore I accepted thereof with all Civility and Respect, having regard to your Honours Orders, which I received by the Dispatch which Sir Jacob Ashley brought; though I am still of Opinion, That this King intends not Peace, but in case of necessity; but that he seeing that the residing of his Majesty's Ambassador by him in this Conjuncture, is a Countenancing of his Affairs; so his going from him, consequently will be a discountenancing of them; and that this King will never part with what he holds in the Pa-latinate, though it may be counsellable, if a general Treaty should ensue, to keep fair with him, that he do no hurt; and so from them that have had their hands in oppressing of that unfortunate Prince, to endeavour a Restitution, whilst there is any hope from him or his.

There was two Days since taken Prisoner one Capt. Leslie, who serves the Emperor in Frid-land's Army; he tells me, That Saxe is fallen off from the Agreement made between him and Fridland; that there hath been sent by Fridland divers Regiments out of his Army to joyn with Don Baltazar, who commands the Army in Bohemia, with order to fall into the Hereditary Countries of the Elector of Saxe: He saith boasting-ly, That Fridland and Bavaria's Armies lying about us here, are 80000 Men; that they expect out of Bohemia, Austria, and the other Hereditary Countries of the Emperor thirty thousand more that are now levying; but withal Car. 8.

privately confesseth, That in their Army there is great want of Bread, and that if a Blow should be given to the Imperialists, this King having possessed himself of the Rivers and Passes, Vienna will run a hazard; for that they have upon this occasion of Fridland's Expedition, put up their late Effort; so as it is probable, whosoever God will give the Mastery unto in this present Occasion (if it comes to Blows) will have the Affairs of Germany in his power; and should this King prevail, it will cause great Revolutions, which before this Bearer can return unto me, apparently may be more clearly seen into.

Since Lesly was with me, one brought me a Letter written by the Elector of Saxe, to the Marquess of Cullinback, wherein he adviseth him to a Peace; for that the Empire cannot long suffer War without total Subversion: So as of that Duke's Proceeding, I know not what to judge: This Cullinback is of the House of Brandenburgh, and at present with this King.
I have long since written for Blanks, to which you have hitherto made no Answer; I conceive them to be of use, especially if the Affairs tend to Accommodation. Fridland spoke with much affection of his Majesty, and cast out Words as if he would be a Friend (if he were fought unto, in the restitution of the Pa-latinate) as Affairs may be. His Majesty may have cause to make use of him. I purpose to see him; if the Blanks I have so long since written for, were by me, I could the better introduce my self by one of them. The Jealousies remain still between Fridland and Bavaria; and if the French shall again engage themselves with that Duke of Fridland, it may be of Use.

Your Honours, &c.

His Majesty of England being tired out with the Delays of the Swede, perceiving him not to Answer his Promises as to the Palatinate, adviseth the Marquess of Hamilton to take fair leave of the Swede, and return home: The Letter followeth.

The Kings Letter to Marquis Hamilton to come for Engl.

JAMES,

I Have received three Letters from you by James Lesley, about the 25th. of July, all which I assure you, have given me very good satisfaction, as well for your right understanding of Affairs in general, as to give me a Light how to direct you in particular; which at this time is the only Subject of mine. One of two you must chuse, either to stay, or come away: For the first, it were very honourable to do (in the times of Action) if you had an Employment; but neither having, or likely to have any hereafter, it were Dulness, not Patience, to stay any longer; yet it is fit to come off handsomly, neither shewing Impatience nor Discontentment (if it may be) although I think you have Cause for both: therefore I have commanded Henry Vane

to propose a new Employment for you; which though I think it will not take effect, yet it will shew there is no way unsought for to find you out an Employment with the King of Sweden; it is, that you may be sent into the Palatinate, to assist the French with so many Men as my Contribution will maintain; which if it may be done, they promise me to put the Lower Palatinate in my hands. This, though I do not hold as Gospel, yet if this Design might be put in practice, it might certainly prove useful to my Affairs: This being denied (as I think it will) you have no more to do, but to seek a fair Excuse to come hence, which will be the best in my Opinion, upon the Conclusion of the Treaty between Sweden and Me: Or if any Impediments arise, that you might be sent to clear it with Me.

So that upon the whole Matter, my Judgment is, That if you cannot serve me in the Palatinate (as I have already said) the best way is, That you take the first Civil Excuse to come home to POSTSCRIPT.

David Ramsey will (as I imagine) meet with you before you come hither, which if he do, I hope you will remember what I have said concerning him already.

Here followeth a more full Account of the Posture of Affairs betwixt England and the King of Sweden, written by the Ambassador Sir Henry Vane, by his Secretary Curtius, by the way of Hamburg.

Norrenburgh, August 24.

THE 12th. of this present, I dispatched my Secretary Curtius unto your Honour (Mr. Secretary Cook) by the way of Hamburg, the only Pass was then open; God grant he arrive safe; for two days after his Departure, the Imperialists invested the same; He brings you the knowledge of the Affairs, and particularly how this King hath broken the Treaty. The 18th. of this present, the King's Forces, under the Command of the Dukes of Saxe, Wimar, his Chancellor Baneire, and all his other Generals, joined themselves to the King, a Dutch Mile and a half from this Town, the Imperialists not so much as making an Offer to hinder the same.

Those Armies make in all 13000 Foot, and 8000 Horse; this Day they advanced within a Dutch Mile and less of this Town, and are encamped between it and Furth, where I saw them in Battel; to the Eye they seem to be good Men: This King speaks, that to Morrow he will encamp near them, approach the Imperialists Camp, and Cannonade them out of their Trenches; but that is sooner said than done, and will be difficult to effect, though something will be done within these few days, the issue whereof I purpose to attend; and yet I am of Opinion, that neither Party will come to a Formal Battel, but in case of a Remarkable Advantage.

The King of Bohemia, notwithstanding the breaking off the Treaty, seems to me to have more hope than ever, and to believe, that the King of Sweden will restore him his Country, (I much fear his Majesty may be mistaken) unless it be in such a manner, that it may not be peradventure worthy of his acceptation; but he believing the same, I conceive it not to be my part to undeceive him; and upon this occasion, I shall propose unto your Honour, what way in my Opinion will be best for his Majesty to take in the Negtiation of the Palatine's Interest, making Judgment of the Affairs as now they are; for his Majesty to continue an Ambassador longer here, I assure my self his Majesty will not think fit. To desert him or his Affairs absolutely, I know his Majesty will never do it: Necessary and requisite it is to have an Agent resident with this King, to have an Eye upon the Affairs, and leave the King of Bohemia to treat for himself, since he hath so confident a Faith, that by him he shall have his Countries restored; for he hath told Marquess Hamilton and my self, within these few days, That he doubts not but to keep his Winter-Quarters in Heydelburgh. And in this way his Majesty may contribute to him of his Bounty towards such an Accord (if he shall approve thereof).

His Majesty of Great Britain's Letter to the King of Sweden about the Recalling of His Ambassador.

CHARLES, &c. To the most Serene and Puissant Prince, Our Brother, Cousin, and most Dear Friend, Gustavus Adolphus, &c. Health and Prosperous Success.

MOST Serene Prince, Brother, Cousin, and most dear Kinsman; We have very satisfactorily understood by our Letters, that you embrace our Friendship with singular fervency; and We also in like manner have not only, with the most imaginable Candor and Constancy made use of, but earnestly catch at all opportunities; not solely for the promoting of the Common Cause, but principally to maintain and adorn your Dignity and Welfare by all possible means: Nor do We question but that your Serenity is sufficiently convinced of this Matter, and that not so much by the frequency of our Letters, as by the good Offices which we have decreed, rather to accumulate upon, than repeat. Yet this upon your Account is not to be passed over in silence, That we have sent, as it were, out of our Bosom, the Marquess of Hamilton, our intimate Kinsman, a famous Pledge of our Love, with an entire Regiment, at our own Charges, to the remote Parts of Germany, that he might devote himself to your Service; by the Report of which Supplies, not only your Enemies, who are variously distracted one among another, but the Princes also of your Associates, and Burgers, or Freemen, are kept and confirm'd in their Fidelity.

At length this last Embassy of Ratifying a League with you, which is thus ordered; that first of all, We should Act and Convene about an Auxiliary League for the recovery of our Brother's Paternal Inheritance, and afterward, if need requires, of a Social One for the common Good and Safety; and this Method is most expressly prescribed in our Letters of Credence and Instructions to to Our Ambassador Henry Vane Knight, one of Our Privy-Counsellors, and Chief Officer in Our Court, which he hath faithfully observed; nor did that Form which he received from Us, signifie any more, than that he should more fully explain this Our Opinion, That what seemed convenient in your Judgment, might be at last communicated, without expence of Time; Wherein your Serenity, as well as all good Men, have had sufficient Experience beyond all Controversie: That we never made any Alteration, either as to the Nature of the League, nor concerning the Power of Our Ambassador; nor ever revoked any thing about which he once Convened; nor that We ever proceeded at any time dubiously or scrupulously, but ever constantly maintained and fulfilled those things which became a most Just Prince, most studious of your Welfare, a great Lover of our Brother, and finally the most Religious Asserter of the Publick Good. But because it does not seem convenient in your Opinion to observe the way We have laid down, We leave it to your Prudence, and so at this present Recalling Our Ambassador to other Offices, We wish you Health, and pray for your Felicity.

Your Serenities Good Brother and Cousin,

CHARLES R.

His Majesties Ambassador hereupon acquaints the King of Sweden herewith; as also the King of Bohemia, in the Letters following.

SIR,

The King having thought fit to call me home, and withal Commanded me to convey this Letter to your Majesty, which is in Answer to that you were pleased to write by my Secretary Curtius, It is not without a most sensible Regret, that I am necessitated by express Order to undertake my Voyage forthwith, and hereby, be deprived of the opportunity to kiss your Majesties Hands again, and deliver you the said Letter in person; your Majesty shall receive it, if you please, from the hands of the said Curtius; who, being appointed by the King my Master, to reside near your Majesty, to manage his Affairs; beseech your Majesty to believe, that though the Commands of my King force me far from your Person, yet I shall ever be ready in the Design I have, to render you my most humble Service, upon all Occasions, and to preserve the Quality of,

Strasburg Oct. 31. 1632. Your Majesties most humble and most obedient Servant,

H. VANE.

Sir Henry Vane's Letter to the King of Bohemia.

SIR,

By the Return of my Secretary Curtius, I have received Order from the King to return to him with all diligence, and for the present to leave Germany. If this Revocation obstruct my continuance in your Majesty's Service in these parts; yet I am confident I shall still be Master of greater Opportunities to employ myself at Court; where probably I may be more capable of promoting your Majesty's desires, than I have been hitherto; being near a Master who has a greater desire than ever, not to abandon his former Resolutions to your advantage. Your Majesty may give an infallible conjecture thereof; that notwithstanding my being called home, he hath thought good to establish my said Secretary, for the continuation of his Affairs with the King of Sweden; and to the end that your Majesty might have a more ample Information, I have ordered him to go directly to Mentz, to give you an account of the Transactions, that have passed here in England, and to present my most humble excuse to you, that upon my positive directions which oblige me with all diligence to accelerate my return, I have dispensed with the going so far out of my way, resolving to take a shorter Cut through France, and to sail to England from Calais. In the interim, if your Majesty imagine, that it may conduce to your service, to lay any Commands upon me before I arrive in England, I have sent with the said Curtius a Courier, who will overtake me in the way, and will bring me your Majesties absolute Resolutions. I do daily resolve with all the power I have to put them in execution, it being my design of persisting in the real resolution, of remaining, Sir, Strasburg, Oct.

31. 1632.

Your Majesty's most humble and most obedient Servant,

H. VANE.

And with Monsieur Curtius, his Secretary, he left the Instructions following; how he might comport himself afterwards in his Negotiation with the King of Sweden.

1. The King of Sweden being now, by the event of War, in the Elector of Saxs Countries, or thereabouts, you are from hence to go to Mentz (it not being out of your way to the said King) there to attend his Majesty of Bohemia, and to give him all assurance of his Majesties Love and Affection towards him and his; howsoever the Treaty so long agitated betwixt the two Kings, hath been thought fit by the King of Sweden to be deferred till a more convenient time.

2. If you shall find that the King of Bohemia shall further press you upon Particulars concerning the Treaty, you are to let him know, That the Colonels Pebely and Kelbey, having been deputed from his Majesty to my Lord Ambassador, the day before his coming from Noremberg, to confer with his Lordship upon that King's Affairs, in which Conference, it was thought fit and necessary by them, that a Motion should be made by his Lordship to the King of Great Britain, not to begin any further Treaty with the King of Sweden, or permit him to make any more Levies in his Dominions, until he should first consent and restore to him what he had possessed of his in the Palatinate. His Lordship, after some Conference with the said Deputies upon that Affair, agreed to that Motion, so he might be assured before his Departure, that it was their Master's pleasure to send unto his Resident in England to second the same. Hereupon, the said Deputies returned accordingly, and declared unto his Lordship, that as soon as his Majesty should arrive at Frankfort, he would dispatch an Express into England with Orders to Sir Francis Nethersole, to move it also; you are to signifie unto that King, that upon your Departure from thence, the said Express was not yet arrived.

3. And because new Overtures of Treaty are made unto that King, by the King of Sweden's Ministers, you are to enquire particularly what those those are, and how they are entertained by his Majesty.

4. You are likewise to inform your self how far the French King hath an eye upon the Proceedings of the King of Sweden with the Town of Straßburg, what they do now in the Palatinate, and what the French may contribute thereunto; and in particular concerning Frankendal what designs or aims either of the said Princes have upon that Town, and whether the Spaniards might not be induced to consign the same into his Majesty of Great Britain's or the King of Bohemia's hand.

5. Lastly, That you use all possible industry to discover those who for the time past have endeavoured, or for the future shall endeavour, either by Letters or otherwise to do ill Offices, or work misunderstandings between the two Kings of Great Britain and Sweden, with whom it is most necessary for the good of the Publick, there should be a strict and perfect Intelligence.

Notwithstanding all which, his Majesty the King of Bohemia had great Hopes of the Swedes good Intentions towards him, as appears by his Letter to the English Ambassador.

The King of Bohemia his Letter to the Ambassador.

I Received your Letter after I had passed the River Lech. I do not question but you have already understood the Passages here, that Tilly and Altrin have been wounded; the Duke of Bavaria has abandoned Newburgh, and retired to Ingoldstadt. I will now give you an Account of the Surrender of Aufpurg; the Garrison Marched out of the Place this Afternoon, being 3500 strong, and the King's Forces are entred; himself has taken a Survey of the Town without the Walls, and to morrow will make his Entrance. So all things succeed according to desire. I am very glad of the hopes you give me that I shall be so happy as to see you. I presume the season will keep you here at Frankfurt a long time. For my own part I have no cause to complain; for the King is still of a very good humour, and continues the testimony of his great Affection for me and my Concerns. I do not press him to any thing as yet, I hope all will go well; I shall not swell this Letter to any greater Bulk, but only to assure you that I shall ever remain

From Lec-Hausen

Your most Affectionate Friend,

FREDERIC.

The Marquess of Hamilton's Army (as before we told you) was much weakned by Sickness, &c. and the King of Sweden had now real need of them; wherefore he sends Duke William of Saxon-Weymar with Orders that they should March to the King's Relief before Nurembergh; they were re-inforced by some Additions from the Green and Blew Regiments; the former whereof was Commanded by Col. Ros, and the latter by Col. Warder; and to them were joyned a Regiment of Horse, and four Foot-Companies, who all afterwards Marched to the Field at Lutzen; where they were present, and bore their part at that so Famous and Fatal a Battel; but in regard there were some very Notable Rencontres at which these were present, we shall briefly relate them: The First was, The taking of the Castle of Crutzenack, which was performed by the English and Scotch; at which, both the Kings of Sweden and Bohemia were present: the former gave particular Directions for the Attack; it was Garrison'd by Spaniards, who made a very good Resistance; but the English and Scotch having sprung a Mine, and given the Assaults thereon, they carried the Place, not without the loss of many good Souldiers, and obliged the Spanish Governor and Garrison to beg for their Lives; which they frankly gave them, and Leave to depart with their Arms under a Swedish Convoy: Hereat was present William Lord Craven, who extremely Signalized himself in this Attack.

There had been some Overtures for a Truce proposed by the French Ambassador, betwixt the Swede and Bavarian; which being concluded, and in the mean time Count Tilly beating up the Quarters of Gustavus Horne at Bamberg in Franconia, and a Rupture ensuing, hereupon the King of Sweden enters Bavaria, and meeting with difficulties in his passing the Danube, but more especially the River Leche; which yet he conquered, and passed his Army in despite of Tilly, who lay intrenched in certain Woods on the other side; on whose Army he incessantly played with 120 Canon, and did considerable Execution on them; but more especially Tilly was wounded in the Knee by a Canon-Bullet, and General Altringer was wounded in the Head; the former was carried to Ingoldstadt, and there died, to the great regret of the Spaniard and Bavarian; he was only unfortunate in the Battel of Leipsick, and had some stain on his Reputation for Cruelty in the Action at Magdenburgh, before spoken of; one of the greatest Captains certainly he was of that Age, much beloved of his Souldiers; to whom for a Legacy, at his Death, he bequeathed 60000 Rixdollers. The King thus having passed the Rivers, he destroyes all in Bavaria before him, 80 great Towns and Castles; only the Capital City Ingoldstadt remaining; which he going to view, riding upon a Gray Horse, in a more than ordinary Equipage, he narrowly escaped the Blow of a Canon-Bullet levelled at him; it light on his Horses Crupper, and covered the King with Blood and Dust; which Accident put his Army into some Disorder; but then perceiving the King safe, they turned their sorrow into joy; but besuoght his Majesty that henceforward he would be more careful of his Life, upon whose so many depended; To which, the King makes Answer; That the Bullet that saluted him so near that day, did put him in mind that he was Mortal, and subject to the same Accident as the meanest of his Souldiers, and so that general Law, which no Crowns, Victories, nor Armies can avoid. That it remained only for him to resign himself to God's Providence, and that his Comrades who had their Arms in hand with him, should firmly believe, that the Justice of the Cause, for which they exposed themselves to the hazard of Arms, had other Dependency than His Life only. That the German Liberty would not want Maimainers, nor these Persons here Success, as long as they kept themselves in God's Way.

The Death of Tilly struck the Emperor and Empire to the very heart; and what to do for another another General, he well knew not, all Bohemia was near in the possession of the Duke of Saxony, and the Landsgrave of Hesse had declared for the 1632. Swede; so that both the Austrian and Bavarian were almost at the last Cast. In this great extremity his Imperial Majesty, after much consulting, was resolved once more, if he could or might prevail with him, to make use of Walle- stein, who had before, by the Advice of the Di- et at Ratisbone, been laid aside with some disgust; which the old General well remembring, promiseth to raise an Army of 30000 Men in four Months time; during which time, he would be absolute; but having employed under him his Confederates and Relations, as his great Officers, the Austrian and Bavarian doubt whether it might prove for the Good of the Empire, if any other General than himself, or other Officers than his should be employed: for the present they were resolved to dissemble with the Dissembler Wallestein, and made him General upon his own Terms; who immediately Marcheth into Bohemia, and attacketh Prague, defended by the Saxon with 7000; he was several times repulsed; but drawing on the Foot by his Horse, he by force enters the lesser City; which immediately caused a Surrender of the other: the Souldiers only Marching out with their Swords; their Colours are sent by him to Vienna, and he in requital, is made by the Emperor Duke of Glogau in Silesia. This Success solicits him to joyn with the Bavarian, and so by united Forces, to find out the Swede, who lay encamped at No- rembergh, these putting themselves betwixt the King's Camp and Franconia, had deprived him both of his Forces and Victuals; he intrencheth himself for the present, and his Forces at last uniting, he draweth out his Army of 26000 Men effective, and presents the Battel to Walle- stein, who contains himself within his Retrench-ments; so that the Swede to force him, thunders with his Cannon into his Leaguer, and is resulted accordingly from Wallestein; who at last finding the Inconvenience of Lying within the reach of the Swedes Artillery, removes himself into the Forest of Altembergh; where, upon the Ground of an old Fortrefs, he strongly retrencheth himself, believing (as he had reason) the Swede would not endeavour to dislodge him thence, especially having secured all the Passes by Barricadoes of Trees cut down, and the Ascent of the Hill, which the Swede in his Attack was to ascend, was very steep, bushie and crag-gie; notwithstanding all which Disadvantages, the King of Sweden resolved to set upon him in his Camp (for that he believed he would not fight on equal Terms, but endeavoured only the protracting of the War, and that now he found his Army in good heart and strength) on these Motives, against the Dissuasions of both the Swedish and Scotch Officers, the King of Bohemia, and the Marquess of Hamilton being then in his Leaguer, and Eye-witnesses of this great Action.

 The King of Sweden leads on the Van of the left Wing; Saxon Weymar had the Honour of the Battel, and Duke Bernard and the Landsgrave of Hessen had the Rear. Much time was spent in the Attacks made upon the Old Castle, and many Brave Commanders on both sides there lost their Lives: The King leads on his Men up to the Enemies Batteries; Wallestein makes a brave Resistance, having all the Advantages of the higher Ground, as well as his Retrenchments and Batteries, as before we intimated. The Fight was maintained till Darkness parted the Armies, and it was performed on both sides with incredible Valour and Obstinacy; and all the Imperialists that day gained, was, that he kept his Ground, though he well saw what an Adversary he had to deal with. The King was said to have repented himself of this Action, which was begun against the Advice of the most and most knowing of his General Officers; therefore for the future he was resolved to put Wallestein to it in another way; and therefore to draw him out of his Fast-nels and Retrenchments, to fight on equal terms in the fair Field, having secured Norembergh, (where he had left Kniphausen, a good Commander) he resolves again to enter Bavaria, and to ravage the Estates of the Catholick League: there; which he prudently thought would certainly dislodge Wallestein; and it hapned accordingly.

On Thursday the first of November, he arrives at Naumbergh, whilst Wallestein Marcheth to Lutzen, the Fatal place of the great Battel we now come to give you an Account of; which we will do from a Spanish Relater, as followeth.

The Battel of Lutzen, 1632 when the King of Sweden was slain, with Circumstan- ces preceding the same.

THE King being arrived at Naumburg, upon Thursday, November the first (old Style) took Order to have his Army lodged in the Field, Town and Suburbs. The same Day the King went out upon a Party, for discovering of the Enemy. After him, that Afternoon, went these three Gentlemen of the English Nation, Lieutenant Colonel Francis Terret, or Terwhit, Serjeant-Major John Pawlet, and Captain Ed- ward Fielding; These three going alone by themselves, to a forsaken Village, where there were two ways through it (the King having gone the left hand way, and they now taking the Right) fell into an Ambush of the Crabats: The first and the last named of these three, were taken Prisoners by two Rit-masters of the Crabats:
 One of them, named Pornick, a Greek Captain. These two Gentlemen, being carried Prisoners into the Imperial Leaguer, were on the day of the Battel kept Prisoners in the Rear of the Enemies Army, and after the Battel haled into Prague among the fleeing Imperialists. They were the first Night carried into Weissenfels, where Wallestein then lay in the Castle of it. He sent the Count of Pappenheim to them the same Evening; to enquire of the King of Sweden's Strength, Lodging, and Intentions. The most of the Imperial Foot lay now in, and near about this Weissenfels: Seven or eight hundred of them keeping Guard upon the Market-place, The Imperi- alists then gave out themselves to be 50000. but it appeared to be spoken by a figure, and to terrifie the King; For that they were not any thing near that number.

To return to the King; His Majesty the next day (being Friday) in Person visited all the Avenues and Passes about the Town, and went out again with great Parties of Horse, to take some Pri-

Prisoners, by whom to learn something of the Enemies. Finding that the Imperialists lay still; and that the Passes, by which he should have gotten to them, were both dangerous and difficult; He returned at night again, and gave Order to Entrench the Army before Naumburg towards Weissenfels. Till the Trenches could be made, the Army lay in the Field: After which, the Foot were encamped in the Town and Suburbs, and the Horse in the next Villages: Some two or three thousand being only left abroad all night to watch the Trenches.

Upon Sunday, November 4. came there a Saxon Boor to Naumburg unto the King, with a Letter in his hand, to shew. The Letter was written by the Count Colorado, Sergeant Major-General of the Imperial Army, unto an Officer of his, that lay with his Regiment at Quersfurt, on the Western side of the River Sala, right against Hall, and ten English Miles from it. Colorado had enforced this Boor to carry this Letter; And the Contents of it were to this purpose: That the Generalissimo had sent the Count of Pappenheim to take the Hall-Castle: That his Men of Quersfurt should march up to joyn with Pappenheim: And that the next Morning the Imperial Army was to part from Weissenfels. This Letter seems to have been written upon the Saturday night: According to which date, it agrees rightly with Wallensteins discamping from about Weissenfels, which was indeed done upon the Sunday: after that Pappenheim was dispatched towards Hall-Castle.

Upon this Intelligence, His Majesty the same day, Duke Bernard, and Sergeant-Major Kniphausen, being at a Council of War, the King propounded the great question unto them two; Whether that in Pappenheims absence, (he being gone to take in Hall-Castle) the Duke of Friedland alone were to be set upon? Duke Bernard was for the valiant Affirmative, That the advantage was good; and that seeing they knew not how long they should enjoy the opportunity of this division; Wallenstein was presently to be attacked. But Major Kniphausen was for the sober Negative; and that the Enemy was not to be fought withal: His reasons were two:

First, No man is to fight, but when he is apparently stronger than his Enemy, which the King at this time was not.

Secondly, No man is to attack a stronger Enemy, unless compelled by a pressing and unavoidable necessity: That is, either to force his passage when he is hemmed in; or when hunger and want of Victuals constrain him to it; Neither of which being the Kings case, there was no reason for present fighting.

These Reasons so far prevailed with the King, that giving over all thoughts of present fighting, he was resolved to have left a Garrison in Naumburg, and to have marched with his whole Army to conjoyn with the Dukes of Saxony and of Lunenburgh, who designed to joyn their Forces to the Kings Army, being Eight thousand Horse and Foot.

The King being thus resolved, sends Post unto the Elector of Saxony, to inform him of his purposes, and to lay the Plot for their uniting. The King desired him to come to Eilenburgh, upon the West of the River Mulda, 14 Miles West of Torgau, where the Duke then lay with an Army of 4000 Foot, and as many Horse: whereof 2000 Foot and 1500 Horse were the Duke of Lunenburghs.

Wallenstein the same Sunday, drew out from Weissenfels, leaving a Captain onely with his hundred Men, for the keeping of the Castle. Thence marched Wallenstein unto Lutzen, two Dutch Leagues to the East of it: where, and in the Dorps round about it, his whole Army encamped.

The next day being Monday, November 5. the King, according to his former Resolution, parted out of Naumburg, to go towards the Duke of Saxony, leaving the Town and Garrison under the Command of the Saxon Colonel Vitzdum. For the more lightness and expedition in his March, he commanded his Baggage to stay with the Garrison still in Naumburg, for a day or two; being he thought but onely to have gone and joined with the Elector of Saxony, and then to have returned again to Naumburg. He supposing withal, that Pappenheim being now absent, and Wallensteins men not together, that he should not be disturbed in his March. About 4. before day-light (the Drums having beaten ever since One of the Clock) on the Monday Morning he advances towards Pagan. The King having notice of Wallensteins forsaking Weissenfels, sends by the way, to take in that Castle. The Hundred Men that Wallenstein had left in it, did Colorado come so timely to fetch off, that he had done it a very little before the Swedes coming.

In the middle of his March, about ten of the Clock the same Forenoon, came there some Gentlemen riding, and some Boors running to the King, with advice that the Imperialists were lying still in several Dorps and Villages hard by, about Lutzen, without any intelligence at all of the Kings being in motion. This the King being informed of, calls presently his High Officers to a Council of War, to advise what were best to be determined. His Majesty even then, (and then first) put on the Resolution for Fighting; openly speaking it out, That he now verily supposed that God had given his Enemies into his hand. Ho! Brave Occasion, says the Duke of Saxony—Lauenburgh: Now God bless us (say divers Great Officers) it is a happy opportunity. And truly so it was; for divers Prisoners (even then brought in by the Kings Parties, and by Boors) being by the King examined whether they had any Alarm in their Quarters of his Marching; freely confessed that they had none, and so much was evident enough, for that they were now surprized in their Quarters. Thus thought all the Officers: all being resolved to fall on presently; and indeed there was great reason for it: for could the Kings Army have fallen in amongst those Villages, he had given a Camisado to several of their Quarters at once, and cut off all singly; for that they could never have come together, to unite their Forces, or have succoured one another. This was evident.

The Gentry and Boors that brought him the intelligence, told him Lutzen was but hard by; which the King was in good hope of; for that he was even then in sight of it. The Army advanced stoutly, and doubled their March upon it: but their Legs found it a longer way than their Eyes; it being a sad Campaign, full eight English Miles of Ground to Lutzen. Besides all this, there was a filthy Pass in the way, at a Bridge over a River (where but one or two men could go over abreast) which hindred the Army full two hours going. By this hindrance, was it even night before the Army could get within two English Miles of Lutzen.

This

Anno 1632. This ill-favoured Pass was within two English Miles of Lutzen, and in the Village that belonged to it, were there two Imperial Regiments of Horse (one of them Crabats) enquartered. These having a little notice of the Kings Coming, had gotten up their Horses, and taken up a high Hill on the other side of the Pass next to Lutzen; they made as though they would have disturbed the King's Passage; but they did not: the King's Foot Marching fairly over, with some Horse amongst them, Some of the King's Foot were still Marching over till it was dark night, or within it. Those that got over first, entertained a slight Skirmish with the Imperial Horsemen, without any loss to the King, killing some 50 or 100 of them, and taking one Crabats Ensign.

And now the King taking another Hill (right against that which the Imperialists possessed) he from thence let fly some pieces of Ordnance amongst them, which caused them to take the benefit of the Night, with some Confusion to March off in.

And here, the King being surprized with the Darknes, was forced to sit down in the open Fields with his Army, himself lying in his Coach, as other Officers did that had them. Here lay he all night in Battalia, every Regiment lying down in the same Order that they had Marched, with their Arms by them. The Pike-men they stuck up their Pikes an end by them; and every Rott (that is, every six) of Musketers bringing their Muskets to their Rott-master, he set them right up with their Mouths upwards, and bound them together with a piece of Match, where they stood ready at hand for all occasions.

The Imperial Army was in a terrible Hubbub at the King's coming over the Pass; for now was the Alarm sent in hot to all the several Dorps and Quarters, even from Lutzen unto Hall and Leipsich. Order upon pain of Death was given, for every man of the Imperial Army, with all speed possible, to repair towards Lutzen, to their Generalissimo.

Presently upon this, began all the Regiments to draw together, some of which were all night upon their Marches, and some Horse that Quartered very far off, being not able to reach up till 10 of the Clock the next Morning. And thus (even then) did the Mist so long keep off the King next Morning, till his Enemies could be made strong enough for him.

As every Regiment came in, so were they put into Order, which continued all night long, as the two English Gentlemen (then Prisoners there) observed. About Ten at Night did Wallenstein begin to think of the places most advantageous for the Planting of his Ordnance: some of which having mounted upon the Wind-Mill-Hills, he then began to cast up a Trench of Earth about them. All Night, and next Morning his Dragoons and Pioneers wrought with their Spades about the High-way, and to make the Ditches or Drain by it serve them for a Brest-work to lodge their Musketers in. And this was their Work too, all the next Misty Morning; which Fatal Weather gave them also the more respite to recover their Fears and Weariness, and to fortify themselves against their unconquered Enemy. And thus was the Night (the last night to some thousands) over-passed.

The King now over the Pass, had put himself into a necessity of Fighting; and being thus engaged, the sooner he fought, the better; for that his Enemy should be the less provided for him.

Tuesday (that fatal sixth of November) at last began to draw near, and alas it came all too early. A gentle Mist, as if fore-dooming how black a Day it would be, did his good will to have kept it Night still; and the Sun, as if his great Eye had beforehand over-read the Fatality of the following Day, seemed very loth to have begun it. But the Martial King, even forcing himself to awaken Time, and hasten on Mortality, would needs make these Clocks and Larums of the Wars, his fatal Drums, to beat two hours before Day-light. Arm, Arm, Repair to your Colours, keep your Order, stand to your Arms; These were the Morning Summons to awaken the hearty Souldiers from a cold, a hard, and earthly Lodging. The Army was easie to be put in Order, for that the most part of it had lain and slept in Battalia. One while was the King purposed to have advanced and fallen on presently; but the War being God's Cause, he would, like David, and himself, first ask Council of the God of Battels, and at least recommend his own Cause unto him. The Drums having beaten the first March, he caused Prayers to be read to himself, by his own Chaplain D. Fabritius; and when there were Ministers at hand, the same was done through every Regiment of the Army.

The Morning proved so misty, that it was not possible to see which way to March, nor where to find an Enemy to strike at. And this (unluckily) staid the Kings thoughts from advancing presently. This was a Fogg of advantage to Wallenstein, who, purposing but to stand his Ground, (which by working all night about the Ditch and High-way, his Pioneers had made more troublesome to be assaulted) was now resolved, that if he must fight, he would there abide the first shock, and no way to seek the Battel, or to move towards his Adversary.

About Eight of the Clock the Mist brake up, and but for one Mischance in it, promised as fair a Day as ever was sixth of November. As it began to clear, the King took occasion to encourage up his Souldiers; and going to his own Subjects first, he to this purpose bespake them:

My dear Brethren, carry your selves bravely this day; fight valiantly, in God's Name, for your Religion, and for your King. This, if ye do, God's Blessing, and the Peoples Praises, shall be your Guerdon; and you for ever shall even be laden with an honourable and glorious Memorial: nor will I forget to reward you nobly. If you play the Pultrons, I here call God to witnes, that not a Bone of you shall ever return again to Sweden.

The King's Oration to the Swedes.

To the German Troops this was the Oration; To the O you my Brethren, Officers, and Fellow-Souldiers of Germans: the German Nation, I here most earnestly entreat and beseech you, to make full Trial of your Valour this one day against your Enemies; fight manfully against them this day, both with me, and for me. Be not faint-hearted in the Battel, nor for any thing discouraged. Set me before your eyes, and let me be your great Example.

These Orations of the King, being from both Nations, with a horrid clashing of their Armour, and with chearful Vows and Acclamations, answered; the King as chearfully then replied; And now, my Hearts, let us on bravely against our Enemies; and God prosper our Endeavours: Sprightly withal, casting his Eyes towards Heaven, he with a loud Voice sent up this forcible Ejaculation, Jesu, Jesu, Jesu, Vouchsafe thou this day to be my strong helper; and give me Courage this day to fight for thy Glory, and the Honour of thy great Names sake.

The King's Prayer.

His Royal Person was that day waited upon by Anno Duke Francis Charles of Saxon Lawenburgh, and

 His Ar- The Lord Crailsham also, Great Master or Mar-tendance. shal of his Majesties Household, had the leading of a Body of Reformadoes, which were especially commanded to wait upon the Kings own person.
 And amongst these, were our English and Scottish Gentry and Officers, whom the King had at Schlesing heretofore reformed. Of this Body (which consisted of several Nations, were there still 7 or eight to be close about the King, ready to be sent with Orders up and down the Army, who were still supplied by Crailsham. The King was that day attired, as usually he was accustomed, in a plain Buff-Coat, and unarmed. Some report, that a Tenderneſs in his Shoulder, where a Musket Bullet had a long time stuck, would not suffer him to endure Armour. And therefore, when he was this Morning desired to put on his Corſlet, he said, The Lord was his Armour; and refused it.

His watch The King's Watch-word was the same which word. had been of so good an Omen before at Leipsich, Gott mit uns, God with us. The General Walen- stein's being now the same which Tillie's then was, Jesus Maria. This was the King's Order of em-battailing his whole Army, which now (after he had left some at Naumburg and at Weisenfels, was between 17 and 18000 Men) he divided into two Fronts; and each of these into the Wings and Battel, with their Reserves. Each of the Wings
 His Order was composed of six several Regiments or Squadrons of Horse, lined with five several Bodies of Commanded Musketers; every one of which Bodies had two small Drakes or Field-Pieces, which advanced playing still before them. The Battel in each Front, consisted of four Brigades of Foot, a Reserve of Front, and a Reserve of Horse hindmost of all, betwixt the two middle Brigades of the Reer, or second Front. Before each Brigade Marched six Pieces of greater Ordnance. And this was the first Sight of the Figure.

The Right Wing was led by the King himself; the first Brigade Bodies of Commanded Musketers, were Commanded by the Count of Eberstein. The Horse-Squadrons of the Left Wing were committed unto the Glory of the Day, Duke Bernard of Saxon-Weymar. The five Bodies of Foot in the Left Wing, were the Charge of the Colonel Gersdorff. The Battel made up of the four Brigades of Foot, was commanded to the Swedish Count of Neeles, Colonel of the King's Life-Guards. The four Foot-Brigades of the second Front, or Reer, were Commanded by Dodo Kniphausen, Serjeant Major General of the whole Army, to whose fair Conduct the Victory is also much beholden. The Horse of the Right Wing were entrusted to Colonel Claus Conrad Zorn of Bulach, by which Name of Bulach he is commonly known. The Horse of the Left Wing were committed to Prince Erueſt of Anhalt. The Reserve of Foot was Commanded by Col. John Henderson, a Scottish Gentleman; and the Reserve of Horse by Col. Oeme of the Palatinate.

Walen- The Imperial Army had his Excellency the Ge-Rein's or- neralissimo thus ordered; He first drew it all up into one mighty Front; which he then divided into three Bodies. His Right Wing of Horse (whose End was near the Town of Lutzen) was committed to the Count Ridolfo Colorado, that day Serjeant Major General of the Army. This Wing had also its Commanded Musketers, besides some others that were lodged in the Gardens by the Town aforesaid. This Wing having also the advantage of the Wind-mills, and their Hills, by the Town-side, made use of those Natural Batteries for the Planting of Nine Pieces of Ordnance; the Mills and Miller's House serving them also for a good shelter. The Battel or middle Ward was Commanded by the Duke of Fridland himself, whose place was said to be in the Head of that great Regiment of Piccolominies

 Horse, which was in the very middle of the Foot Regiments. The Left Wing opposite to the right Wing, was led by Colonel Hendrick Holck, newly made Lieutenant-Felt-Marſhal unto Pap- penheim, who but Commanded until Felt-Marſhal Pappenheim should be come into the Field.

All this Imperial Order of Embattailing, is presented in one mighty Front; so namely, as it appeared to the King's People, and to him that took the Figure of it: since (very largely) Cut and Imprinted in Copper, by John Jacob Gabler of Leipsich; who also, by the King's own Directions after the Battel at Leipsich, made a Description last year, and set forth the Figures of the Battle of Leipsich. And the manner of the same Figures of the Battel of Leipsich, we have in this also followed. We know that betwixt every Brigade of Foot, there should be so much room left, as that another Brigade might advance up in the Distance between them, being the breadth of one of them.

Having thus described the Order, the Field of the Battel would next be considered of, The King had a North-Easterly March of it, from Naumburg towards Lutzen; so that the Rising of the Sun was something within a while favourable. The Wind also (that little that was) blew fairly for him; so that the King very joyfully spake it, I thank God I have both Wind and Sun to favour me.

The Country was a goodly vast Level and Campaign as Corn-Lands could be, even as far almost as the Eye could rove over. And yet was the place of Battel subject to as many Accidents (and Walenstein was master of them all) as a plain Country almost could be. The King right in his way of advancing, had a wet Ditch (made by hand) called the Flossgraben, cut traverse to him, so that he was fain to edge about to the Right with his whole Army, to pass by it;
 and then to edge as much to the Left again, to put himself right before the Enemy. The Imperial Army was embattelled all along beyond a broad High-way, which led from Lutzen to Leip- sich. On this side of this, there was a kind of a broad Drain or Ditch, which served for bounding and saving the Plow'd Lands, and to keep withal the High-way the drier. This had Walen- stein's Pioniers bestowed some Cost upon; so that putting some Commanded Musketers down into it, it served them as well as a Trench or Brest-work. This was so troublesome for the King's Horsemen, that many of them were overturned, and left behind, in the getting over to Charge Walenstein; for indeed there were divers Gaps through it, which the Horse justling for, overturned one another. The Ground also behind the Ditch, had two little Risings, and those did Walenstein make choice of, for the Planting of some Pieces. That part of the High-way also towards Lutzen, had an old Trench or dry Ditch drawn to it, which, being nothing of it self, but a Boundary for Lands; that also did Walen- stein put Musketers into, which served them like
 the

the High-way Ditch, for a Parapet or Breast-work. A pretty distance beyond the High-way, near unto the Town of Lutzen, were three or four Windmills; amongst which another Party stood. Behind these had Walenstein lodged some Musquetiers, and the Mill-hills served as natural Batteries for him to plant nine Pieces of Ordnance upon. Between the Mills and the Town, were there divers Gardens with Mud-walls round about them; and in these also (in one of them three hundred being after found dead) had he caused Musquetiers to be placed. Leipsich Highway, as it went sloping along, so had he caused his men to bend and hang towards it.

And now to the Action. The Sun having by nine of the Clock clearly dispelled the Fog, it proved as promising a morning as ever was sixth of November. And now the King shot his loosing or Warning-piece; and so advanced.

The King advances. Being passed the Floss-graben, he left also the Dorp of Chursitz behind him; betwixt which and his Army, he left his Coach and his Ammunition Wagons, of which there were not above 100 at most, the King having left the rest at Naumburgh, with no purpose of fighting. The King advanced, till he came with the end of his right Wing within Musquet-shot of a little Wood: having all the way a full view of the Imperial Army.

That Walenstein much over-powred the King in number, may appear by the mighty long Front that he put out, near two English miles from one Wings end to the other. This is also to be considered, that Walensteins Discipline is to march ten deep in a File; whereas the King was no more but six deep of Foot, (I mean) and of the Horse but three or four deep, according as the Brigades were either stronger or weaker. Besides this, that Walensteins Files were all the way almost as deep again; his Ranks also were in Front so much longer, that the King was fain to send for Bulach, and all the Squadrons of Horse, from the right Wing of the Reer, or second Front, to imp out his Feathers at the end of the right Wing, for fear that Walenstein should surround him. These Squadrons, when General Major Kniphausen found out of their places, he sent a Gentleman to his Majesty, to know whether he had otherwise employed them. The King was at the same time likewise sending the Duke of Saxon-Lawenburg unto Kniphausen, to tell him that he would but use them in that first Charge, and then return them back again to their Order. The Duke meeting with the Gentleman, and telling him thus much, both then returned to their places.

The King wondred not a little at it, when he saw how fair a Clew Walenstein spread; affirming to those about him, that if he had any Seconds behind his first Front, he could not judge him to be less than 30000.

True it is indeed, that Walenstein had given out Proviant Commissions for 40000. and sometimes for 50000 Men, but yet had he not so many fighting Men, for that there were at least 10000 Women, Servants, and Children, and such Hang-byes belonging to the Army, which are to be discounted. Besides this, it is to be considered, that Walenstein had but one Front, and the King two: So that we may well allow Walenstein to be 20000 in the first Front, at the very first ordering of the Battle. After which, accounting those that were still coming in, even till ten a Clock, and Papenheims Horse and Dragoons, which came in about One or Two of the Clock; and his Foot, (who, as was thought, Car 8. made the second fierce Charge towards night,) and then (doubtless) these could not be fewer than 10 or 12000, which made up in all 30000 fighting men.

The Armies being come within Cannon-shot, the great Ordnance began to play one upon another terribly. The Air roar'd, and the Earth trembled, and those manly hearts that feared not dying, were yet very loth to have no more play for their lives, than to be beaten to pieces with the Bullet of a Cannon. And here had Walenstein, surely, a great advantage over the Kings Army: for his Ordnance being all ready planted upon stiddy and fixt Batteries, the Cannoneers traversed their Pieces, and delivered their Bullets with more aim than the Kings men could possibly, who gave fire in motion still, and advancing. His Majesties Cannon, ever as a Piece was discharged, was there left to be brought after; the Army still advancing, and marching away from it. The King liked not this shot, for that the Imperial Cannon did his men far more spoil and execution, than he possibly could again return them. Seeing therefore no good to be done this way, he causes his Army to advance upon the very mouth of the Cannon, and to charge towards the High-way, and to beat out those Musqueteers that were lodged in it.

The Imperial Army stood their ground all this time, expecting that the fierceness of their Enemies Charge, would indifferently well be abated by that time they had beaten out those Musqueteers, and had put themselves out of Order and Breath, with scrambling over the Ditches. And indeed the place being almost mans height, many of the Kings Horsemen were there left tumbling up and down; but of the rest that got over, this was the order of their Charge: The Commanded Musqueteers, and the Foot of the Swedes Brigade having cleared the High-way, the whole Front advanced to charge together.

This whilst they were doing, the little Drakes or Field-pieces (two of which marched before every Body of Musqueteers that lined the Horse of the Wings) were first fired, and the Musqueteers at the same time giving their first Salve, the Horse then charged home upon the Imperial Horse, by the Drakes and Musqueteers; something before disordered. This Order was held in the first Charge by the whole Front of the Army.

But I must now leave the Battle and left Wing engaged, to speak of the right Wing: First, where the King in person commanded.

The King at his first advancing, having observed whereabouts in the Imperial left Wing (now opposite to him) the Crabats were marshelled; and where the Curiafiers, who were compleatly armed in black Harness Cap-a-Pee, he calls the Finnish Colonel Stolhaushe to him, (as 'tis likely he did other Colonels, as he rode along) and pointing to the Enemy, As for those Fellows, (meaning the Crabats) I care not for them, says The King, but Charge me those black Fellows soundly, for they are the men that will undo us. Thus much did Stolhaushe himself oftentimes (and at Table) relate unto divers Gentlemen of the English and Scottish Nation; some of which tell the Kings words from Stolhaushes mouth this way; Charge me those black Fellows soundly, for 'tis prophesied they shall be the ruine of me. But this word Prophecie, others confess that they heard not.

Anno 1632. The King was designed to fight at the Head of the Smolanders Squadron, himself was still the foremost, with his Pistol in one hand, and his Sword in the other. The Ostro-Goths, or the Uplanders did now advance and charge the Enemy. Perchance these three now got the start, and were something more forward than the three Squadrons of the Ingermanlanders; the West-Goths, and the Finlanders, towards the end of the Wing.

The Courageous-ness of the King.

The Crabats wheeling about upon the Kings Wagons.

Are beaten off by Bulach.

These three Squadrons, indeed, fell not on at the same place with the King, but advanced directly upon the Faces of those three Imperial Regiments of Curiafiers. Nor were they blamed after the Battel for any slackness, or not charging: For that the King (as we told you) had ordered Stolhaufse to charge these Curiafiers soundly. And as for Bulach, and those Squadrons of his, now placed to the right hand of Stolhaufse and his Fins, they were in the very beginning of the Encounter so diverted, that they could not charge right forward, as the King expected. And for that, this is the true reason; That Regiment of Crabats in the very end of the Imperial left Wing, did in the very beginning of the Charge, wheel about betwixt the Wood and the end of the Kings right Wing, and there endeavour to fall upon the Swedish Ammunition-Wagons in the Reer of the Army. These Crabats would have made a foul pudder among the Ammunition, and have blown up most of the Powder doubtless, had not Bulach had an eye of them. He giving a home Charge upon them, beat them off from the Wagons for the present; but the Swedish Colonel facing about, to return to his own place again, was by the Crabats charged upon the Croops, and put to some disorder. And this Disarray is easie enough to be believed, for that the manner of the Crabats fighting, being but for a spurt, and in no good order: whosoever will answer their Charge, must necessarily do it in disorder too, or else they cannot follow the Crabats, to do any good upon them. And just now fell the Mist again, which did this good in that part of the Battel, that this disorder among the Swedish Horse was not discerned, and so no advantage taken of it.

In this interim, yea, at this instant, it is said the King was slain, it being 11 of the Clock when the Mist fell again.

All this while are the Imperialists Masters of the Kings Body, and of the Ground they had beaten the Swedes from. They had the King in their possession, and there they stript him, every man being greedy to get some part of his Spoils, that they might hereafter glory to have taken it from the King of Sweden.

Several Reports there went abroad the Army, of the Circumstances of his manner of dying, some relating it one way, and some another; but all with sorrow agree he was slain.

The Noise of the Kings death was presently dispersed abroad; but yet belief was not fully given to it, for that some Prisoners affirmed he was but hurt, and carried in a close Coach, following his white Ensign. The Swedish Prisoners that reported him to be but wounded, were those that were taken so soon as ever he offered to retreat. But that they said he was carried off in his Coach, &c. was their judgment; that being wounded, it was likely he would go off in his Coach, which at first stood behind the White Regiment, but was gone out of the Field when the Crabats fell upon the Kings Wagons.

His death was not certainly known, but to some few of the Great Ones, (no not to those of his own Wing) for 24 hours after: all believing what was, either by Art or Errour, given out, how that he was but carried off wounded.

Car 8. The Kings death concealed from his own Army.

Return we now into the Battel, and to the right Wing again. The Mist that we before told you of, was not (by their own side) judged to be any way prejudicial, but advantageous rather unto the Swedish; seeing that the Imperialists, who had now the better of it, were by the falling of this Mist so arrested, as that they pursued not the Retreat which they had put the Swedish unto. The Rumour likewise of the Kings death, made them so to clutter about the Body, that also staid them.

All this while were the four Foot Brigades of the Swedish Battel, pell-mell at it: And they (even by my Spaniards confession) got ground apace of those Imperialists whom they had attacked. And now also did Stolhaufse (who certainly had an Item given him of the Kings death, or great danger) charge so fiercely towards that very place, that he beat off the Imperialists, and recovered the Body; which he brought off naked, after it had been a full quarter of an hour in the Enemies possession. And now was Piccolominies Regiment soundly peppered: The Swedish, both Foot and Horse, after an hours fight, beating all the Imperialists along before them, till they had driven them to the very Gallows behind them. And now did the Swedish get possession of those seven Pieces of Ordnance of Piccolominies. These Ordnance were the easier to be taken, for that they plaid not; Walensteins Powder-Wagons were by mischance blown up, so that his Cannon were scarce heard of all the day after.

And thus ended the second Charge: For by this time was the Mist become so extraordinary, and by the smoak so thickened, as the Swedes could not see how to pursue their advantage; and here was the Mist become as beneficial to the Imperialists, as it had been favourable before unto the Swedish. In this time fell there so terrible an affrightment in the Imperial Army, that 1000 or 1500 Dutch Horse ran all away together. One of them was by a Gentleman of our Nation (then Prisoner in their Rear) over-heard to say: Oh I know the King of Sweden well enough, I have served him; he is best at the latter end of the day. But the chief fright was among the Ladies, the Captains Wives, and other Women, then behind the Army. Many Gentlewomen got out of their Coaches, cut asunder the Harnes, and mounted straddlings upon the bare Horse-backs, and away they spurred among the Souldiers. Now went the Waggon-horses and the Ordnance-horses to it, all were ridden away with, divers Women and Children were there troden to death: Nor would the Horsemen turn head, notwithstanding they heard the Charge presently again renewed, and those about the Mills all this time at it, till they were gotten over a Pass, four or five English Miles from the place of Battel. The fright so pursued them, though no body else did, that coming to this Pass, the Officers drew out their Swords, and flast and beat off the Souldiers to give them way to get over. There were at least four or five thousand people of them, and they quartered themselves confusedly up and down in the Villages which the Boors had forsaken: Nor durst they ever return into the Battel. Amongst these was my Author, carried away; from whom I learned it.

After

After a little pause, the Count of Pappenheim with his Horse and Dragoons arrived, whom some will needs have to have been in Person at the beginning of the Battel: By his coming was the Charge thereabouts renewed. He put himself into the Imperial left Wing, (which was most distressed, and which had been reserved for him:) to be opposite to the Swedish right Wing, where he supposed the King in Person had commanded. Just as he was ordering his Horse, he was struck with a Bullet of a Falconet, or small Sling-piece, about the shoulder, of which he died presently; even so soon as he was taken down from his Horse, to have been carried into Leipsich. This was a brave fighting Gentleman, whose Body was by Walenstein carried into Prague; where it was to be seen publicly. The Emperour (as a little French Relation affirmeth) had newly sent the Collar of the Golden Fleece unto him and Walenstein: Which honour before ever he received, he was, in the place where he should have worn his Order, thus dubbed with a Sling-piece. He had made his Will a little before, had Shriven himself, and Communicated at a dry Mass; and made this short Testament upon it; His Soul he commended to God, his Body (if he were slain) to the Emperour, and his Wife and Children unto Walenstein.

He being shot, his Officers flocking about him, were heard to cry, Oh! our General is slain: Immediately whereupon his Horse turned head, and ran out of the Battel without stroke striking, back again towards the Weser, and the Lower Saxony.

But the Walensteiners, whom Pappenheim's coming had set on, fell to it closely: Piccolomini advanced, and Terfisa with their Cavalry; and the Foot-Regiments seconded them with extremity of resolution. And now began the sorest, the longest, and the obstinatest Conflict, that had been since the King was killed. The Charge was sustained by the Swedish with much Gallantry, and never was Battel better fought: Nor seldom have Battalions ever stood, amongst whom so much spoil hath been committed. Full two hours were they in hot Battel. On the Imperial side was Piccolomini twice or thrice shot, Sergeant Major Brunner slain, and so was a young Count of Walenstein. The Abbot Fulda was at this Charge also slain. And think then how many Officers and Common Souldiers was it likely that these Great Commanders did take along to wait upon them to the next World.

On the Swedes side, the chief of the spoil light upon the two middlemost Brigades of Foot belonging unto Grave Neels, and Colonel Winckles. The Imperialists charged with so much fury, and with Battalions of two or three thousand in a Regiment, that they by force drove the Swedish to the Retreat in the plain Field, and (as the most say) even then recovered their seven Pieces of Ordnance. Grave Neels, Colonel of the Life-guards (which is the Yellow Regiment) was there shot a little above the knee, of which, being carried off spoiled, he after died. Out of this Brigade did the Imperialists carry away seven Colours; and to tell the truth, the Kings own Company, which served here among the Guards, lost their own Ensign or Standard-Royal too. He that had carried the Colours, was after seen with his Sword in his hand, but his Clout was missing.

was shot in the Arm a little above the Elbow, and in the hand, and carried out of the Battel. His Lieutenant, Caspar Wolff, was slain upon the place, and most of his Colours taken. These two Brigades were of the Flower of the Army; old Souldiers of seven or eight years service, (the most of them) and whom the King had there placed, for that he most relied on them. These old Blades stood to their Arms stoutly; and the adverse Writers confess, that their dead bodies now recovered the same ground, which living they had defended. These were old beaten Souldiers indeed, but it was so long since they had been last beaten, that they had by this time forgotten to run away. This is the reason they were so shattered; that when, towards night, they were to have fallen on again, both these Brigades put together, could not make one Squadron strong, which is but the third part of one of them.

The Swedes Brigade fared something better, because near unto the Horse: And yet there came not above four hundred off, alive or unwounded. Duke Bernard's Brigade was something more out of Gun-shot, for that they were next the Horse of the left Wing. Yet here was Colonel Wildesten shot in the Breast, of which he after died: Duke Bernard, Lieutenant Col. Winkler being slain upon the place. In this sore bickering, the spoil, on the Imperial side, fell mostly upon old Bruners and young Walensteins Regiments, both which were here killed, with full half, if not two thirds of the Souldiers. These Regiments performed their duties so valiantly, and Walenstein himself took such special notice of them, that he a long time after (if not still) maintained them in his own house at Prague for it. Henderson's Reserve of Foot in the mean time had also their share in the knocking: One of the Offices and Uses of the Reserve, being still to supply and second where most need is, with fresh men to dearn up the holes, and stop up the gaps of the slaughtered. And whereas those four Brigades of the Van had so terribly been shattered, General-Major Kniphausen had out of his care sent up these two Brigades of the Count of Thurn, and the Colonel Mitzlaff to relieve them. After a while, he sent them up those four Squadrons of Horse, who so well (altogether) restored the Encounter, that the Imperialists began to give ground; which the Swedes so far pursued, till they had recovered the seven Pieces again, and four others at the left hand of them.

Look we now aside, to see what was done in the Reer, and left Wing, by Kniphausen and Duke Bernard. General Major Kniphausen having sent two Brigades of his four, and four Squadrons of Horse to the relief of the Vantguard, sent also his other two Horse-Squadrons, commanded by the Prince of Anhalt, and the Lieutenant of Baron Hoffkirch, unto Duke Bernard. As for the other two Brigades of Foot, (his own and Bosens) together with Oems his Reserve of Horse, these did Kniphausen still keep by him in the Reer of the Battel.

Duke Bernard had as hard a Chapter of it, as any man against the Imperialists right Wing, at the Wind-Mills, and (surely) had the most Renowned Don Quixot been there, there had been exercise enough for his Valour at these Wind-Mills. Soberly, this was the hardest Post for advantage of situation, all the Field over: And Count Colorado as well maintained it against him. Never man did more gallantly behave himself (as is avoucht) for at first and last, in this and other Anno 1632. places, he charged several times, one after another. And Coloredo gave Duke Bernard leave to charge all: He had so good an advantage of the two Ditches and the Wind-Mills, that he would not scarce offer upon Duke Bernard.

The brave young Duke, pressing on in the beginning of the fight, had set the Town of Lutzen on fire: His Reason being, that seeing if he would get the Wind-Mills, he must with the end of his Wing even touch (as it were) the very Walls of the Town. Should Coloredo then have first filled those Walls with Musquetiers, they must needs have so sorely galled his Horsemen, that there had been no coming near, nor could Horse and Pistols have done any service against Walls and Musquetiers. In one of these Charges, did Coloredo so Thunder upon Duke Bernard, that the valiant Prince thought it not unsouldier-like-done to shelter himself behind the Millers House.

At this time (as we told you) did Major Kniphausen keep his two Brigades, and Oems his Reserve together uningaged; doing no more with them, than fair and softly advance them towards the Enemy; at such a time as he saw the Brigades of the Van to get any ground of them. The distance of his Reer from Front was about six hundred paces; and that scantling he still kept himself behind the other. This was no small occasion of the winning of the Battel; seeing that so often as any of the Van were disordered, and put to the Retreat; they with him, still find a whole great Body together, unbroken, by the sight of which they resumed new courage, and were set in order again.

And very glad was Duke Bernard, when in the next breaking up of the Mist, he came and found Kniphausen in so good order; whom (as he openly professed) he feared to have found all to pieces. For now, betwixt three and four of the Clock (which was not long before Sun-set) did the Mist break up; and there was a fair half hour after it. At which time Duke Bernard going abroad, to over-view the posture and countenance of the Army: (which since his hearing of the Kings Death, the Mist and Smoak had not suffered him to discover any thing of) he came now along by the Battel unto the right Wing, speaking to the Officers and Souldiers, and encouraging them to a New On-set: plainly he found the whole Army (except Kniphausens part) in no very good order; which he and Kniphausen (who took much good pains likewise about it) did their best to reduce them to. When the word was given for a new Charge, Alas Comrade, (said the poor Souldiers one to another) must we fall on again? Come says the other, (embracing him) Courage; if we must, let us do it bravely, and make a day on't. As Duke Bernard was leading on, The Imperial Generalissimo sent his two Colonels, Perfeca and Piccolomini, to discover in that clear weather what the Swedes were a doing: who brought his Excellency word again, that they were rallied about the Wood, and in very good order advancing towards him.

This (no doubt) made the Imperialist's Heart quake to think upon the Terroure of a fourth Charge. And now could the Swedes discover the Imperial Horse retreating in indifferent good order towards the Wind-Mills: whereupon they bringing forwards Ten Pieces of Canon, and turning those likewise upon them which were before taken; they gave the Imperial Horse such a Rousing Salve of Great Ordnance, and charged so upon it, that they put them into disorder. And here (as my Spanish Relator says) did the Generalissimo light upon a slight fillip by a favourable Musquet-Bullet, which made no wound, but left a Blew Remembrance only upon him.

And now were the Imperialists beaten round about, even to the very Wind-Mills; The Swedes being Masters of the ground that they shouldered the others out of. But just now, a little before Sun-set, fell the fatal Mist again; which so hastened on the Night, that the Swedes could not well see which way to pursue their Enemies. Duke Bernard in his coming back, was thus heard to say, Merciful God! but for this Mist, we had even now gotten the victory. Hence went he back over all the Battalions to his own Post again, to which he now perceived the Imperialists to be making.

And now by Sun-setting was all the Field clear of the Imperialists, excepting only about the Wind-Mills: and there plainly were both Coloredoes and Duke Bernard's Men slain off one from another, like two Duellers leaning on their Swords to break Breath again. Certainly they had so banged one another, that neither of both were in order; but either Party shot at adventure right forward, and let the Bullet find his own way, as it could, through that Night of Smoak and Mistiness. Those Musquetiers which (we told you) were lodged in the Mud-walled Gardens, were seen to give fire continually, but no men to be discerned. And the Swedes at adventure shot at them again; and as at Night they got ground, they stormed into the Gardens, as if they had been so many Castles. Here the next day many were found dead, 300 in one of them.

And just in the Edge of the Evening, when the Swedish well hoped all had been finished; had Duke Bernard fresh word brought him, that Pappenheim's Foot were even now arrived from Hall, and were beginning a Fresh Charge about the Wind-Mills. Thus ran the word over the Army, Pappenheim's Foot are come, Pappenheim's Foot are come. This the Swedish believed.

Now was all the Service (after half an hours silence on both sides) turned into the Wind-Mills. The Imperialists Courage, like the Throws of a dying Body, struggled hard at the last cast, for Life; and made for the first time as fierce a Charge of it, as any had the day before passed. To withstand this now, does Kniphausen bring his second fresh Brigades; with whom are the other two of Thurns and Mitzlaffs conjoined, that he had before sent to the Relief of the Vant^g guard; which indeed had not so cruelly been shattered. Now also Duke Bernard Rallying all the Horse together, advanced to the Charge. The Imperialists had anew put down some Musquetiers into the Cross Ditch or Boundary of Lands, which not a little troubled the Swedish. Once or twice did they offer to force that Trench, and to storm over it: But it was so troublesome and dangerous in the dark, that they did but over-tumble one another, and were fain to keep on the other side of it to bring on some Musquetiers, and from thence to give their Volleys. The best of it was, that it was not above 100 paces distant from the High-way, close behind which the Imperialists were ranged. That which most galled the Imperialists, was the Swedish Ordnance, which on the Right-hand-Flank of them, and on the nearer side of the High-way, were now turned upon them. This most cruel and hot fight continued till about five a Clock in the Evening, much about which which time the Walssteiners, or Pappenheimers, or both together fell off in the dark, and gave it quite over.

This year dyed Sigismund King of Poland, Gustaphus Adolphus King of Sweden, slain in the great Battel of Lutzen, but now described, and Fredrick King of Bohemia of the Infection at Mentz.

And now died also the Emperours Great General Wallenstein, who was slain in his Bed-Chamber at Egra in Bohemia, for that he practised against the Emperour and Empire, intending to divide Stakes with the Swede: This being discovered to the Emperour, he assures himself first of Prague the Capital City of Bohemia; after this he was by two Scotch Commanders, Gorden and Lesly, and Butler an Irish Man assaulted as he was going to Bed, where the last mentioned ran him through with a Partizan, and threw (so some say) his dead Body into the Streets: He was the Son of a Baron in Bohemia, and his Religion Protestant; but being afterwards entertain'd as a Page to the Marquels of Burgh, Son to the Arch-Duke Ferdinand of Insprack, he turn'd Romanist; and at the first breaking out of the Troubles in Bohemia he was employed by the Emperour, and defeated 6000 Hungarians with fifteen Troops of Horse, which first signaliz'd him; afterwards his Reputation was advanced by his Conquest, of the Town and Countrey of Halberstadt, Hall, and its Bishoprick, by the entire defeat of Bethlem-Gabor and Mansfield at Novograde, &c. But his Ambition and Treachery at last brought him to the untimely end but now spoken of.

The Beginning of this year, the King took his Progress into his Native Kingdom of Scotland accompanied by a Numerous Train of Nobles.

And for the well-ordering his Majesties Train in this Progress, a Proclamation was issued out May the 5th. pursuant hereto, and another in Reference to the Prizes of Provisions, within the Verge of the Household.

A Proclamation for well-ordering His Majesties Court and Train in his Journey to Scotland and Return thence.

THE Kings Majesty having taken into his Princely Consideration some Inconveniences, which may fall out and happen in his intended Journey towards his Kingdom of Scotland, if present care be not had to prevent the same, hath thought fit, by advice of his Privy Council to publish and declare: That his Royal Pleasure and Command is, that none of his Subjects of what Degree or Quality soever they be, during the time of his Majesties going and returning in the said Journey, shall presume within the Verge of his Majesties Court, to take up or possess themselves of any Lodging, of their own private Authority, but shall first receive a Billet from his Majesties Harbingers, or some of them. And his Majesty being graciously pleased, and providently careful to prevent such Grievances, which may in this Journey happen to his loving Subjects, doth likewise hereby straightly charge and command, that none of his Majesties Servants, nor the Servants of any Noblemen, or others whatsoever, shall in the said Journey presume to take any Cart or Carts, but such as shall be delivered unto him, or them by some of his Majesties Cart-takers, or their Deputies: And lastly, his Majesty's further Will and Pleasure is, that this his Royal Proclamation, and the Directions hereby given and commanded, shall likewise continue and remain in force for his Majesties Service, and the good of his Subjects, in all other his Majesties future Journeys and Progresses whatsoever, the due observing whereof his Majesty expects from all his loving Subjects, as they tender his Pleasure, and will avoid the contrary at their Perils.

A Proclamation concerning the Prizes of Victuals within the Verge of his Majesties Household.

THAT whereas in his Majesties Progress through divers parts of the Realm, necessity requires, that a great number of his Majesties Subjects, not only Noblemen, but others, attending his Service, and others for their necessary Occasions, should frequent those places, where the King in His Royal Person shall resort; and it is therefore requisite that Compendious Provisions be made, that they be not exposed to the intolerable Avarice of Bakers, Brewers, Inholders, Butchers, and Sellers of Victuals, who do ordinarily unlawfully exact and demand unreasonable and extream Prizes for Victuals, Horse-meat, Lodging, &c. above the Prizes they were sold at before the Kings coming into those Parts: Therefore His Majesty doth Publish and Command, that all Persons do keep such Prizes as are and shall be Assessed and Rated by the Clerk of the Market of the Kings Household, or his Lawful Deputy, within and without their Liberties, upon the Presentment of Jurors, by vertue of his Office Sworn and Charged from time to time.

In his Journey he was entertained by several of the Nobility very magnificently: The next year by the Earl of Newcastle in Derbyshire at Belpoyr Castle, and not as some have wrote at Welbeck; and in this year afterwards, his Majesty passed on for York, where his Reception on the way every where was Princely and stately: He made a short stay at York, and thence came to Ruby Castle, the House of Sir Henry Vane, where his Majesty was treated by Sir Henry, then his Servant; thence he went on for Durham, where Doctor Morton, Lord Bishop of the Diocese, several days entertain'd the King and Nobility; as his Majesty likewise was at Newcastle by the Mayor and Government there: And so on the second of June he arrived at Berwick upon Twede, where the Recorder, Mr. Widdrington, entertain'd his Majesty with the Speech following.

Most Gracious and Dread Sovereign.

WHAT the Noise of useless and obsolete Canons, what these strong yet desolate Walls, what the Reliques of sometimes warlike Souldiers, what the Ruines of a poor, yet ancient Burrough, what all those would say, (if they could say any thing) and what all we your Majesties humblest and meanest Subjects desire to express with an unanimous and chearful Acclamation, is no more but this, That your Majesties Presence doth now bring as much Joy

Concerning the Prizes of Victuals within the Verge of his Majesties Household.

June the 2
Mr. Widdringtons Speech to the King at Berwick, in his Progress to Scotland, being Recorder of that Town.

and Comfort to us all, as ever the loss of this Town of Berwick brought sorrow to the English or Scottish Nation.

It were unreasonable for us to represent to your Majesties view, the Gloomy Cloud of our Pressures and wants: No I need not do it; the Mite we are to cast into your Majesties Treasury will quickly tell you them; We cannot do it, for that Cloud is suddenly vanished by the Radiant Beams of your Sun-like appearance. By whose approach these Rusty Ordnances, these Solitary Walls, these Souldiers, this now despicable Town, have all instantly received their former Life, Luster, and Vigour; and hence we are induced to think, that this Year (being the Year of your Majesties most Royal Progress) is likewise the Year dreamed on by Plato, wherein all things were to return to their former Life, Splendor and Excellency.

You have in Your Majesties Eye the Representative Body of the poor Town of Berwick, yet a Town (for Fuimus Troes) that hath been the Delight, nay the Ransom of Kings, a true Helena, for which many bloody Battels have been fought, lost, and regained several times, within the compass of one Century of Years. A Town the strongest Fortrefs of both your Majesties most flourishing Kingdoms, yet upon each discord and dissention, banded as a Ball between them; if held in the Hands of one, then tossed by the other Kingdom; a Ball that never found rest until the happy Union.

A Town at this day as useless, as Arms in time of Peace, yet may serve for Your Majesty to cast your Eye upon, as a little Map of both your great Kingdoms, as a participating of the nature of both, yet doubtful whether most beyond the ordinary Limits of the one, and without the Jurisdiction of the other Kingdom, but conspicuous in the Eye of both.

A Town neither wholly regulated by English or Scottish Laws, but by Customs and Usages in some things different from both; yet rather inclined to English Laws, and more affecting Scottish Fashions and Language, as being oftner saluted by the Rescripts of the one, and seeing and hearing oftner the other.

Although now English, and so hath continued since the time of King Edw. 4. yet such is our distance from the Center of the Kingdom, that the Lines of those Felicities now enjoyed by that Kingdom, by your Majesties happy Government and Residence there, do not so happily Concenter in us.

We well know (as indeed who knoweth not) that Royal Blood running in your Majesties Veins, to be Extracted from the most Renowned Kings of both these Kingdoms, and by those Kings, (Most Dread Sovereign) especially by your Royal Father of ever blessed and happy memory, hath this Town, though in the Skirts of either Kingdom, been richly Imbroidered, with many Priviledges, Franchises, and Immunities: And therefore we doubt not but your Majesty, in whom each Man may behold the Worth of all your Ancestors, you being no less Rightful Inheritor of their Vertues, than of their Crowns, will graciously maintain what they have most benignly granted.

But few words are best to be used to Kings, especially when they are spoken by an unskilful Orator. We dare boldly say, (Most Gracious and Mighty King) that our Hearts are better than our Tongues, being most of all unhappy in this, that they are linked with so bad Expressions.

Yet we hope that your Majesty may see in our Countenances, what you hear not so fully expressed by our Tongues; We humbly crave your free Pardon of the one, and your Gracious Interpretation of the other.

Your Majesty is now going to place a Diadem upon your most Sacred Head, which God and your own Right have long since given into your Hands.

Our humble Prayers are, that not only that, but all your other Crowns, may be unto your Majesty Crowns of Roses, without the mixture of any Thorns.

And we most affectionately wish, that the Throne of King Charles the Great, and wise Son of our Brittish Solomon, may be like that of King David, the Father of Solomon, established before the Lord for ever.

And now we come to the Bound-Road near Berwick, where his Majesty was met and received by the Nobility of Scotland, and by the Gentry of Theviot-Dale, and Lothian: Amongst these there was a Troop of 600 well mounted in green Sattin Doublets, and white Taffata Scarfs, who were Gentlemen, and Dependents, relating to the Earl of Hume, at whose house at Dunglas his Majesty lay that night at his own charge, for that there was a Controversie then depending in Law about the Estate.

Upon Thursday the 13th of June, he came from Dunglas to Seaton, an House of the Earl of Wintons, where he was entertained by the Earl, and stay'd there till Friday the 14th of June after Dinner.

From thence he went to Dalketh, a House then belonging to the Earl of Morton, (afterwards to the Crown) Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, where he was also sumptuously entertained by his Lordship that night, and the next day at Dinner.

June 15. his Majesty passed on from Dalketh to Edinburgh, entering at the West Port, where his Majesty was presented with the Keys by the Lord Provost, Aldermen, and Bayliffs in their Scarlet Robes: these, with others of the Council of that City, to the number of 13 score, counting in the young men, who clad in white Sattin Doublets, black Velvet Breeches, and with white Silk Stockins, bearing Partizans in their hands, attended his Majesty, the Train-bands of the City, &c. (as Mr. Rushworth gives us the Relation) being ranged on each side the Streets through which his Majesty passed. There were great Acclamations of the people, being entertained with Elegant Speeches at five several Pageants; viz. 1. At the said West-Port; 2. At the West-bow; 3. At the Old Tolbooth; the 4. At the Trone, and the 5. At the nether Bow. The Ceremony of that Pageant at the Tolbooth, there was represented in Effigie the whole Kings in order that had Reigned in Scotland since the Monarchy of that Kingdom, even from Fergus the first, who himself was represented therein, making a Prophetical Oration of all his Successors till Charles the First, the 108 King, and added, that as Heaven had propitiously maintained the successive Sovereignty from him to Charles, so he predicted, that as many should succeed his Successors, as he had preceding Monarchs of this Kingdom; besides, there were several witty Speeches in Verse. 1. Called the Speech of Caledonia, representing the

the Kingdom. 2. The Song of the Muses at Parnassus. 3. The Speeches at the Horoscopol Pageant by the Planets, where first Endymion speaks, then Saturn, Jove, Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury, Moon; and last again Endymion closes the Ceremony, all printed amongst the Poems of Mr. William Drummond of Haythernden.

The Scotch Nobility rid down the Streets, according to their Degrees, in Order of Parliament; next to them the Hoods, the Sword, Scepter, and Crown; immediately after the Kings Person, the English Nobility according to their several Ranks and Degrees; his Majesty lighting at the Abbey Church-door, where Mr. Andrew Ramsay, a Minister of the City, made a very learned Oration to him in Latin. And from thence he went to his Palace of Hallyrood-house.

June 16 being Sunday, he heard a Sermon at the Chappel Royal.

June 17 It being Monday, after Dinner His Majesty publicly created the Earl of Angus Marquess of Douglas, and Chancellor Hay Earl of Kinnoul, and presently after went in his Coach to the Castle of Edinburgh, and there was worthily entertained that Night by the Earl of Marr Governour of the Castle.

The 18 of June, being Tuesday, was the Kings Coronation-Day, where all his Noble Officers of State attended the Kings Majesty in their Robes from the Castle to the Abbey-Church, according to their Degrees, and the Honours, Vest, Sword, Scepter and Crown carried after the accustomed manner, lighting at the Church-door, and assuming their respective Places, a Sermon was preached by David Lindsay then Bishop of Brechin upon these words, 1 Kings 1. 39. And all the People said God save King Solomon,

After Sermon they proceeded to the Coronation, attended with all the usual Ceremonies thereof. It was observed (saith the forementioned Author) that Dr. Lawd, then Bishop of London, who attended the King, (being a Stranger, yet a Privy Councillor of Scotland) was high in his Carriage, taking upon him the order and managing of the Ceremonies and Coronation; and for an Instance, Spotswood Archbishop of St. Andrews, being placed at the Kings Right Hand, and Lindsay then Archbishop of Glasgow at his Left, Bishop Lawd took Glasgow and thrust him from the King with these words, are you a Church-man and wants the Coat of your Order? which was an Imbroidered Coat, and that he scrupled to wear; (no doubt being Antichristian and Superstitious) and for that he is termed a moderate Church-man) and in place of him put in the Bishop of Rosse at the Kings left Hand; Thus on all occasions is that Prelate presented by that Author.

At this time (saith he) the Lords and Nobles of Scotland, seemed to stand well and equally in the Kings Favour till after the Parliament, (very true, for their perfidious actions were then, smothered but afterwards broke out and appeared, especially the Duke of Lenox, and the Marquess of Hamilton.)

June the 19. Wednesday, was a day of Rest, The Bands of the City Disciplin'd in the Palace-yard before the King and his Nobles.

June the 20. Thursday, the Parliament rode in order from the Kings Palace to the Parliament-house, the Honours carried, and all Ceremonies observed, as was accustomed. Spotswood Archbishop of St. Andrews Preached; the King made his Speech, and the Parliament proceeded to chuse the Lords and Members of the Articles, according to their usual manner; The Bishops being to nominate the Temporal Lords, there were Elected Three Lords suspected to be Popish. These Lords and Members of the Articles consisting of Eight of the Clergy, Eight of the Nobility, and Eight Barons, and Eight Burgeses. The manner of Election was thus:

1. The Noble Men Elect Clergy.
2. The Clergy Elect and Chuse the Noblemen.

3. The Elect Clergy and Noblemen chuse the Barons.

4. The Elect Clergy, Nobility and Barons, chose the Burgeses. Besides the Officers of State make up that Body which devise, contrive, and form all Acts that are to pass in Parliament; and being so presented, are passed without difficulty. These Members of the Articles convened daily, till the 28. day of June; and in the general, what the King proposed was granted: And on Friday the 28. of June, the whole Parliament met, and passed the several Acts which the Articles had so prepared, being 31. publick printed Acts, besides 176. private Acts not printed; such as respect particular persons and things, are promiscuously Titled Acts, Protestations, Ratifications, Commissions, &c.

The 1. and 21. Acts gave the King very great sums of Money; viz. The one a Subsidy or Taxation of Thirty Shillings of every Pound-Land of old Extent for six years to be paid at every Term of Martimas, and also the 16 peny of all Annual Rents, or Interest of Money, (the same being then at 10 l. per Cent.) and that for the like space of six years to be paid Termly at Whitsontide and Martimas equally during that time.

The other Act reduced the Interest of 10 l. per Cent. to 8 l. to be observed as a Law amongst the Lieges; but in consideration thereof, the King was to have 2 l. out of the 10 l. formerly paid, and that for the space of three years: All these made a very great Taxation; And who reaped the benefit thereof, whether the Kings Countrymen, the Scottish Nobility, or his Majesty, will afterwards appear, and particularly hereby their gratitude to their natural, courteous, and good Prince; which will presently appear, for that the Clouds began to arise in that Northern Horizon, which afterwards raised a Tempest in the whole Island.

In this Parliament there was little or no difference, except in what related to two Acts, viz. third and fourth; the one entituled, an Act against his Majesties Royal Prerogative, and Apparel of Kirkmen: The other, an Act of Ratification of the Acts touching Religion.

As to the former of these Acts, several Noblemen and others were not pleased to have the Apparel of Kirkmen joyned with the Prerogative, suspecting the Surplice to be intended; (so sagacious some of the Scotch Nobility then were, though then this Law of K. James was in force) and the King being asked that Question, made no answer: But this Circumstance was observed (saith Mr. Rushworth) of him, that he took a List of the whole Members out of his Pocket, and said, Gentlemen, I have all your Names here, and I'll know who will do me service, and who will not, this day. However about thirteen Noble-men, and as many Barons and Burgeses declared, that they agreed to the Act for his Majesties Prerogative, but dissented from that part of it, as to the the Apparel of Kirkmen; and these were afterwards the prime Ring-leaders in the Covenant, and the Rebellion which followed it.

1633.

And indeed at this Parliament, it was as Mr. Sanderson hath well noted, that the King first found the first sparks of a discontented Party of the Nobility of that Kingdom, by their most eager opposing of an Act of Parliament, giving full Power and Authority to his Father King James, to ordain and appoint any Habit for the Clergy and Judges; and this was still in force: The first and most eager man who appear'd herein, is said to be the Lord London, then a young Man, and of a small Estate, which in the guess of some men might put him forward for new Acquisitions; he was lately come from their University, somewhat resembling the Schola Illustres beyond Sea, our Westminster and Katon Schools at home; however power they had to confer Degrees, and a Master of Arts he was in their Calculation; a Defendant Lord he was, faith the forementioned Author, and of a cavilling contradictory nature, that nothing could seem so positive to him by Reason, as his own Opinion; and therefore as if he had been in their Logick School, he argues in the Parliament-House, lays about him in a Scholastick form and way, brings his distinctions and School-forms thus; Duplici questioni non potest dari una responsio, ita est; after he disputes in Syllogismes, in Mode and Figure, then sits down, and challenges any man to answer him, in this manner, Responde, Perge, Urge, Punge. His Majesty wondering at his bold and strange behaviour, calmly told him, that the Order of that House was not to dispute in that manner, but that he might speak his Opinion, and after give his voice, Yea or Nay, as their manner is; which I do, said he presently, Negative; and so sat down in great heat. However it was carried for the Ratification of the former Act by far the greater number of Votes; which this young Noble-man not satisfied with, he again stands up, and questioneth the Register; by great contest, and in much passion, compels the number of Voices, yet all (he sees) in vain. And thus much for his Character in this place, you will hear more of him hereafter.

The King said, during the heat of the Contest, My Lords, I will have no distinctions, but I command you to say I, or No. Upon which those Lords, and others before-mentioned, declared themselves particularly, that they did dissent from that Act as it was conceived; as to the other Act annent Religion, the same dissenting Lords and Gentlemen declared, that they agreed to the Ratification of the Laws annent the true Protestant Religion, as it was established in Doctrine, and an Act of this nature passed in King James the Sixth of his Reign, his Majesties Royal Father, when Archbishops, Bishops, &c. were opposed, but now they were governing and included, therefore they dissented from that part; and being again commanded to say I, or No, the said Nobles and others dissented as formerly.

Amongst the Peers that dissented were John Earl of Roths, John Earl of Cassils, William Earl of Lothian, and the Lords Lindsey, Porplichin, Sinclair, Balmerino, Cooper, Tester, and four more. The Passing of the Act concerning Ecclesiastical Habits, did much perplex the Dissenting Lords and others, which occasioned some of them to divulge a scandalous Libel reflecting upon his Majesty, wherein was contained this Reflection, How grievous a thing it was for a King in that place, by making of the Subjects Votes, to Over-awe his Parliament: And that the same was a breach of Privilege: A Prelude to what followed in both Kingdoms, &c. This Libel, as afterwards appeared, was made by one William Hagg, who fled for it; but being found in the Custody of the Lord Balmerino, a person who owed whatever he enjoyed to the Kings mercy, that Lord, by the advice of the Loyal Nobility, and others of the Privy Council, was in a Court of his Peers found guilty of concealing Treason, and therefore condemned to lose his Head, but afterwards pardoned by his Majesty; for which afterwards how well he requited his Majesty, shall in the sequel appear.

The Parliament being Dissolved upon Friday the said 28. day of June, the King stayed two days, and observed the Factious with an unfavourable Aspect.

Upon Monday the first of July, the King takes his Progress to his Palace at Linlithgow; Tuesday the second to Strivling, being presented with Plate by each Provost, one of whom being a notorious Stickler, was not admitted to kiss his Hand.

Upon the third he went to Dumfermlin, and Thursday the fourth to Falkland. The Nobility and Gentry of Fife having prepared a Treat for his Majesty, but that many of them being disaffected to his Majesty, he was pleased to take another way, and avoided giving them any countenance.

Friday and Saturday the sixth and seventh, the King hunted in his Park of Falkland, and there, every Sunday, Maxwell, Bishop of Ross, preached before his Majesty.

Monday the eighth the King went to S. Johnston, and was Nobly entertained by the Earl of Kinoul (then Lord High-Chancellor) that night at Supper, and the next day at Dinner, and returned from Scoon to Falkland.

Wednesday the tenth, there had like to have happened a sad accident, the King with his Nobles and Retinue took Boat at Brunt-Island to come to Leith (being seven Miles over) in a calm Season about the mid-day. Presently after the Boats put to Sea, arose a violent Storm and Tempest, (though none at Land) to the great hazard of his Majesty, the King passing to a Ship, a Man of War of his in the Road, with much difficulty weathered it, quit his former Boat, and took the Ship and Boat to Leith, and there Landed after great danger; one of the Boats in the Kings Presence being over-set, and turned over, perished with the Kings Plate, and near twenty persons, of which number were one Lewis Somervell and Alexander Naper, who had the charge of the Silver Plate and Vessels, and three persons were saved sitting upon the Keile coming in to Shoar upmost.

Thursday the eleventh, the King staid at his Palace of Hallyrood-house.

Upon Friday the twelfth, he went to Dalkeith, where he stayed that night.

Upon Saturday after Dinner he went to Seaton-house, stayed that night and Sabbath-day.

Munday after Dinner he went from Seaton to Innerwick, an House of James Maxwell, after Earl of Dirlington, and was richly entertained.

1633. It may not perhaps be amiss to give you the Grievances of the Presbyterian Ministers, Presented at Dalkeith to the Clerk of the Articles, and by him, to the Lords of the Articles, though they being vain and frivolous, they were rejected, and never thought fit to be prepared in Parliament. They were Presented by one Hogge, as he styles himself, Minister of the Evangel. and here follow.

Grievances and Petitions concerning the dis-ordered Estate of the Reformed Kirk within this Realm of Scotland, Presented upon the 29th. day of May, 1633. by me
Mr. Thomas Hogge Minister of the Evangel, in mine own Name, and in the Name of others of the Ministry likewise grieved, to Sir John Hay Clerk of Register, to be Presented by him to such a Court, according to the Order appointed to consider them, that thereafter they may be presented to his Majesty and Estate, which are to be Assembled at the next ensuing Parliament.

THE opportunity of this solemn meeting of your gracious Majesty, and the honourable Estates convened in this High Court of Parliament, and the Conscience of our Duty to God and the Reformed Kirk within this Realm of Scotland, where we serve by our Ministry, constrains us to present in all humility to your Highness and Estates presently Assembled, those our just Grievances and reasonable Petitions following :

1. Albeit Vote in Parliament was not absolutely granted to Ministers provided to Prelacies, but only upon such conditions as his Highness of happy memory, and the general Assemblies of the Kirk should agree upon, which is evident by the remit and provision expressed in the Act of Parliament holden at Edinburgh in September 1597. And albeit the manner of their Election and Admission to the Office of Commissary, and the particular conditions and Cautions to be observed by Ministers Vote in Parliament in name of the Kirk after long disputation, were agreed upon by his Majesty present in Person, and the general Assembly, and were appointed by them to be insert in the body of the Act of Parliament, which was to be made concerning that purpose. Some Ministers notwithstanding have been, and are admitted to Vote in Parliament, in name of the Kirk, as absolutely, as if the Act of Parliament did contain no such reference, and as if his Majesty with the general Assembly had not agreed upon the manner of their Election and Admission to that Office, or upon any limitations; whereby the Kirk hath sustained great hurt and prejudice in her Liberties and Priviledges, and specially by their frequent transgressing the first of the Conditions, although grounded upon the very Law of Nature and Nations. That nothing be proponed by them in Parliament, Council; or Convention in the name of the Kirk without express Warrant and direction from the Kirk, under the pain of deposition from their Office; Neither shall they keep silence, nor consent in any of the said Conventions to any thing that may be prejudicial to the Liberty and Weal of the Kirk, under the said pain.) And the second, That they shall be bound at every general Assembly to give account anent the discharging of their Commission since the Assembly preceding, and shall submit themselves to their Censure, and stand to their determination whatsoever without Appellation, and shall seek and obtain Ratification of their doings at the said Assembly under the pain of Infamy and Excommunication. Therefore our humble Supplication is, that the execution of the Acts of Parliament of matters belonging to the Kirk, to which they have Voted in the name of the Kirk, without any authority or allowance from the general Assemblies of the Kirk, be suspended, till the Kirk be heard, and that in time coming Ministers have no otherwise Vote in Parliament, but according to the provision of the Act of Parliament, and the order of their entry to the Office of that Commissioners and Limitation foresaid agreed upon, as said is.

2. Seeing Ratifications of Acts and Constitutions of the Kirk cannot be considered to be a benefit or favour to the Kirk, unless the Ratifications pass according to the meaning of the Kirk, and the Tenour of the said Acts and Constitutions, without Omission, Addition, or Alteration of Clauses, Articles, or Words of importance

‘ and that in the Ratification of the Act of the ‘ Assembly holden at Glasgow, Anno 1610. which ‘ past in Parliament holden 1612. under the name
‘ of Explanation, sundry Clauses and Articles ‘ were omitted; as the subjection of Bishops in all ‘ things concerning their Life, Conversation, Of‘ fice, and Benefice, to the Censure of the Gene‘ ral Assembly, the Censure of Bishops in case
‘ they stay of the Censure of Excommunication,
‘ the continuing of the exercise of Doctrine
‘ Weekly, the necessity of the Testificat and alli-‘ stance of the Ministry of the bounds for the ad‘ mission of Ministers; and other Clauses and ‘ Articles are added and insert, as the different ‘ degrees of Archbishops, and Bishops, the pow‘ er of giving collation of Benefices granted to ‘ Bishops, the power of giving collation of Be-‘ nefices granted to Bishops, the disposing of Be-‘ nefices falling in their hands jure devoluto, the ap‘ pointing of Moderators in Diocesan Synods in ‘ case of their absence, & some words of the Oath
‘ are changed: By all which Omissions, Additi‘ ons, and Alterations, the Kirk hath sustained, ‘ and doth sustain great hurt in her Jurisdiction
‘ and Discipline Our humble desire therefore ‘ is, that the Kirk may be liberate from the pre‘ judice of those Omissions, Additions, and Al‘ terations of the Act foresaid.

‘3. Notwithstanding the general Assemblies ‘have been holden from the time of Reformati‘on, till the year 1603. at least once in the year,
‘and oftner pro re nata, Provincial Synods twice ‘in the year, Weekly Meetings for Exercises and ‘Presbyteries every Week, for Matters to be ‘treated in them respective, and their Liberties

Let the Parliament of Scotland look to the tendency of the Petition which saith, That no Constitution of Parliament ought to be esteemed a benefit to the Kirk, except it be according to their Mind and Humour, and whether this be not the right Popish and Presbyterian Doctrine, That the Civil Magistrate is not to meddle in Church-matters.

were ratified in Parliament Anno 1592. and by that, as a most powerful mean, blessed be God, Peace and Purity of Religion were maintained: And in the Assembly holden at Glasgow 1610. when Commissioners Voters in Parliament provided to Prelacies were made liable to the Censures of the general Assembly, it was acknowledged that the necessity of the Kirk craved, that there should be yearly general Assemblies; And the Ministry were then assured, that Liberty would be granted upon their request; whereby they were induced to condescend so far to the Act then made, as they did, which Act also in the very entry thereof a request to his Majesty, that General Assemblies may be holden in all times coming once in the year, or precisely at a set and certain time; nevertheless the wonted liberty of holding General Assemblies is suppressed, the order of the Provincial Synods confounded, Presbyteries in a great part disordered and neglected, whereby Divisions have entred into the Kirk, Ministers are become negligent in their Callings, and scandalous in their Lives, the Godly are heavily grieved, the Weak are scandalized, Erroneous Doctrine is delivered in Kirks and Schools without controlement; the Commissioners Voters in Parliament lie untried and uncensured, and Atheism and Popery increase: Our humble desire is therefore, that the Acts of Parliament, made in favours of the Assemblies of the Kirk, and especially the Act of Parliament holden at Edinburgh, in June 1592. be revived and ratified in this present Parliament.

4. Notwithstanding the observation of Festival days, Private Baptism, Private Communion, Episcopal Confirmation of Children, have been rejected by this our Reformed Kirk, since the beginning of the Reformation; and it hath been declared by Act of Parliament in the year 1567. that such only were to be acknowledged Members of this Reformed Kirk, as did participate of the Sacraments, as they were then rightly ministred, which was without kneeling in the act of receiving the Sacramental Elements of the Supper, or immediate dispensing of the same to every Communicant by the Minister. And that it was Statute and Ordained in the same Parliament, that all Kings should give their Oath at their Coronation to maintain the Religion then professed, and that for form of Ministration of the Sacraments which then was used: nevertheless Pastors and People adhering to their former profession and practice, are nicknamed Puritans, and threatened, not only without any good warrant, but beside the tenour of the Act of Perth-Assembly, which containeth no strict injunction, and contrary to the meaning of the Voters, and to the proceedings of that Assembly, where it was professed that none should be pressed with obedience to that Act: Therefore we humbly intreat that by Ratification of the Acts of Parliament, made before that Assembly, and by such ways as

These Meetings were found to be seditious and indeed the Source and Spring of all the Disturbances in the Church, and therefore they were dissolved, even by a great part, at least, the sober part of their Presbytery.

The Reformation of the Church of Scotland was very irregular, and against the mind of their Prince to whom it did appertain to reform; the Prince was then of a contrary Religion, or a Minor, or Deposed by the Subjects unlawfully, so that they might easily obtain what Acts they pleased against the true Interest and Right of the Crown.

shall seem good to your Gracious Majesty, and honourable Estates Assembled, your Majesties good People, Pastors and Professors may both be purged from such foul aspersions, and may be freed from all dangers and fears which may occur by occasion of that Act of Perth.

5. Albeit it be determined by the general Assemblies of this our Reformed Kirk, what Oaths Ministers should take at the time of their Admission or Ordination; yet there is a new form of Oath devised and urged

What was herein done, was done by his Majesties power, as Supreme Head over the Church of Scotland, except they will dispute that over with his Majesty; which to deny, is downright Popery.

by the Admitters or Ordainers, upon Intrants to the Ministry, together with Subscription to certain Articles devised by them without direction and warrant from any Assembly of the Kirk, yea, or Act of Parliament, whereby the entry to the Ministry is shut upon the best qualified, and others less able are obtruded upon the people, to their great grief and hazard of their Souls: Our humble Petition therefore is, that all such Oaths and Subscriptions urged upon Ministers at their entry or transplantation may be discharged.

6. Notwithstanding there be Constitutions of the Kirk, and Laws of the Country for censuring of Ministers before the ordinary Judicators Ecclesiastical; yet contrary to that Order, Ministers are suspended, silenced, and deprived, and that for matters meerly Ecclesiastical before other Judicators, which are not established by the Authority or Order of the Country and Kirk: Therefore our humble Petition is, that Ministers deserving Censure, be no otherwise censured than the Order of the Kirk doth prescribe, and that such as are otherwise displaced, be suffered to serve in the Ministry, as before.

Before we leave Scotland, it may not be amiss to remember our Reader, how that many things during the King's Fathers minority, had been to his very great prejudice, by indirect means torn from the Crown; which to regain, both his Father and himself seeking by fair and lawful means, was the cause, at least pretext of those many and open violences which afterwards happened in that Kingdom, the Government of the Church by Bishops, which, for any thing that appears yet to the contrary, was as ancient as Christianity it self in that Kingdom, was very much shaken by the violent actions of Knox and others of the Geneva strain, who were the first Preachers against Popery in that Kingdom, and so the Change of Religion that followed thereupon, as to matters of Discipline, was according to the Geneva-Method; invented by Mr. Calvin; the Bishops then being Papists, were devided of their Churches and Lands, a great part whereof per fas & nefas were got into the hands of the Nobility, who were very loth to part with them again; which being endeavoured both by this good King and his Father, King James of happy Memory, were the cause and ground of the grumbling and dissatisfaction of some of the Nobility of that Kingdom, who afterwards brought in the rest to scramble together with themselves, for the residue of the Churches Patrimony, and together with the inferior Ministers, who most of them were fiery and violent in their way of Church-Government, as for the Pattern it self delivered by our Saviour in the Mount, so they usually Anno 1633. ally stile the Presbyterian Government, were the main Actors in those Rebellions and Commotions which followed.

But there is one thing more which doth exceedingly heighten the ingratitude of some of the Nobility of that Kingdom to his late Majesty, their most Gracious and Native Prince, and it is this, That whereas there was a Tax granted to his Majesty of 100000*l.* Scotch Money for four years to come at this Parliament, his Majesty to gratifie some of the Nobility, who afterwards deserved not well from him, was graciously pleased to bestow the whole Tax (thinking, no doubt, thereby the more strongly to oblige them to himself) upon them; so that it being every penny begg'd, there came not any thing to his Majesties Coffers, much to the regret of the People: To others of them he gave Honours, and what not! And these were they, who afterwards were the Antesignani in the Rebellion in the Year 1638 & 1639. But their Names I forbear, and for that they are well known to the World.

The Acts of Parliament at which they quarrelled were those Two:

1. An Act anent his Majesties Royal Prerogative, and Apparel of Kirk-men.

Our Sovereign Lord, with advice, consent, and assent of the whole Estates, acknowledging his Majesties Sovereign Authority, Princely Power, Royal Prerogative and Privilege of his Crown, over all Estates, Persons and Causes whatsoever within this Kingdom, ratifies and approves the Act of Parliament made in the Year 1606. anent the Kings Royal Prerogative, and perpetually confirms the same, for his Highness, his Heirs and Successors, as amply, absolutely and firmly in all respects, as ever any of his Majesties Royal Progenitors, did possess and exercise the same; and withal remembering, that in the Act of Parliament made in the Year 1606. anent the Apparel of Judges, Magistrates, and Kirk-men, it was agreed, That what Order soever His Majesties Father of Blessed Memory, should prescribe for the Apparel of Kirk-men, and send in writ to his Clerk of Register, should be a sufficient Warrant for inserting the same, in the Books of Parliament, to have the strength of any Act thereof, have all consented that the same Power shall remain what the Person of our Sovereign Lord and his Successors that now is, and what the same Clause for execution thereof, as in the said Act contained.

2. An Act for Ratification of the Acts touching Religion.

Our Sovereign Lord, with Advice and Consent of the Estates, ratifies and approves all and whatsoever Acts and Statutes made before anent the Liberty and Freedom of the true Kirk of God, and Religion presently professed within this Realm, and ordains the same to stand in their full Force and Effect, as if they were specially mentioned and set down herein.

The same Humour was fermenting here in our own Kingdom of England; where vain and empty exceptions were made by some deputed, and as they themselves loved to be call'd, Precisians, at the Articles set out in Print, as is usual, by several Bishops in their Visitations, more particularly by Dr. Neal Lord Bishop of Winton, and others. In the said Lord Bishop of Winchesters Articles of Visitation they quarrel at the Particulars following; but whether with any reason, the Reader will easily judge.

The Oath to be administred to the Churchwardens and Sworn Men.

You shall Swear, That you and every of you, without all Affection, Favour, Hatred, Hope of Reward and Gain, or fear of Displeasure or Malice of any Person, shall Present all and every such Person and Persons of or within your Parish, who hath committed any Offence, Fault or Crime, or omitted any part of Duty, which be enjoyned to perform: Wherein you shall deal uprightly, and according to Truth; neither of Malice, Presenting any contrary to Truth, nor of corrupt Affection sparing to Present any, and to conceal the Truth, having in this Action God before your Eyes, with an earnest Zeal to maintain Truth, and suppress Vice. So Help you God, and the Contents of this Book.

First, As to the Articles concerning the Church, they are to enquire, Whether they have the Book of Constitutions or Canons Ecclesiastical, and a Parchment Register-Book, Book of Common-Prayer, and Book of Homilies, &c. And whether the Communion-Table be placed in such convenient sort within the said Chancel or Church, as that the Minister may be best heard in his Prayer and Administration.

As to the Articles concerning the Clergy, Whether doth the Minister read the Constitutions set forth by His Majesty, once every Year?

Whether the Minister or Preacher use to pray for the King's Majesty with his whole Title, as King of Great Britain? And doth he in like manner pray for the Arch-Bishops and Bishops? And doth he observe all the Orders, Rites, and Ceremonies prescribed in the Common-Prayer, and Administring the Sacraments? And whether doth the Minister receive the Sacrament, kneeling at the same, and Administred to none but such as do kneel; as by the 12th. Canon is directed?

Whether hath the Minister admitted to the Communion any notorious Offenders or Schismatics; contrary to the 26th. and 27th. Constitution? And whether Strangers of any other Parish do come often and commonly to your Church, from their own Parish-Church? contrary to the 28th. Canon. And whether doth the Minister use to Sign the Children with the Sign of the Cross when they are Baptized? And whether is your Minister a Licensed Minister? if yea, then by whom? And whether doth the Minister wear the Surplice whilst he is saying the Publick Prayers, and Administring the Sacraments? Whether doth the Minister Catechize and Instruct the Youth of Ignorant Persons of your Parish in the Ten Commandments, &c? And whether he doth Solemnize Marriage, the Banes not being three several Sundays and Holidays first Published in time of Divine Service? And whether doth your Minister in the Rogation days

1633. use the Perambulation of the Circuit of the Parish? Whether doth the Minister every six Months Denounce in the Parish all such as do persevere in the Sentence of Excommunication, not seeking to be absolved? or hath he admitted any Excommunicated Person into the Church without Certificate of Absolution? Whether is your Minister a favourer of Recufants, whereby he may be suspected not to be sincere in Religion? Whether is your Minister noted to be an incontinent Person, a Frequenter of Taverns, Ale-houses, a Common Gamester, or Player of Dice, &c.? With divers other Articles of Enquiry.

In Easter-Term, Car. 1. 9. Sir Edward Bullock was Sentenced, and Fined in the Star-Chamber 1000*l.* for oppression in Suits of one Black-hall; and for pulling down his House, he was Sentenced to pay the Plaintiff 100*l.* Damage; and was besides imprisoned in the Fleet.

As also the Lord Kilmallock Justiciar. de Com. Banc. in Ireland, was complained of, for that he had caused a Sheriff of a County in the Kingdom of Ireland to send for a Grand Jury to his House, and they being brought into the Dining-Chamber there, he caused all persons whatsoever to be shut forth except the Judges themselves, the Jury, the Clerk of the Crown, the Sheriff, and the Defendant Bealing the Prosecutor; and the Doors being shut, the Defendant, the Lord Sarsfield, Viscount Kilmallock, caused a Bill of Indictment to be preferr'd, and read to the Jury against Bushen, for the Murder of his Wife, and then bid the Jury go together and find the Bill, and told them they ought to find the Bill: and the Jury desiring to have some Evidence, the Defendant Kilmallock call'd the Defendant Bealing, who upon his Oath did Depose only, that he heard Bushen murdered his Wife, which was all the Evidence they had, saving that the Lord Sarsfield told some impertinent Tales and Discourses of the strange and miraculous Discoveries of secret Murders, and said, That unless they would expect a Miracle from Heaven, they could have no better Evidence than they had. And afterward, four of the Jury refusing to find the Bill, the Lord Sarsfield told them, if they would not find the Bill, they must attend him in Court; which they did: And one of them being asked, Whether he was with the Bill, or against the Bill? he answering, against the Bill, the Lord Sarsfield told him, he look'd for no better at his hands; and told another of them that was against the Bill, it was one of his London Tricks, and then Committed the Four that would not find the Bill, put them off from the Jury, and fined them 40*l.* apiece; and striking his hand on his Breast, swore by his Honour, that not one penny of their Fines should be remitted; and immediately after, caused the 11 that yielded to find the Bill, and Two others to be sworn of a new Grand Jury; and they going together, found the Bill Billa Vera. And thereupon, Bushen coming to be Tryed for his Life by the Petty Jury, and Evidence being about to be given against him, he desired, in respect of his Age and Deafness, and the then Noise of the Glass-Windows, by reason of a present Storm, and the Noise of the People, that he might have leave to come out of the Bar, and stand where he might hear what Evidence was given against him, that he might the better answer for himself; which the Lord Sarsfield unjustly denied him. And Bushen being charged, that he himself put his Wife into her Winding-sheet, desir'd, that such persons as did view her Body after her Death, and did wind her, might be heard to discover the Truth; the Lord Sarsfield unjustly denied that also: And Bushen then desiring that the Justice of Peace, who had taken the Examination of the Business, might be heard; the Lord Sarsfield denied him that Request also. And the Petty Jury, after going together, and staying somewhat long, the Lord Sarsfield sent them word, that if they would not agree and come away, he would carry them with him the next day in a Cart; and being told, that they were all agreed but one, he sent a Message to the Jury, inciting them to pinch that Man that would not agree; to pull him by the Nose; by the Hair of the Head, and by the Beard; and by that means to compell him to agree with them; and bid the Jury make much of him that night, and that he would make much of him the next day; and sent that one Man word, that it had been better for him to agree. And soon after these threatening Messages delivered to the Jury, and they knowing the usage of the former Jury, did, upon light Evidence of Hear-says only delivered by Bealing, and others, find Bushen guilty of the Murder of his Wife, and he was Condemned and Executed for the same, when as it clearly appeared she died of a Natural Death, and Disease of the Bloody Flux. For which foul Carriage, the Lord Sarsfield Viscount Kilmallock was Committed to the Fleet, during His Majesties Pleasure; Fined 2000*l.* to the King, and 1000*l.* Damage to Bushen the 1000*l.* Relator: Bealing Knight, for his malicious prosecution, Devilish Practice and Attempt to get other Men of Power into his Wicked Prosecution, was Committed to the Fleet, Fined 500*l.* and to pay 250*l.* Damage to Bushen, the Relator. 250*l.* Da.

In the Month of October, His Majesty revived his Father of ever Blessed Memory King James's Declaration made An. 1618. for Tolerating Lawful Sports on Sundays; the occasion whereof was a Petition Presented unto King James in his Return from Scotland, by the Ministers of Lancashire, complaining of the great increase of Popery in that Country, the People then of that County consisting especially of two sorts of men Papists and Puritans; that by the Rigour and Severity of this later sort, not granting the least Relaxation to their Servants on Festival Days, and so straitly commanding the Observation of the Lords Day, as a Jewish Sabbath, not allowing them any honest Recreation after Divine Service, as Walking, Dancing, Shooting in the Long Bow, &c. the Papists in the mean time, allowing Recreations to their Servants and Children on the Festival and on the Lord's Days, gave occasion to many Servants, and others of the meaner sort, to change their Religion, and turn Papists; in like manner the Feasts of the Dedication of Churches, commonly called, in some Countreys, Wakes, in others, Church-Ales, were by some of the preciser sort complain'd of; and more particularly in Somersetshire, the Lord Chief Justice Richardson, then Justice of Assize there, did together with the Justices of the Peace of that County, make an Order for the abolishing of the same; as followeth:

An Order to suppress Ales and Revels in Somersetshire.

Whereas divers Orders have been made heretofore by the Judges of Affize, for the suppressing of Ales and Revels, the same Order is now confirmed at the Affizes, and again ordered by the Court, in regard of the infinite number of Inconveniences daily arising by means of Revels, that such Revels, Church-Ales, Clerk-Ales, and all other Publick Ales be henceforth utterly suppressed; and to the end this may be observed, it is further Ordered that the Clerk of the Affizes shall leave Copies hereof with the Minister of every Parish, within his severall Hundred, and shall give a Note under his Hand, that he shall Publish it yearly within the Parish the first Sunday in February, and likewise the two Sundays before Easter yearly.

This Action of the Lord Chief Justice's meddling in Church-Matters, and not only so, but giving thereby a total suppression to a Custom honest and laudable, nay in some measure Religious also, was taken in evil part by his Majesty; for that Outrages and Disorders, if any such had been, might have been punished by them, and the Feasts themselves, both for Neighbours meeting, and in a grateful commemoration of the Patron of the Church his Piety in founding the Church, might have yet been continued: Moreover, the Bishop of the Diocese had not been made acquainted in the least manner with this piece of Reformation, and therefore the Chief Justice was commanded to attend the Board; where, after the Arch-Bishop had made his Complaint against the Lord Chief Justice, he was Commanded to Revoke the former Order made at the Affizes against Revels, &c.

The Chief Justice replied, that the Order was made at the Request of the Justices of the Peace in the County, with the General Consent of the whole Bench, and upon view of divers Ancient Presidents in that kind; but nevertheless he was Commanded to Revoke his Order.

Upon which Occasion the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, on the 4th. of October writ a Letter to the Bishop of Bath and Wells concerning the said Revels, to this effect.

A Letter from the Bishop of Canterbury to the Bishop of Bath and Wells about Wakes and Revels.

That there hath not been of late some Noise in Somersetshire about the Feasts of the Dedication of Churches, commonly called the Wakes; and it seems the Judges of Affize formerly made an Order to prohibit them, and caused it to be Published in some, or most of the Churches; thereby the Minister, without my Lord the Bishop's Consent or Privy, the pretence of this hath been, that some Disorders derogatory from Gods Service, and the Government of the Commonwealth are committed at those times: by which Argument, any thing that is abused may quite be taken away. It seems there hath been some heat struck in the Country about this, by the carriage of the Lord Chief Justice Richardson, as the two last Affizes, especially the last, with which his Majesty is not well pleased. And for the preventing of Outrages, or Disorders at those Feasts, no man can be more careful than his Majesty; but he conceives, and that very rightly, that all these may and ought to be prevented by the Care of the Justices of Peace, and leave the Feasts themselves to be kept, for the Neighbourly meeting, and Recreation of the People, of which he would not have them debarred under any frivolous pretences. And further, His Majesty hath been lately informed by men of good Place in that County, that the Humors increase much in those Parts, and unite themselves by banding against the Feasts; which Course, as his Majesty no way likes, so he hath been informed also for this last Year, since warning was given, there have not been any noted Disorders at any of those Feasts kept in those Parts; yet for his better satisfaction, he hath Commanded me to require you to inform your self, and give a speedy account how these Feasts have been ordered, &c.

According to his Majesties Command, the Lord Chief Justice Richardson in his next Circuit into that Country, revokes his Order about the Wakes; Commanding the Clerk of the Affizes to enter the Order of Council verbatim; which gave occasion to some of the Justices of the Peace of that County (but all in vain) to Petition his Majesty for a Confirmation of their Order; for that they were told, that though some Disorders might have been committed at those Wakes, yet by that way of arguing, any thing that in it self is never so laudable and harmless, may by its abuse (which ought not to be) be utterly abolished, and quite taken away.

In pursuance hereof, and for taking away as much as in his Majesty lay, the Judaizing humor and opinion, which then (though it is not in any of the other Reformed Churches beyond Sea, where honest Recreations, as Dancing, and the like, even in Geneva it self, are allowed) began with some rigour to be preached up here in England, his Majesty commanded his Declaration (commonly nicknamed by the Puritan Party, the Book of Sports) to be Printed and Published to this Effect:

That King James of Blessed Memory, in his Return from Scotland, coming through Lancashire, found that his Subjects were debarred from Lawful Recreations, upon Sundays after Evening Prayers ended, and upon Holy days. And he prudently considered, that if these times were taken from them, the meaner sort, who labour hard all the Week, should have no Recreations at all, to refresh their Spirits. And after his Return, he further saw, that his Loyal Subjects in all other Parts of his Kingdom, did suffer in the same kind, though perhaps not in the same degree: And did therefore in his Princely Wisdom, Publish a Declaration to all his Loyal Subjects, concerning Lawful Sports to be Used at such times; which was Printed and Published by his Royal Commandment in the Year 1618. in the Tenor which hereafter followeth.

Whereas upon his Majesties Return the last Year out of Scotland, he did Publish his Pleasure, touching the Recreations of his People in those Parts, under his Hand; for some Causes him thereunto moving, hath thought good to Command these his Directions then given in Lancashire, with a few words thereunto thereunto added, and most appliable to these Anno parts of the Realms, to be published to all his 1633. Subjects.

Whereas he did justly in his Progress through Lancashire, rebuke some Puritans and Precise People, and took order that the like unlawful Carriage, should not be used by any of them hereafter, in the prohibiting and unlawful punishing of his good People for using their Lawful Recreations, and Honest Exercises upon Sun- days and other Holydays, after the Afternoon-Sermon or Service, His Majesty hath now found that two sorts of People wherewith that Country is much infected, viz. Papists and Puritans, hath maliciously traduced and calumniated those his Just and Honourable Proceedings: And therefore lest his Reputation might, upon the one side (though innocently) have some Aspersion laid upon it, and that upon the other Part, his good People in that Country be misled by the mistaking and misinterpretation of his meaning, his Majesty hath therefore thought good hereby to clear and make his Pleasure to be manifested to all his good People in those Parts.

It is true, that at his first entry to this Crown and Kingdom, he was informed, and that too truly, that his County of Lancashire abounded more in Popish Recusants, than any County of England, and thus hath still continued since, to his great regret, with little amendment, save that, now of late, in his last riding through his said Country, hath found both by the report of the Judges, and of the Bishop of that Diocese, that there is some amendment now daily beginning, which is no small contentment to his Majesty.

The Report of this growing amendment amongst them, made his Majesty the more sorry, when with his own Ears he heard the general Complaint of his People; that they were barred from all Lawful Recreations and Exercises, upon the Sundays Afternoon, after the ending of all Divine Service, which cannot but produce two Evils: The one, the hindring of the Conversion of many, whom their Priests will take occasion hereby to vex; perswading them that no honest Mirth or Recreation is Lawful or tolerable in Religion, which the King professeth, and which cannot but breed a great discontentment in his Peoples hearts, especially of such as are peradventure upon the point of turning: The other Inconvenience is, That this Prohibition barreth the Common and Meaner sort of People from Using such Exercises, as may make their Bodies more able for War, when his Majesty or his Successors shall have occasion to use them; and in place thereof, sets up Tip-ling and filthy Drunkenness, and breeds a number of idle and discontented Speeches in their Alehouses. For when shall the Common People have leave to exercise, if not upon the Sundays and Holidays, seeing they must apply their labour, and win their Living in all Working-Days?

The King's express Pleasure therefore is,
 That the Laws of this Kingdom, and Canons of the Church be as well observed in that County, as in all other places of this his Kingdom. And on the other part, that no Lawful Recreation shall be barred to his Good People, which shall not tend to the Breach of the foresaid Laws and Canons of his Church: which to express more particularly, His Majesties Pleasure is, That the Bishops, and all other inferior Churchmen, and Church-wardens, shall for their parts be careful and diligent, both to instruct the ignorant, and convince and reform them that are misled in Religion, Presenting them that will not Conform themselves, but obstinately stand out, to the Judges and Justices: whom he likewise commands to put the Laws in due Execution against them.

His Majesties Pleasure likewise is, That the Bishop of that Diocese take the like strict Order with all the Puritans and Precisians within the same, either constrain them to Conform themselves, or leave the Country, according to the Laws of this Kingdom, and Canons of the Church, and so to strike equally on both hands, against the Contemners of his Authority, and Adversaries of the Church; and as for his good Peoples lawful Recreation, such as Dancing, either Men or Women; Archery for Men, Leaping, Vaulting, or any other such harmless Recreation, nor from having of May-Games, Whitson-Ales, and Morice-Dances, and the setting up of May-Poles, and other Sports therewith used; so as the same be had in due and convenient time, without impediment or neglect of Divine Service. And that Women shall have leave to carry Rushes to the Church for the decoring of it, according to their old Custom; but withal his Majesty doth here account still as Prohibited all unlawful Games to be Used upon Sundays only, as Bear and Bull-baitings, Interludes, and at all times in the meaner sort of People by Law prohibited, Bowling.

And likewise bars from this Benefit and Liberty, all such known Recusants, either men or women, as will abstain from coming to Church or Divine Service, being therefore Unworthy of any Lawful Recreation after the said Service, that will not first come to Church, and serve God: Prohibiting in like sort the like Recreati-ons to any that, though Conform in Religion, are not present in the Church at the Service of God, before their going to the said Recreati-ons. His Pleasure likewise is, that they to whom it belongeth in Office, shall Present and sharply punish all such, as in abuse of this his Liberty, will Use these Exercises before the end of all Divine Services for that day. And he doth likewise straightly Command, that every Person shall resort to his own Parish-Church to hear Divine Service, and each Parish by it self to use the said Recreation after Divine Service. Prohibiting likewise any offensive Weapons to be Carried or Used in the said times of Recreation: And his Pleasure is, that this his Declaration shall be Published by order from the Bishop of the Diocese, through all the Parish-Churches, and that both the Justices of the Peace be informed thereof.

Given at the Mannor of Greenwich the 24th. Day of May, in the Sixteenth Year of his Majesties Reign, of England, France and Ireland, and of Scotland the one and fiftieth.

Now out of a like Pious Care for the Service of God, and for suppressing of any Humours that oppose Truth, and for the Ease, Comfort and Recreation of his well-deserving People, his Majesty doth Ratify and Publish this his Blessed Fathers Declaration: the rather, because of late in some Counties of this Kingdom, his Majesty finds that under presence

rence of taking away abuses, there hath been a General forbidding, not only of ordinary Meetings, but of the Feasts of the Dedication of the Churches, commonly called Wakes. Now his Majesties express Will and Pleasure is, That these Feasts, with others, shall be observed, and that his Justices of the Peace, in their several Divisions, shall look to it, both that all Disorders there may be prevented or punished, and that all Neighbourhood and Freedom with Manlike and Lawful Exercises be used. And his Majesty further Commands all Justices of Assize in their several Circuits to see, that no man do trouble or molest any of his Loyal and Dutiful People, in or for their Lawful Recreations, having first done their Duty to God, and continuing in Obedience to his Majesties Laws. And for this his Majesty Commands all his Judges, Justices of Peace, as well within Liberties as without, Majors, Bayliffs, Constables, and other Officers, to take notice of, and to see observed, as they tender his Displeasure: And doth further Will, that publication of this his Command be made by Order from the Bishops, through all the Parish-Churches of their several Diocesses respectively.

Given at the Palace of Westminster, the 18th. day of October, in the Ninth Year of his Reign.

GOD save the KING.

Much about the same time, his Majesty was pleased to confirm a Decree made in the High Court of Star-Chamber, after Consultation had among the Judges, and Certificates of their Opinions herein, for the regulation of Taverners, Chandlers, Keepers of Inns, Victualing-houses, Ordinaries, and petty Ostries, which was Printed by his Majesties Command; and hereafter followeth.

A Decree of Star-Chamber.

Charles, by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all and to whom these Our Letters Patents shall come, Greeting.

Now ye, that we have seen a certain Decree made by Our Council, in Our Court of Star-Chamber the 13th. day of November, in the 9th. Year of our Reign, which remaineth of Record among the Records and Remembrances of that Court, containing divers Ordinances; which Decree followeth in these Words:

In Camera Stellata coram Concilio ibidem 13 die Novembris, Anno nono Caroli Regis.

His Majesties Attorney General did this day inform this Honourable Court, that it having been presented to the Lords of his Majesties most Honourable Privy Council, that as well the Prizes of all sorts of Victuals, as also of Horse-meat, were grown to excessive Rates; and that Instance thereof was given in particular by his Majesties Officers of the Green-Cloth, in several provisions made for his Majesties House, whereby the Weekly Accounts of the Household were much increased.

It was thought fit and ordered, that his Majesties Attorney General, as well upon Conference with such of the Judges, and such of his Majesties Learned Council as he should think fit; as upon perusal of all such Laws and Statutes as are in force concerning the setting of Prizes of Victuals and Horse-meat, should make report unto the Board of his Opinion concerning the same, as by their Lordships Order of the 9th. of October last past appeareth: and declared that according to the said Order, he had at several days attended his Majesties Justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, and Barons of the Exchequer, who made Certificate of their Opinion in Writing subscribed by them, which Certificate the said Attorney presented unto this Court, and followeth in these Words:

Mr. Attorney, We send you here inclosed our Opinions of these things, which were propounded, and thought fit to be reformed at our last General Meeting.

Thomas Richardson.
Robert Heath.
Humphrey Davenport.
John Denham.
Richard Hutton.
William Jones.
George Crook.
Thomas Trevors.
George Vernon.
Robert Berkeley.
Francis Crawley.

Touching Victuals, we find Ingressing to be a great occasion to raise the Prizes thereof, an offence utterly against the Common Law: and amongst Ingressors we find the Chandlers to be great Offenders in Buying great quantities of all sorts of Grain brought unto, or towards the Market.

We also find that Taverns are of late exceedingly increased in their number, in and about London; and that they Dress Flesh and Fish, and utter the same at excessive Prizes, to the increase of Riot and other Abuses; whereas by the Law, as Taverners, they are to sell nothing but Wine, unless it be Bread to eat therewith.

We find that Bakers do sell their Bread at 14, 15, and 16 to the Dozen, where they should keep the Assize, and not sell above 12, or 13 at the most to the Dozen; and this pincheth the Poor.

We wish that Ordinaries in and about London, may be regulated to a convenient sum, and not to exceed two shillings for the Meal: and we wish that both Taverners and Ordinary-keepers may be wholly restrained from suffering unlawful Games in their Houses: for we find that this draws unthrifty Guests unto them, and is an apparent means to overthrow the Fortunes of many Gentlemen and Citizens.

Touching Horse-meat, upon hearing of divers Justices of Peace of Middlesex and Surrey, and of divers Inn-Keepers of London, Westminster, Middlesex and Surrey; We are of Opinion that the present Prizes of Hay and Oats considered, six pence day and night for Hay for a Horse, and for Oats six pence a Peck Winchester-measure, is a Competent Rate to be given to Inn-holders, and to take nothing for Litter and if they exceed these Rates, we reckon them punishable by the Law, as for exacting excessive and unmeasurable Prizes. For Horses which come Anno 1633. come to Inns in the day-time, we conceive it to be a convenient Rate for the Inn-Keeper to take a Penny for a Horse, for his Stable-room only, the Horse not being unbridled; if he be unbridled, and have Hay, and go away the same day, to take two pence the Horse, and no more.

We find that of late years, there are many petty Ostries set up in and about London, which entertain Horses in by-corners, and receive Stable-Horses, and the Horses of such who are persons suspected, and these have no Lodging for Travellers. By these Ostries great Inconveniences happen to the Subject in general, and much prejudice to the Inn-holders in particular, who by Law are bound to Lodge their Guests, and to be answerable for the Goods brought in to their Charge.

We find also that there are divers, who unlawfully ingross great quantity of Hay to sell again: These are Ingrossers punishable by the Common Law; and humbly moved this Honourable Court, that the same might be here recorded; and that the Court would be pleased for the good of his Majesty's people, to Decree and Command that the particulars thereof be strictly observed. Whereupon this Honourable Court taking the same into their serious Consideration, hath ordered, that the Certificate be Recorded in this Honourable Court; and hath Decreed,

First, For that it is notoriously known, that Ingrossing is a great occasion to raise the prices of Victuals, and also of Hay; and Ingrossing to inance prices is punishable, not only by the Statutes, but also by the Common Laws of the Realm; His Majesties Justices of the Benches at Westminster, and Barons of the Exchequer, the Justices of Affize of Oyer and Terminer, and Justices of Peace in their several places, are required to cause diligent enquiry to be made of all Ingrossers of all sorts of Victuals and Hay, and let the Delinquents herein be severely punished.

And his Majesties Attorney General is likewise Commanded to cause such of them as shall be brought to his notice, to be informed against in this Honourable Court, that of them example may be made to deter others from the like Offence.

And it is Decreed, That after publication of this Decree in London, no Chandler presume to buy Corn, Grain, Meal, or Flowre to sell again, either in Market, or out of Market.

And this Court concurring in Opinion with the said Reverend Judges; and considering the great Excess and Riot, that is occasioned by preparing and selling of Victuals in Taverns, and how the prices of sundry sorts of Viands are hereby increased; hath Decreed, that no Taverner or Vintner, selling Wine by Retail, do hereafter sell, or make ready for sale any sort of Flesh or Fish, or other Victuals save Bread; nor to defraud this Ordinance, do by himself, or any other, set up, or cause, or procure to be set up the Trade of a Cook, within the same House, or in any Shop or Room thereunto belonging, or in any House thereto near adjacent; permit or suffer any Flesh, Fish, or other Victual, except Bread, as aforesaid, to be brought into his House, to be there eaten by any of his Guests.

And the Court taking into Consideration, how the Poor are oppressed and pinched, when Bakers do sell their Bread to those that vend the same by Retail, at the Rates of more than twelve to the Dozen, in that the weight is abated in every Loaf; and the Buyer being sometimes but a Passenger, is not able to make complaint of the Baker, whom he knoweth not: It is therefore likewise Ordered and Decreed, that no Baker shall sell any Bread at other rate than 12, or 13 at the most to the Dozen.

And further it is Decreed, That none that shall keep Ordinary-Tables, or other Victualing-Tables, shall take more of the Guests than after the rate of two shillings the man for the Meal, nor more than eight pence for each Servant attending his Master; and that nothing be taken above that rate for Wine, or other thing, or under colour thereof, whereby the true intent of this Decree may be deluded or defrauded. And that none of them, or Taverners, or other Victualers, keep or suffer to be used Games of Dice, Cards, Tables, or other unlawful Games in their Houses, wherein this Court declareth the Licences given by the Groom-Porter of his Majesties House, or others, for Licencing or Permitting any of the said Games, are not of validity to excuse the Offenders.

Concerning Horse-Meat; For that upon hearing of the said Justices of the Peace, and Inn-keepers, the present Prices considered, the Rates before specified are competent;

It is for the present Ordered and Decreed, that no Inn-keeper, or Ostler within the Cities of London or Westminster, or in any place within the distance of ten miles from either of those Cities, the Suburbs, or Liberties of either of them, shall take above six pence for a Horse standing in his Stable at Hay, a day and a night, nor more then six pence for a Peck of Oats, of the Measure commonly called Winchester-Measure, without taking any thing for Litter, nor more than a penny for standing of a Horse in his Stable a day without Meat, nor above two pence for a Horse standing at Hay in the Day, and going away before Night.

And that no Inn-keeper shall exceed those Rates in any part of this Realm; and where Grain and Hay are sold at lesser Prices, there the Rates and Prices shall be accordingly. And this Ordinance shall continue, until in the County of Middlesex it shall be made to appear to the Justices of the King's Bench, and in other Counties and Places, to the Justices of Peace there, that because of the increase of Prices in the parts adjoining, greater Rates are necessarily to be permitted: and thereupon other Rates shall from time to time be set; which being set, are hereby Commanded and Injoynd to be strictly and duly observed, until the same by like Authority shall be altered.

And to the end that there may be from time to time, moderate Rates and Prices for Hay, and Grain of all sorts, taken by Inn-keepers and Ostlers, of Passengers and their Guests; his Majesties Justices of the King's Bench are desired, and the Justices of the Peace of other Counties and Places are required yearly, and more often if there shall be occasion, to make diligent enquiry of Hay and other Horse-meat, and to make Declaration in Writing, fixed in publick places, what Prices and Rates for Hay and other Horse-meat are allowed to be taken by Inn-keepers, which the said Inn-keepers and Ostlers are Commanded to observe.

And

1633. And if any of them shall presume to offend therein, that diligent enquiry be made of them; that they being Presented, may without Connivance receive severe punishment, as oppressors of his Majesties people, by taking excessive Prices.

Moreover, the Court considering the great Inconveniences that do arise by the number of petty Ostries and Ostlers, that keep Stables for Horses, without Lodging for Guests; not liable, nor able to make satisfaction for Goods under their Custody, that shall be stolen or imbezzeled: yet taking consideration of their Poverty, and that it would tend to their undoing, if they should be suppressed before such time as the Store they have already provided, shall be spent; the Justices of the Peace of the City of London, Suburbs and Liberties thereof, the City of Westminster and Borough of Southwark, and of the Counties of Middlesex and Surrey, are required with all convenient speed, to make enquiry of all such petty Ostries within the said Cities, Burroughs, Suburbs, Liberties, and all places not distant above two miles from some part thereof, and what Provision of Hay, Oats and Provender remaineth in their hands unspent; and to Command them not to make any farther Provision.

And after that which is remaining in their hands shall be spent, no longer to use or keep such Ostries.

And it is Decreed by this Court, that none after that time shall keep or use any such Ostries.

And to the end that Notice may be taken of this Decree, by all those whom it may concern, and that none may excuse himself upon pretence of being ignorant of the Contents thereof;

It is Ordered, That the same be Published in the Cities of London and Westminster, and in the several Counties of this Realm, at Affizes, Sessions, and other places of publick Assemblies.

And all they to whom the Execution thereof pertaineth, are required, that they see the same put in due Execution.

Know ye, That we taking into our Consideration, that the said Decree was made upon grave and sad Advice, and upon the Certificate of our Judges, and that the same is Just and Necessary to be observed, have Approved the same Decree, and do Ratifie and Confirm the same; and the Necessity of these Times requiring it,

We do Command, That the same, by all those whom it concerneth, be obeyed, and put in execution, under the pains to be inflicted upon the Contemnors of our Command, and the Decrees of that Court.

And to the end that all our Loving Subjects may be participants of the good thereof, and may complain of those things wherein they shall be grieved, contrary to the Tenor of the said Decree, and of those that in disobedience shall contemn or neglect the due observance thereof;

We do Command our Printer, that he forthwith cause these Presents to be Printed, and Dispersed into the several Counties of this Realm with expedition; so that in every of those Counties, the same may be published at the general Session of the Peace, to be holden next after the Feast of the Epiphany now next coming, that our People of those Counties may take notice thereof.

And we do Command the Justices of the Peace, that at their said Sessions in every of the said Counties, the same be openly read: and we do require our Council in our Court of Star-Chamber, the Justices of our Benches, Barons of our Exchequer, Justices of Assize and Oyer and Terminer, and Justices of the Peace, that against all those that shall offend against the said Decree, they proceed without Connivance, as they tender our Service, and the Good of our People.

Whereof We have caused these Our Letters to be made Patents.

Witness Our Self at Westminster, the 14th. Day of December, in the 9th. Year of our Reign. Per ipsum Regem.

WILLIS.

Forasmuch as several persons had confederated together, and made and vended counterfeit Farthings and Tokens, the Authors and Workmen herein, were proceeded against in the Star-Chamber, and four, viz. Jagger, Cooper, Meacomb and Augur were Imprisoned, and Fined 100*l.* apiece, set on the Pillory in Cheapside, and publicly whipped through the Streets,

About this time died Dr. Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, betwixt whom and Dr. Land, Bishop of London, there had been Bickerings and private Animosities, from which, even good men are not free; and which the Discontented party made use of for their own advantage: He was succeeded in that See by Bishop Land.

In October following, her Majesty was happily delivered of her Second Son; he was Baptized some ten days after, and named James, and Created Duke of York, by Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England. Concerning this great Honour, take what followeth: Edward the 5th Son of Edw. 3., was Created by his Nephew King Ric. 2. Duke of York, and his Son and Heir Richard Plantagenet succeeded Duke of York, and died without Issue; Richard Plantagenet his Nephew was Created Duke of York, and after his Death, this Honour hath been reserved by the Kings of England for their Second Sons; so Ed. 4. Created his Second Son Duke of York, Hen. 7. his Second Son Henry Duke of York, and King James his Second Son Charles, (Prince Henry being then alive,) Duke of York also.

We have formerly acquainted our Reader what Care King James of Famous Memory, took to rectifie Religious Worship in his Native Kingdom of Scotland, when he was last in that Kingdom; the same pains and pious Care was taken by his Religious Successor K. Charles the Martyr, concerning the rectifying of the undecent Administration of Holy Duties in that Kirk: He sends therefore some Articles of Order to be observed by the Dean of the Chappel-Royal only; which that unthankful People clamoured against, as if Rome had been at the Gates of Edinburgh. The Articles were these:

OUR express Will and Pleasure is, That the Dean of our Chappel, that now is, and his Successors, shall be Assistant to the Right Reverend Father in God, the Archbishop of St. Andrews, at the Coronation, so oft as it shall happen.

That the Book of the Form of our Coronation lately used, be put in a little Box, and laid into a Standard, and committed to the Care of the Dean of the Chappel successively.

That there be Prayers twice a day, with the Quire, as well in our absence, as otherwise, according to the English Liturgy, till some Course be taken for making one, that may fit the Custom and Constitution of that Church.

That the Dean of the Chappel look carefully that all that receive the Blessed Sacrament there, receive it Kneeling; and that there be a Communion held in that our Chappel the first Sunday of every Month.

That the Dean of our Chappel that now is, and so successively, come duly thither to Prayers upon Sundays and such Holy days as that Church observes, in his Whites, and Preach so, whenever he Preacheth there. And that he be not absent from thence, but upon necessary occasion of his Diocess, or otherwise, according to the Course of his Preferment.

That these Orders shall be our Warrant to the Dean of our Chappel. That the Lords of our Privy Council, the Lords of the Sessions, the Advocate, Clerks, Writers to the Signet, and Members of our College of Justice, be commanded to receive the Holy Communion once every Year at the least, in that our Chappel Royal, and Kneeling, for Example-sake to the Kingdom. And we likewise command the Dean aforesaid to make Report Yearly to us, how we are obeyed therein, and by whom; as also if any Man shall refuse, in what manner he doth so, and why.

That the Copes which are Consecrated to our use, be delivered to the Dean, to be kept upon Inventory by him, and in a Standard provided for that purpose, and to be used at the Celebration of the Sacrament in our Chappel Royal.

And for the Enforcement hereof, he wrote the following Letter to the Bishop of Dunblane, Dean of the Chappel Royal.

Charles Rex.

The Letter, Oct. 8.

REverend Father in God, Trusty and well-beloved Councillor, We Greet you well. We have thought good, for the better ordering of Divine Service, to be performed in our Chappel Royal there, to set down some Articles under our own Hand, to be observed therein, which we send you here inclosed. And it is our special Pleasure, That you see every thing carefully performed, according as we have directed by these our inclosed Articles; and likewise that you certifie to the Lords of our Privy Council, if any of those appointed by our former Letters to them, to Communicate in our Chappel-Royal, shall not accordingly perform the same, to the end such Order may be taken by our Council therein, as by our said former Letters to them we did appoint. Wherein expecting your Diligence and Care, we bid you Farewell.

From our Court at Whitehall the 8th. day of October, 1633.

And in regard some Indecencies had crept in, and were tolerated and encouraged privately by some Bishops themselves in this very Church of England, Inspection was made into the Neglects of Religious Duties and Discipline in our own Church. The Lord's Table had been brought down from the upper end of the Chancel, where it always stood, even at, and long time after the Reformation, and now too also in the Chappel-Royal, and all the Cathedrals of the Land, Altarwise, and placed in the middle of the Chancel, where some rude persons used to throw their Hats, and stand leaning thereon in the time of Divine Service; and also the Bread and Wine for the Blessed Sacrament, on the Table, standing in that way, was exposed to the Rapine of Dogs, which being unseemly; hereupon the Dean and Chapter of St. Pauls, being the Ordinary of St. Gregories Church adjoining, to prevent such like Undecencies, caused the Communion-Table to be removed from the middle of the Chancel; where, for some time it had formerly stood, and placed it Altarwise; which was opposed by some few Precisians of that Parish; and an Appeal being made from the Ordinary, by these men, to the Dean of the Arches, at last this Cause was heard at the Council-Board; where it was Ordered, That the Dean of the Arches should confirm the Ordinary's Act; for though some hot and fiery men clamour'd against this their Act, as against an Innovation, yet they might have known thereby the Statute of 1 Elizabetha. Her Majesty was sufficiently Authorized by the Advice of her Metropolitan, upon the hapning of any Irreverence to be used in the Ceremonies or Rites of the Church of England, or by misusing the Orders appointed in the Book of Common-Prayer, to Ordain and Publish such further Rites and Ceremonies as may be meet for advancement of Gods Glory, the Edifying of the Church, and the due Reverence of Christ's Holy Mysteries and Sacraments. And in conformity hereto it was that the Order of Council hereupon was made.

Present,

The King's Most Excellent Majesty.

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.
Lord Keeper.
Lord Archbishop of York.
Lord Treasurer.
Lord Privy-Seal.
Lord Duke of Lenox.
Lord Chamberlain.
Earl of Bridgewater.
Earl of Carlisle.
Lord Cottington.
Mr. Treasurer.
Mr. Comptroller.
Lord High-Chamberlain.
Earl Marshal.
Mr. Secretary Cooke.
Mr. Secretary Windebancke.

ON the 3d of November was debated before his Majesty, sitting in Council, the Question and Difference which grew about the removing the Communion-Table in St. Gregories Church, near the Cathedral Church of St. Pauls, from the middle of the Chancel, to the upper end, and there placed Altarwise, in such manner as it standeth in the said Cathedral and Mother-Church,

Anno 1633. Church, as also in all other Cathedrals, and in his Majesties own Chappel, and as it is consonant to the practice of approved Antiquity; which removed, and placing of it in that sort, was done by order from the Dean and Chapter of St. Pauls, who are Ordinaries thereof, as was avowed before his Majesty by Dr. King and Dr. Montfort, two of the Prebendaries there; Yet some few of the Parishioners, being five in number, did complain of this Act by Appeal to the Court of Arches, pretending that the Book of Common-Prayer, and the Eighty second Canon, do give Permission to place the Communion-Table where it may stand with most fitness and convenience. Now his Majesty having heard particular relation made by the Council of both parties, of all the carriage and proceedings in this Cause, was pleased to declare his dislike of all Innovation, and receding from Ancient Constitutions, grounded upon just and warrantable Reasons, especially in Matters concerning Ecclesiastical Order and Government, knowing how easily men are drawn to affect Novelties, and how soon weak Judgments, in such Cases, may be overtaken and abused: Further also observing, that if these few Parishioners might have their Wills, the Difference thereby, from the aforesaid Cathedral Mother-Church, by which all other Churches depending thereon, ought to be guided, would be the more notorious, and give more Subject of Discourse and Disputes that might be spared, by reason of St. Gregories standing close to the Wall thereof. And forasmuch as concerns the Liberty given by the Common-Prayer-Book, or Canon, for placing the Communion-Table in any Church or Chappel with most convenience; it was answered, That such Liberty is not so to be understood, as if it were ever left to the discretion of the Parish, much less to the particular Fancy of any humorous person, but to the Judgment of the Ordinary, to whose Place and Function it doth properly belong, to give direction in that Point, both for the thing it self, and for the time when, and how long, as he may find cause; upon which Consideration, his Majesty declared, That he well approved and confirmed the Act of the said Ordinary, and so gave Commandment, that if those few Parishioners before mentioned, did proceed in their said Appeal, the Dean of the Arches, who was then attending at the hearing of the Cause, should confirm the said Order of the aforesaid Dean and Chapter.

At this time that great Person and worthy Statesman Thomas Lord Wentworth, Lord Deputy of Ireland, gave his Majesty to understand the Condition and Estate of his Kingdom of Ireland, together with the best ways and means for the preservation of the Peace thereof, and for the satisfying the publick Debts of that Nation, and selling the Revenues thereof for the future, that it may not (as most commonly hitherto) be a burden to his Majesty, but a help rather, which that great Lord did in the Letter following, Dated Jan. 22. 1633.

The Lord Deputy of Ireland his Advice to the King concerning the Calling a Parliament.

Albeit the calling of the Parliament in this Kingdom, is at no time of so much hazard (where nothing is propounded as a Law, before it first borrows motion from Your Majesties immediate Allowance under Your Great Seal) as it is in England, where there is a Liberty assum'd to offer every thing in their own time and order; and this Subordination, whereunto they have been led by the Wisdom of former Times, is ever to be held as a Sacred Privilege, not to be departed from, in no piece to be broken or infringed: yet is the Proposition always weighty, and very necessary to be considered with great deliberation, whether the present Conjunction of Affairs doth now advise a Parliament or no? and after a serious Discourse with my self, my Reason perswades me for the Assembling thereof.

For the Contribution from the Country to the Army, ending in December next, Your Majesties Revenue falls short Twenty Thousand Pounds Sterling by year of the present Charge it is burdened withal, besides the vast Debt of Four score Thousand Pounds Irish upon the Crown; which yearly Payments alone are impossible by any other way to be in time supplied, but by the Subject in Parliament; and to pass to the Extraordinary, before there be at least an Attempt first to effect it with ease, were to love difficulties too well; rather voluntarily to seek them, than unwillingly to meet them; and it might seem as well vanity in the first respect, so to affect them, as faintness to bow under them, when they are not to be avoided.

The next Inclination thereunto ariseth in me from the conditions of this Countrey, which is grown very much more civil and rich, since the Access of Your Royal Father of Blessed Memory, and your Majesty to the Crown.

That all You have here issued out again among them for their protection and safety, without any considerable Reservation for other the great Affairs and Expences abroad.

That this great Charge is sustained, and this great Debt Contracted through Employments for the Publick, whereof the benefit hitherto hath been entirely theirs. That there hath been other but one Subsidy granted in all this time, nor any Supply but this Contribution; in exchange whereof of Your Princely Bounty return'd them Graces as beneficial to the Subject, as their Money was to Your Majesty; so as their Substance having been so increased under the Guard of Your Wisdom and Justice, little issued hence from them. The Crown so pressed only for their Good; and so modest a calling upon them now for a Supply, which in all Wisdom, Good Nature, and Conscience, they are not to deny; Should they not conform themselves to Your Gracious Will, their unthankfulness to God, and the best of Kings, would become inexcusable before all the World, and the Regal Power more warrantably to be hereafter extended, for redeeming and recovering Your Majesties Revenues thus lost, and justly to punish so great a Forfeit, as this must needs be judged to be in them.

Next, the frightful Apprehensions, which at this time makes their Hearts beat, lest the Quarterly Payments towards the Army, continued now almost Ten years, might in due turn to an Hereditary Charge upon their Lands, incline them to give any reasonable thing at present, to secure them from that fear for the future; and therefore according to the wholesom Counsel of the Physician, Dum dolet, accipe.

Anno 1633. And lastly, if they should meanly cast from them these mighty Obligations, which indeed I cannot fear, your Majesties Affairs can never suffer less by their starting aside, when the General Peace abroad admits more united Power in your Majesty, and less distracted thoughts in your Ministers to chastise such a forgetfulness, to call to their remembrance, and to inforce from them other and better Duties than these.

In the second place, the time your Majesty shall in your Wisdom appoint for this Meeting imports very much, which, with all submission, I should advise might not be longer put off than Easter or Trinity Term at farthest, and I shall crave leave to offer my Reasons.

The Improvements mentioned in my Dispatch to the Lord Treasurer, (from which I no way recede) would not be foreflowed, wherein we lose much by deferring this Meeting: a Circumstance very considerable in these streights, wherein, if surpriz'd, it might be of much disadvantage, in case the Parliament answer not expectation; and to enter upon that Work before, would be an Argument for them to scant their Supply to your Majesty.

Again, a Breach of a Parliament would prejudice less thus, than in Winter; having, at the worst, six Months to turn our Eyes about, and many helps to be gain'd in that space; where, in the other Case, the Contribution ending in December next, we should be put upon an instant of Time, to read our Lesson at the first sight.

Then, the calling of a Parliament, and determining of the Quarterly Payments falling out much upon one, might make them apprehend, there was a necessity enforcing a present Agreement, if not the good one we would, yet the best we could get; and so embolden them to make, and flatter themselves to gain their own Conditions; and Conditions are not to be admitted with any Subjects, less with this People, where your Majesties absolute Sovereignty goes much higher, than it is taken (perhaps) to be in England.

And lastly, There being some of your Majesties Graces, which being passed into Laws, might be of great prejudice to the Crown; and yet it being to be fear'd, they will press for them all, and it's uncertain what humor the denying any of them might move in their minds: I conceive, under favour, it would be much better to make two Sessions of it, one in Summer, the other in Winter; in the former to settle your Majesties Supply; and in the latter, to Enact so many of those Graces, as in Honour and Wisdom should be judged equal; when the putting aside of the rest might be of no ill consequence to other your Royal Purposes.

All the Objections I am able to suggest unto my self are two: That it might render fruitless the intended Improvement upon the concealments, and prejudice the Plantations of Connaught and Ormond. The first may easily be helped by a short Law propounded in my Dispatch to my Lord Treasurer; and Posita, that there do no other Law pass the first Session, the second is likewise sufficiently secur'd.

Then it is to be foreseen what your Majesty will demand; how to induce, and pursue the same, for the happy settlement of the Regal Rights and Powers in this more subordinate Kingdom.

My humble Advice is, to declare at the first opening of the Meeting, that your Majesty intends, and promises two Sessions: This former for your self; that latter in Michaelmas Term next for them. This to ascertain the payments of your Army, and to strike off the Debts of your Crown; That for the Enacting of all such profitable and wholesome Laws, as a moderate and good People may expect from a Wise and Gracious King.

That this being the order of Nature, Reason, and Civility, your Majesty expects it should be intirely observ'd, and your self wholly intrusted by them; which they are, not only to grant to be fit in the general Case of King and Subjects, but ought indeed to acknowledge it with thankfulness due to your Majesty in particular, when they look back, and call to mind, how for their ease you were content to take Sixscore Thousand Pounds (which their Agents gave to be paid in Three) in Six Years; and not barely so neither, but to double your Graces toward them the whilst, which they have enjoyed accordingly much to their advantage, and greatly to the loss of the Crown.

And that considering the Army hath been represented over to your Majesty from this Council, and in a manner from the Body of this whole Kingdom, to be of absolute necessity, to give comfort to the quiet minds in their honest labours, to contain the Licentious Spirits within the modest bounds of Sobriety; It consists not with your Majesties Wisdom to give unto the World, no not the appearance of so much improvidence in your own Councils, of so much forgetfulness in a case of their Safety, as to leave that Pillar of your Authority, and their Peace unsettled, for continuance at least one Six Months before the wearing forth of their Contribution.

Therefore your Majesty was well assur'd, in conformity to the Rules of Reason and Judgment, they would presently grant three Subsidies to be paid in three years, to disengage the Crown of Fourscore Thousand Pounds Debt, and continue their Quarterly Payments toward the Army four years longer; in which time it was hopeful (suitable to your Gracious Intentions) some other Expedient might be found out, to maintain the Army without farther Charge to them at all; which Law passed, they should have as much leisure to Enact for themselves at after, as they could desire, either now, or in Winter. Nay, your Majesty would be graciously pleased, with the assistance of your Council, to advise seriously with them, that nothing might remain, either unthought of, or denied, conducing to the Publick Good of this Kingdom; but if they make difficulty to proceed with your Majesty in this manner, other Counsels must be thought of, and little to be relied on, or expected from them.

I am not to flatter your Majesty so far, as to raise any hope on that side, that all this should be granted but by pressing both, and especially the continuance of the Quarterly Payments to the Army, which they dread above any earthly thing. I conceive it probable, that to determine and lay asleep (as they think) the Contribution, and in acknowledgment of your Majesties happy access to the Crown, they may be drawn to a present gift of three Subsidies, payable in three years, which alone would keep the Army on foot during that time; and if my Calculation hold, almost discharge the Debt of the Crown beside.

For

1633. For thus I make my Estimate. The Contribution from the Countrey is now but twenty thousand pounds sterling by the year; whereas I have good Reason to trust each Subsidie will raise thirty thousand pounds sterling, and so there will be 10000 l. for three years, over and above the establishment which thirty thousand pounds sterling, well and profitably issued, will (I trust) with Honour to Your Majesty, and moderate satisfaction to the Parties, strike off the whole fourscore thousand pounds Irish, which in present presseth so sore upon this Crown.

And then Sir, after that in Michaelmas Term, all Beneficial Acts for the Subject be thought of, as many, no fewer, nor no more Enacted than were fit in Honour and Wisdom to be granted; If for a Conclusion to this Parliament, we could gain from them other two Subsidies, to buy in Rents and Pensions to ten thousand pounds yearly value (a thing they are inclinable unto, as is mentioned in my Dispatch to the Lord Treasurer) I judge there were a happy issue of this Meeting; and that it should through God's Blessing, appear to the World in few years, You had without Charge made a more absolute Conquest of this Nation by your Wisdom, than all your Royal Progenitors have been able to accomplish by their Armies, and vast expence of Treasure and Blood.

These being the Ends in my poor Opinion, which are to be desired, and attained; the best means to dispose and fit all concurring causes thereunto, are not to be forgotten; and therefore as Preparatives, I make bold to offer these ensuing Particulars.

It seems to me very convenient, a Committee be forthwith appointed of some few of us here, to take into consideration all the Bills intended, when there was a Parliament to have been called in the time of my Lord Faulkland: Such as shall be judged beneficial to make them ready; such as may be of too much prejudice to the Crown, to lay them aside, and to draw up others, which may chance to have been then omitted. This Work may be by the Committees, either quickned, or forewarned, as the Parliament proceeds warmer or cooler in your Majesties supplies.

Next, That your Majesties Acts of Grace directed to my Lord Faulkland, the 24th. of May 1628, may be considered by such of Your Council in England, as shall please your Majesty to appoint; there being many Matters therein contained, which in a Law would not so well futurely sort with the Power requisite to be upheld in this Kingdom, nor yet with your Majesties present profit; which hath perswaded me to except against such, as I hold best to be silently passed over, and transmit a Paper thereof to my Lord Treasurer.

It is to be feared, the meaner sort of Subjects here live under the pressures of the great men, and there is a general Complaint, that Officers exact much larger Fees than of right they ought to do. To help the former, if it be possible, I will find out two or three to make Examples of; and to remedy the latter, grant out a Commission for examining, regulating and setting down Tables of Fees in all your Courts; so as they shall find your Majesties Goodness and Justice, watching and caring for their Protection and Ease, both in private and publick respects.

I shall endeavour the Lower House may be so composed, as that neither the Recusants, nor yet the Protestants shall appear considerable, more one than the other, holding them as much as may be, upon equal Ballance; for they will prove thus easier to govern, than if either party were absolute. Then would I in private discourse shew the Recusant, that the Contribution ending in December next, if your Majesties Army were not supplied some other way before, the twelvpence a Sunday must of necessity be exacted upon them; shew the Protestant, That Your Majesty must not let go the twenty thousand pounds-Contribution, nor yet discontent the other in matter of Religion, till the Army were some way else certainly provided for; and convince them both, that the present quarterly payments are not so burdenson, as they pretended them to be; and that by the Graces they have had already more benefit than their Money came to. Thus poising one by the other, which single might perchance prove more unhappy to deal with.

I will labour to make as many Captains, and Officers Burgeses, as possibly I can, who having immediate dependance upon the Crown, may almost sway the Business betwixt the two Parties, which way they please.

In the Higher House your Majesty will have, I trust, the Bishops wholly for you. The Titular Lords, rather than come over themselves, will put their Proxies into such safe hands, as may be thought of on this side; and in the rest your Majesty hath such Interest, what out of duty to the Crown, and obnoxiousness in themselves, as I do not apprehend much any difficulty among them.

To these, or any thing else directed by your Majesty, I will with all possible diligence, apply my self so soon as I shall understand your pleasure therein; most humbly beseeching, you will take it into your Gracious Memory, how much your Majesties speedy Resolution in this great Business imports the prosperity of your Affairs in this place, and in that respect vouchsafe to hasten it, as much as conveniently may be.

The present mean condition of this Army, and the necessary course to be held in the speedy Reformation thereof, I fully now set forth in my Dispatch to Mr. Secretary Cook.

The state of your Majesties Revenue, the Annual Issues of your Treasure, and the Debt charged upon this Crown upon my coming to the Government; the Propositions humbly offered by me, for the bettering your Majesties Affairs in this particular, together with a way of raising a constant great Rent forth of the Salt, I have at this time also transmitted to my Lord Treasurer; of all which I beseech your Majesty at your best leisure be pleased to take a summary account.

Now I trust the importance and weight of this inclosed Discourse will recompence for the length thereof, and obtain my pardon, albeit I presume thus to present it immediatly to your Sacred Hands; for indeed I take it to be no less than the Ground-plot, whereupon to set and raise Safety and Quiet to this Kingdom, as it is in dependence to the Crown of England.

And therefore I do most humbly beseech your Majesties quickning Spirit may move upon these Waters, that we may from your Directions receive Life, and from your Wisdom borrow

W borrow Light to guide and conduct us along in the way we are to take towards the accomplishment of so happy a Work.

W 1633. God Almighty assist You in these, and all other Your Counsels, and long preserve your Majesty in full Power and Greatness, &c.

Dublin-Castle,
Jan. 22. 1633.

Neither was that worthy Prelate the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury less careful for the Peace-establishment of the Church here at home, and accordingly of his Majesties Orders, that none should hereafter be Ordained Minister in the Church absque titulo; according to the Canon: for by the Neglect hereof, a multitude of Lecturers and Chaplains wandered up and down to the scandal of their Calling, for want of other means to live, to get Maintenance by humouring their Auditors, and other insufferable ways; In pursuance hereof, the Archbishop wrote to the several Bishops to Pray and Require them, that at all times of Ordination, they be careful to admit into Holy Orders none but such men as for Life and Learning are fit, and which have a Title for their Maintenance, according to the Law and ancient Practice of the Church; and the Archbishop declared what shall be a Title according to the Canon, which these persons Ordained must have.

1. A Presentation to some Ecclesiastical preferment.
2. Or, A Certificate undoubted, that he is provided of some Church void there.
3. Or, A Grant of some Petty-Canons place, or the like, in a Cathedral or a Collegiate Church.
4. Or, A Fellow, or in the right of a Fellow, in some College in Oxford or Cambridge.
5. Or, A Conduct of Chaplain in some College in Oxford or Cambridge.
6. Or, A Master of Arts of Five years standing, living at his own Charge in either of the Universities.
7. Or the intention of the Bishop that Ordains, shortly to admit him to some Benefice or Curates Place then void.

Much about this time there hapned a Quarrel betwixt the Lord Deputy of Ireland and Sir David Fowlis, &c. of the County of York, who had been a little too free in his Discourse concerning the Lord Deputy, as if he had not accounted for such Sums of Money as his Lordship had received in that County, from those who had compounded for not taking the Order of Knighthood; and that he openly diswaded persons from such Compositions, to his Majesties great Dis-service: Hereupon an Information was exhibited against him, &c. for the matters aforesaid, and he was Fined 5000*l.* and put off his Places he enjoyed in that County, and moreover enjoined publick acknowledgment of these his Offences, both to the King's Majesty, as also to the Lord Viscount Wentworth.

In Hilary Term also was exhibited an Information by the King's Attorney W: Noy Esq; against William Prim Esq; of Lincolnes Inn. William Buckner, Michael Sparks and others setting forth, That about 8 Car. Rég. Mr. Prynn compiled and put in Print a Libellous Volume, Entituled by the name of Histrionastix, against Plays, Masques, Dancings, &c. And although he knew well, that his Majesties Royal Queen, Lords of the Council, &c. were in their publick Festivals, and other times, present Spectators of some Masques and Dances, and many Recreations that were tolerable, and in themselves sinless, and so published to be, by a Book Printed in the time of his Majesties Royal Father: yet Mr. Prynn in his Book hath railed, not only against Stage-Plays, Comedies, Dancings, and all other Exercises of the People, and against all such as behold them; but farther in particular against Hunting, Publick Festivals, Christmas-keeping, Bonfires and May-Poles, nay, against the dressing up of a House with Green Ivy: and to manifest his evil and mischievous design in publishing of this Libel, he hath therein written divers incitements, to stir up the People to discontent, as if there were just cause to lay violent hands on their Prince, and hath expressed in many Speeches against his Majesty, and his infamous terms unfit for so Sacred a Person. He hath cast an aspersions upon her Majesty the Queen, and railing and uncharitable censures against all Christian People. He hath commended all those that are factious persons, that have vented any thing in any Book against the State, as the factious Book of Dr. Leighton, Jo. Mariana a Jesuit, to draw the People from his Majesties Government, which is of a most dangerous consequence to the Realm and State. His Book is of above 1000 Pages; and he dealt with one Michael Sparkes for the Publishing, Licensing and Printing thereof, who is a person that is a common Publisher of unlawful and unlicensed Books; and dealt also with Mr. Buckner, another Defendant for the allowing of it for the Press; and with the other four Defendants to Print part of it, and Publish the same: and by this means this Volume was allowed and published, to the great scandal of the whole Realm; and to have this punishment according to the demerit of the Cause, is the end of Mr. Attorney's Information.

Mr. Atkins of the same House, afterward one of the Justices of the Common Pleas, was of Councell with the Defendant; who said in his Defence,

That having read several Councils, Laws and Statutes against the common frequenting of Stage-Plays, and his Judgment being the same, he did about four years ago Compile a Book call'd Histrionastix, not intending to reflect in the least upon the King, Queen, State or Government, that he gave part of it to Sparkes to Print, who Entred the Copy in Stationers-Hall, and carried part thereof to Buckner for his allowance; who would not, but with difficulty License the same, He said farther on Mr. Prynn's behalf, That he had taken the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, That he doth not approve Schism or Sedition; but if any thing in the Book, contrary to his meaning, may have a misconstruction towards his Majesties Government, or the State, he prostitute himself at his Majesties feet, for his Grace and Pardon: This (saith Mr. Atkins) is the Substance of his Answer.

Mr. Jenkins opened the Answer for four of the Defendants, and saith, that they were persons altogether illiterate, not able to judge whether the Books were fit to pass the Press or not; That it was Entred in the Hall, and there allowed; and for Sparkes his Charge, That he was a common Printer of unlawful Books (he saith) That some some of his own Trade envied him for his thrift, and the like.

1633. Mr. Lightfoot, Councel for Mr. Buckner, Chaplain to the late Lord Bishop of Canterbury, said, That the Chaplain is a through-paced conformable man, and detesteth many things said by Mr. Prynne in that Book; that he Licensed but part of the Book, and endeavoured to suppress it.

After Noy the Attorney General makes good the Charge against Prynne, and observeth that he is the sole Author of the Book; that much of it reflects upon his Majesty and his Government; other Matters upon the Church, as mentioning Ceremonies, the Church-Discipline, Altars erected as late Innovations, that for these he is not charged, though he manifested sufficiently his hatred to the Constitution of the Church, in taking to those things of Decency and Order therein, which fell out under his Theam.

I wonder (saith he) what Altars he means; I hope the Church will examine him in due time; as also who he means by his Modern Innovators in the Church, and by Cringing and Ducking to Altars, a fit term to bestow upon the Church; he learnt it of the Canterbs, being used among them. The Musick in the Church, the charitable term he giveth it is, Not to be a Noise of men, but a Bleating of Bruit Beasts; Choristers bellow the Tenor, as it were Oxen; bark a Counter-point as a Kennel of Dogs; roar out a Treble like a sort of Bulls; grunt out a Base, as it were a number of Hogs: his complaint for suppressing Repetitions by way of Conventicles; also his general Censure of all the Bishops, and of all the Clergy; they scorn to feed the Poor; the Silk and Satin Divines; very charitable terms upon them of the Church! Christmas, as it is kept, is a Devils Christmas; nay, he doth bestow a great number of Pages to make men affect the Name of Puritan, as though Christ were a Puritan, and so he saith in his Index. Then concerning the Images in the Church, he speaketh against them, and putteth that now in Print, which was contained in an Answer in this Court. Also for the Sabbath-day, whether to begin on Saturday-night, and end on Sunday at six of the Clock? These are things proper to the examination of the Church; and whatsoever becometh of the Cause in this Court; yet I commend these things to the consideration of the Church. I wonder what the man means to bring these things under the Title of Stage-Players; Pluralities under the Title Stage-Players. He had an end in it, he had an end in it.

Concerning the Book it self, he observes, That Mr. Prynne's avowing himself to be the Author, that he would, to make trouble, have Printed it in the late Parliament; that he had brought it to Dr. Goade and Dr. Harris, who both of them disallowed it; he Printed some part of it in the Parliament-time; but it came not to Mr. Buckner long after; and that Sparkes said he would, and durst Print any thing in time of Parliament.

Then he observed how it grew to a just Volume, and that after it came first to the Press, it hath grown up with divers things, which then were impossible to be known at that time when it was delivered to the Press; which appeareth by this; In 1628. was the Parliament, and in 1631. St. George began to look abroad into the World.

This man bestows eight whole Pages upon St. George, for being so bold to look out; He saith, that St. George the Arrian was a Cappadocian, though born in Cilicia, a Part or Province of Cappadocia, &c. and that St. George his Advocate was an Englishman, born in Glocester; and that St. Basil the Great was Bishop of Casarea in Cappadocia, the Native Country of St. George the Arrian. Certainly he could not tell that St. George would then remove himself abroad, or in the County of Glocester, &c. at that time: but this man did go on according to the occasion in 1628. A Woman 1628. acted a part of a Stage-play at Black-Friars; he spends many Pages about this.

We all know what time the Dearth was, three years ago, he taketh occasion not to pass it over. He maketh a long Discourse of Plays, Masques, &c. in the late penurious times, how they were as expenceful as the Wars were. This is to shew how by pieces it did grow bigger from time to time.

All Stage-Players, he terms them Rogues: in this he doth falsifie the very Act of Parliament; for unless they go abroad, they are not Rogues. The same term he giveth unto Scholars Acting. Mr. Prynne had a purpose, not only in this, to fall upon Stage-Plays, but upon the Body of the Commonwealth, and to infuse it into mens minds, that we are now turning into Paganism and Gentilism. He falleth upon those things that have not Relation to Stage-Plays, Musick in the Church, Dancing, New-Years-Gifts, whether Witchery or not? Witchery, Church-Ceremonies, &c. indistinctly he falleth upon them; then upon Altars, Images, Hair of Men and Women, Bishops and Bonfires. Cards and Tables do offend him, and Peruques do fall within the compass of this Theme. St. George never offended him; but all this is to the end to bring a belief among the People, that we are returning back again to Paganism. His end is therefore to persuade men to go and serve God in another Country, as many are gone already, and set up new Laws and Fancies among themselves. Consider what may come of it.

It may be fit enough and lawful to write against Plays, by men that have a Mission; and they must do their Errand in mannerly Terms, and in the same Terms as other men expect to bear with them.

Mr. Prynne had no Mission to meddle with these things, to see whether men should not return to Gentilism: The Terms which he useth, are such as he finds among the Oyster-Women at Billingsgate, or at the common Conduit. He hath raked up all the vile Terms that could be found.

Now to prove that this is Mr. Prynne's Book, read Mr. Prynne's Book, read Mr. Prynne's Examination, Inter. 5th. (which being read, was to this effect) That Mr. Prynne, without the help of any other, did Write, Pen and Compile the whole Book, called Histrion-mastix, and the Epistle before the Book, and the Index and Table following.

Now for the Publishing of this Book, it doth appear by the Deposition of Dr. Goade, that about eight years since, Mr. Prynne did bring a Book to him in writing, of about a Quire of Paper, concerning Stage-Plays, to have the same Licensed; but he held it unfit to be allowed; and doth well remember, that as to his Argument of the unlawfulness for a Man to put on Womans Apparel, he put Mr. Prynne this Question, Anno 1633. stion; Suppose Mr. Prymme your self, as a Christian, were persecuted by Pagans, think you not, if you did disguise your self in your Maids Apparel, you did well? Who answered, that he thought himself rather bound to yield to death than to do so.

Dr. Harris also depofed, that about seven years ago Mr. Prymme came to him to License a Treatise concerning Stage-plays, but he would not allow of the same. So this man did deliver this Book when it was young and tender, and would have had it then Printed; but it is since grown seven times bigger, and seven times worse.

That he had not spared the King himself. I am sorry I shall have occasion to speak any thing of it; but there is a great deal too much in his Book. My Lords, After he hath made all these complaints as intolerable, he falleth upon all indistinctly, and never taketh upon him to discern to make a distinction, that there may be a toleration, but falleth foul upon every thing, that we are falling into Paganism; men and women are naught: he spareth not the King himself, but takes upon him to teach a remedy; the remedy is worse than the disease. What hateful comparisons he bringeth with other Princes? As Nero; and speaketh of the consuming of the Treasure of the Realm with Masques, and of the late penurious Times; a base word! a Declaration of Infamy upon Princes, with such like Conclusions as these are. When all this is done, he teacheth the remedy not by way of Precept, but by way of Example; invites men to read John Mariana, and two grave Authors more, he saith men not censured. I am very sorry I am to speak any thing wherein the King should be named, but he would not forbear it when the Pen was in his hand; some of the words are so nasty, that I will not speak them.

Then Mr. Atkins on the part of the Defendant craved leave, and said, that many things in his Book were not positively spoken, but only relatively; and that many of them are but the Opinions of other Authors; and his Argument, if fairly proposed, will run thus:

That which doth ordinarily (if not always) defile the Eyes, the Ears, and Souls both of the Actors and Spectators, by ingendring, by exciting Meretricious, lustful, lewd, adulterous desires and affections in their hearts, or by instigating, by preparing, by inducting them to actual uncleanness, must needs be abominable and unlawful unto Christians; but these Stage-Plays, &c. therefore they must needs be abominable: And there is none but Whores, Panders, or foul Incarnate Devils, who dare control that Minor truth.

That he doth not condemn Dancing, as single, and dancing the Measures, that he doth not condemn New-years-Gifts; and where (he saith) that Dancing, Revelling, and Masquing have been as expensive as the Wars, he meant it of the times of King Henry the Eighth.

I shall end (said he) as I did begin in the opening of his Answer, that he may lay fast hold upon the Rock of the Kings Favour and Mercy, and Compassion of this Court; and what his intentions are, they are best known to his heart, his expressions known to your Lordships. I cannot condemn his Heart, I will not excuse his Pen.

He lastly saith, he had known him very long in their Society, and that his ordinary discourses have not been factious, but that in this matter he resembled him to the Astronomer that fixed his eyes so much upon the Stars, that he did not look to his Feet, and so fell into a Ditch: for his eyes were so fixed upon this Subject, upon the common resort to Stage-Plays, and the great abuse that comes by them, that he forgot to look down to his hand that guided his Pen, which now bringeth him under your Lordships censure.

That I may not offend the patience of this Court, (the Court is full, and the expectation is great;) I will conclude with all humility, and wish and crave, that he who is the Supreme Judge, may be with your Lordships in this matter, and may be over all your good Thoughts, Judgments and Sentences this day, in this cause of this poor Gentleman.

The next day Mr. Holborn pleads for Mr. Prymme, and said, that for the Book he did humbly submit himself to your Lordships; he confesseth he hath been guilty of evil expressions, which may be scandalous by misconstruction, but that the intention of heart was fair and honest, though he had been harsh in expression, and for that he medleth with other matters not proper to his subject, as the Sabbath day, Habits, and Recreations, &c. his meaning was of Stage-plays on the Sabbath day, and unlawful Recreations; that if there be any thing amiss in the Book, he hopeth they are guilty of it who were Licensers thereof; that his honest intentions were apparent in this, that he dispersed his Book to men of known integrity; in particular, he gave one to the Attorney General himself; and as to the Perjury charged upon, he saith, that it was another Book of about a Quire of Paper he shewed to Dr. Harris, and Dr. Goad, though of the same subject, yet of another frame and contexture.

Then Mr. Hern said, that he must needs confess to their Lordships, that Mr. Prymme did come under great disadvantage before their Lordships, considering both the ability of the Kings Council, the weight and dubiousness of his Cause, and the aggravations made upon it by the Kings Learned Council, which were the true Motives that they had craved farther time; that he for his part had no other matter to offer on his behalf, but the intentions of his heart, which were clear and honest; that he hoped your Lordships would look upon him not as writing these things out of the perverseness of his spirit, but out of the abundance of his heart, transported with zeal against the growing Evils that have befallen this Nation, and some of his Acquaintance, by their frequenting Stage-Plays; that he had frequently, as occasion served, spoke well of their Majesties, and he related to some expressions in the Book, &c. And thus three whole days spent in this hearing, on the fourth Sentence was given, where the Lord Cottington, Chancellor of the Exchequer, being lowest in Quality, began and said:

My Lords,

The Kings Attorney General hath brought Mr. Prymme, and these other Defendants, before this Honourable Court, for publishing and printing a Libellous Book, scandalous to his Majesty and the State; nay, the height and greatness of Mr. Prymme's malice hath been so great, that 1633. that it hath vented it self against all sorts of men, and the best of men, as the King, Queen, Peers, Prelates, Church, Magistrates and Governours of both: the Book, he said, tends to create a dislike in his People of his Majesty and his Government, and so to create and stir up disobedience in the People.

He confesseth that he did write the Book, and it's true he did endeavour the Printing of it, and the Publishing of it, this is proved very well; yea, but Mr. Prynne had no other intention but a tenderness of Conscience, he meant no hurt to the King or State, (as his Council said:) but Mr. Attorney answered them, that he is not the Declarer of his Intentions, he must be judged by the Book, by his words, more certainly by the effect; for all good men do receive scandal by this Book, and all of Mr. Prynne's humour were glad of this Book. When I consider what kind of Libel it is, it is not like other Libels: other Libels have been by persons discontented, some poor Rogues, scattered up and down; but here's a Libel in Folio, and in Print, and justifieth it self by Authors with an high hand, That is there, and that is there. And, (my Lords,) when I consider those high passages in his Book, I protest unto you they are things to be abhorred; they are not spoken relatively (as his Council would have it) but positively, That our English Ladies, Shorn and Fritzed Madams, have lost their Modesty; that the Devil is only honoured in Dancing; that Plays are the chief delight of the Devil; that they that frequent Plays are damned, and so are all that do not concur with him in his Opinions, Whores, Panders, foul Incarnate Devils, Judases to their Lord and Master, &c. Princes dancing in their own Persons, his censure of them is Infamous, &c. But the foulest of all is, That this was the cause of untimely ends in Princes.

For his Defence, I took notice of it likewise, I do remember that all those Gentlemen that were employed and assigned as Council for his Defence, every one of them began to crave Mercy of the Court; yet they came with a Defence and Justification, so far as their cause would bear. Mr. Holborn said, That for Players, they were Rogues by the Statute: yet Mr. Attorney said, they are not Rogues by the Statute, unless they wander, &c. My Lords, he said, his intention was against Publick and Common-Plays, yet seek all his Book through, and you shall find it against Plays in Princes Palaces. His intention now must be understood by his Book, and by his words; and that which he doth apply of any Author, is his own. And I think his Defence did aggravate his Offence. As to his defence against the Ladies, he saith, he speaketh it Relatively, and not Positively; yet he saith, Our English Ladies are so and so whorish, &c. And for that part of his Book, wherein he condemns Murder, Mr. Prynne will have Murder unlawful, but execution of Princes is not Murder, and therefore that is a lawful Act. Mr. Attorney said well, the end of this man and *John * Mariana*, &c. they are all one, they all cry Malice against Princes.

I shall humbly crave pardon, and discharge my Conscience, and shall let your Lordships see, how I do understand the sense, and that so I am to judge, and I conceive it to be as your Lordships see, and the Malice in this Book is against King and State; and, My Lords, with this I Sentence Mr. Prynne.

His Book I Sentence to be burnt by the Hand of the Common Hangman, though a thing not used in this Countrey, that he be expelled the Society of Lincolnes-Inn, and degraded in the University of Oxon, and besides, that he stand in the Pillory, be condemned to pay 5000 l. to the King, and to undergo perpetual Imprisonment.

As to Mr. Buckner, I Fine him in 50 l. to the King, and imprisonment according to the course of the Court, for his connivency at Mr. Prynne's Book, and that he be severely reprehended for the Licensing of it.

As to Sparkes, I Fine him in 500 l. to his Majesty, for that he said, It was an Excellent Book, and would be called in, and therefore sell well; moreover, that he stand on the Pillory, without touching his Ears, and have a Paper on his Breast, expressing his Crime.

The Lord Chief Justice Richardson spake next, and in his Sentence concurred with the Lord Cottingham.

The next was Mr. Secretary Cook, who said, By this great Volume of Mr. Prynne, it will appear to this Court, that he hath read more than he hath studied, and studied more than he hath digested; whereas, if he had read but one Sentence of Solomon, it had saved him from the danger he is now like to fall into. The Preacher saith, Be not over-just, nor make thy self over-wise, for why wilt thou destroy thy self? My Lords, It is a Sentence requireth much study and consideration. It is most certain, that Righteousness and Wisdom are such Vertues, as they help forward Justice; but when Wisdom is mixed with a Mans own humours, as for the most part it is with Flesh and Blood, there is danger of straining it too far, and that will tend to the destruction of himself and others. Examples are too pregnant of this, and he may take it from a good Author, even from Christ himself. When his Apostles, out of zeal to their Master, would have called for Fire from Heaven against the Samaritans, that refus'd to entertain him, the Answer was, You know not of what Spirit you are. I would Mr. Prynne would have considered this.

This is a good Spirit that is meek, tempered with Modesty and Humility, with Mildness and with Equity; and such a Spirit is always tender, not to destroy, root up, overthrow, but to bind, repair and preserve. But there is another fiery Spirit, which is always casting of Fire, nothing but Damnation and Destruction; certainly such a Spirit ever tends to its own Confusion. And if this be well observed every man shall find it true, that such a Spirit cometh before destruction. I wish Mr. Prynne were not an ill example of this. Certainly, My Lords, Vice and Corruption ought not only to be reprehended, but to be punished severely, and that sharply too where it is; but Mr. Prynne should have considered, every Man is not a fit reprehender. He had no Invitation, nor Office, nor Interest to employ a Talent which doth not belong unto him. If Magistrates and Princes should inveigh against all things, and tolerate nothing, we must live no longer among men; and certainly if we will be thought to live with them that are wholly virtuous, we must go out of the World; we have a good Author for this. But my Lords, a Toleration must be used, and that Mr. Prynne would have found, if he had considered his own body. Shall a man upon every light distemper and disorder in his Body, take Physick? Or shall ill Humors be purged till he purge all out? Certainly he will purge Spirit, Life and all away with it. And as it is in the Natural Body, so Anno 1632. it is in the Politick; there must be a Toleration and Connivence: it cannot be governed without it, and we have a Warrant for it. Did not Christ himself forbid the cutting out of the Tares, lest they should pluck Corn, and destroy that too? I think, if Mr. Prynne should have been asked the Question that Naaman did to the Prophet, he would not at all have bid go away in peace; he would have threatned Hell and Destruction. There is a Christian Wisdom, and there must be a Toleration in all States. And certainly the faults that have been tolerated in all times, were greater than modest Plays, or modest Dancing. It is not my Intention, neither do I think it is the intention of any of your Lordships to Apologize for Stage-Plays, much less for the Abuse of them; I wish, and so I think doth every good man, that the Abuse of them were restrained; but my Lords, not by Railing, Cursing, Damning, Inveighing, &c. not only against the Faults and Players themselves, but against all Spectators, and those that come to them; and that of all Degrees, and with such bitterness and acrimony, that in all the Authors alledged, which are infinite, there is not to be found an Example. My Lords, I am very sorry he hath so carried himself, that a man may justly fear he is the Timon that hath a quarrel against Mankind. But I love not too much to aggravate Offences, which of themselves are heavy enough.

He calleth his Book Histrion-mastix; but therein he sheweth himself Ajax Anthropomastix, as the Grecians called him, The Scourge of Mankind, that is, the Whipper and the Whip. I cannot but concur with the Censure already begun by my Lord Cottington, given against Mr. Prynne, Buckner and Sparkes.

The Lord of Dorset was more severe in his Censure; for that he Fined him in 10000 l. to the King, to have his Nose slit, and his Forehead branded, &c.

Let us see for a while the estate of things in the neighbouring Provinces of the Low-Countries; where those adhering to the Crown of Spain, suffered a very great loss by the Death of the Infanta Clara Eugenia, their Governess, whose Government over that People had been very mild, gentle and obliging; She did by all good means, perceiving the miserable and low Condition of that Countrey, seek to procure for them at last, after all the Miseries of War, a Peace so necessary for their Welfare; but all in vain: for the Dutch, I mean the Confederate Netherlands, being puffed up with the Prince of Orange's late Success before Rhinbergh, taking that Town in less than three weeks time; and withal being instigated hereto by Monsieur Charnasse, the French King's Ambassador, who drew them into a League with his Master and the Swede, against the Spaniard, refused all moderate Terms of Peace proposed to them by the Spaniard, and so those Countries to their (almost) ruine, continue all this whole year in War. To the Infanta succeeds the Cardinal Infanto, who by the Generals Ailona and Marquess of Ledio, dissipates the plotting of Henry Count of Bergues, the Prince Duke of Aschol, and others, and retakes the strong House of Argenteau and Dutchy of Limburgh, making as if he intended the Siege of Maeſtricht; whom to dislodge, the Prince of Orange seems to attack Breda, but upon the Spaniards Approach, he marcheth off.

About this time his Majesty of Great Britain by Death was deprived of the greatest Ornament of his Gown, the Attorney General Noy, whom the Malecontents of this Government equally hated as the great Archbishop, and whom they equally Libelled and reviled by their impudent and scandalous Libels; to which Vice, that party of men (who yet pretend to Religion) to their infamy have been, and to this day are yet most passionately addicted, to their disgrace and disadvantage, in the Judgment of all sober and discreet men.

And in regard Mr. Prynne had, to the Scandal of his Brethren and Profession, notoriously been culpable (as before you have heard) in Libelling and abusing the Government, by decrying all innocent and harmless Mirth and Recreations, as Stage-Plays, Dancing, &c. all the four Inns of Court now joyn in the presenting a Masque to their Majesties at Whitehall; which was done with that Magnificence by the Undertakers, that perhaps this Age hath not, for the splendor thereof seen the like; which they partly did, to shew their Dislike and Abhorrence of Mr. Prynne's Sentiments, and to give his Majesty not only a Welcome home from his Progress into Scotland, but a hearty representation of their Judgments in that Matter: On Candlemas-Day at night rode four Gentlemen of each Inn of Court, followed by a Train of Christian Captives, sent by the Empeior of Morocco to our King, as a Present, for his Assistance in taking of Sally, a Port of Pyrates in the Mediterranean on the African Shore, who much annoyed and disturb'd our Trade into the Levant.

Immediately after, the City invite their Majesties to Merchant-Taylor's Hall, where the Treatment was indeed (had it been hearty, all had been well) every way magnificent; where, to please that People, the Revelers also of the Inns of Court adorned the King's Feast, and the Masque was shewed to the City, though (in affection) not obliged to their Majesties by it, as we all know by what after happened.

His Majesty now began to apply himself to Naval Affairs; and indeed it was high time; for the Narrow Seas themselves began to be infested with Turks and Algerines, and even the Dominion thereof was questioned by the Dutch; who being ever intent upon their Gain, became almost Masters of the Fishing-Trade, if not of our Seas themselves: The Northern Fishing produced to our People no great gain, and therefore was by them neglected; at last the Dutch set upon the Trade of Herring-Busses, and (as one gives us hereof a very good Account) of the general Fishing of the very British Seas and our own Coasts, after much muttering of our Fishmongers, and the complaint upon their Markets; the State were rowzed up, by several Overtures and Projects, concerning Busses for our own Coast, and prevention of strangers, as an Inlaw over all the Narrow-Seas, some petty quarrels thereabout happened between us and the Hollander, and then began the Dispute, which that able Scholar Grotius intended to conclude, by his Tract of Mare Liberum, and although the English Right was not now to be questioned by a new Challenge of the General Interest, and so to make the case common to all; and that by the Pen. Yet, to answer him therein also, he was encountred by as Learned a Piece entituled Mare

Anno 1634. Mare Clausum, the Author, Mr. Selden, able enough to make it good, and did so far as he intended towards them, proving the Sovereignty of those Seas, under the Dominion of this Crown of England, and by continual practice of our former King's levying Monies of the Subject, meerly for that purpose to maintain that Right. But, when the King found that it was now in controversie, and must be kept by force, which his Coffers failed to perform, herein he considers the way and means, to require Supply of his Subjects by Duty, which hitherto had been denied of Curtessie, or by Privy Seals, or by Loans, which are miscalled [disgustful, Impositions illegal] they were not so, they had been lawfully demanded, and no Impositions but seemly and necessarily used, by all former Sovereigns. Disgustful indeed they might be, so are all demands of Money, from hard-hearted Subjects, and being constrained (by his own consent) to the late Petition of Right; he would depend upon his own, the Revenue by his right of Prerogative. And having Precedents of former Sovereigns, he sets on foot that payment of Ship-money as a Duty; for indeed Mr. Selden comes short of home in his Proofs, bringing his Levies of Naval-Aid but to the time of Henry the Second, and might no doubt by his reading, have reached home without help, even of a Parliament.

But the Course went on by the orderly, legal proceeding of Writ; in effect, An ancient Precedent of raising a Tax upon the Nation, for setting forth a Navy, in case of danger. And being managed by that excellent Artizan of Law, the Attorney Noy, whose Readings and Search had no doubt happened upon Records for Levying a Naval-Aid by sole Authority of the King, for safety of the Kingdom, as also in time of those Parliaments, when free Subsidies, and this enforced Command of Aid came together, the one by their love to support what might refer to himself, this other by Authority, when it concerned the Publick. But the wisdom of State made restrictions, and bounded the Writ at the first but to Maritime Counties, as mostly receiving the present benefit of security from Pirates; but that not sufficient for the common necessity, the Writs became afterwards general to all Counties, and so did the quarrel; the whole (amounting unto two hundred thirty six thousand pounds, in lieu of all payments) came but to twenty thousand pounds per ensem. The Clergy never pleaded, but indeed they muttered (their case) to be free from all secular and civil charges: And to prevent the boldness of any pretence, the Laws made disputes of the three-fold necessity binding all, Clergy and Laity, viz. aid in War, building of Bridges, and raising of Forts. Nor had they any Exception; that which the Archbishop did for them, was upon their just Complaint of their unequal Tax by their Neighbour; therefore the Sheriffs were required not to tax the Clergy of Parsonages above a tenth part of their Land-rate of their several Parishes; and no doubt we may easily believe the Inlanders might mutter, as conceiving it strange to be concerned in the Sea. But in truth the main Exception was, to be taxed out of Parliament against the late Petition of Right, and endured long debate in Courts of Justice thereafter, whilst the first Mover, Noy the Attorney having set the Wheel a going, took his last leave, as before, to rest for ever from the toil of an Attorney General.

The Swedes were now renewing their Quarrel with the Emperour, and to solicit for aid and assistance, they dispatch the Great Chancellour Axel Oxenstjerne to his Majesty of Great Britain; but his Majesty being not over-kindly used by the late King of Sweden, as to the restitution of the Palatinate, when it was in his power to have done it, and being now in Treaty with the Emperour about that Affair, he was not over-ready to promise any thing to the Embassadour, whom yet he presented with Gifts answerable to his Quality, which the Embassadour not succeeding in his Embassy, was pleased to return.

This year also there was summoned a Parliament in Ireland at the motion of the L. Deputy Wentworth, founded on very good reasons, for that in the time of Edward the Third, that Kingdom did yield to the Crown ultra reprisas, all charges born, thirty thousand pounds per annum. But now his Majesties Revenue fell short of defraying the yearly charge twenty thousand pound per annum, which was supplied by way of Contribution from the Subject, and the Crown had contracted a debt of eighty thousand pounds. This Contribution was to be determined the next year, and renewed it could not legally be, but by Parliament; and if that Parliament would but grant three Subsidies, they would advance enough to maintain the Army, and providently ordered to discharge his Majesties debt; and that the Parliament should be inclined thereto, the King had many reasons to hope: First, they had granted but one Subsidy since the beginning of King James his Reign. Secondly, the Kingdom was now grown rich, peace begetting plenty. Lastly, his Majesty had lately obliged them by settling all Estates where there had been twenty years continued possession; nor did his expectation miscarry, the Lord Deputy proceeding with that prudence, that he obtained his ends.

Great complaint was now likewise made, and they were brought to the Council Board, how that the Romish Recusants made their Compositions at under-rates, much to the Kings prejudice; upon which the Attorney General excogitated a more exact method of proceeding therein, that very little detriment might thereby accrue to his Majesty.

It is well known, how that ever since the departure of the States of Holland from the Spanish subjection, there was ever in the service of these States very considerable Troops of his Majesties Subjects under their Pay; and because the Commanders had no great care in the choice of their Chaplains, many whereof inconformable persons, and thereby capable to influence the Soldiers to their dislike of Church Government established in each of his Majesties Kingdoms, the Archbishop of Canterbury tendered certain Propositions concerning this matter to the Council Board, which hereafter follow.

1. Whether it be not fit that the several Colonels in the Low-Countries should entertain no Ministers as Preacher to their Regiments, but such as shall conform in all things to the Church of England established, and be commended unto them from your Lordships, by the advice of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury or York, for the time being.

2. That the Company of Merchants residing there, or in any other forreign parts, shall admit no Minister, as Preacher unto them, but such as are qualified, and commended as aforesaid.

3. That if any Minister, having by feigned carriage,

Anno
1634. riage, got to be so recommended, either to any of the several Colonels, or to the Deputy-Governour and Body of the Merchants there, that he after found unconformable, and will not mend upon warning given by the Colonels, or Deputy-Governour of the Merchants, he shall within three Months after such warning given, and refused, be dismissed from his service, that a more orderly and peaceable man may be sent unto them.

4. That every Minister or Preacher with any Regiment of Souldiers that are his Majesties born Subjects, or with the Company of Merchants there, or elsewhere, shall read Divine Service, Christen Children, Administer the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, Marry, instruct the Younger or more ignorant sort in the Catechism, Visitt the Sick, Bury the Dead, and do all other duties according as they are prescribed in the Book of Common-Prayer, maintained in the Church of England, and not otherwise; and that he which will not conform himself so to do, shall not continue Preacher, either to any Regiment of English, or Scottish, or to the Merchants.

5. That if any Minister, or Preacher, being the Kings Subject, shall with any bitter words, or writings in Print, or otherwise, defame the Government of the Church of England established, his Majesties Ambassador or Agent in those parts, for the time being, is to be informed of it, and upon notice given from him to the State, he or they so offending shall be commanded over by Privy-Seal, or otherwise, to answer their offence, or offences here.

6. That no Colonel of any several Regiment, or Deputy-Governour of the Merchants shall give way, that their Minister or Preacher shall bring any other Minister to preach for him in time of his Sicknes, Absence, or other necessary employment, but such, as for whose conformity to the Church and Government he will be answerable.

7. That if any Minister being a Subject of the King's, in any parts beyond the Seas, shall in any Auditory, or elsewhere publicly Speak, Write, Print or Divulge any thing derogatory to the Doctrine or Discipline established in the Church of England, or against the Temporal State and Government, that the Kings Agent do certifie his Offence, that so he may be recalled by Privy-Seal.

8. That no man shall be chosen, or sent over by the Merchants here, either to Delf, or any other part of their Residence beyond the Seas (whensoever any place or places shall become void) but such a man as is conformable to the Church of England; and such as will be careful to see, that they who are under his Government shall observe all such Church-duties, as are expressed and required in any of the former Proposals.

9. That whensoever the Merchant-Adventurers shall become Suitors to renew or confirm their Patents (as in most Kings times is usual to do) that then there be a Clause inserted into their Patent, to bind them to the observance of all, or so much of those Instructions, as shall be thought fit by his Majesty, and the Lords, &c.

And in regard of the great number of English Merchants residing in Holland, more particularly at Delf, he wrote to the Factory as followeth.

After our hearty Commendations, &c. We are commanded by his Majesty to signifie unto you, that this Bearer, Mr. Beaumont, chosen by joynt-consent of your Company to be your Preacher at Delf, or where else you shall at any time reside, is a man learned, sober and conformable to the Doctrine and Discipline established in the Church of England, and that you are to receive him with all decent and courteous usage fitting his Person and Calling, and to allow him the usual ancient Stipend which Mr. Forbes lately, or any other before him hath received. And further we are to let you know, that it is his Majesties express Command, that both you, the Deputy, and all and every other Merchant that is, or shall be residing in those parts beyond the Seas, do conform themselves to the Doctrine and Discipline settled in the Church of England: And that they frequent the Common-Prayers with all Religious duty and reverence at all times required, as well as they do Sermons: And that out of your Company, you do yearly about Easter, as the Canons prescribe, name two Church-Wardens, and two Sidesmen, which may look to the Orders of the Church, and give an account according to their Office. And Mr. Beaumont himself is hereby to take notice, that his Majesties express Pleasure and Command to him is, that he do punctually keep and observe all the Orders of the Church of England, as they are prescribed in the Canons and the Rubricks of the Liturgy. And that if any of your Company shall shew themselves refractory to this Ordinance of his Majesty, (which we hope will not be,) he is to certifie the name of any such Offender, and his offence to the Lord Bishop of London for the time being, who is to take order and give remedy accordingly. And these Letters you are to Register and keep by you, that they which come after may understand what care his Majesty hath taken for the well-ordering of your Company in Church affairs. And you are likewise to deliver a Copy of these Letters to Mr. Beaumont, and to every Successor of his respectively, that he and they may know what his Majesty expects from them, and be the more inexcusable if they disobey. Thus not doubting but that you will shew your selves very respectful to these his Majesties Commands, we leave you to the Grace of God, and rest,

June 17.

Your very Loving Friend,

W. Canterbury.

In Michaelmas Term of this year, Sir Robert Heath was removed from being Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and Sir John Finch the Queens Attorney was advanced into his place; upon which account the Lord Keeper Coventry in that Court at the time of his Inauguration spake as followeth.

The Lord Keepers Speech to Sir John Finch, at the time he was to be made Chief Justice of Common-Pleas, the 16th. of October 1634.

Mr. Serjeant Finch,

THE King's Majesty calling to mind your many Services to himself, and the Queen, and knowing well your great Learning, accompanied with much Dexterity in the accomplishing of Business of weight, hath appointed you to succeed in the Place vacant in this Court, and here here to sit as Chief Justice. In this you see a manifest Argument of singular Goodness of the King and Queen, so mindful of their Servants, imitating God above, that rewardeth not secundum, sed supra Bona Opera. Now as many heretofore, so you in your due time have cause to acknowledge with David, that your Cup doth overflow. As this is a great comfort to see your Endeavours not only favoured with Acceptance, but Crowned with Reward; so it will instruct you (your Service having brought you Promotion) and put you in mind of your Service, that the Gifts of Princes, though they are sine aliquo reddendo, yet they are not to be reckoned so by them that have them; but as Fruits sown in fruitful Ground to them that receive them: And of this Nature is your Place, which your Master gives you to serve him in; and yet you must serve him so, as you may be fruitful to his People. I remember in Rotulo Parliamenti. 20 Ed. 1. in a great Cause between Humphrey de Bohun, and Gilbert de Clare; It was said of that King, he was as great a Lawgiver, as a Victorious Prince, and therefore stiled the Justinian of England, Rex omnibus Justitia Debitor. The King, our Master, as much as any, makes the same acknowledgment in Practice: never any King, I may say, never any Man of juster, or more upright heart, that equal Justice should be ministered to his Subjects; for he knows well, that Rex & Subditus are Correlatives, even as Man and Wife; and the Emblem of King not wanting betwixt them. As the Subject owes Obedience, so the King Protection and Justice. This Debt is Debitum Justitie, too great and heavy a Burden to be born by a King, compounded only of Mortal Flesh, were it not that his Councel were as Religious and Just, as he is Wise and Politick; and thereby the Load of the King's Business is lighted, by laying a part of the great and insupportable Burthen upon the Judges: For his Debitum Justitie, which is the Debt of a King primarily, by a secondary means becomes the Debt of Judges, and under as great Bonds as may be; greater there cannot be to bind the Consciences of men. The first Bond is Debitum Patrie, due to all the Kings People, whose Causes and Places are the proper Subjects of this Tribunal, and whose flourishing Estate depends much upon the Just Proceedings of this Court. Were there no other Motive, yet this that prevails among the Heathen, Amor Patrie, were strong enough to make Judges desirous of their Duty. The second is, Debitum Regi; for he trusts them with his Richest Treasure, that which is dearer than the Apple of his Eye. His Justice is one Prime part of his Oath at his Coronation, Facies fieri in omnibus Justitiam Equam & rectam: And what you are to give the King for this, you shall need to go no farther than your Oath, the neglect of which puts you to the Will of the King, for Body, Laws and Goods. The third the greatest of all, Debitum Deo, as he is the Fountain of all Justice, and a fearful avenger of them that do the contrary. And three ways I shall mind you how this is a Debt to God. First, Ratione Juramenti, by reason of your Oath, for the immediate relation it hath to God; that it is Religio Jurisjurandi, and therefore, under this Oath, you are bound to God in a full discharge. Secondly, Ratione Loci, for the seat of Judges; God sits whereon you sit; and you may assure your selfe, that he that sets you there, will take strict account of you. Thirdly, Ratione Judicii: The Judgment it self is God's, Car. 10. if you be upright, as you ought. It is said in the 82d. Psalm, God stands in the Congregation of Princes, is the Judge among Gods; and so when you sit here, you must think God is in your face, to give Judgment as it is right, or otherwise, to punish; and therefore when you shall sit your self on your Cushion, either here, or in any other place, you have cause to say, as Jacob did when he had slept in Bethel, How dreadful is this Place! This is the House of God. This in the general. I fear I have spent too much time; I will make amends in the Particulars: Somewhat for Order. Communia Placita, the Pleas of the People; as they are numberless, so necessarily must their Pleas and Causes be, therefore they are all Civil, whether for Lands, Goods real, personal, or mixt: they are the proper Object of this Court. First therefore, you must use diligence in attending and dispatching the multitude of business in this Court. Common Industry may discharge Common Employment; but this is Superlative and Transcendent, and therefore your diligence must be extraordinary. Secondly, you must use great patience in matters brought before you; I must confess, that a multitude of Business, and a good-will to dispatch, will as soon try ones Patience as any thing; yet whatsoever Tryal you are put to, be not from your Tryal. Nothing better becomes a Judge than Patience. Thirdly you must use great caution in discerning those things brought before you; for those that have ill Causes will omit no endeavour to beguile you: therefore you must keep Watch and Ward, and try every thing, that no Counterfeit come to be put upon you. Then, in the fourth place, it is necessary to use all expedition. Nulli deferemus is coupled with Nulli negabimus, Nullo vendemus Justitiam: all three naught, and none can tell which is the worst. In the first place, I shall advise and wish you, in all your Judgments, to insist upon the ancient ways of your Common law. New Opinions are many times in a Councillor retain'd, to defend a Side; but they stand not with the Gravity of a Judge. To invent or find any thing is commendable in a Councillor, but let a Judge stand super antiquas vias; for Lex Loci & Consuetudo Anglia is all in all. One Particular more, which (I think) conduceth much to Justice, is, to give all encouragement to the good and expert clerks of this Court. It hath ever been the great commendation and Honour of this Court to be furnished with the best Clerks. These encourage others, inform, and reduce to the same purity of pleading, which (as Mr Littleton saith) is one of the most Honourable things in the law, And if a Man observe what a multitude of Just Causes are overthrown by vitious Entries, and Pleadings, he will have Just cause to believe it. I know to whom I speak. Your great Understanding and Judgment, and that Integrity in you, need not that I should say half this: and yet, considering what Order is, and the duty of my place, and affection to your Person, I could do no less. I shall shut up all in two Memento's. The one, That the Justices of this Court are styled by the Name of Justitiarij without Addition, and the Process likewise coram Justitiariis without Addition. Addition, for the most part, diminishes. It is an Honour, and somewhat more, that it hath been attributed more Anno 1634. to this Court than to any other. Think on it, and let it be an occasion for you to think what it is, and to follow it. The next Memento is, to remember the Catalogue of your Predecessors: for I may be bold to say, as many and Reverend Men have been upon the Cushion in this Court, as ever sat on any; especially the remembrance of the best is the best Instruction and Lesson for your self. Out of my true and hearty affection to you, I wish you may often think of them; and so think of their Ways, that your Ways may exceed, and out-run the best.

And the Lord Chief Justice returned, as followeth;

May it please your Lordship,

Levis est Dolor, qui Consilium capere potest.

Great Joy brings forth no less, and breeds no less perturbation in their thoughts that enjoy it. How it must then be with me, at this present, I leave to your Lordship to Judge. to my self, I must confess, I appear like one for a long time shut up in a dark Room, upon whom a great Light, on a sudden, hath broken in. I muse at the consideration of my own weak acknowledgment of the Kings Goodness shining upon me at this time. Ignotus moritur sibi, is a sad finishing of a man's own Course. I shall crave your Lordships patience; and if I live, shew you how unwilling I am to live the one or die the other. I have now spent (I would I could say not mis-spent) Thirty-four years in relation and Practice of the Common-Law; Relation I call it, for the first Six Years bestowed by me in the Books of Law, by some unhappy means I was diverted, and my resolution fitted to another way for Forreign Employment, to which, after Nine or Ten Years, I was design'd: and at that time, the Great Seal being put into the Hands of that High-Treasurer of all Learning and Eloquence, the Lord of St. Albans, (pardon, my good Lord, if my never-forgotten Favours desire to revive him, whose faults let them be buried with him in the Grave; I remember his Vertues (by him was I invited to the practice of the Common-Law. His Fall, and other Misfortunes to your Lordship not unknown, drew me from my Study: But afterwards, resolutely turning my Hand to the Plough again, it pleased God to send your Lordship that Place, which now you hold, (which God continue) and my prayer shall be ever from the bottom of my Heart, that I may never see it in another Hand: and when Atalanta-like I stooped at the Ball of Profit, neglecting the Goal of Honour, spending my time more in the Service of the Subject, than my own Good; He, in whose Hands the Hearts of Kings are, hath bowed the Heart of my Gracious Sovereign and Master to me; and I learn to think that is best which he doth, and so submit my self to His Pleasure. This hath bred in me several Meditations, some of comfort and Consolation. Here sit by your Lordship Three Grave and Learned Judges well-versed in the ways of this Grave Court; and I am as confident of their particular Affection to me, as certain of my own to them; two of the same Society where I was bred, my Ancient Acquaintance; and from the third I ever had a respective Carriage. I shall think it no disparagement to see with their Eyes, to hear with their Ears, and to speak with their Tongues, till my own Observation and what I shall hear by them, may make me more substantial. In the Gospel of Christ His Coat is said to be without Seam; and in the Psalms, that the Queens Vesture was of divers colours: upon which one of the Fathers makes this Observation, In Veste varietas, Scissura nulla. Sometimes we may differ in opinion; but our Hearts shall be like our Robes. My chiefest Comfort is in the confidence of your Lordships Noble Favour, whom I shall ever set as a Mirrour before my Eyes. I count it happy, that I shall attend your Lordship in a Court whereby I may learn, and you see my Endeavours to follow your Precepts and Example, which hath ever been accompanied with all Vertues: The assurance of the King's Majesties Favour is Happiness, as fit for my Wonder, as for my Words. At his first Access to the Crown, He was pleased, upon some small occasion to cast a Princely Eye upon me; after he made me of his Learned Council, and then commended me to the Service of my ever most Gracious and Excellent Mistress; and still doubled his Favours in continuing me in his own Service. Afterward he pricked me out to the Parliament to serve him and the Commonwealth; and though my own disability made me seek to decline it, himself gave me means to support it (a thing before not known) and found out a way to add some more value to me, by ranking me above others before me in Place and Merit. These, and more Favours innumerable have comforted me; that nothing but my own demerits can lessen his Grace to me. I begin to think of what Demosthenes said to the People of Athens, when they chose their Officers:

To take up Thoughts and Cogitations fit for the Greatness and Dignity of this Place; and in that I cannot but remember those Judges which Jethro commended to Moses (whom your Lordships remember) Men Timentes Deum, & qui oderunt avaritiam. His Majesties Love shall make me hate all base and sordid Thoughts, and stir up in me all zeal to his Service. For Uprightness between Man and Man, I shall need no other Argument but the justness of his Royalty, who likes best of those Servants that best distribute his Justice to his People; for the rest, Levavi oculos meos in montem unde venit auxilium; God's Grace give me assistance, as he did to the poor Fishermen. I shall account it your Lordships great Favour to make my humble Recognitions and Resolutions, with the best advantage of your Lordships Expression, known to the King's Majesty.

I know not whether it may be thought material to acquaint the Reader with some Decrees of Star-Chamber, made much about this time.

The first whereof was against Mr. Prym, about his leaving a Libellous Writing in the Attorney Noy's Chamber, this writing reflecting very highly against the Justice of that Court, and some eminent Members thereof; in fine, upon his submission, and the intercession of the Archbishop in his behalf, he was pardoned.

The Second was, A Decree against the Imposition of Farthing-Tokens upon poor people for their wages.

The Third was against Sope-Boylers, for using Fish-Oyl in making their Sope, and not suffering the Assay-Master to try and mark their Sope, but meeting meeting in Taverns, being no Legal Corporation, to consult hereupon.

1634. Having mentioned his Majesties Resolution, by Advice of his Privy Councel, to maintain the Sovereignty of the Narrow Seas, as well as his Majesties Subjects, the Merchants in their Navigation, and the result thereupon of levying Ship-money, according to usage of former times, his Majesty now Issued out the first Writ for levying the Duty of Ship-Money; and it was directed to the Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens of London.

Carolus Rex, &c.

To the Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens of our City of London, and to the Sheriffs of the same City, and good Men in the said City, and in the Liberties, and Members of the same, Greeting. Because we are given to understand, That certain Thieves, Pirates and Robbers of the Sea, as well Turks, Enemies of the Christian Name, as others, being gathered together, wickedly taking by force, and spoiling the Ships and Goods, and Merchandizes, not only of our Subjects, but also of the Subjects of our Friends in the Sea, which hath been accustomed anciently to be defended by the English Nation; and the same, at their pleasure, have carried away, delivering the Men in the same into miserable Captivity: And forasmuch as we see them daily preparing all manner of Shipping, farther to molest our Merchants, and to grieve the Kingdom, unless remedy be not sooner applied, and their Endeavors be not more manly met withal; also the dangers considered, which on every side, in these times of War do hang over our heads, that it behoveth us and our Subjects, to hasten the Defence of the Sea and Kingdom with all expedition or speed that we can; we willing by the help of God chiefly to provide for the Defence of the Kingdom, Safeguard of the Sea, Security of our Subjects, safe Conduct of Ships and Merchandizes to our Kingdom of England coming, and from the same Kingdom to Foreign Parts passing; forasmuch as we, and our Progenitors, Kings of England, have been always heretofore Masters of the aforesaid Sea, and it would be very unknown unto us, if that Princely Honour in our times should be lost, or in any thing diminished. And although that Charge of Defence which concerneth all men, ought to be supported by all, as by the Laws and Customs of the Kingdom of England, hath been accustomed to be done: Notwithstanding we considering, that you Constituted in the Sea-Coasts, to whom by Sea as well great dangers are imminent, and who by the same do get more plentiful Gains for the Defence of the Sea, and Conservation of our Princely Honour in that behalf, according to the Duty of your Allegiance against such Attempts, are chiefly bound to set to your helping hand; we command firmly, enjoining you the aforesaid Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens, and Sheriffs of the said City, and the good Men in the same City, and in the Liberties and Members of the same, in the Faith and Allegiance wherein ye are bound unto us, and as ye do love us and our Honour, and under the forfeiture of all which ye can forfeit to us, That ye cause to be prepared and brought to the Port of Portsmouth, before the first Day of March now next ensuing, one Ship of War the Burden of Nine hundred Tuns, with three Hundred and fifty Men at the least: as well expert Masters, as very able and skilful Mariners: One other Ship of War of the Burden of Eight Hundred Tuns, with Two Hundred and Sixty Men at the least, as well expert Masters, as very able and skilful Mariners: Four other Ships of War, every of them of the Burden of Five Hundred Tuns, and every of them with Two Hundred Men at the least, as well expert Masters, as very able and skilful Mariners: and one other Ship of War, of the Burden of Three Hundred Tuns, with One Hundred and Fifty Men, as well expert Masters, as very able and skilful Mariners: And also every of the said Ships with Ordnance, as well greater as lesser, Gunpowder, and Spars and Weapons, and other necessary Arms sufficient for War, and with double Tackling, and with Victuals, until the said first of March, competent for so many Men; and from that time, for Twenty six weeks, at your Charges, as well in Victuals as mens Wages, and other things necessary for War, during that time, upon defence of the Sea in our Service, in Command of the Admiral of the Sea, to whom we shall commit the Custody of the Sea, before the aforesaid first Day of March, and as he, on our behalf, shall command them to continue; so that they may be there the same day, at the farthest, to go from thence with our Ships, and the Ships of other faithful Subjects, for the Safeguard of the Sea, and defence of you and yours, and repulse and vanquishing of whomsoever busying themselves to molest or trouble upon the Sea our Merchants, and other Subjects, and Faithful People coming into our Dominions for Cause of Merchandize, or from thence returning to their own Countries. Also we have Assigned you, the aforesaid Major and Aldermen of the City aforesaid, or any thirteen, or more of you, within thirty days after the receipt of this Writ; to Assess all men in the said City, and in the Liberties and Members of the same, and the Land-holders in the same, not having a Ship, or any part of the aforesaid Ships, nor serving in the same, to contribute to the Expences, about the necessary provision of the Premises; and to Assess and lay upon the aforesaid City, with the Liberties and Members thereof, viz. upon every of them according to their Estate and Substances, and the portion Assessed upon them; and to nominate and appoint Collectors in this behalf. Also we have Assigned you, the aforesaid Major, and also the Sheriffs of the City aforesaid, to Levy the Portions so as aforesaid Assessed upon the aforesaid Men and Land-holders, and every of them in the aforesaid City, with the Liberties and Members of the same, by Distress and other due Means; and to commit to Prison all those whom you shall find Rebellious and contrary in the Premises, there to remain until We shall give further Order for their delivery. And moreover We command you that about the Premises ye diligently attend, and do, and execute those things with effect, upon peril that shall fall thereon: but We will not, that under colour of Our aforesaid Command, more should be levied of the said men, than shall suffice for the necessary expences of the Premises; or that any, who have levied money for Contribution, to raise the aforesaid Charges, should by him detain the same, or any part thereof, or should presume, by any manner of Colour, to appropriate the same to other uses; Willing, that if more than may be sufficient shall be Collected, the same may be paid among the Contributors, for the rate of the part of them belonging.

Witness My Self, at Westminster the 20th day of October in the 10th year of Our Reign.

Parkhurst, then Mayor, hereupon Summons the Common Councel of the City; who deeming themselves exempt by ancient Priviledges, Grants and and Acts of Parliament, Petition his Majesty, as Anno followeth;

1634.

TO THE

Kings Most Excellent Majesty.

The Humble Petition of your Faithful Subjects, the Mayor, and Commonalty, and Citizens of your City of London, most humbly shewing;

That whereas your Majesty by Writ, bearing teste 20 Octobris last, Commanded your Petitioners, at their Charge, to provide seven Ships of War, furnished with Men, Victual, and all Warlike Provisions, to be at Portsmouth by the first of March next, and to continue from thence by the space of twenty six Weeks in your Majesties Service, upon the defence of the Seas, and other causes in the said Writ contained.

Your Petitioners do in all submissive humbleness, and with acknowledgment of your Sacred Majesties many Favours unto your said City, inform your Majesty, that they conceive that by ancient Priviledges, Grants, and Acts of Parliament (which they are ready humbly to shew forth) they are exempt, and are to be freed from that Charge.

And do most humbly pray,

That your Majesty will be graciously pleased, that the Petitioners, with your Princely Grace and Favour, may enjoy the said Priviledges and Exemptions, and be freed from providing of the said Ships and Provisions.

And they shall pray, &c.

In this year likewise it was that the Church of Ireland received and approved the Book of Articles of Religion of the Church of England, though some will say that the Articles framed in the Convocation 1615. were now repealed by the Irish Clergy in their Convocation, which Mr. L^d Strange denieth, upon the Information given him by the most Reverend Primate Archbishop Usher, p. 137. of his Reign of King Charles.

The Canon of the Church of Ireland hereafter followeth.

Of the Agreement of the Church of England and Ireland in the Profession of the same Christian Faith.

For the manifestation of our Agreement with the Church of England, in the confession of the same Christian Faith, and Doctrine of the Sacraments: We do receive and approve the Book of Articles of Religion, agreed upon by the Archbishops and Bishops, and the whole Clergy, in the whole Convocation holden at London, Anno Dom. 1562. for the avoiding of diversities of Opinions, and for the establishing of consent touching true Religion. And therefore if any hereafter shall affirm, that any of those Articles are in any part Superstitious, or Erroneous, or such as be may not with a good Conscience subscribe unto, let him be Excommunicated, and not absolved, before he make a publick Revocation of his Error.

The Scotch discontents began now to rent themselves; one Hagge had been the Author of an infamous and virulent Libel against his Majesty, as his Majesty in their last Parliament had by indirect means gotten the Votes of the Nobility in that Parliament, which the secret Council of Scotland taking into their most serious consideration, as a thing highly reflecting upon the King, and enquiring therein, found out the Author to be Hagge, but the Lord Balmerino the Grand Abettor and Promoter thereof. This Lords Father had been formerly Secretary of State to his Majesties Father King James, who going a Hunting, and being in some haste, calls for the Secretary the Lord Balmerino's Father to bring forth the Dispatches to be Signed; he cunningly shuffed a Letter, in order to a Cardinals Hat for a Countryman of his own, to the then Pope unknown to the King, who signed it amongst the rest of the Papers the Secretary had offered: This being objected by Bellarmino to his Majesty, who being ignorant hereof, questions Balmerino, who confessing the Fact, had Condemnation passed upon him to be hang'd, and to have his Estate confiscated, whom yet his Majesty upon seeming repentance pardoneth, and restoreth him to life and fortune.

This Lord Balmerino (saith one) being Heir ex asse (even to his very perfidiousness) of what was his Fathers, thus lapsed into a similiary Crime, under-went similiary proceedings of Tryal and Arraignment, was also by his Peers found guilty, and Sentence of Death ready to be pronounced against him. True it is, the Verdict of his Peers past amongst those who wished well both to him and that Libel, as over-severe. But the Lord finding himself convicted as a Malefactor, and by consequence his life at the dispose of his Majesty, had the wit his Father taught him, to resort to the Kings Mercy, which (that the parallel might still proceed) was as graciously dispensed to him. This Princely favour the Lord received (as well it merited) in the lowest posture of a Suppliant on his knees, with highest recognisance of his Majesties goodness, and deepest Vows of future Loyalty, that an Obligation so high could deserve. But long he held not to the Conscience of those Protestations, so ingratelously relapsing some few years after, as if he had only craved leave to offend again.

Balmerino's great Enemy was said to be the Noble Earl of Kenoul, Lord Chancellour of Scotland, who this year departed this life, and left his Office to the famous Sporwood, Archbishop of S. Andrews; a most learned, moderate, and most wise Prelate was he, as may by that excellent Book of his the Church-History of Scotland be seen, at whose Promotion the Scotch Presbyterian Nobility were much offended, though this is no new thing in Scotland, as may appear by the Catalogue following in Mr. Saunderson's Reign of King Charles.

Andrew Foreman, 15 Jac. 4.

James Stuart, Brother to James the Fourth.

James Beaton, 10 Jac. 5. and Queen Maries Reign.

David Beaton Cardinal, succeeded him.

Jo. Hamilton, Brother to the Duke of Chatterheralt, was the last of the Popish Bishops, and many more before those, and all of them Archbishops of S. Andrews, and Chancellours.

Then there were William Lowater, Anno 1412.

Andrew Foreman, Jac. 4.

Gavin

Gawin Dunbar, Præceptor to James 5. and after him, James Beaton.

And these following were Archbishops of Glasgow, and Chancellours.

Adam and Patrick, Bishops of Brocher, Chancellours, Annis 1360. and 1370.

Thomas Spence Bishop of Galloway, and Chancellor to Jac. 2.

William Elphinston Bishop of Aberdeen, Chancellor to Jac. 3.

But more especially, for that in that Country Justiciaries were Itinerant, seven whereof were alway Church-men, and the other seven Lay-men.

This year died also here in England Richard Weston, Earl of Portland, Lord High Treasurer of England, a great Favourite of his Majesties, by reason of his great Abilities; at this time more useful he was to his Majesties affairs, by how much they required his known Abilities to advance his Majesties Interest in the procurement of Money, which his Majesties affairs now very much required; but Death will admit no Reprieve, and his set period was come, his Office was put into the Administration of Commissioners for some time.

Now likewise also died Sir Edward Cook, a known and great Common Lawyer, whereof one gives this Character; 'His abilities in the Law, whereof he passed for the great Oracle, raised him to the Dignity first of Attorney General to Queen Elizabeth, then of Lord Chief Justice of the Kings Bench under King James. His advancement he lost the same way he got it, by his tongue. So rare is it for a man very Eloquent, not to be over-loquent. Long lived he in that retirement to which Court-indignation had remitted him, yet was not his recels inglorious; for at improving a disgrace to the best advantage, he was so excellent, as King James said of him, He was like a Cat, throw her which way you will, she will light upon her feet. And finding a Cloud at the Court, he made sure of fair weather in the Country; applying himself so devoutly to Popular Interest, as in succeeding Parliaments, the Prerogative felt him, as her ablest, so her most active Opponent. Upon which account he was Caroli, made High Sheriff of Buckinghamshire, on purpose to exclude him the ensuing Parliament, there being an especial Nolumus and Clause in his Commission prohibiting his Election, notwithstanding which, elected he was in Norfolk, and those words of Restraint upon debate of the Question in the House of Commons voted void.

An account of the posture of Military affairs in Germany having met with them more truly and succisely, described by Mr. Sanderson than elsewhere, take from him as followeth.

The Swede (saith he) having a continued confederacy with the Protestant Princes, and the French assistance against the Emperour and Spain; for although they fought and treated for a Conjunction, Duke Bernard had been so often misled by former promises of Wallenstein before his Murther; that now he trusted to fair words no longer. And the good Duke Francis Albert of Saxon Lauenburgh, the Instrument chosen to tie these two different dispositions into a Ligation, was not his Crafts-master, but was carried Prisoner for many years to Vienna.

The King of Hungary for the Imperial Party having cured the Army with good Gold, after the disorder of Wallenstein's murmur, and taken new Oath of the Souldiers, when news came to his Camp of a notable Victory gotten by Arnem upon the Imperialists in Silesia, and of his marching towards Pragna, whither the King sent so strong a supply, Arnem was constrained to retire into Saxony, at the same time the Town of Ratibon was regained for the Emperour in July, the brave and famous General Aldring being slain a little before at Landsut; He was of Lauenburgh obscurely born, whose virtues and valour had raised him thus high and eminent in many Battels against John de Wiert, with success.

And the business Military in Germany requiring all assistance for the Emperour against such a Confederacy of friends: Thither comes the Cardinal Infante from Milan, with the old Spanish, Italian, and Burgundian Bands, through all Switzerland, soon reforming the riotous Swedes by their example into a true Military Discipline. These Forces joyning with the Imperialists, marched into the Dutchy of Weissemburg, but first must pass the fiery Tryal of a strong Town Norlingen.

The Swedes and their Allies are likewise summoned together from all parts; Horn joyns with Duke Bernard, and advises to spare the Enemy a Town or two, rather than to hazard the Publick Cause. But the Duke would fight for it, and designed the day the sixth of September; and the rather, because some private offer had been for Overtures of a Peace, which the Swedes took for a good Augury, what e're it presaged. It procured to both Armies the most horrid bloody fight that had been between Christians.

To the Protestants Party were already arrived the Forces of the Duke of Weissemburg, the Lantgrave of Hessa, and Count Cratz, (He who was for Bavaria, and should have betrayed Ingolstadt to the Enemy, and so being discovered, was fled hither) wanting none but the Rhingrave, and his four thousand men. The fight began early, the most furious first shock was for a Hillock; the storming of a mined Fort lost many of the Swedes Infantry. The Canon, hidden behind some Bushes, did mighty Execution also, and the Swedes constrained to fly, and their Cavalry pursued by the Duke of Lorain, and John de Wiert, were utterly defeated; eighty Pieces of Canon, three hundred Colours taken and twelve thousand men slain, and six thousand Prisoners; amongst whom, that brave man Gustave Horn was Nobly received by the King. The fruit of this Battel begat a Peace, short and sweet, only to let that miserable Country tast of the blessing, which lasted not long, when the Revenger of Blood opens the Veins, to let out more evil fumes. This Victory might answer for their Eminent success heretofore at Leipsick and Lutzen; and as the Swedes did then, so does this Victorious General divide their great Body into flying Armies, carrying on an offensive War up and down where they pleased; for Norlingen forthwith surrendred, the Dutchy of Weissemburg soon submits, and their Duke flies to Strassburgh. The Emperour sufficiently recovering his Eagles Plumes, formerly obscured by the Septentrional Mists; And yet to shew to the world reason and right from the difference of contraries. The one would have War in the continuation of Conquest: But the Emperour declines his desire of Peace even in Victory.

They would carry on all with violence; He, M m m to Anno 1634. to restore all to the first Owner by a moderate accommodation. And truly so it was offered by the King of Hungary to the Duke of Saxony, and the other Prince, which was afterwards the next year accepted for a while, until the French Flower de Luce, with her Odour, marred the scent of the sweet smelling Frankincense. In which time the Cardinal Infanto took time to visit his Government in Flanders.

In Michaelmas Term several persons were sentenced in the Star-Chamber; one Mr. Myn, Clerk of the Hanaper, and Daw his Deputy, for taking excessive Fees by Extortion in the Execution of that his place. 2. One Morley for reviling, striking, and challenging Sir George Theobald at the Court at White-Hall; and lastly, Allinson of Ipswich, and Robins, the one for spreading, and the other for inventing of a scandal upon the Archbishop of York.

The great inconvenience that Ministers for their subsistence should depend upon the courtesy of the Inhabitants of their Parishes, put the Ministers of the City upon the preferring a Petition to his Majesty, and the Council-Board, to the effect following.

The Parsons and Vicars in the City of London, in the Month of May, presented to his Majesty a Petition, Humbly shewing.

The London-Clergy Petition to the King concerning that matter.

THAT the Benefices in London were a hundred years since very great; that the Decree for Tythes, now in force, provides this 9 d. to be paid upon every Pound rent without fraud; that notwithstanding the said Decree, (the variation of tythes considered) they are now very poor and mean, many of them not worth 40 l. per Annum, the most not 100 l. only one, Christ-Church, a City-impropriation worth 350 l. That the Petitioners have not independent maintenance, and for want thereof are daily thrust upon dangerous and great inconveniences: That this is because the Petitioners have no means assigned in the said Decree, for the discovering of the true value of their said Rents by the Oath of the Parties, and for that many London-Landlords (to the defeating of the Petitioners, and endangering their own Souls) have, and daily do contrive double Leases, or make Provisos, wherein they call some small part of the true Rent by the Name of Rent, and all the rest (which yet is quarterly paid) by the Name of Fine, Income, or the like; which Practice, in the year 1620. was signified to be unjust and Sacrilegious, under the hands of the Reverend Bishops, and Heads of Houses of both Universities. And lastly, for that the Lord Mayor for the time being is our ordinary Judge, and the Petitioners generally want both ability and leisure to prosecute and appeal from him to the Right Honourable the Lord Keeper, or otherwise to wage Law with rich and powerful Citizens.

May it therefore please the Great Patron of the Church, your Royal Majesty, to take into your Princely Consideration these Pressures and Grievances of your poor Clergy of London, with the Causes of the same, and to take such course for redress thereof, as to your Majesties great Wisdom and Clemency shall seem meet.

And your Petitioners, &c.

The Petition by order of his Majesty was referred to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Keeper, the Earl Marshal, the Lord Bishop of London, and the Lord Cottingham, and Secretary Windebanck to hear, end, and report, if they could not.

The Cause coming to a hearing, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Recorder present said, they were impowered by the Common-Council of the City to consent, that the matter in difference should be referred to his Majesty: hereupon time was given them for that purpose, and a Common-Council called; they alledge, that in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, this difference was settled by the Common-Council of each Ward, and therefore pray it may now be likewise settled as formerly: But the Attorney General gave in Presidents as ancient as Edward the Fourth, that the matters then in difference were arbitrated and settled by his Majesty; hereupon they were admonished to submit likewise, or if they should continue refractory, they should stand to their own hazard; and so gave them further time to consider hereupon, which was to the 23d of November, when with some regret the City submitted, and the matter afterwards settled, as it yet continues.

About this time the Archbishop of Canterbury held his Metropolitan Visitation; and as is usual, summoning all Ministers whatever to attend the Walloon and French Churches, thought themselves aggrieved at the Injunctions, which were especially these two.

1. That all the Natives of the Dutch and Walloon Congregations in his Graces Dioceses should repair to their several Parish Churches of those several Parishes where they inhabited, to hear Divine Service and Sermons, and perform all Duties and Payments required in that behalf.

2. That the Ministers, and all other of the Dutch and Walloon Congregations, which were not Natives and Born-Subjects to the Kings Majesty, or any other Strangers that should come over to them, while they remained Strangers, might have and use their own Discipline, as formerly they have done; yet it was thought fit that the English Liturgy should be translated into French and Dutch, for the better settling of their Children to the English Government.

Upon the publishing of these Injunctions, the Dutch and Walloon Churches at Norwich presented an humble Petition and Remonstrance to the Bishop of that Diocese, that the said Injunctions seemed to be opposite, not only to the sundry Orders of his Majesties most Honourable Privy Council, heretofore upon several occasions granted unto several Congregations of the said Strangers, but chiefly to all the Gracious Privileges granted unto them of old, and continued during the Reign of three most famous Princes, King Edward the Sixth, Queen Elizabeth, and King James of Glorious Memory, and confirmed by his now Majesties Regal Word, which he was pleased graciously to give unto the Deputies of all the strange Congregations in England prostrate at his Majesties Feet the 30th of April 1625. But the Petitioners finding no redress as to their complaint by the Bishop of Norwich,

Afterwards they presented a Petition to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to the effect of

of that given to the Bishop of Norwich; to which Petition the Archbishop of Canterbury gave an Answer in a Letter to the said Durch and Walloon Churches at Norwich: Dated Aug. 19. 1635. to this effect.

That his Majesty was resolved that his Instructions should hold, and that obedience should be yielded to them by all the Natives, after the first Descent, who might continue in their Congregations, to the end the Aliens might the better look to the Education of their Children, and that their several Congregations might not be too much lessened at once; but that all of the second Descent, born here in England, and so termed, should resort to their several Parish Churches where they dwelt, concluding his Letter in these words: And thus I have given you Answer fairly in all your Particulars, and do expect all obedience and conformity to my Instructions; which if you shall perform, the State will have occasion to see how ready you are to practise the obedience which you teach: And for my part, I doubt not but your selves, or your Posterity at least, shall have cause to thank both the State and the Church for this care taken of you; but if you refuse, (as you have no cause to do, and I hope you will not) I shall then proceed against the Natives, according to the Laws and Canons Ecclesiastical: So hoping the best of your selves, and your obedience, I leave you to the Grace of God, and rest,

W. Cant.

It was very usual for several Non-conformists to resort to these Churches; nay more than so, the Ministers of them, at least some of the most intemperate, could not forbear to Preach against the Ceremonies of our Church, and inveigh against them openly in their Pulpits; and therefore it was high time for the Governours of the Church to have an eye to those men: Moreover, there had been a great neglect of Ecclesiastical Discipline and Order in Archbishop Abbot's time, yea in the very times succeeding our Reformation, as may be seen at large in Dr. Heylin's History of the Reformation, and more particularly yet in the beginning of the good Queen Elizabeth's days, who never in the least favoured either Romanist or Non-conformist: The Prelates had been too remiss in the Government of the Church, and in looking after the good order hereof; and for this I have a very good Author, the ever famous Cambden, who in his Annals of Queen Eliz. gives us this account of the times immediately preceding Archbishop Whitgift's time.

John Whitgift (saith he) was Successor to Edmund Grindal, Archbishop of Canterbury; he was advanced from the See of Worcester to that Archbishoprick, a man of singular goodness and learning. He obtained much commendation for his Justice in the Precedency of Wales, and likewise for his great Doctrine in the defence of the Ecclesiastical Policy, which by his worth, wisdom and patience, he daily increased. The Queen (who held for a Maxim, that she ought not to be more remiss in Ecclesiastical Affairs than in Politick) above all commanded him to re-establish the Discipline of the Church of England, that as then lay dismembered by the connivency of Prelates, the obstinacy of Innovators, and by the power of some great Ones, whilst some Ministers covertly impugned the Authority of the Queen in things Ecclesiastical, separating the Administration of the Sacrament from the preaching of the Word, using to their own fantastic new Rites of Services in their private houses, utterly condemning the Liturgy, and the appointed manner of administering the Sacrament, as being in many things contrary to the holy Scripture; and therefore many refused to go to Church, but openly became Schismatics; the Papists all this while applauding them, and drawing many to their Party, as though there had been no Unity in the Church of England. To abolish which things, and to reduce them to an unity, he propounded these Articles to the Ministers, by them to be subscribed.

First, That the Queen had Sovereign power over all those that were born within her Dominions, of what conditions soever they were; and that no other Stranger, Prince, or Prelate, ought to have any Power, either Civil or Ecclesiastical, within her Majesties Realm. Secondly, that the Book of Common-Prayers, and that of the Ordination of Bishops and Priests, contained not any thing contrary to the Word of God, but might be lawfully used; and that they should use that and no other form of Prayer, or administering of the Sacraments. Thirdly, that they should approve and allow of the Articles of the Synod holden at London the year 1562. published by Royal Authority, and should hold them as conformable to the Word of God.

He endeavoured to unite the English Church.

But it is incredible what Controversies and Disputations arose upon this, what hatred and reproach he endured of the factious Ministers, what troubles and injuries he suffered of certain Noble-men, who by placing men unfit in the Church encreased their Estate, or else had hopes upon the Goods of the Church: But by his constancy and patience, he overcame all difficulties, using for his Motto this, which he chose not rashly:

Vincit qui patitur.

Neither was the Church only tossed and troubled by those people within the Realm, but by others who had left the Kingdom; as by R. Brown, a Cambridge Divine, of whom the new Sectaries were called Brownists, and by R. Harrison, Master of an inferiour School. For these men presuming to judge of Religion, according to their own imaginations, by certain Books which they set forth at that time in the Country of Zealand, and dispersed through many places in England, utterly condemned the Church of England as no Church. Which Books notwithstanding were prohibited by Royal Authority, and strongly confuted by many learned men, and two of the same Sect also put to death at S. Edmundsbury; yet many were intangled in the snares of this new Schism.

Brownist Schismatics.

On the other side, there were certain Books dispersed by certain Papists against the Queen and other Princes, as Excommunicate, which caused divers admirers of the Papal Power to revolt from her Majesty.

Upon these and the like Occasions and Omission of the Bishops and Governors of the Church from one time to another, and the continual endeavour and clamour of the Puritan Faction (I

Anno 1634. use that word not to upbraid any honest man or sober Christian many Ceremonies of our Church, which yet were ever in use in the King's Majesties Chappels and Cathedrals of this Land, as Copes, Chalice, Side-Board, or Credentia, Altar, or Communion-Table placed close to the Wall, enclosed with Ballasters, Painted Glasse in Church-windows, &c. were traduced by the Presbyterian and other factious parties, as Innovations in Matters of Religion: hereupon, as Mr. Rushworth saith, p. 273, Historical Collection.

'The People made a great clamour at the Archbishop's sudden (though this was no new thing) setting up of Pictures in the Church-windows at his Chappels at Lambeth and Croyden, That the Archbishop endeavoured to subvert God's true Religion by Law established in this Realm, and instead thereof set up Popish Superstition and Idolatry; aggravating this his Action to be the greater Crime, because he was Primate and Metropolitan of all England, principally intrusted with the care of Religion, who should of all other men have been most vigilant against all Popish Idolatrous Innovations, and not professedly to set up afresh those Idolatrous, Superstitious, Romish Pictures, which were by our Statutes, Homilies and Injunctions purposely defaced and broken down at the beginning of Reformation, as Monuments of Popery, Superstition and Idolatry, contrary to the Word of God, and established Injunctions of the Church of England.

But the Collector being not willing to be thought uncharitable to the Deceased Archbishop (though ever his back-friend to the best of his skill and power) was willing to mention his Defence which he made to the Commons Objections hereupon, when he was afterwards questioned in the House of Lords by the Commons about such horrid Innovations, as if Rome had been entering the City at Algate.

'The first thing (saith that most worthy and Learned Prelate) that the Commons have in their Evidence charged against me, is, the setting up and repairing Popish Images and Pictures in the Glasse-windows of my Chappel at Lambeth, and amongst others, the Picture of Christ hanging on the Cross between the two Thieves in the East-window; of God the Father in the form of a little old Man, with a Glory, striking Amyriam with a Leprosie; of the Holy Ghost descending in form of a Dove; and of Christ's Nativity, last Supper, Resurrection, Ascension, and others, the Pattern whereof Mr Prynne attested I took out of the very Mas-Book, wherein he shewed their Portraitures.

To which I answer, First, 'That I did not set these Images up, but found them there before.

'Secondly, That I did only repair the Windows which were so broken, and the Chappel which lay so nastily before, that I was ashamed to behold, and could not resort unto it, but with some disdain, which caused me to repair it, to my great Cost.

'Thirdly, That I made up the History of these old broken pictures, not by any Pattern in the Mas-Book, but only by the help of the Fragments and Reminders of them, which I compared with the Story.

'Fourthly, Though the very Resemblances of them be in the Mas-Book, yet I protest I never knew they were there, till Mr. Prynne shewed them in it at this Bar; it being but a meer Fal-lacy, The Pictures which I repaired are in the Mas-Book; Ergo, I took the Pattern of them out of it.

'Fifthly, Mr. Calvin himself allows an Historical Use of Images, Inst. l. 1. cap. 11. Sect. 12. where thus he writes, Neque tamen ea superstitio-ne tenetur, &c.

'Sixthly, Our Homilies themselves allow an Historical Use of Images; as appears by Page 64, 65.

'Seventhly, The Primitive Christians approved, and had the Pictures of Christ himself, Tertullian recording, That they had the Picture of Christ engraven on their Chalice, in form of a Shepherd carrying home the lost Sheep on his back.

'Eightly, I hope the repairing and setting up of these Pictures is no High Treason by any Law.

'Ninthly, Images and Pictures in Arras, or Glasse-windows, are not against the Statute of 3 E. 6. c. 10. but Statues only.

To this was Replied; 'First, That he did not find those Images there, compleat or entire, but broken and demolished by virtue of our Statutes, Homilies, Injunctions fore-cited, and that at the beginning of Reformation; ever since which time they continued un-repaired, as Monuments of our indignation and detestation against them, like the Ruines of our Abbies and Monasteries.

'Secondly, We have here confitentem reum, the Archbishop plainly confessing that we charge him with, viz. the repairing of the broken Images of Christ, the Holy Ghost, in Glasse-windows; and no ways denying, extenuating, but justifying this Popish Fact of his against our Statutes, Homilies, Injunctions, Writers, yea, his own frequent Subscriptions to our Homilies, and Articles of Religion: Nay, Mr. Brown, his own Joyner, attested, That he, by the Archbishop's directions, repaired and new-made the broken Crucifix in Croyden-Chappel, as well as in Lambeth-Chappel; and the Archbishop plainly confesseth, that he had no great devotion to serve God in Lambeth-Chappel; nor yet to resort unto it, till these Images were repaired, and new-beautified, to please his Eyes.

'Thirdly, That himself took pains, and gave directions to the Glaziers to make up the Stories and Pictures in the Windows, out of the broken Fragments remaining, and new-made them, to his excessive Cost: whereas he might have new-glazed them with unpainted Glasse, for the tenth part of that his painted Pictures cost him.

'Fourthly, He confesseth the very Portraitures of the new-furbished Pictures in this Chappel to be all contained in the Mas-Book, which we made so apparent to your Lordships, that he could not but with shame deny it; but protests he knew them not to be in it, and that he took not his Pattern out of it. To which we must reply, That he having noted his Mas-Book, wherein we shewed them to be portrayed in every Page almost with his own hands, and turning this Book so frequently over, must of necessity see these Pictures in it, which are so large and visible, unless we shall suppose him blind, or such a hater of them, as purposely to turn his his Eye-sight from them, which is improbable; and therefore notwithstanding this bold Protestation of his, we hold our Argument both true and solid. The new Images in his Chappel-windows, exactly agree in all things with the printed ones in his Mass-Book, which he could not but know and see too, as oft as he noted or perused his Roman Missal; Ergo, He took his Pattern from the Mass-Book, in the repairing, as well as his Popish Predecessors in the first making of them, since no other Pattern hath been produced by him, by which he gave directions to new-make them, but by the Roman Missal.

Fifthly, We wonder greatly, that he that hath so much traduced and reviled M. Calvin heretofore, should fly thus unto him for shelter now; but as he abused his Person and Memory then, so he miserably perverts and misapplies his words now point-blank against his meaning. Mr. Calvin only affirms, That he is not so superstitious as to think it altogether unlawful to make any Images of Men or Beasts for a civil use, since Painting is the gift of God; from whence the Archbishop hath inferred, Ergo, Mr. Calvin holds it lawful to make the Picture of Christ's Nativity, last Supper, Passion, Resurrection, Coming to Judgment; of God the Father, like an Old Man; of Christ on the Cross, of God the Holy Ghost in form of a Dove, and cloven Tongues; of the Virgin Mary, other Saints, and to set them up in Churches, as he did these Images in the Chappel: Whereas Mr. Calvin, in the self-same place, in most positive terms, concludes the contrary; witness the very next words following those he objects: Purum & legitimum utriusque usum requiro, ne qua Dominus in suam gloriam, & bonum nostrum nobis consulit, ea non tantum polluantur prapostero abusu, sed in nostram quoque perniciem convertantur. Deum effingi visibili specie nefas esse putamus, quia id venit ipse, & fieri sine aliqua gloria ejus deformatione non potest; which he proves at large. Then speaking of Images in Churches, he writes, they were introduced thither, Non judicio aut delectu, sed stulta & inconsiderata cupiditate.

This Author hath many such like Passages in his other Works, and therefore the Arch-Bishop's citing of him to justify his Chappel-Images, argues either extream ignorance, or Falshood.

Sixthly, Whereas he would pray in aid from our Homilies, to justify the Historical Use of these Images in his Chappel, the Homilies are so point-blank against it, as we have proved, that Impudency it self would blush to cite them to such a purpose, especially since the third part of the Homily against the Peril of Idolatry, pag. 41, 42, 43. expressly resolves it unlawful to make the Picture of Christ, or any Person in the Trinity, much less to set them up in Churches.

Seventhly, For his averment that the primitive Christians approved of Images, and had the Picture of Christ in their Churches, and engraven on their Chalice, is a most notorious falshood. For Justin Martyr, Clemens Alexandrinus, Irenaeus, Tertullian, Minutius Felix, Origen, Arnobius, Cyprian, Lactantius, Gregory Nysson, Ambrosius, Ambrose, Epiphanius, Eusebius, Hierome, Augustin, Hilary, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, and other Ancients unanimously agree, that the primitive Christians had no Images at all in their churches; together with the Councils of Eliberis, Constantinople, Toledo, Frankford, and Constantine the Great, Constantius, &c. with sundry other godly Emperors, utterly demolished and cast them out of Churches; as Ecclesiastical Authors, our own Homilies, Writers, prove at large against the Papists. Lactantius and other Primitive Christians write expressly that without doubt there can be no Religion at all in that Place wheresoever any Image is; whereupon Epiphanius rent the Image of Christ, or some other Saint, which he found in a Church, painted in Cloth, out of holy indignation, as contrary to the Authority of the Scriptures. In few words, our own Homilies against the peril of Idolatry, Part 2. p. 38. expressly resolve, that when Images began to creep into the Church, they were not onely spoken and written against by godly and learned Bishops, Doctors and Clerks, but also condemned by whole Councils of Learned men assembled together; yea the said Images by many Christian Emperors and Bishops were defaced, broken and destroyed; which Mr. Calvin in the place objected by the Bishop affirms likewise: And therefore it is a most desperate assertion in the Arch-Bishop, thus falsely to affirm the contrary, point-blank against our Homilies and his own subscription to them. And whereas he cites Tertull. to prove that the Christians in his days had the picture of Christ upon their Chalice; we answer, that if the Book De Pudicitia be Tertullian's own (of which some doubt) yet his words import no such thing, which are these A parabolis licet incipias ubi est Ovis perdita à Domino acquisita; &c. Pictura Calicem vestrorum, &c. (not nostrorum.) and that he hath most grossly abused Tertullian, your Lordships and his Auditory, in alledging Tertullian in defence of Images, and their use among the primitive Christians: certainly Tertullian is so far from any such opinion, that he hath written a whole Book De Idololatria, next before this De Pudicitia, wherein he expressly condemns, not only the having, but making of any Image or Picture for any use, and the very Arts of Carving and Painting Images, as contrary to the second commandment (as the Jews, Josephus, Philo and others did before him, and the very Turks and Persians at this day.) Take but this sentence of his instead of many; Omnis forma vel formula Idolum se dici exposcit. Idolum TAM FIERI quam colit Deus prohibet: quanto precedit, &c. which he prosecutes at large throughout this Eloquent Book, and therefore his Sophistry in citing Tertull. for defence of Images in Churches, (who is thus point-blank against the making of any Image whatsoever, even for civil uses) is an intolerable, inexcusable boldness.

Eighty, Whereas he answers, that the setting up of these glass-Images is no high Treason by the Statute: We grant it not to be so simply in it self, neither do we urge it to be so, but as it tends to subvert our Religion, Laws, and set up Popery, concurs with other Practices of this nature, so it may, and will prove high Treason. The second part of the Homily against the Peril of Idolatry, pag. 37. assures us, that the maintainance of Images hath brought in a Sea of Mischief, horrible Schisms, Rebellions, Treasons; and his maintaining them hath done the like.

Ninethly, We conceive that the Statute of E. 6. c. 10. which commands all Images of Stone, Anno 1634. Stone, Timber, Alabaster, or Earth, graven, craved or painted; which heretofore have been taken out of any Church or Chappel, or yet stand in any Church or Chappel, to be defaced and destroyed, extend to Images in glass-windows as well as others, which are but painted Earth; and that which confirms us in this opinion is, that the Homilies against the peril of Idolatry (the occasion of this Law) and the injunctions of Queen Elizabeth made in pursuance of it; extend in direct terms to Images in Glass-Windows, as well as to Images of Stone Timber, and the like: yea the practice of that time in defacing the Glass-Images in Lambeth Chappel Windows (which be of late repaired) and in most other places, infallibly proves it; together with the Statute of 3 Jac. c. 5 which reckons up Images and Crucifixes, of what matter soever, among the Relicks of popery, and enjoyns them to be defaced: wherefore this evasion of his is most false and frivolous, especially since Popery may creep in at a Glass-Window, as well as at a Door; and our Homilies, Injunctions, Writers censure all of them alike, if this Statute do it not.

After the Reply was made, the Bishop proceeded in his Defence.

The second thing objected against me (said he) as a popish Innovation in my Chappel at Lambeth, is, my removing and Railing in the Communion-Table there, Altarwise, with the ends of it North and South against the Wall; my furnishing it with Basons, Candlesticks, and other Furniture, and hanging a Cloth of Arras behind it, with the Picture of Christ and his Apostles, eating the Lord's Supper together.

To which I answer; First, That the Railing in and placing the Table Altarwise, is warranted by Queen Elizabeth's Injunctions, which prescribe, than the Holy Table in every Church be decently made and set in the Place where the Altar stood: Now the Altars generally in all Churches, as all Antiquity manifests, stood at the East end of the Quire, North and South close to the wall, as the Tables were lately placed, and there were Railed in: this therefore is no Innovation.

Secondly, The Furniture on the Altar is no other than such as is in use in the Kings own Chappel at Whitehall, and had been there used ever since, and before my time.

Thirdly, That the Arras-Piece at the Back of the Table, containing the story of Christ's last Supper, was fit for that place and occasion: that such Images and Representations were lawful, approved by the Lutheran Churches, yea by Mr. Calvin himself, for an Historical use, in the place fore-cited, Inst. l. 1. c. 11. Sect. 42.

To this the Commons Replyed; First, That neither Queen Elizabeth's Injunctions, nor the Rubrick in the Common-Prayer Book, nor any Law or Canon of our Church, prescribe the Railing in of our Communion-Tables, or placing them Altarwise against the wall, with the ends North and South; there is no syllable in any of them to warrant any such Popish Innovation, prescribed only by Popish Canons, as we have proved: That it cannot be proved, that Altars were generally so placed and railed in anciently, either in England or elsewhere; the contrary whereof we shall prove anon: That the makers and executors of these Innovations knew best of any, where, and how Communion-Tables were to be situated by virtue of them; and they generally placed them throughout the Realm, in the midst of the Quire or Chancel, with the Ends East and West, standing a convenient distance from the East-Wall, without any Rail about them, in which posture they generally stood in all Churches, Chappels, and in Lambeth-Chappel it self for one, ever since these Injunctions Published, till this Innovating Archbishop altered this their ancient Situation. Yet both the Rubrick in the Common-Prayer-Book, the Queens Injunctions, the Eighty second Canon, Bishop Jewel, Bishop Babington, Doctor Fulk, and other of our Writers agree, that when the Sacrament is administered, it ought to stand in the Body of the Church or Chancel; of which more hereafter: This therefore is an Innovation, and that a Popish one too, tending to introduce private Mass, to remove the Lord's Table as far as possible from the view and audience of the Common People, when the Sacrament is celebrated at it.

Secondly, We have proved, that this Altar-furniture of Candlesticks, Tapers, Basons, Crucifixes, and the like, was originally borrowed from the Roman Ceremonial, Pontifical and the Popish Council of Aix, which enjoyn them; That the third part of our Homilies against the Peril of Idolatry, and Queen Elizabeth's Injunctions (which he cites for placing of the Lord's Table Altarwise) Injunct. 2. 23, 25. condemn, censure, abolish, as Superstitious, Ethnical and Popish, all Candlesticks, Trenchals, Rolls of Wax, and setting up of Tapers, for that they be things tending to Idolatry and Superstition, which, of all other Offences, God Almighty doth most detest and abhor, for that the same diminish most his Honour and Glory: Therefore the King's Altar-Furniture in his Chappel at Whitehall, can be no justification nor extenuation of his Offence, who should have reformed his Majesty's Chappel (whereof he was the Dean and Superintendent, according to our Laws, Homilies, Injunctions, which condemn such Altar-Trinkets) not conformed his own Chappel-Altar to the King's, in these meer Popish superstitious Innovations.

Thirdly, The Arras-hanging was rather suited to the Crucifixes in the Glass-window over it, and other Images of Christ in that Chappel, than to the Place or Lord's-Table, where it hanged; the Table and Sacramental Elements themselves, with the usual participation of them every Month, being sufficient to mind us of our Saviour's last Supper, Passion, and Death too, and to shew them forth till he come (who used no such Pictures nor Crucifixes, when he instituted his last Supper) without any such Image or Crucifix; which being condemned by our Statutes, Homilies, Injunctions, Canons, Writers, as we have formerly evidenced, yea, by all Antiquity, by Mr. Calvin himself, and many Lutherans too, ought not to have been placed there, the rather, because there is no Warrant nor Precept for it, but only in the Roman Anno 1634. Roman Ceremonial, Page 69, 70. his Conformity whereto, was the only Ground of hanging those Arras-Pictures, which well deserves another Hanging, especially in an Arch-Prelate, who professeth himself a Protestant, and as averse from Popery as any man whatsoever.

The third sort of Innovations in my Chappel, charged against me, is, the setting up of a Credentia or Side-Table, my own and my Chaplains bowing towards the Table or Altar at our Approaches to it, our going in or out from the Chappel; my Chaplain's, with my own using of Copes therein, at the Celebration of the Lord's Supper, and solempn Consecration of Bishops, attested by Doctor Heywood, my own Chaplain, who confessed, that he celebrated the Sacrament at Lambeth-Chappel in a Cope; That my other Chaplains did the like, and that he thought I was sometimes present when they did it; That the Bread when the Sacrament was administred, was first laid upon the Credentia, from whence he took it in his hand, and then carried it too, and kneeling down upon his Knee, presented it, laid it on the Lord's Table, on which there were Candlesticks, and Tapers, but not burning, as he had seen them at Whitehall; which Mr. Cordwell, once my Servant, likewise deposed: adding, that I was present sometimes when this was done, and that my Chaplains bowed down thrice towards the Altar at their approaches to it.

To which I answer, First, That I took my Pattern of the Credentia from Bishop Andrews's Chappel.

Secondly, That this bowing towards the Altar, was used in the King's Chappel, and in many Cathedrals, both in Queen Elizabeth and King James their Reigns.

Thirdly, That the Use of Copes is prescribed by the 24th. Canon of our Church, Anno 1503. which orders thus in all Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, the Holy Communion shall be Administred upon principal Feast-days, sometimes by the Bishop, if he be present, and sometimes by the Dean, sometimes by a Canon or Prebendary, the Principal Minister using a decent Cope: This therefore is no Innovation.

To this was retorted in general, That Sir Nathaniel Brent and Dr. Featly deposed, there was no such Credentia, bowing towards the Table, Altar, or any Cope at all used in Lambeth-Chappel, in his Predecessor's time; therefore all these are meer Innovations: In particular, it was replied, that it appears not by proof, Bishop Andrews had any such Utensils, Vestments, or Bowing in his Chappel; therefore this is a meer groundless Evasion. But admit he had, yet Bishop Andrews Chappel was no Law, Canon, nor Pattern for him to follow, against our Laws, Common-Prayer-Book, Homilies, Injunctions, which exclude such Innovations: And if the Pattern of the Chappel and its Furniture, which we gave in evidence, were Bishop Andrews, as he avers, it was as grossly Popish and Superstitious as the Pope's, or any Popish Prelate's Chappel whatsoever. As for the Credentia, it is directly taken out of the Roman Ceremonial and Pontifical, as we have proved, the only Canons we know prescribing it: and we find the use of it only in some Popish Churches, and mentioned nowhere but in the Roman Missal, among the Rites of celebrating the Mass; and therefore it is a meer Popish Utensil, appropriated to the Mass, and a forerunner of it. Car. 10.

Secondly, This Bowing to, and towards the Altar, was never prescribed by our Statutes, Articles, Homilies, Common-Prayer-Book, Injunctions, Canons, never practised by any till of late, but some few Popish Court-Doctors. and Cathedralists; never used by his Predecessor, or his Chaplains; introduced only by Papists at the first, in honour and adoration of their Brethren God upon the Altar; and enjoined only by the Roman-Missal, Ceremonial and popish Canonists, as we have largely manifested; therefore not to be justified or excused.

Thirdly, The Book of Common-Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England (the only Directory what Vestments, Ceremonies are to be used, confirmed by our Laws) prescribes not any of those; warrants not, but excludes the use of Copes upon any occasion: where upon our Homilies and best Writers condemn Copes as Jewish, Popish, Paganish, enjoined only by the Roman Ceremonial, and Pontifical, as we have proved, Injunctions deeming them Popish: yea, the third part of the Homily against the Peril of Idolatry, hath this memorable passage concerning them, Page 72. And because the whole Pageant must thoroughly be played, it is not enough thus to deck Images and Idols (with Gold, Silver, Rich, Wanton and Proud Apparel, tempting their Paramours to wantonness) but at last come in the Priests themselves, likewise decked with Gold and Pearls, that they may be meet servants for such Lords and Ladies, and fit worshipers of such Gods and Goddesses; and with a solemn pace they pass forth before the Golden Puppets, and fall down to the ground on their Marrow-bones before the honourable Idols, (and their gorgeous Altars too) therefore certainly it is impudency for him thus to introduce and justify them against these Authorities. Now whereas the arch-Bishop pleads the twenty-fourth Canon, made in the year 1603, to warrant the use of Copes in his Chappel; We answer, first, That the Canon extends only to Collegiat and Cathedral Churches, not Parochial, much less to Chappels: therefore it can no way warrant, but condemns this use of Copes in his Chappel.

Secondly, it enjoins only the chief Minister to use a decent Cope, not a gaudy one with Images, and rich embroidering upon it, such as th Copes were.

Thirdly, This Canon was never binding to any, but meerly void in Law, being never confirmed by Parliament, and crossing both the Common-Prayer Book and Homilies ratified by Parliament; therefore all these his Answers in justification of these Innovations display his impudence to the World in justifying such Popish Reliques as these.

Our Reader may easily see in what time, by their Style, these Objections and Replies were made; and may as easily answer them, by the observation made upon the neglect of the former Governors of the Church; and for that the Objectors

Anno
1634. Objectors acknowledg the use of the Garments, Pictures, &c. in the Chappel Royal and Cathedrals of this Kingdom, 'tis to be hoped that our Princes and Bishops will not by them in those Primitive Times of the Reformation be said to have been Popish, or at the least to have conniv'd at any truly Popish Ceremony; and so these Ceremonies may still remain, except they will say what one saith by way of Droll:

*Sure our Religion was intended,
For nothing else but to be mended.*

And in regard notice is taken by some that Letters of grace were now granted by his Majesty to several Recusants for stopping proceedings against the Papists upon Penal Statutes, which as if it had been a thing unusual, is taken notice of by the Collector: I think it may not be amiss to acquaint our Reader, that the same was done by Queen Elizabeth to the Lord Montague of Suffolk and to others, particularly to that Noble Lord, for that he at Tilbury Camp came to the Queen, accompanied with an hundred and twenty Gentlemen, all well appointed for the War, with a Profession of his Faith and Allegiance to his Sovereign (to use the Stile of the late times) to live and dye in her Majesties Service, against whomsoever should invade her Dominions, yea though he came armed with the Popes Authority, and yet more particularly against the present King of Spain in his Attempts; though this Nobleman was then, and afterwards continued to his dying day a Zealous Romanist: But he seems moreover to wonder His Majesty should have any Privy Counsellors, as the Lord Treasurer Weston, the Lord Cottington, and others of that Perswasion, whereas certainly he very well knew the same thing was done in the best of times, particularly in Queen Elizabeth's and King James's, so that he had no reason to make such a wonderment at a matter which was always practised, but somewhat must be said however to inodiate and asperse that Good King, whose Privy Counsellors the foregoing Lords were.

Anno
1635. We gave our Reader before to understand, that His Majesty had by Proclamation according to the usage of former times, and more particularly of Queen Elizabeth and King James both of happy Memory, straitly charged and commanded, That persons of Livelihood and Means should not abide or sojourn in, or about London, or other Towns, for that hereby His Majesty wanted your Service in the Countreys where their Estates lay, whereby, and by your Housekeeping in those parts the Realm was defended, the meaner sort of His Majesties People were guided, directed, and relieved, whereas on the contrary by your Residency in London and other great Towns, they have no employment, but live without doing your King or Countrey any service, whereby a great part of your Estate and Money is drawn out of the Countreys where it ariseth, and is spent in foreign and excessive Apparel, to the enriching of other Nations, and the impoverishing of your own Countreys, even to the wasting of your Estates, and by that occasion great numbers of loose and idle people follow you; and that disorders hence were great, so great as that by the number of the Delinquents, the Magistrates could not so easily govern them as in former times; and that the said Cities were not only at excessive charge, in relieving a great number of those idle and loose people that grew to beggery, and became diseased and infirm, but also were made more subject to contagion and infection; and the Prices of all kind of Victuals both in the said Cities, and in divers other Places, from whence those Cities were served, were exceedingly increased, and the several Countreys undefended; the poorer sort of Your Majesties People were unrelieved, and not guided or governed as they might be in case those Persons of Quality and Respect resided among them. His Majesty finding these inconveniences to arise from thence, and foreseeing that more would ensue if timely remedy were not provided, did farther, in and by his said Proclamation, declare his Highness's resolution for the common Good of his People, and to use all good ways for preventing of those great evils; and observing that his Noble Progenitors, Kings of this Realm, have used, when for the common profit of the Realm that it was necessary, to command the People as well of the Clergy, as of all sorts of the Laity, to keep residence at their Dwellings in the several parts of the Realm, where, for defence and good safety thereof, was most necessary, add to restrain their departure, or changing their Habitation from thence under divers pains, upon the contempters of those Commands, His Majesty did therefore, in and by his said Proclamation, straitly charge and command the Lords both Spiritual and Temporal, his Lieutenants, and Deputy-Lieutenants of Counties, and Majesties Justices assigned for conservation of the Peace, Baronets, Knights, Esquires, Gentlemen, and all Clerks having Benefices with Cure, or Prebends, or Dignities in Cathedral, or Collegiate Churches, and all other His Majesties Subjects of the several Parts of the Realm, that had Mansion-Houses, and Places of Residence in other Parts, and were not of His Majesties Council, or bound to daily attendance on His Highness, His dearest Consort the Queen, or his Children, that before the end of forty days, next after the publishing of the said Proclamation, within His City of London, they with their Families should depart from the Cities of London and Westminster, the Suburbs and Liberties thereof, and places adjoining, and resort to their several Counties, where they usually reside, and there keep their Habitations and Hospitality, attend their Services, and be ready for the defence and guidance of those Parts, as their Callings, Degrees, and abilities should extend, upon such pains as were to be inflicted upon those that should neglect the publick Service and Defence of the Realm, in contempt of his Majesties Command; and that those as well thereby commanded to return to their several Countries, as those which were already there, should upon the same pain continue the Residency of themselves and their Families there, and do their Duties and Services as aforesaid. Notwithstanding which Proclamation and Monition aforesaid, several, both of the Nobility and Commons did stay in London, contrary to the said Proclamation: Hereupon His Majesty commanded the Attorney General to exhibit an Information in the Star-Chamber, which he did accordingly against these persons following; The Right Honourable John Earl of Clare, Henry Viscount Newark, William Viscount Mounson, John Lord Mohun, Thomas Viscount Fitz-Williams, Lord Tunbridge, and Henry Lord Strafford, who hold, and long have holden, Places of Employment under Your Majesty in several Counties of this Realm; and Sir Thomas Stiles Knight and Baronet, Sir Thomas Staples Knight and Baronet, jesties Council or Servants, or Servants to Your Dearest Consort, the Queen, or Your Children.

Car. I.

All which said Persons before-mentioned have divers Mannors, Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments in sundry Counties of this Realm of England; and albeit the said Parties are able at their pleasure to provide for themselves meet places of habitation in other places, than the City of London and places adjacent, and other Cities and Corporate Towns, and be able to keep House, and relieve and comfort poor and needy People in several parts; yet have all of them, being more led and guided by their own Wills, than any ways affected to yield obedience to His Majesties Proclamation; and contrary to the Tenor of His Majesties said Proclamation, and in contempt thereof, did severally and respectively stay, reside, and inhabit in the said Cities of London and Westminster, and in the Suburbs and Places near thereunto adjoining, with their Families, for the space of many months after the publishing of the said Proclamation, and after the forty days therein mentioned were expired, though they had Houses and places of Residence in several Counties of this Realm of England, as aforesaid, with Lands of good value, and were able in other places to provide Places of habitation where they might, and ought to reside for Service of His Majesty, according to their Rank, and to guide, direct, and relieve the meaner sort of Your Majesties People, and to serve in the several Places and Offices, wherein they were trusted, (as by the said Proclamation they were enjoyned to have done) and having made shew of leaving the said Cities and Places adjacent, and resorted into Cities and Corporate Towns abroad, and there made small stay, returned again to the said Cities and Places adjoining: and by means of such their staying and residing in and about the said Cities of London and Westminster, and Suburbs thereof, those places have been disordered and disturbed, and the Service of His Majesty and People in the several Countreys have been neglected and undone.

It is very well known how much it is the interest of England to have a more particular regard to the Dominion and rule of the Narrow Seas, upon several accounts, as to the encouragement and protection of our own Navigation, as to the Fishery now almost usurped by our Neighbour the Hollander, and more particularly for our situation, being an Island; and for many other important reasons: Hence was it that his Majesty (finding also an over-balance in the Affairs of Europe, especially as to Maritime Affairs, by the late League the Hollander had made with France against the Spaniard, now grown very weak) resolved upon the Equipping a very good Fleet this Summer, which he did under the Command of the Earls of Lindsey and Essex, whereby the Seas and our own Commerce were secured, the Merchandize of near and remote parts, but more especially the Spanish Bullion in our English Bottoms came home with ease and profit to our own doors, the effects of which Bullion were our own Manufactures bartered in Spain, and returned into Flanders for cloathing the Spanish Souldiery; if this way of Commerce and return had been but impeded, yea but for a few years, the consequences hereof must certainly, and that not without great reason, have been great matter for our complaint, as well as matter of grievance; and it is very probable those very persons,

Anno
1635. sons, who afterwards were the most forward to complain of that most intollerable Imposition of Ship-money, would then have loudly told the World, that Salus Reipublica periclitabatur, which yet upon occasion of the execution of the Writs for Ship-money they refractorily denied. But Anglica gens semper querula: To prevent the foregoing inconveniences, it was that his Majesty was moved to issue out the Ship-money Writs for the furnishing out a formidable Fleet for the next year; and so it was judged equitable as well as convenient, to lay the charge thereof equally on all Countries, as well Inland as Maritime; and upon that account the Lord had Command from his Majesty to direct the Justices of Assize in their respective Circuits to promote the execution of those Writs which were to issue out for the next year, which accordingly he did, at the usual Assembly of the Judges in the Star-Chamber, after the ending of Trinity Term, the seventeenth of June, as followeth.

Thomas Lord Coventry, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, his Speech at the delivery of his Charge, as he received it from his Majesty, to all the Judges of England, Judges of Assize in the Star-Chamber, June 17. 1635.

My Lords the Judges,

June 17.
1635.
The Lord Keeper Coventry's Speech to the Judges in the Star-Chamber.

THE Term being ended, and the Assizes approaching, you are to divide your selves for your several Circuits. Circuits are for the service of the King, and the good of the People. They are the execution of the Kings Laws, and the administration of Justice. In the Term the people follow and seek after Justice, in the Circuit Justice followeth and seeketh after the People. So gracious is the Frame and Constitution of the Kings Government, that twice a year, at the least, Justice followeth the Subjects home to their own Doors, which as it is a great ease of the trouble, charge and travel of the Country; so it giveth the people a better knowledge of Justice, and the ends of it, that they may bless God and the King for the same. It hath been the custom, that before your Circuit you should receive such directions as the King or his Council think seasonable to impart unto you for the service of the King, and Weal of the people; in the declaring whereof, I shall say but little of the Just Acts you are to do between Party and Party, only that you do equal Right between Poor and Rich, the particulars are left unto your selves, as they happen in your Circuits: but since you are sent by the King to hear the Causes of the people, it is his Majesties pleasure that you so hear and order, that they may have no cause to complain to his Majesty, either for denial, or for delay of Justice. Of the tryal of Capital Offenders I shall say as little; that part of Justice moveth in a frame, and if all Officers under you did their parts, you should walk in so straight a path, that you would find it very hard to tread awry; therefore you had need to heed them narrowly, lest they prevent Justice.

Look to the corruptions of the Sheriffs, and their Deputies, the partiality of Jurors, the bearing and siding with men of Countenance and Power in their Country; when you meet with such, your proceedings ought to be severe and exemplary against them, otherwise Justice shall be over-born, howsoever you in your own Persons bear your selves with never so much uprightness. And because the time of Assizes is very short, and expireth in a few days, it is necessary that you afford as much time as may be unto those busineses that are most general, and most concern the Publick. The Tryal of Nisi prius, and particular Causes, they are in the number of those things that are not to be left undone; but those things that concern the general and publick good, you are to account them as the weightier matters of the Law, and therefore you are to take them into prime and chief care and cogitation. Now among those I shall commend unto you, in the first place, the presenting and convicting of Recusants: for as it concerneth Religion, so it hath Relation to his Majesties profits, which are two great Motives. To which you may add a third, because the King hath many years since assigned those Forfeitures to the publick defence.

2. In the next place, I do require you, that you make a strict enquiry after Depopulations and Inclosures; a Crime of a crying nature, that barreth God of his Honour, and the King of his Subjects; Churches and Houses go down together. His Majesty knoweth, and taketh notice, that according to former directions given to you in this place, you have given it in charge unto the Grand Inquests to enquire, but to little effect; and without doubt, the Freeholders of England do hate and detest them. Depopulation is an oppression of a high nature, and commonly done by the greatest Persons, that keep the Juries under, and in awe; and that is the cause there are no more presented and brought in question: but howsoever your Charge and Inquiry, touching this point, hath not taken effect worthy his Majesties care, and your pains; yet his Majesty willeth, that you do not cease, but inquire on still; for it is his resolution against all opposition to make all men see, that he hath a care of this over-spreading evil, and of the means of his people; to have Churches and Towns demolished, and his people eaten up like Bread, to satisfy the greedy desires of a few, who do waste as profusely, as they do gather together unconscionably, and bring unto their Posterity that woe which is pronounced to those that lay House to House, and Field to Field, to dwell alone in the midst of the Earth.

3. The next thing that I shall mention to you is, the rectifying and reforming of Ale-houses and Tipling-houses; and those I account one of the greatest Pests of the Kingdom. First, Therefore let none be enabled, either to set up, or continue without License. There are a kind of people that do take upon them Licenses, Recognizances, or Laws, or what you will, who have been a great deal the worse, because they see a great multitude tolerated that have no License. And for the Licensed Ale-houses, let them be but a few, and in fit places; if they be in private Corners, and ill places, they are become the Dens of Thieves; they are the publick Stages of Drunkards and disorder. In Market-Towns, or in great places or Roads where Travellers come, they are necessary.

Next

Anno
1635. Next unto this, let those that be Licensed be held strictly according to the Law. It hath been observed, and very truly, that in the Taverns, Inns, and Ale-houses in England, by the falshood of their measure, and unjust prices, they have drawn more from the Guest, than out of the sizes of Ale and Beer is exacted by the States in Holland. A strange thing! that people for a publick work, for any thing that is good, should be loth to part with any thing; and yet with open eyes to see themselves deceived by such base and lewd people.

Next unto this, let care be taken in the choice of Alehouse-keepers, that it be not appointed to be the Livelihood of a great Family; one or two is enough to draw Drink, and serve the people in an Alehouse; but if six, eight, ten or twelve must be maintained by Alehouse-keeping, it cannot chuse but be an exceeding disorder, and the Family by this means is unfit for any other good works, or employments. I have not skill enough to understand all the inconveniences that come from this one ill Fountain, and my memory will not contain what I have so many times observed of them my self; but your Lordships have a knowledge and experience of them, therefore I will leave them unto you: Only this, because in many places these swarm by the default of the Justices of Peace that set up too many; and there are none (except your selves at the Assizes) all the year long can meet with this evil, but the Justices of the Peace: and if the Justices of Peace will not obey their charge herein, certifie their default and Names, and I assure you they shall be discharged. I once did discharge two Justices for setting up one Alehouse, and shall be glad to do the like upon the like occasion.

4. In the next place, I will commend unto you the punishment of Vagabonds and Wanderers; to rid the Alehouses of such unruly Guests; it would make some way of amendment to those Alehouses: and it cannot be denied but the Law hath appointed hands enough to do this work; the Constable, Headborough, Tythingmen, and the rest of the inferiour Officers, and Watch-men, who may do all with a particular Warrant from the Justices of the Peace; and the Justices of the Peace are bound to call them to an account, and punish them for their neglect. If this were done, and other Officers chosen as they ought to be (not people of little wealth, and as little understanding) but that they were elected out of the better sort of Yeomanry, and the Watches kept by able men; I am assured these loose people that wander up and down would quickly be gone: therefore you may do well to let it be known in the Country, that the Lords of Leets, and those that have the Election of Constable and Officers, they are by the Law answerable for their choice. There have been Precedents, that where an insufficient Coroner hath been chosen by a County, the whole County hath been answerable to the King for the Coroners fault; and if the Lords of Leets, and their Homagers, and those that make choice of the Constable and their Officers, were sometimes awakened by some seizing of their Leets, or Fines, or Quo Warranto, I make no doubt but the Countries would be better served many years after for some such service done: Therefore I could wish that this were made known to the Country, that the Lords, and those that chuse them, were answerable for their default.

5. Now for the bringing of loose people in order, the House of Correction had need to be looked unto, and be put in readiness, that those that are idle may not want work; Ducere Volentes, Trahere Nolentes. And for the Houses of Correction (as it is in some Countries) it were convenient they were placed near the Goal, that not only idle persons, but that the Prisoners of the Gaol might be made to eat the labour of their own hands. This, as it hath been formerly, so it is now commended by his Majesty to see it effected as soon as may be.

6. The binding of Apprentices is a thing fit to be pressed throughout all the Circuits: Opposition hath been made against it by some, though without any ground or Law. Sometimes the Parents are not willing to leave their Children, though they have not Meat to feed them at home; sometimes the Parishioners not willing to give them Cloaths, and sometimes the Masters refuse them, and those that bind them are negligent: but all these must be overruled, and made to smart for their opposition. In a word, you are to call upon all to whom it belongeth, but especially the Justices of Peace to see his Majesties printed Orders be put in execution. You are to satisfie your selves what Justices of the Peace are diligent in it, and who neglect it, and so to certifie to the Lords of the Council.

7. I have but one thing more to give you in charge, and it is a thing of great weight and importance. It concerneth the Honour of his Majesty, and the Kingdom, and the safety of both. Christendom is full of Wars, and there is nothing but rumors of Wars. What hath been done of late years abroad by Fire and Sword, it were a pity and grief to think of; yet we have had the goodness of God, and his Majesties Providence all this while, and have enjoyed a most happy peace and plenty. As it is a good Precept in Divinity, so it holdeth in Polity too — Jam Proximus Ardet; which if we observed to defend our selves, it would be a warning to all Nations, and we should be the more assured to enjoy our Peace, if the Wars abroad do make us stand upon our Guard at home. Therefore no question it hath ever been accounted the greatest wisdom for a Nation to Arm, that they may not be inforced to fight; which is better than not to Arm, and be sure to fight: The one is Providence, the other is Necessity. Therefore his Majesty in these doubtful times hath not only commanded, that all the Land-Forces of the Kingdom should be set in order and readiness, but to set to Sea a Royal Fleet at his Majesties great charge, but with the assistance of the Maritain places of this Kingdom. The causes, occasions and times of War, with the preparation and ordering of them, is proper to the King; and dutiful obedience in such things doth best become the Subject; and yet his Majesty hath vouchsafed, even by his Writs, to declare enough to satisfie all well-minded men, and to express the clearness of his Princely Heart, in aiming at the general good of his Kingdom. The Dominion of the Sea, as it is an ancient and undoubted Right of the Crown of England, so it is the best security of the Land; for it is impregnable, so long as the Sea is well guarded: therefore, out of all question, it is a thing of absolute necessity, that the 1635. the guard of the Sea be exactly looked unto ; and those Subjects, whose minds are most fixed upon the Honour of the King and Country, will with no patience endure to think of it ; that this Dominion of the Sea, which is so great an Honour, should be either lost or diminished : besides, for safeties sake, the Dominion of the Sea is to be kept, and the Sea guarded.

The Wooden Walls are the best Walls of this Kingdom ; and if the Riches and Wealth of the Kingdom be respected, for that cause the Dominion of the Sea ought to be respected ; for else what would become of our Wooll, Lead, and the like, the prices whereof would fall to nothing, if others should be Masters of the Sea. There is a case in the Book of Assize, 43. which putteth me in mind of certain men that went down into the Country, and carried a report, that no Wooll should pass over the Sea that year ; upon this they all fell to so low prices, that the men that carried the report were questioned and fin'd. Now if a report alone, and that a false one too, wrought such an effect upon the Wools of England, think what would be wrought by a real loss of the Dominion of the Sea in all our Commodities, if our Trade should be at the Command of other Princes and States. Therefore as his Majesty out of his great wisdom hath found it expedient to set to Sea that Fleet that is now upon the Sea ; so his Majesty being engaged, both in his Honour, and the Honour of the Kingdom, he findeth it to be of absolute necessity to strengthen this with a greater strength, and more Shipping the next year. Therefore upon advice he hath resolved, that he will forthwith send forth new Writs for the preparation of a greater Fleet the next year ; and that not only to the Maritime Towns, but to all the Kingdom besides : for since that all the Kingdom is interested both in the honour, safety and profit, it is just and reasonable, that they should all put to their helping hands.

Now that which his Majesty requireth from you, and doth command is, that in your Charges at the Assizes, and in all places else, where opportunity is offered, you take an occasion to let the people know how careful and zealous his Majesty is to preserve his own Honour, this Kingdom, and the Dominion of the Sea, and to secure both Sea and Land by a powerful Fleet, that Forreign Nations may see, that England is both able and ready to keep it self, and all its Rights. And you are to let them know how just it is, that his Majesty should require this for your defence, and with what alacrity and chearfulness they ought, and are bound in duty to contribute unto it ; that Forreign Nations may observe the power and readiness of this Kingdom, which will make them slow to contend with us either by Sea or Land ; and that will be the best way to confirm unto us a firm and sure Peace. This is the substance of all that which I received in Commandment from his Majesty. There are many things else that concern the Publick ; but your Judgments are well known in them, These are the particulars I had Command to mention unto you ; so I will trouble you no farther, but leave them to your Grave Considerations.

One great benefit the Kingdom received by the expedition of our Fleet this Summer was, that it did exceedingly repress the power and insolency of the Hollander ; For (as one saith very well) it hath ever been held a Maxim among our States-men of England, to hold the Balance betwixt the two great contending Monarchies of France and Spain, as well as to conserve the Sovereignty of the Narrow Seas, and our Propriety of the Fishery there. This later had been much (as before we intimated) incroached upon by the Dutch ; and upon this account not to endure an o're-bias of our Neighbour France and Spain, and to assert our Right and Sovereignty to the Narrow Seas, it was that his Majesty had made these preparations ; and it was high time for us, as for our first Interest with the Netherlands kept their Enemy aloof ; so now themselves (forgetting their first Friends) had contracted Confederacy with France ; the one to infest Dunkirk, and other parts of Flanders by Land, and the Hollanders by Sea, thereby to bring him under, who indeed was already bare enough, not able to bring ten thousand men into the Field. And so with other practices of the Dutch with the discontented Natives, the French prevailed at Dieff and Tillemont, until the monstrous insolencies that Army French and Dutch together, inflamed the very Natives so far to resent their own sufferings, as to beat their Souldiers out of the Country. And to boot the English Fleet removed the Hollanders from before Dunkirk, that neither of the Confederates, nor thus combined, could do other harm than to ravage the Country, but left no Hold behind them.

And moreover, the effects of our Fleet, and resolution concerning the Sea besides, made the Hollander tack about to caress the English with the Ceremony of an Embassy, sent outwardly only to Congratulate the Queens happy delivery of a second Princess : But to work the more into favour, he came not empty-handed, and meant to get more by the loss of a Present, being a massie piece of Amber-greece, two fair and almost transparent China Basons, a rare Clock of excellent Art, and four very admirable pieces of Painting, the Originals of Timonet and Titian, those admired ancient Artizans.

His Majesty being desirous to do all the Offices of a Good King and Bountiful, and not intending to enrich his own Coffers by taking any advantage of Concealments or defective Titles, did emit his Royal Proclamation, declaring his Princely Grace and Favour, to confirm to all his loving Subjects their Estates in Title defective, and hereupon was pleased to renew and enlarge His former Commission for that purpose, as followeth ;

August 22.
The King declares
Whereas for the good of the Subjects the his Royal Kings Majesty is graciously pleased to Grace & renew and enlarge his former Commission of Pleasure Grace, and hath thereby Authorized the Lords, to confirm and others of His Privy Council, and some of to his Sub-the Judges and Learned Council to Sell, Grant, Defective and Confirm to the People their Defective E- Estates, in states, Possessions and Titles, being void by in- Lands & sufficient Grants, or By-Patents of Conceal- Possessiments : and notwithstanding the Subjects slack- ous, by his ness in taking hold of that Favour, yet the King, Commis-out of a desire to settle His Subjects in their E- sion lately states and Possessions, is once more pleased, to renewed make known these His Royal Intentions of Fa- and envour to such as shall timely embrace the same, that pur-upon pose.

1635. upon moderate Compositions, and that they repair to the Kings Commissioners in Fleetstreet, before Hilary Term next; and such as do neglect, the course of Law shall be taken against them, to reduce those Lands to the Crown again.

And forasmuch as the sinful and prophane use of Oaths in common discourse by wicked and debauch'd persons began to be very common, and therefore scandalous to the Government as well as our Religion it self, His Majesty, to prevent so great and so horrid a sin, was pleased to enforce the Act of Parliament made in the 21st Year of His Majesty King James's Reign of Famous Memory, by his Royal Proclamation to the purport following;

July 16. For the suppressing of Prophane Swearing. WHereas at a Parliament held at Westminster the 9th of February, in the 21st year of King James, it was Enacted, That no Person, or Persons, should from thenceforth prophanely Swear or Curse, under the penalties therein contained: We taking into Our Princely Consideration the great increase of those sins, which are more audaciously practised and frequently committed by loose and wicked persons; have therefore for the better suppressing those odious sins, by Letters-Patents, dated the 21st of July last past, erected an Office for the receiving of the Forfeitures incurred by such Prophane Swearers and Cursers: and have thereby appointed Robert Lesley Esquire, one of the Gentlemen of the Kings Privy-Chamber, by himself and his Assigns, that he shall in every Parish within this Kingdom attend that Service and Office, for a certain number of years therein contained; and shall and may receive the penalties appointed by the said Statute, from all person and persons offending against the Tenure of the said Act; and that the Monies arising thereby shall be paid to the Bishops of the Diocesses, to be distributed among the poor of the several Parishes. And all persons employed herein shall be exempted and freed from bearing any other Office, or Charge in the Parishes where he and the rest shall dwell.

In these times our English Gentry had a gadding humour of travelling beyond Seas, some for their pleasures and accomplishments (so they said) others to see the Wars, Camps, Fights, &c. and what not, and this for the publick Good also; His Majesty to stop their carier herein, emits His Proclamation, requiring them to attend their Service for their own Prince and Native Countrey when thereunto required; and in his Princely Wisdom foreseeing what danger might ensue to this State, if people might at their pleasure pass or depart out of this Realm into Foreign parts: For prevention whereof, the King did Command and forbid all his Subjects, that they, nor any of them, other than Souldiers, Mariners, Merchants and their Factors, and Apprentices, shall at any time, without the King's License, or of six of the Privy-Council, depart out of this Kingdom, or any the King's Dominions into the Kingdom, or Countrey of any Foreign Prince, State, or Potentate.

And becaule a great abuse was now committed by common Informers, who by unjust and vexatious prosecutions troubled several of His Majesties Subjects and Liege People to their great grief and damage, His Majesty was graciously pleased for the ease and benefit of his good Subjects, straitly to charge and command, That several Limitations and Directions upon pain of His Majesties Displeasure, should be observed for the curbing of Informers, and preventing of Abuses in their Informations and Prosecutions upon the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

His Majesty was now pleased to remove the Commissioners of the Treasury, and to bestow the White Staff on Bishop Juxon; no Bishop had enjoyed this great place since the Reign of Henry the 7th; and if Envy it self could have found fault with his Administration of the Kings, the Parliament which after ensued had done it; but he was found faithful and exact, to the great disappointment of those who would have rejoiced in any of his failures or miscarriages.

Now also came over into England the Prince Elector Palatine and his Brother Prince Rupert; the Elector had been quite tired out with the long expectation of the Result which his Majesties and the Confederate Princes Mediations would produce from the hands of the Emperor, which at last proved insignificant, for the Duke of Bavaria had publicly declared, that what he had gained by his Sword and expence of his Treasure, he would not now part with by Treaty. On Christmas day he received the Communion with His Majesty at Whitehall, and during his stay was lodged in the Prince's Lodgings in the Court.

This Winter it was that the Earl of Arundel brought an Old Man named Parr out of Shropshire, who was presented to His Majesty by him at Court for a person of 152 years of age.

In pursuance of several Proclamations made by King James His now Majesties Father of ever happy memory, and likewise of several made by His now Majesty since his access to the Crown, for the restraint of Excessive Carriages, tending to the destruction of the Kings Highways, whereby Commerce was hindred, and the ways became irreparable without very great charge to the Countrey, The Kings Majesty did now by the Advice of the Lords, and others of the Privy-Council Command, that no common Carriers or other persons, do upon the common High-way, go, or travel with any Wagon, Cart, &c. whereon is, or shall be laid at once above two thousand weight, nor to use above five Horses, or above four Oxen and two Horses, or above six Oxen without Horses at any one time; and because such extraordinary Carriages, have herefore, by the Opinion of the Judges, been held to be general Nuisances, the King doth Command all Judges and Justices diligently to inquire after these Offences.

Daily Attempts were made by several of the Presbyterian strain in several parts of this Kingdom against the Church and the Discipline and Order thereof, yea the very Pulpits themselves were the places where they openly declaimed against her Orders and Constitutions; and now more particularly one Mr. Ward a Minister of Ipswich in Suffolk preached against lawful Recreations upon the Lords Day, and the Kings proclamation allowing the same: He said further, That our Church was going to change her Religion, and that Religion stood on tiptoe ready to depart hence for America [I suppose he meant New-England, &c.] For his extravagancy herein he was censured in the High Commission Court, and suspended till he made his Recantation, which he refused to do (for men of his persuasion do seldom change their Opinion) he was Imprisoned, and and there continued some space of time.

Anno Somewhat of the same nature happened at Bec- 1635. kington in Somersetshire, where the Churchwardens being commanded to rail in the Communion-Table in the East-part of the Chancel, refused their Bishops command, and appealed to the Dean of the Arches; alleadging, That the Communion-Table had stood in the same place where it now stood for near threescore years, and that it was encompassed with a Bordure of Wainscot, &c. Their Appeal being rejected, they petitioned His Majesty, but all in vain, and they continued still obstinate: and refusing to obey the Ordinaries command, were excommunicated and imprisoned, and at last upon their submission and pennance, were by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, the Ordinary, released.

Much about this time happened a Suit of great moment, which ministred matter of much discourse, betwixt Sir Anthony Pell Keeper of His late Majesties Hawks, Plaintiff, and Sir James Bagg Secretary to the late Lord Treasurer Weston, Defendant; it was commenced in the Court of Star-Chamber; the charge upon the Defendant for a Fraud and Cosenage of the Plaintiff of a great Sum of Money, in which deceit the Defendant had made use of the Lord Treasurers Name; the Court was divided in their Votes, and there was an equality of the Judges, so that the Cause should have gone for the Defendant, but that the Lord Keeper having the casting Voice, gave his Judgment for Sir Anthony Pell the Plaintiff; but before the Decretal Order was drawn, His Majesty took the matter into His own Hands: however that the World may see (though it was said that the Court favoured the Defendant, and that Her Majesty was present as was supposed in favour of Bagg) the Integrity of the Judges, the Division was as followeth;

A Proclamation also was now issued forth for the suppressing of Hackney Coaches, being a great disturbance to the Streets by stoppage and otherways, they were commanded not to stand in the Streets; and were in the first of his now Majesties Reign but one and twenty in London and Westminster: and if any person had occasion for a Coach, he sent to the Stable of the Coachman for it; so that only those who kept their Coaches were permitted then to go ordinarily in the streets in Coaches: the Judges of the Land then rode to Westminster to hear Causes in all weathers on Horse-back.

What great care this most pious Prince took of the Church, both here and in Scotland; as to the latter, we have a fair Instance in his constant Pains and Endeavour to recover Church-Lands, alienated in Lay Hands, back to the Church again, by the Ensluing Letter of his Grace of Canterbury, to the Archbishop of St. Andrews, which followeth.

The Bishop of Canterburys Letter to the Archbishop of St. Andrews in Scotland.

My very good Lord,

FOR the Particulars entrusted by the Church to the Lord Bishop of Brechen, and namely about the Abbacie of Lindores, you must expect them from the Lord Bishop himself, and from such relations as you will receive by my Lord and the Earl of Traquair. Now at this time you shall receive nothing, but that which is commanded by the King, and must be my part to act in the present and future business for the Church of Scotland.

My Lord, For the present the King is resolved, upon some great reasons of State, which have prevailed with him, not to meddle with the Abbacy of Lindores, or any other of that nature, as yet, but to leave them in that state in which they now are, till such time as he may consider the Decrees, and the Act or Acts of Parliament which concerns them, and till he can find a way to order them better, both for his own profit, and the contentment of His people there: assuring you in the mean time, that both in this and all other business, he will be very careful both of the credit, and of the maintenance of the Church; whereof if your self or any other Bishop or Clergy-man, shall make doubt, I am commanded to tell you, that therein you will not only do His Majesty wrong, but hurt your selves and the Church, which you seek to benefit. And in this very particular, you are to know, and make known to others that it is not the dislike of any person or persons, or of the thing it self, that causes this present stay, but reason of state only, and the care which the King hath that all proceedings may go on according to Law. As for the Bishoprick His Majesty will take their wants into as Provident care as he can, and hath settled Arbroth upon the Bishoprick of Brechen, but in what form I am not able to tell you, as not being so well acquainted with the Customs and Constitutions of that Kingdom, and therefore lest I should mistake in any circumstance, I leave that wholly to the Bishops own Relation.

For all the business of that Church in future, which must come to the Exchequer or any other publick Audience, or any other business that may respect upon the Church, or any thing that belongs to the Kings service, in which Church-men are trusted, you are immutably to hold this Rule, and that by his Majesties strict and most special Command, namely that your self, or the Lord Ross, or both of you together, do privately acquaint the Earl of Traquair with it, before it be proposed in publick, either at the Council-Table, or the Exchequer, or elsewhere: and the Earl hath assured the King in my presence that he will strictly observe and hold the same correspondency and course with you; and further, that he will readily and faithfully do all good Offices for the Church, that come within his power, according to all such commands as he shall receive, either immediately from the King, or otherwise by direction of his Majesty from my self. And if at any time your

Lordships

Lordships, and my Lord Traquair shall upon any of the forementioned businesses so differ in Judgment, that you cannot accord it among your selves, let it rest, and write up either to His Majesty, or to my self, to move His Majesty for further direction, which once received, you are all to obey, that so this little unhappy difference, which lately arose about Lindores, may be laid asleep; and that no other may hereafter rise up in the place of it, to disturb either the King or the Churches service, or disorder any of your selves, who are known to be such careful and direct Servants to both. And to the end this may go on with better success, His Majesty precisely commands, that this mutual Relation between the Earl of Traquair and you, be kept very secret, and made known to no other Person, either Clergy or Laity, for the divulging of these things cannot but breed Jealousies amongst men, and Disservices in regard of the things themselves; and therefore the King bids me tell you, that he shall take it very ill at his hand, whoever he be, that shall not straightly observe these his Directions. This is all which I had in command to deliver to you, and I shall not mingle with it any Particulars of my own; therefore wishing you all Health and Happiness, and good speed in your great Affairs, I leave you to God's Blessed Protection, and rest,

Nov. 10. 1635.

Your Graces very Loving

Friend and Brother,

W. Canterbury.

An Account of Foreign Affairs take in short, as followeth; A Peace was concluded in May this year at Prague, and the Protestants were restored to their Lands, Estates, Possessions and Religion, as it was settled in the Year 1627. and the Church-Lands in their possession confirmed to them for 40 years; but herewith was neither the Jesuit nor fiery Protestant on either hand well pleased with Cardinal Richlieu; siding, as occasion served, endeavours to bring all back again: which the Emperour wisely considering, endeavours to make the Peace firm, and procures all the Catholick Princes by fair or foul means, to render up their Forces to the Emperour their Head. The Dukes of Mecklenbergh were in the mean time re-instated in the Dukedom; but the Swedes were displeased with the Peace which they had purchased so dear with their great King's Blood, and Death of so many of their own; which to appease, the Elector of Saxony proffers them a hundred thousand Rixdollers from the Protector for their Reward; which they refuse, and might, having so many good Towns and Provinces, that the whole Empire was not able to beat them out of Pomerania; and so in fine they resolved to stand to it. And the Chancellor Oxenstiern (until business might be quite flected) puts all which the Swedes held about Plesisvergh, into the hands of the French, for a huge Sum of Money, and retires into Sweden, to give counsel from thence, having sent before his Train, and a hundred and fifty brave Hories for Breed into Pomerania, all which fell into his Enemies hands: and some Spoils sunk in the Sea; a Vessel laden with invaluable Sacrilege of the Church, Copes, Organs, Images, Chalice, the twelve Apostles of Wittenbergh, all shut up in the Belly of the Ship, which was delivered without a Midwife, within a League of the Coast of Sweden, and all lost.

The Spoils of the Church produce Misfortune.

But the Swedes are reproached for their Avarice, having been well paid with Wages and Booty; their Recompences freed the Protestant Princes from ungratefulness, and their Pretences were but Illusions, and so were to be answered; which made them turn to treat with the French. Cardinal Richlieu, the Instrument of all Bloody Scenes in Christendom, was already watching so near as Lorain for any Mutations of Fortune, and in a fury would needs besiege Colen; whom the Hollanders refuse to second, and so be fain to desist; but he exercises his fury at home on the very Branches of the House of Lorain, persecutes the Duke of Guise to the Death, and so to destroy the Family; which forced Lorain his Manifesto, That not able to contest with his powerful Enemy, he transfers all his Rights upon his Brother Francis; and so retires to be General of the Catholick Army in Germany.

Richlieu assured that this mad Deed of Guise was but pro tempore, till that this Dukes Brother had sent to Rome for a Dispensation to marry his Cousin German, and to render his Cap to the Hands of his Holiness, seizes him and his new Bride at Paris Prisoners to the Bastile, out of which they escape disguised, through Savon, Florence and Venice (so far about) ere they got safe to Vien.

Thus malicious was Richlieu to attempt the extinction of this most Illustrious and most Ancient Family, issued from Charlemain, and other Kings, sacred for their Services to Christendom; nay, to France her self in the Battel of Crecy, and all the Wars of the English. And that Story (of truth) that John of Orleans of this Family, like a second Judith, saved France from the oppression of Strangers. And so the Cardinal having deprived the lawfull Prince, called in the Gothick Nation to ruin it; and therefore they that accuse this Duke of having so often falsified his faith, silence the cause thereof, either through malice or ignorance.

This year by a Floud near Glucstat in Holstein there were drowned six thousand persons, and above fifty thousand Cattel. And by the plague, which beginning in the North, passed through Holland, there died about 20000 persons in the Town of Leyden only, without reckoning those which were consumed in Amsterdam and other Towns. This Contagion was fomented by the Famine in Germany: not the Living able to bury the Dead.

The French were totally beaten out of Germany, and so we may observe Catholicks against Catholicks, Lutherans against Catholicks, and now follows Lutherans against Lutherans, and then the Reformers against the Reformers, the most extravagant War since the World began, wherein the most unbridled Passions of man had the Helm. Vengeance produced Licentiousness, and that also such barbarous Cruelties as can be imagined. And after their miserable Effects, we in Great Britain felt the like Misfortunes, none escaping, where God's Hand of Justice prosecutes sinful Creatures.

Archbishop Abbot, whether through Discontent, or otherwise (I say not) had omitted his Metropolitanical Visitations, whereby several Irregularities were committed in the Church, the Reformation whereof brought a great Odium upon his Successor Archbishop Laud; the Puritan Party Party (so they loved to be call'd) endeavouring by their clamorous Impertinencies, to perswade the People that the Archbishop, who endeavoured nothing more than to bring Matters to the same pass they were at in the beginning of Queen Elizabeths time, and those of King Edward the Sixth, ran the Risque of the Peoples Rage and Fury; which afterwards, in those evil succeeding times, ended in the Ruine and Death of that most Reverend, worthy and Learned Prelate, who was by them vogued for a Papist, and what not? though by his Book against Fisher the Jesuit, which he wrote much about this time, Popery had received a most deadly Blow, of which perhaps it shall never recover: And more particularly to make it appear what great need there was of inspection into Church-Affairs, it may even hence appear, that in the University of Cambridge there were no fewer than three Chappels wherein Divine Service was daily celebrated, which yet were never Consecrated; which Matter was justified by some of the Heads of that University, which brought a Metropolitan Visitation upon both the Universities of Oxon and Cambridge: But before we give our Reader an Account of that Cause which was heard before the King (viz.) Whether the Archbishop had power to Visit the Universities? It will not be amiss to give him to understand that the University of Oxon (as some Members thereof think) have wrong done; for (saith one) in a Letter hereupon wrote.

'In the late Collections of Mr. Rushworth, p. 324. there is a great and foul Mistake; indeed a notable Fallhood, about the Preface before the Statutes for the University of Oxford; as if the Author of the said Preface had vilified the times of Edw. 6th. and mightily commended those of Queen Mary, and great use is made of the very same Preface by the Author of Patronus bone Fidei, against Bishop Laud, whom he supposes to be the writer of the said Preface, thence to prove him to have been a favourer of Popery, and a hater of the Reformed Religion. Now the truth is, that the writer of that Preface, was Dr. Peter Turner, of Merton-College, a Doctor of the Civil Law. There he gives an Account of the University-Statutes; That before this late Book of Statutes then set out by the Authority of Archbishop Laud, Chancellor of Oxford, the Students hardly knew what Statutes they were to be governed by; That the University had lain many and many years under the Inconvenience of that Uncertainty; therefore it had been often attempted to reform that Abuse under several Kings Reigns; under H. 8. and Edw. 6. in whose time, there was a Design to have both Universities governed by the same Statutes; which was very pleasing and acceptable, because of the Newness of the Project; but the King died before it took place, and the Design died with him. Then in Queen Mary's time, the same Work of Reforming and Compiling a Bopy of Statutes for the University, was again taken in hand, by the direction of Cardinal Poole, but to as little purpose. And this is all the Preface says of those Transactions in King Edw. 6. and Queen Maryes Reigns: After which, it adds, That notwithstanding the said Inconvenience of uncertain Statutes, the University did flourish and abound in men of Learning, and good Studies; the invred Candor of the Students supplying the defect of these wanton Statutes; which the Collector takes as said only of Queen Mary's Times; whereas it appears that it relates to all former Times, as well as hers, during which the said uncertainty lasted, and put the University to an Inconvenience.

This great Matter was debated in the King's presence at Hampton-Court, June 1. the Archbishop, Chancellor of the University of Oxon, standing on the right hand of his Majesty, and the Earl of Holland on his left, the Archbishop said,

'That by Letters he had acquainted the Two Universities, that he conceived he had power to Visit them, as being within his Province, and Metropolitan Jurisdiction.

'To this a Civil Answer was returned, both from Oxford and Cambridge, That to yield to such a Proposition by their own power, without a Command from his Majesty, were a wrong to the Universities. Thereupon he delivered a Petition to his Majesty, and desired a Gracious Hearing; and now he humbly besought his Majesty to do him the favour to hear his Cause; for (that he humbly conceived) the Church of England should never be able to settle things right without some Power over the Universities, and Learned men therein.

'Then the Earl of Holland spake, and said, That he hoped his Majesty would not suffer the University of Cambridge to lose its Ancient Priviledge; it being never wont to be Visited, save by his Majesty, and those by Commission from him, and ever exempted from the Visitation of any Bishop or Archbishop.

'Then the Attorney General argued, as followeth:

'The Question in short is, Whether the Archbishop of Canterbury, as Metropolitan, ought to Visit the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, as being within his Province? which thing I hope will plainly appear by two Acts of Parliament, which I hope will put an end to this Matter. This doth no way intrench upon your Majesty; for it must be acknowledged, that your Majesty is the Supreme Ordinary, and hath Supreme Jurisdiction, and may Visit both Universities by your Commission, notwithstanding you may do it by your Lord Archbishop; this is an undoubted Right. My Lord Archbishop hath a double capacity; the one as Archbishop, the other as Chancellor of Oxford. He desires to do equal Justice, and offer no otherwise to that Honourable Person, the Chancellor of Cambridge, than to himself. Bishopricks and Arch-Bishopricks are all of them of your Majesties, and your Royal Progenitors Foundation, originally Donative, long before the Conquest, and before time of memory: And as ancient as the Archbishop is, so ancient is the Jurisdiction. The Visitation of the Arch-Bishop is of Common Right, and not of special Persons, but of the Clergy, and the People in all Causes that be ecclesiastical, and in all Places within his province, without any manner of exception. By the Statute of 21 H. 8. it doth appear, that all Houses of Religion, all Colledges, &c. are within the Visitation of the Arch-Bishop of the Province. And by another Statute express provision is made, that in all Places, as well exempt, as not exempt, the Arch-Bishop shall have power to Reform, & punish those that do ought against the orders of the Church, Common-Prayer, &c. 13 Eliz. a Statute which confirmeth the 39 Articles, entrusteth the Anno 1636. the Lord Archbishop to see the Doctrine of the Church maintained. It will appear, that in the time of Edw. 1. Rich. 2. Edw. 4. the Archbishop visited the University in his own Metropolitall Right, and not by any Bull from the Pope; and there is as urgent necessity in these Times. Many things may be omitted by the Chancellors, that are commonly great Men, and many things to be Reformed concerning the Administration of the Sacraments, and the Orders of the Church. In Cambridge there may be Chappels that were never yet Consecrated. In the review of all Ecclesiastical Laws appointed by Act of Parliament in the Times of H. 8. and Edw. 6. which shew the Opinion of the Times; it appeareth expressly, there should be no exemption of Colleges from the Archbishops Visitation, which I hope may determine this Affair.

Mr. Gardiner (as Mr. Rushworth informs us) being Recorder of London, spake on the behalf of Cambridge.

The Recorder of London on the behalf of the University of Cambridge. In stating this Question, it's thus far agreed, That your Majesty hath power of Visitation; but the Question is, Whether your Majesty hath the sole Power, or my Lord's Grace a Power concurrent with your Majesty. No, saith his Majesty, The Question is, Whether he hath not Power to Visit there as within his Province.

The Recorder thus proceeded; I shall tell your Majesty what I conceive of Metropolitall Visitations, and then of the manner of Government, and Rule of the University; and then how the Rule of the one will stand with the other. And lastly, I shall offer what we have for Exemption.

In England there be Arch-Bishops, Bishops, and Arch-Deacons. The Bishop hath his Visitation every Three Years; my Lord's Grace hath his Visitation once in his time; and he Visiteth those of the Province, to the end they may be subordinate; and in all their Causes and Sentences they Appeal to him as Superior.

Here the Archbishop interposed, saying, I may Visit as oft as I will.

Mr. Gardiner went on, For the Government of the University there is a Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, Proctors, &c. They may proceed by way of Excommunication; they may imprison and banish; which is more Power than appertains to any Metropolitall Visitation. Only one Bishop of Ely did Excommunicate one of this University; but the Bishop was afterwards Excommunicated; and the Cause being heard before Cardinal Wolsey, he was made to submit himself. Further than this we find no Precedent, that either the Ordinary of the Diocess, Arch-Deacon, &c. did ever meddle.

5 R. 2. In the Petition to the Parliament, We are stil'd an University founded by Your Majesties Progenitors: wherefore the Power of Visitation doth of right belong to Your Majesty, and this is an Exemption from any ordinary Jurisdiction. For other Exemptions, we have Bulls from the Pope, and Charters: about the beginning of King Richard the Second's Time, most of the Charters were burnt by an Insurrection in the Town; but many of them were Confirmed to the Time of Henry Car. 12. the Sixth, upon a Suit made to the Pope, to give some Confirmation to their Privileges, in regard their Charters were burn'd. Whereupon the Pope granted a Commission, and Witnesses were examined; which Examination was a means to produce two ancient Bulls, exempting them from Metropolitall Visitation; the one bearing Date Anno 624. the other 699.

The Archbishop said, These Exceptions were not to be found in any Priories, or Nunneries at the first Foundation; but as soon as they got any Money, they sent presently to Rome, to get an Exemption; and by that means the Bishops lost their Reputation, and Jurisdiction, even the Council of Trent and Spanish Bishops have all plaid their part herein. And this is the Complaint of whole Christendom against the Council of Trent; of which, next to Purgatory, the Pope of Rome hath made his great Advantage.

Unto this, the King said, I dare say the Pope doth as much to beat down Bishops, as any Puritan doth in England.

In the Close the Archbishop proceeded thus; There are Three Chappels in Cambridge not Consecrated. I demanded why they were not? Dr. Chadderton made Answer, He hoped they were Consecrated by Faith and good Conscience. They come into the Chappel without Surplices, and other Dangers growing, and the University will be past remedy before any Complaint be made.

The Earl of Holland answered, All this may be Reformed in the way that we desire. If you will Visit, you may do it by Commission; the King can grant it. The Bishop replied; I desire to have my own Power.

Upon the Hearing of the whole Cause, it was declared by the King, with the Advice of the Privy Council, That it was granted on all hands, that the King had an undoubted Right to Visit the Universities; and that the Archbishop, in the Right of his Metropolitall Church of Canterbury, had Power to Visit the whole Province, in which the Universities were situated, and were under the same Power, unless they could shew Privilege and Exemption.

That the Exceptions then alledged, were not such as could give satisfaction. That they could be Exempted by no Papal Bull; and that they were Exempted by none of their Charters. That the long omission of the Archbishops to Visit, could be no prescription to bar the Right of the Metropolitall Sec. That it appeared, that both Universities had been Visited by Three Archbishops, his Predecessors Jure Metropolitico, and not by a Legative Power. That this coming in question, upon the resistance of the University of Oxford, it was, upon full hearing of both Parties, adjudged for the Archbishop by King Richard the Second, and afterward, upon the like Hearing and Re-Examination by King Henry the Fourth, and both of their Judgments established by Act of Parliament 13 Hen. 4. And the Archbishop produced before his Majesty the Original Renunciation of all Privileges from any Pope, made by the University of Cambridge, under the Hands of the Heads of Houses.

Anno 1636. So the King and Council adjudg'd the Right of Visiting Universities, and Chancellors Scholars, and all persons enjoying the Priviledges thereof, to belong to the Arch-Bishop, and Metropolitan Church of Canterbury by themselves or their Commissaries.

Whereupon the Arch-Bishop made this motion to the King: First, for himselfe that His Majesty would be Graciously pleased, that he might have the sentence drawn by the Advice of His Majesties Learned Council, and put under the Broad Seal, to settle all differences that hereafter might arise. Then on behalf of both the Universities, that they should remain free and exempt from the Visitation, and Jurisdiction of the Bishop of the Diocels, or Arch-deacon.

Also, seeing it was declar'd to be his Right to Visit Metropolitically, and it was not limited by Law how often: therefore not withstanding the last Custom of Visitation semel in vita tantum, that he might Visit the Universities by himselfe, or his Commissary, as often as any great emergent cause should move him: provided that neither he, nor any of his Successors, should, after the first Visitation, Visit upon such emergent Causes unless it be first made known to His Majesty and His Successors. All which was granted by the King, and so settled.

Lastly, Whereas it was alledged, that the Chancellors of either University were, and are like to be Persons of great Honour and Eminencie; and therefore it might be inconvenient, that they should be call'd to such Visitation: It was declar'd by His Majesty, that in the course of Law the Chancellor would be allowed to appear by his Proxie.

Serjeant Thin desired leave of His Majesty to speak in behalf of the University of Oxford, which he did to the effect following.

Serjeant Thin. That it was an ancient University, and had as ancient Priviledges, and, by Bulls from the Pope; was very exempt from the Visitation of any Arch-Bishop as in his Metropolitically Right; for as none can Found an University but Your Majesty, and Your progenitors, so none have power but Your Majesty to Visit there. But that which concerneth us is, that it was a foundation long before the Conquest; from the time of the very Foundation of this University unto this day, we conceive there was never any Visitation made by any Arch-Bishop, as being within his Province.

King. Never any, (saith the King:) As the University is ancient, so likewise Our Custom is as ancient, which for many Hundred Years we may prescribe; (the King answered) but a bare Prescription in this Case will not prevail for that positive Law and Acts of Parliament are cited to the contrary.

Thin. We have no records so old, yet this We have divers Recitals in E. 3d's time, which sheweth, that they had some original Grant of Exemption. Pope Boniface 8. did grant to the University of Oxford a particular Exemption from all Archiepiscopal Jurisdiction; but I know well that there will be an Objection made that the Pope did grant a Jurisdiction there. This Difference came before the King and the King then did declare, That the Visitation did belong to the Arch-Bishop of Right.

King. What is that? Did the King declare that it did of right belong to the Arch-Bishop to Visit there? that's very hard for you to answer.

Thin. I Object thus against my selfe (to shorten the Case, for if I do not, they will.) This was in King Rich. 2d's time. The occasion was upon the Question touching Wicliffe his Case grounded upon a mistaking of the Law. Before that time there was never so much as a challenge to visit this University Metropolitically.

King. I will not grant that (Mr. Serjeant) that my Predecessor did mistake the Law, perhaps he was mis-informed of the Law.

Thin. Pardon me for the Phrase; the King was mis-informed as we conceive of the ancient usage and manner there.

King. You must suppose the King did know it.

Thin. The Arch-Bishop was then a potent man in those days.

King. My Lord Arch-Bishop doth not intend to Visit the Statutes of the university, nor of any particular Colledge.

Arch-Bishop. I do intend to Visit Metropolitically. I am to Visit, as I conceive, the Body of the University, and every scholar which is in it, for his obedience to the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England; and this is the extent I intend, and not to meddle with the Statutes of Colledges or University, or particular Visitors of any Colledge.

King. I do not understand why you do not meddle with that, because it is my foundation.

Thin. There was never since the first foundation of this University any Visitation made by any Arch-Bishop; several have been made by the Kings themselves, but never by the Arch-Bishop.

King. As I remember you did confess he did Visit once.

Thin. No, only an attempt to Visit was made by Arch-Bishop Arundel, who was resisted by the University. I will give up the Cause if he can ever find any Appeal of any Cause to the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury from that University. I find it in Fitz. N. Bre. that the Chancellor of Oxford may certifie an excommunication. From whom had the Chancellor that Jurisdiction, but from the King? then those Acts are not to be Visited by any Power but by the King.

King. That is no good inference, for every Bishop hath power to Visit.

Thin. Since de facto the Arch-Bishop did never Visit Oxford, but was ever Visited by Your Majesty, or by Commission from Your Majesty, and withal, their Ancient Charters they have lost, which might (if they had them) shew their Priviledge; and since there is so memorable a Prescription in this Case for so many Hundred Years, wee humbly desire (with Your Majesties Favour) to be still Visited by Your Majesty.

Arch-Bishop. These Exemptions were not to be found in any Nunneries or Priories at the first Foundation; but as soon as ever they got any Money, they presently sent to Rome to get an Exemption, and then by that means the Bishops lost their Reputations, and so brought down the Jurisdiction of the Bishops, even at the Council of Trent; and and Spanish Bishops have all plaid their parts herein. And this is the complaint of whole Christendom against the Council of Trent, of which, next to Purgatory, the Pope of Rome hath made his greatest advantage.

King. I dare say the Pope doth as much to beat down Bishops as any Puritan, I have in England, doth.

Arch-Bishop. King H. 8. by Statute thrust out all, and whatsoever power the Pope had given in England by Bull, &c. all is gone at one blow by that Statute? Now I will shew you a Bond from the University of 1000 l. that if they oppose my Jurisdiction then to be forfeit, I speak it upon my Reputation and Duty to Your Majesty. Ann. 1506. Christs Colledge was subject to the Bishops Visitation: I am able to shew the very Original Deed in H. 8's time, where the University of Cambridge have submitted themselves to the Arch-Bishop, and here is the Original-Deed (which was read and shewed to His Majesty) being a submission of the University to the Arch-Bishop, and to disclaim any right by Bull or the like. If I should have put them to have submitted upon this evidence, they would have said either for fear, or one respect or other, they had submitted to your Arch-Bishop without any hearing. Therefore not to put this upon either University, I got Your Majesty to hear it, if you have any thing to shew for it, God forbid I should desire it if you have better evidence; If not, then I hope His Majesty will give me leave to carry it.

King. Read the Date of the Deed my Lord stands for upon; (which being read was dated 27 H. 8.)

Arch-Bishop. So Your Majesty may see before the Common-Law did take that away, they did submit themselves a year before. I will make it appear that the Arch-Bishop did visit Cambridge as in Metropolitcal right three whole years together, and that it is so expressed in the Act.

King. They say that the Bishop was then a powerful man, and the times were troublesome.

Bishop. They tell you indeed 20 R. 2. was a troublesome time, but of 12. H. 6. they do not tell you what a troublesome time that was.

King. But was Cambridge visited three whole years?

Recorder. It is true, we did continue it for three whole years. I did in the opening of it mention as much, that he did visit Ann. 1401. and did continue it till 1404. and that in the story of that time, he did it by a Metropolitcal right (as it is so mentioned) but how dangerous those times were, we have opened, and since that time never any such offer was made.

Kings Attorney-General, Sir John Banks, May it please your Majesty, their main objections consist of Bulls. Now concerning any Bull or Exemption from the Pope, they are of no force, and though they here plead it verbally, yet they will not do it upon Record; for that Statute which bringeth them in a power, that Statute doth make all void: It is true, there is a saving of some that are confirmed under the Great-Seal, but they make no shew of them, so as clearly they are out of the exception of that Act of Parliament of 28 H. 8. Then they object, that the University is of the foundation of the King, and there the Bishop hath no Metropolitcal Visitation. 1 E. 6. The Deanry of Wells was dissolved, upon that a new Foundation, and E. 6. the Founder, and to him was the Donation of the Deanry, yet in that case it is expressly adjudged, that the Arch-Bishop in his Metropolitcal Vi-tation may visit the Deanry: It is true, he may not visit their Lands and local Statutes. It was further objected, there was no Visitation within these 200 years, and therefore a Prescription for it. But as to that no Civilian will allow, that any Prescription lieth against a Metropolitcal Visitation. I have looked upon the Statute, and I do find no particular exemption from any Jurisdiction that is Metropolitcal. They say further, that the Visitation made by Peckham, was by virtue of the Legantine Power, and the other Visitations are de jure Metropolitco.

King. They say that Peckham did visit as Legatus Natus.

Attorney. That is plain to be distinguished by the Records.

Arch-Bishop. In Cardinal Pools Case, he doth visit by Legantine Power (if he will use the stile of greater dignity than Arch-Bishop) Shall therefore that which he doth by the name of dignity lose his Power as Arch-Bishop?

Attorney-General. Divers Lord Treasurers, some have been Bishops of Oxford, some of Lincoln, shall they lose their Power as Arch-Bishops? The Bishoprick of London hath not been visited these 200 years till now.

Dr. Duck. Legatus Natus hath only power to grant a Visitation but to Visit, I do think they can never find that he ever had Power but Metropolitcally.

King. The Question is whether Legatus Natus can visit as Legatee, and not as Arch-Bishop?

Recorder. I think he cannot; but only by virtue of his Legantine Power he might visit.

Bishop. Legatus Natus, and Legatus a Latere. The one Legate can visit, the other Legate cannot.

Recorder. We appeal to this Bishop Arundel as Legatus Natus.

Arch-Bishop. I thank you for that Evidence, Cambridge did not oppose Arrundel, but Oxford did it. What if he were banished the Realm, he was banished for bringing in a Bull. In E. 1, & E. 3 time it was common to send forth Proclamations against any that brought Bulls from the Pope.

Recorder. When this Question was between Oxford and Arrundel, there was an Order in Chancery for search for Bulls: and declared that this was against the Crown, and like to be the destruction of the University.

Arch-Bishop. What was done in R. 2's time, which they say was so troublesome a time. Yet H. 4. did declare the very same Judgment his Predecessor had done, and confirmed it by Act of Parliament, that it doth belong unto the See of Canterbury, as of right to visit the Universities, upon penalty of 1000 l. upon every time that he should disobey, and a forfeiture of all their Priviledges, if they did disobey it. And I shewed a Deed under the Great-Seal, which the Council for the University did confess.

King. What can you say against this?

Recorder. I shall submit the Cause unto your Majesties Judgment, for that which hath been urged of King H. 4. It is true, and they do declare that de jure, he ought to visit; it is true, it is so declared by Parliament, but this is only for Oxford and not for Cambridge. Cambridge is not so much as mentioned: My Answer is but this, It doth appear in the very Record it self, that the University of Oxford had got an exorbitant Bull from the Pope, to exclude all manner of People that countenanced Hereticks.

Anno
1636.

King. No, that cannot be.
Recorder. The Record it self saith it was gotten to countenance Hereticks, and other Malefactors; they did oppose the Arch-Bishop manu forti. The State taking offence at this, thereupon there was a submission to the Judgment of R. 2. And thereupon he did declare, and H. 4. grounded his Judgment upon that the Bishop of right should visit, and H. 4. doth disanul the Bull as being against Law.

Lord Privy-Seal. There comes a Grant of later Kings, and takes notice of those Privileges and Exemptions, and confirms and ratifies all such Priviledges as they do claim by any Charter or colour of any Bull.

Recorder. He doth confirm all Liberties or Grants. If my Lords Grace may visit the University, then he may visit the Chancellor; and of late time they have been persons of great Honour attending upon your Majesty, and so may be called away from Your Majesty upon a Visitation to attend there.

Arch-Bishop. He may appear by Substitute.

Holland. If your Grace will visit, you may do it by Commillion; the King can grant it.

Bishop. No, I desire to have my own Power.

And so the King adjudged it for the Arch-Bishop against himself; and permitted the Kings Attorney-General to plead for the Arch-Bishop against the King.

A disorder was much about this time somewhat of the nature of the foregoing, which was complain'd of at the Council-board: The Town of Yarmouth had lately set up a Lecturer, one Mr. Brinsley a Nonconformist, in opposition to Mr. Brooks, who was the Legal Minister of that Town, presented by the Dean and Chapter of Norwich; Brinsley officiates in a Warehouse called the Chappel, a place formerly used by the Dutch to assemble in for their Service, which yet was never consecrated: Hither resorts the People in crouds to hear Brinsley in opposition to Mr. Brooks, who having an Inhibition to serve upon the forementioned Brinsley, serves him therewith in the Meeting-Place; whereupon the Town-Authority commits Mr. Brooks; and the Sequel you may hear at the derision of this affair at the Council-board, where it was ordered;

That the Matters of the Church at Yarmouth had been factiously carried by the refractory Spirits of some Persons in chief places of Power there, whereby the busie humours of those whose Ears itch after Novelty have been nourished and encouraged. And therefore His Majesty being sensible and careful in the countenancing and maintenance, as well of Ecclesiastical Authority and Discipline, as of civil Order and Government, doth Order.

That Mr. Brooks and the Dean and Chapter shall be satisfied all their Charges in this Suit by their Adversaries.

That Ezekias Harris, Thomas Green, Miles Corbet, and Henry Davy, who subscribed the Mitimus for Mr. Brooks's Imprisonment, and for the wrong done to his Person, and the indignity offered to his Place and Function, shall be committed to Prison during His Majesties Pleasure, and they to make further acknowledgment of their Offence, as shall be hereafter Ordered.

That Mr. Brinsley shall be removed from that Town (only) yet shall not Officiate any where, unless conforming to the Canons of the Church.

That the said pretended Chappel be converted to the first use, a Ware-House.

25 March, 1632.

His Majesty being very careful to preserve his Regality over the Narrow Seas, and knowing that of late years the Dutch and other Aliens had Fished there, and had not His Permission or Grant, in the Month of May he thought fit to declare His Pleasure by Proclamation for the Restraint of Aliens Fishing upon His Majesties Seas and Coasts, without leave first obtained, which he did as followeth:

Whereas King James did, in the Seventh Year of His Reign of Great Britain, set forth a Proclamation touching Fishing, whereby, for the many important Reasons therein expressed, all persons of what Nation or Quality soever, (being not His Natural-born Subjects) were restrained from Fishing upon any the Coasts and Seas of Great Britain, Ireland, and the rest of the Isles adjacent, where most usually heretofore Fishing had been, until they had orderly demanded and obtained Licenses from the said King, or his Commissioners in that behalf, upon pain of such chastisement as should be inflicted upon such wilful Offenders: Since which time, albeit neither the said King, nor His Majesty have made any considerable execution of the said Proclamation, but have with much patience expected a voluntary conformity of His Neighbours and Allies to so just and reasonable Prohibitions and Directions, as are contained in the same.

And now finding by experience, that all the inconveniences which occasioned that Proclamation, are rather increased than abated: His Majesty being very sensible of the Premises, and well knowing how far he is obliged in Honour to maintain the Rights of His Crown, especially of so great consequence, has thought it necessary, by the Advice of His Privy-Council, to renew the aforesaid Restraint of Fishing, upon His aforesaid Coasts and Seas, without License first obtained from Him; and by these Presents do make publick Declaration, That His Resolution is, (at times convenient) to keep such a competent strength of Shipping upon His Seas, as may (by Gods blessing) be sufficient both to hinder such further encroachments upon His Regalities, and assist and protect those His good Friends and Allies, who shall henceforth, by virtue of our Licencies, (to be first obtained) endeavour to take the benefit of Fishing upon His Coasts and Seas in the Places accustomed.

In vindication of the Dutch, a brave and learned Champion arose, the ever famous Hugo Grotius, who endeavoured to prove the Liberty of Fishing to be general to all People and Nations, in his Book called Mare Liberum; which Book was answered by His Majesties Command, by that great Antiquary Mr. Selden of the Inner-Temple: The Opinion which His Majesty had of that Book, may appear by an Order of Council following.

His Majesty this day in Council taking into Consideration a Book lately Published by John Selden Esq; Intituled Mare Clausum, seu de Dominio Maris, written by the Kings Command, which he had done with great Industry, Learning and Judgment, and hath asserted the Right of the Crown of England to the Dominion of the British Seas. The King requires one of the said Books to be kept in the Council-Chest, another in the Court of Exchequer, and a third in the Court of Admiralty, as faithful and strong Evidence to the Dominion of the British Seas.

His Majesty now appeared with a very formidable Fleet in the Narrow Seas, to assert his Right to the Sovereignty thereof, under the Command of the Earl of Northumberland, who sailed from the Downs to the North with sixty gallant Ships, and falling amongst the Herring Buses belonging to the Dutch, he commanded them to leave off their fishing until they had obtain'd permission from his Majesty of Great Britain, which they seeming not willing and ready to do, he fired amongst them, sunk some, and seized others, until they were forced to fly into his Majesties Harbours, and desired the Lord Admiral to mediate to his Majesty for his leave for this Summer, and they would pay unto his Majesties Treasury therefore the sum of 30000 l. which they did accordingly, and professed their readines to become Suppliants to his Majesty for a Grant, under the condition of a yearly payment therefore for the future.

So good effects had this Fleets expedition, that one would imagine the English Subjects would never have complain'd of that small and inconsiderable Tax of Ship-money, being but the sum of 202240 l. 2 s. and 3 d. as Mr. Rushworth informs was the total of Ship-money for the year 1636. in respect of those which were most illegally sessed upon the Subject for the maintenance of the Parliaments War against his Majesty in the evil times which succeeded; but complaints however there were, and one Chambers of London, a great Stickler, sued Sir Edward Bromfield, Lord Mayor of that City, upon a Suit of Treasons and false imprisonment of him the said Chambers, for refusing to pay the said duty.

At this time the Plague had broken out in the Cities of London and Westminster, and began to spread it self not without great danger of infection of the whole: hereupon his Majesty by Proclamation, with the advice of the Council, adjourns part of Trinity Term, and after Michaelmas Term also, to prevent the further spreading thereof, and likewise prohibited the Fairs of S. Bartholomew, and our Ladies Southwark, for this year, upon the same account.

This year put a period to the days of Ferdinand Emperour of Germany, exercised in many and mighty Wars: He died at Ratisbon, in the time of his holding the Diet there for the Election of his Son to the Empire, who was already King of Hungary; which he effected to the no little regret of the French Minister Richelieu, who underhand endeavour'd to promote the Duke of Bavaria to the Imperial Throne, but all in vain, for he was now Elected King of the Romans; and his Father dying in February, he succeeded by the Name of Ferdinand the Third; of his Father one gives us this Character, 'That by his Lieutenants he had in Wars maintained his Scepter in and out, sometimes several, sometimes against all the World almost; for no sooner Crowned King of Bohemia, then that people revolted, and chose another; when he became Emperour, the Seditions of the Hungarians, and of his own Subjects in Austria, Mansfelt and Halderstadt never left worrying him whilest they lived. The Danes felt the force and smart of his Army, the English, Scots and Hollanders combined against him: The Swedes, and the whole Protestant Body of the Princes; nay, the French also by profusion of Blood and Treasure. His Peasants excited against him, and to corrupt the Faith of his great Ministers; no sooner got out of one War, but springs up another, like Hydra's, to torment him. His best weapons were his own daily pious prayers, which the late King Gustave seemed more to dread than he did his Armies. He Attacked the Arms of the Turk, Catholics, Lutherans, and Reformates, and over all Triumphant. He lived to see his Son Crowned King of the Romans in spite of all his Enemies, the Swedes to be shut up in Pomerania, and the French beaten out of Germany, and the Armies of Austria almost at the Gates of Paris. He hearkened Religiously to the Jesuits, the reason of the Reformates to revolt, and to call in a Stranger the Swede to gnaw out their own Entrails, which they soon repented.

To this Diet it was that his Majesty dispatch'd the Earl of Arundel, Earl-Marshal of England, as his Embassadour, once more to importune the Emperour Ferdinand the Third for the restitution of the Palgrave; but the Answer given our Embassadour was in short no other than this, that in time the Elector Palatine might be considered as to his enjoyment of the Lower Palatinate, but as to the Upper Palatinate, now in possession of the Duke of Bavaria, that Duke must be consulted in that Affair: Hereupon Commissioners were appointed by the Emperour and Bavarian to Treat with the Embassadour, who found the Commissioners of the Emperour favourable enough to the Palgraves Interest, but the Bavarian spake high as a Souldier, and said, That what he had won with so much hazard of his Person, and expence of his Treasure by his Sword, in defence of the Empire against a declared Enemy thereof, he would endeavour to preserve to himself by the same means, and would not depart from what he was in possession of. The Embassadour in much disdain at his Answer departs from the Emperours Court, and that Diet, without so much as taking his leave; nor could the Emperours two Friends, the Spanish and Polish Embassadours, sent after him on purpose to moderate his passion, have any effect upon him, as to his return, and home he came, where he found his Majesty under a great regret of this affront to his Embassadour: To mitigate the matter, an Imperial Agent was sent hither, but all in vain, for he was dismiss'd, though he seemingly brought some Propositions from the Emperour for the Palgraves restitution: This breach of Amity was much encreased by the Proposal of a Marriage of the King of Poland with the Lady Elizabeth, Sister to the Prince Elector; for the dispatch of which, Prince Radzivil was dispatched hither for Treaty, and the matter it self was consented to by the Peers and people of Poland, but the Clergy (much Jesuited) opposed it, and at last carried it for Cecilia, Arch-Duchess of Austria, second Sister to the Emperour, and the Match was concluded, much to the disadvantage of the Palgraves Affairs.

Great care was taken by his Majesty for the encrease of his people; and hereupon the Statutes made against depopulation were ordered to be put in execution, and a Warrant was directed on the ninth of July to the Clerk of the Crown, or his Deputy in his Majesties Name, commanding him to prepare several Commissions according to the 1636. the form delivered unto him, to enquire touching Depopulations and Conversions of Lands to Pasture since the tenth year of Queen Elizabeth, in the Counties of Oxford, Cambridge, Warwick, and Nottingham, directed to Edward Savage, and Edmond Windham, two of the Gentlemen of his Majesties Privy Chamber, and to Gilbert Boon of Lincoln-Inn Esquire, or any two of them.

By vertue of which Commission, and the terror of the Fine imposed in the Star-Chamber on Sir Anthony Roper for committing Depopulations, there was brought into the Exchequer 30000 l. and upwards. The like Commissions were granted into other Counties.

Now likewise the City of London Petition'd his Majesty in Council for mitigation of the number of Ships imposed upon the City, desiring an abatement thereof; and his Majesty ordered Mr. Secretary Cook to give them for answer, that his Command was necessary, for that the preservation of the State did require it, that the charge was not immoderate, exceeding not the proportion of many of your private Estates; that his Majesty would receive no excuses hereupon, but did expect their obedience, and a short account thereof; that the Presidents they alledged of former times were obedience, and not direction to their Prince and Sovereign.

The Pestilence encreasing in the Cities of London and Westminster, and in divers other parts of the Kingdom, his Majesty issued out his Royal Proclamation for the observing of a Weekly Fast throughout the Realm of England, in such manner as is directed in that Proclamation.

Our Reader was formerly acquainted, how that his Majesty had issued out the Writs for Ship-money the last year, and how that in some places they did not find that acceptance and entertainment with the Subject that was expected; in Yorkshire and Lancashire, and many other Shires, the payments were readily made, and the Moneys brought in by the respective Sheriffs, but not so in other Countries; for many (but more particularly one Hampden of Buckinghamshire) being assisted by the Sheriffs, made default of payment: This person was a man well known not to be over-well affected to the Government, and being encouraged hereto by the factious assistance of some others of his own persuasion, denies the payment, craves Oyer of the Kings Writ, and resolvedly stands Tryal with the King, demurs in Law, and demands the Judges Opinion of those Writs; his Majesty had already commanded the Lord Keeper to summon the Judges together according to their Oaths, to give their Opinions therein impartially, without fear or favour; and accordingly, Thomas Lord Coventry, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, commands the Judges attendance in the Court of Star-Chamber, the 14th day of February, Anno Regni Regis Caroli 12. Annoque Domini 1636. and delivered what he had hereupon in charge from his Majesty, as followeth.

My Lords the Judges,

The Term being now at an end, and the Assize at hand, his Majesty hath commanded, that according to the Custom in former times, so now you should in this place receive some directions for the execution of Justice in all parts of the Kingdom whereto you resort; this (as it may justly be) is a great comfort to his Majesties Subjects to see his Majesties care herein; which as it is a testimony of their own happiness, in receiving Justice from the King himself, the Fountain of Justice, so it may as justly add strength and encouragement to you when you go your Circuits, not only to be armed with your own Authority by Commission, but with your Princes Instruction. In the doing of Justice, you will find things of several natures and degrees: In some Pleas before you, Communicative Justice beareth sway; as in that which is meum & tuum: In others distributive Justice, as in premium & penam: Some concern one, and a few others concern the multitude, others concern the King, and all the Kings People: In some Pleas things are drawn afore you that are ad nocumentum of this and that particular Town; some ad nocumentum totius Regni, some things are drawn afore you that are contra pacem Regis, and others contra Coronam & Dignitatem Regis; and in this variety of business, that as there are many of a lesser and lower degree, yet not to be omitted, so you have graviora Legis upon which you are to pitch your mark, hac oportet fieri illa non omittere. In that Justice which you are to do between party and party, his Majesty doth require you, as in all his Courts here, so in your Circuits you administer impartial Justice, and repress vexations and wrangling Suits, not worthy the dignity of your own Persons, and the Court where you sit; for those actions, as they empty the Spleen on the one side, so they never fail to empty the Purse on both sides. But besides the doing of Justice between man and man, there is much more expected from your Lordships: for the Publick business of the Country is of much more importance than the Tryal of a Nisi Prius, and fitting you should esteem them so; and therefore it is his Majesties Command, that those services which concern himself, and the Publick, be timely thought of, not posted off to the end of the Assize. Now afore all other things, the advancement of Religion and Piety towards God, the Peace of the Church, and the execution of those Laws that tend to those ends ought to have the first place. As oft as I have had occasion to speak to you here, I have seldom spared to give you a charge of the Laws against Recusants; and I must reiterate it now, for if you convict them not in the Country, there is like to be little Reformation or profit to his Majesty; and whosoever they be that will not be found in the Church, it becometh you to take order that they be found in the Exchequer. Next place, that you proceed roundly against Capital and Felonious Offenders, especially Robbers in the High-way, who now march in Troops after a high hand. As a good Judge ought in Court to shew severity to those in the Gaol, so the ablest and activest men in the Shire ought to do their utmost endeavours for the apprehending of those Offenders as are abroad, that when you are there, or here at the Term, the service may proceed in a good way, and you be made a Terror to Malefactors, as some of your Predecessors have been; for if your care be not great, Malefactors will abound; therefore you must shew a severe and constant way of Justice when they are found, and it will soon abate their pride wherewith they now bear up themselves, and fit it is with an unanimous consent you all agree of one course, for if there be a remissness in any one Circuit, this leaveth a way to Malefactors

 'ctors to overthrow all Reformation, and Justice is thereby discouraged: Next, care must be had of those Laws which concern luxury and idleness, the suppressing and punishing of Vagabonds, the ordering and employing of Houses of Correction, the repressing of Alehouses and Tipling-houses, binding of Apprentices; if this were well and constantly observed, they would save many able bodies which die miserably at the Gallows, and cut off a multitude of enormities that pester the Commonwealth, and lessen the number of Thieves and Robbers; and therefore your Lordships should do well to have a special care of the execution of those Laws; and this giveth me occasion to put you in mind of those Printed Orders published by his Majesty in the year 1630. wherein at first there was a direction given for an account to be made by the Sheriff and Justices of Peace; this same was orderly kept in divers places, in others not so well: It was afterwards advised by your selves, that the way of account should be changed, and that you should receive it at the Assize, and present it to the Council-Board; yet it is my part to tell you it hath not so appeared by the account that is come to the Council-Table, and it is expected a better be given by you at the next Term. Now in respect the Publick Service dependeth much upon the Justices of Peace in the County, it will be necessary that you cast your eye upon them, that they give due attendance at the Assize; it is their duty to do it, and yours to enforce it upon them: An Assize lasteth but a few days, but the instructions which they may receive from you in that short time, may be of great use for the County for the whole year: Also that you examine whether they give due attendance at the Quarter-Sessions, although there is an express Article in their Oath that they should give it; therefore it is a thing very fitting, and well worthy your labour, that in the beginning of every Assize, you trust not to the Clerk of the Peace his Information, but that your selves do cast an eye upon his Book, and command him to return the Names of such Justices of Peace as you find by his Book were absent at the Quarter-Sessions; for it will be that you let them know, that to prefer a Riding, or Bowling, or Hunting-Match, before their attendance at the Quarter-Sessions, is little less than Perjury; and if your admonition will not serve the turn, a remedy shall be taken. Third place, it is necessary for you to enquire how they attend the Monthly Meetings, or other times of Publick Service; for this I am sure, they are all within one Commission, and have the same Oath, and the same attendance is imposed upon all, and why the greatest number exempt themselves, and leave the Publick Service upon a few; I know not, but if I may know the particular men (of which I hope I shall henceforwards by your Lordships) I shall rid them out of the Commission, and put others in their places.
 'My Lords, I have but one particular more, and that of great importance, whereof by special direction and Commandment from his Majesty I am to speak unto you at this time; all of you are the Witnesses of his Majesties proceedings, though the candour and clearness of his own heart exceedeth your Testimony, and your Testimony is not only fit to be declared in this place, but in all the places of this Realm; his Majesty hath now the third time sent forth

Writs to require the aid of his Subjects for the Guard of the Dominion of the Sea, and safety of the Kingdom: This his Majesty did upon great deliberation and advice, and upon important and weighty reasons. In the first year, when the Writs were directed to the Ports and Maritime places, they received little or no opposition; but in the second year, when they went generally throughout the Kingdome (though by most well obeyed) have been refused by some, not only in some Inland Shires, but in some of the Maritime places, and Actions have been brought against some that have been employed in the execution of those Writs: I suppose that no man will suspect that (Arcana Regni) the private Reasons of a Prince should either upon this or other occasions be made publick; but so many Reasons as were fit to be opened, were formerly declared by me, in this place; to you the Judges of this Realm. The first was, that the whole Kingdom is concerned, in point of safety; for admitting there were no other Council or attempt against us, but only to interrupt us in the Dominion of the Sea, our most secure and safe defence, better than either Castle or Forts, which if it be commanded by others, it lays us open to much peril and danger. Secondly, the whole Kingdom is concerned in point of Honour, for it is one of the most ancient and Honourable Rights of the Crown of England, even the Dominion of the Sea; and all Records do shew, how the Kings and People of England have ever been careful that this Honour should never perish; and certainly the whole Kingdom is concerned in point of Trade and profit, for the Traffick doth not only enrich the Maritime places, but the In-land Towns; and if Trading fail, the In-land places will find it in the fall of the prizes of Wooll, Lead, and staple Commodities. This experience sheweth daily, when upon every stop of the Vent of Cloth, there cometh such out-cries by the Weaver, Fuller, Spinner, and Wooll-growers themselves, and the Authority of the Law shews the same in the Book of Assize, which your Lordships know better than I: It appeareth that certain men went into the Country, and cast out a fame, that for that year no Wooll should be transported beyond the Seas; presently upon this the price of Wools fell, and those men were called into question, and were adjudged in a Fine for it. Now if a Rumour did so much abate the Trade in the Heart of the Kingdom, what would the loss of the Dominion of the Sea do, which exposeth us and all our Trade to the mercy of our Neighbours? Therefore since the Realm and the whole Kingdom is concerned in point of honour, safety, and profit, what reason if all should contribute to the maintenance of it? This, or to this effect, I did formerly declare to you the Judges by his Majesties Commandment, and his Majesty received satisfaction, in that you made a full Declaration thereof in your Circuits; and this I may say, for the most part, the Subjects have shewed themselves most dutiful and obedient in this service of his Majesty, and this year the sum imposed upon the County of York, being 12000 l. is brought in already by the Sheriff, and so is most part of Lancashire, and other Shires; but when his Majesty heard of some refusals, though he had cause to be sensible of it, yet was far from being transported with Passion, but thought thought good to resort to the advice of you his Judges, who are sworn to give him faithful and true Counsel in that which pertaineth to the Law; and this his Majesty, as well for the direction of his own course, as for the satisfaction of his Subjects, requiring you to deliver your Opinions herein, to which you returned an answer under your own hands: And because the Commandment which you received of the King is expressed in a Princely Letter under his own Signature, I shall not take upon me to repeat it, you shall hear it read; which being delivered by my Lord Keeper to one of the Clerks in Court, was read, to this or the like effect.

Carolus Rex.

TRuffy and Well-beloved, we greet you well; Taking into our Princely consideration, that the honour and safety of this our Realm of England, the preservation whereof is only intrusted in our own care, was and is now more nearly concerned than in former times, as well by divers Councils and attempts to take from us the Dominion of the Sea, of which we are sole Lords and rightful Owners, the loss whereof would be of greatest danger and peril to this Kingdom, and other our Dominions, We for the avoiding of these and the like dangers, well weighing with our selves, that where the good and safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom in danger, there the charge and defence ought to be born by all the Realm in general, did for prevention of so publick a mischief resolve with our selves to have a Royal Navy provided, that might be of force and power, with Almighty Gods blessing and assistance, to protect and defend this our Realm, and our Subjects therein, from all such perils and dangers; and for that purpose we issued forth Writs under our Great Seal of England, and directed to all our Sheriffs of all our several Counties of England and Wales, commanding thereby all our said Subjects in every City, Town and Village, to provide such a number of Ships well furnished, as might serve for this our Royal purpose, and which might be done with the greatest equality that could be. In Performance whereof, though generally throughout all the Counties of this our Realm we have found in our Subjects great cheerfulness and alacrity, which we graciously interpret as a testimony, as well of their dutiful affections to us, and to our service, as of the respect they have to the Publick, which well becometh every good Subject: Nevertheless finding that some few, happily out of ignorance, what the Laws and Customs of this our Realm are, or out of a desire to be eased and freed in their particulars (how general soever the charge ought to be) have not yet paid and contributed the several Rates and Assessments that were set upon them; and foreseeing in our Princely Wisdom, that from hence divers Suits and Actions are not unlikely to be commenced and prosecuted in our several Courts at Westminster, we desirous to avoid such inconveniences, and out of our Princely love and affection to all our People, being willing to prevent such Errours as any of our loving Subjects may happen to run into, have thought fit, in a case of this nature, to advise with you our Judges, who, we doubt not, are all well studied and informed in the Rights of our Sovereignty. And because the Tryals in our several Courts, by the formality in Pleading, will require a long protraction, We have thought expedient by this our Letter directed to you all, to require your Judgments in the Case, as it is set down in the inclosed Paper, which will not only gain time, but also be of more Authority to over-rule any Prejudicate Opinions of others in the point.

Given under our Signet at our Court at White-Hall, the second day of February, in the twelfth year of our Reign, A. D. 1636.

This being thus read, the Lord Keeper commanded the Case inclosed to be read, being as followeth.

Carolus Rex.

WHen the good and safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom in danger, whether may not the King by Writ under the Great Seal of England, command all the Subjects of this Kingdom, at their charge, to provide and furnish such number of Ships with Men, Victuals, and Munition, and for such time as he shall think fit, for the defence and safeguard of the Kingdom from such danger and peril, and by Law compel the doing thereof, in case of refusal or refractoriness? And whether in such a case is not the King the sole Judge, both of the danger, and when, and how the same is to be prevented and avoided?

May it please your Most Excellent Majesty,
WE have according to your Majesties Command, every man by himself, and all of us together, taken into consideration the Case and Question signed by your Majesty, and inclosed in your Royal Letter: And we are of Opinion, that when the good and safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom in danger, your Majesty may by Writ under the Great Seal of England, command all the Subjects of this your Kingdom, at their charge, to provide and furnish such number of Ships with Men, Munition, and Victuals, and for such time as your Majesty shall think fit, for the defence and safeguard of the Kingdom from such danger and peril; and that by Law your Majesty may compel the doing thereof, in case of refusal or refractoriness: And we are also of Opinion, that in such a Case your Majesty is the sole Judge, both of the danger, and when, and how the same is to be prevented and avoided.

The said Case, with the Judges Opinion thereunto (formerly in private delivered to his Majesty) being thus publickly made known by my Lord Keeper, who withall caused their several names to be read, as they were in order subscribed (all the Judges being present save Judge Croke) my Lord Keeper spoke as followeth,

My Lords,

This being the Uniform Resolution of all the Judges of England with one voice, and set under their own hands; I say, this being foretold, as they do here express upon every mans particular studying the Case, and upon a general

Anno 1636. ral Conference among themselves, it is of very great Authority, for the very Lives and Lands of the Kings Subjects are to be determined by these Reverend Judges, much more a Charge of this nature, which God knows cannot be burdensome to any, but is of singular use and consequence, and for the safety of the whole Kingdom; the Command from his Majesty is, that I should publish this your Opinion in this place, and give order that it should be entred in this Court, in the High Court of Chancery, in the Courts of Kings-Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, for this is a thing not fit to be kept in a corner: And his further Command is, that you the Judges do declare and publish this general Resolution of all the Judges of England throughout all parts of the Kingdom, that all men may take notice thereof, and that those his Subjects which have been in any error may inform themselves, or be reformed; you have great cause to declare it with joy, and you can hardly do it with honour enough to the King, that in so high a point of his Sovereignty, he hath been pleased to descend, and to communicate with you his Judges, which sheweth, that Justice and Sovereignty in his Majesty doth kiss each other; his pleasure further being, that you let all know, that it is not his purpose by this Resolution to stop or check the Actions or Suits which any have brought, or shall bring, concerning this; for it is his Majesties Command, that all such as proceed in an Action about the same have equal and meet Justice, and they be suffered to proceed in course of Law, so as you call the Kings Learned Council unto their proceedings, that they may not be surprised. Now, my Lords, I have little more to say but this, I am sure of that, if any contrary Opinion shall yet remain amongst men, it must proceed from those which are Sons of the Law, salices essent artes, &c.) And you the Judges of the Realm, you are and ever have been accounted the Fathers of the Law; then in good Faith it will ill become the Son to dispute against the Father. Having thus delivered unto you what I received in Commandment from his Majesty, and as his Majesty doth, so do I leave it to your Judgments.

The Judges having subscribed the Legality of the Shipwrights, His Majesty commanded the said Attestation to be enrolled in all the Courts of Westminster-Hall; which was Warrant enough for His Majesty to proceed against any Defaulters: one more signal and notorious than others; Mr. Hampden of Buckinghamshire appeared upon Process and required Oyer of those Writs, which being granted him according to Law, he demurr'd in Law thereto, and demands the Judges Opinions upon the Legality of those Writs, which was argued in the Exchequer-Chamber; all the Judges of the Land and Barons of the Exchequer (except Crooke and Hutton) were of opinion for the Writs, and therefore the Barons of the Exchequer gave Sentence for the King against Hampden accordingly, as will hereafter by their Opinions appear.

Upon the seventeenth of March Her Majesty was safely delivered of the Lady Ann Her third Daughter.

Anno 1637. The Prince Elector Palatine and his Brother Prince Rupert departed from the Court in the beginning of this year: hopes they had of atchieving

Car. 13. somewhat in order to the Restitution to their Antient Patrimony, and accordingly getting together a small Army in Holland, with the Assistance of their Uncle His Majesty of Great Britains Money, the Prince of Orange and States also of the United Netherlands contributing (but in private) thereto, they the Year ensuing advanced into Westphalia, and besieged Lemgea, to the Succour whereof advanced Harsfield the Imperial General: and battel being joyned thereupon, the Victory fell to the Imperialists, who kill'd two thousand on the place, and took Prisoners Prince Rupert and the Lord Craven, the Elector escaping into Holland.

In Midsummer Term this year there happened two notable Trials in the Court of Star-Chamber, the one Dr. Williams Bishop of Lincoln sometimes Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, and of three other notorious Persons, Prynne, Burton, and Bastwicke, a Lawyer, a Divine, and a Physitian, as if all perfections had engaged in the Puritans Quarrel against the Party: The Bishop was charged with Subornation of two of his Countrymen, Owen and Powel, to procure the suppression of an Order of the Publick Sessions of Lincoln, which charged one Pridgeon his Servant with begetting a Bastard upon the Body of one Elizabeth Hodgson, and accordingly adjudged the said Pridgeon to keep the Child; the two suborned persons Depositions lay it upon one Boone, and acquits the other: This tampering cost the Bishop a round sum of Money, and for this he was fined 10000 l. to His Majesty, and suspended ab officio & beneficio; the Regret of which Procedure (tis doubted) had some influence upon this Prelate in the late ensuing evil times, when like a Souldier he raised and lead a Troop of Horse against His Sovereign for the Parliament in the ensuing Commotions.

The other Tryal (as we said) was of Mr. Prynne a Barrister of Lincolns-Inn, whose Trial and Sentence in the Star-Chamber you have heard before, and of Mr. Burton, who had been Clerk of the Princes Chappel, and was said by some to be discontented, for that Preferment had not been given him according (as he thought) to his Demerits, he wrote two Pamphlets against Episcopacy full of animosity, faction, and rancor; but these two (if it was possible) were quite outdone by Dr. Bastwicke the Physitian, who had some three years before wrote a reproachful Apology against all the Prelates of England, more particularly naming Arch-Bishop Laud and Bishop Juxon, whom he styles the Magnificus Rector of His Majesties Treasury by way of scoff and jeer; this reverend Prelate together with Father William his Holiness of Canterbury and the Whore of Babylon, are invited very solemnly to be Witnesses to the Baptism of the Child and Offspring of the Doctors Brain his Book. These are his words. And when he comes to answer in the Star-Chamber, he is no less extravagant, where he fills six Skins of Parchment, which he afterwards Printed and Dedicated to His Majesty, offering Proof of all: A little farther to shew him and the temper of that Party, see his Answer, which he entitleth,

The Answer of John Bastwick Doctor of Physick to the Information of Sir John Banks Knight, Attorney General: in which there is a sufficient demonstration, That the Prelates are Invaders of the Kings Prerogative Royal, contemners and despisers of the Holy Scriptures, Advancers of Popery, Superstition, Idolatry, Idolatri, and Prophanes. Also, that they abuse the Kings Authority to the oppression of his Loyalest Subjects; and therein exercise great Cruelty, Tyranny, and Injustice; and in the execution of these impious performances, they shew neither wit, honesty, nor temperance: Nor are they either Servants of God, or of the King (as they are not indeed) but of the Devil, being Enemies of God and the King, as of every living thing that is good. All which the said Dr. Bastwick is ready to maintain, &c.

Their Punishments were, Mr. Prynne was fined five thousand pounds to the King, to loose the remainder of his Ears in the Pillory, to be stigmatized on both Cheeks with an S. for Schismatick, and perpetual imprisonment in Carnarvan Castle in Wales. Bastwick and Burton each five thousand pounds fine to the King, to loose their Ears in the Pillory and to be imprisoned; the first in Lancaster Castle in Cornwal, and the other in Lancafter Castle.

And now we shall come to the Tryal in the Case of Ship-Money; it was argued before all the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber, John Hampden Esq; being Defendant, in behalf of whom argued Oliver St. John of Lincoln-Inn Barrister, the 6th. of November 1637, as followeth.

Mr. St. John's First days Argument in the Case of Hampden.

May it please your Lordships,

Pasch. 13. Car. A Scir. fac. issued to the Sheriff of Bucks. reciting, That whereas several Sums of Money mentioned in a Schedule to that Writ annexed, by a Writ under the Great Seal of England, dated 4. Augusti 11 Caroli sessed upon several persons for providing of a Ship of War were not paid, and that upon a Certiorari dated 9. Martii 13 Caroli, those Sums, and the several Persons upon whom they were assessed, were certified into the Chancery; And from thence by Mittimus dated 5. May last, were sent into the Exchequer, that Proceſs might be issued against these Defaulters.

Thereupon the Sheriff is commanded quod scire fecerit to those several Persons to appear in the Exchequer Octob. Trinit. 13 Caroli, to shew cause why they should not pay those Sums of Money assessed upon them. The Sheriff returns quod scire fecit John Hampden, Esq; who was assessed at 20 s. and he hath not paid it: Mr. Hampden hath appeared and demanded Oyer of the scir. fac. of the Schedule, the Writ dated 4. Augusti, the Certiorari, and the Mittimus, and of their several Returns; and hath thereupon demurred in Law. The Writ dated 4. Aug. 11 Caroli, because it is the ground of the issuing forth the scire fac. and so by necessary consequence, as that which first occasioned any Proceſs against him, it will be the Subject from whence will be fetched all that shall be said either for or against my Clyent, I will endeavour by breaking it into parts more clearly to present it to your Lordships view.

The thing commanded is, that this County should provide a Ship of War of 450 Tun, with 180 Men, Guns, Gunpowder, double Tackling, Victuals, and all other things necessary, and to bring her to Portsmouth by the first of March following, and from that time to provide her of Victuals, Mariners Wages, and all other necessities for 26 weeks; for the effecting this, there is power given to assess each person within the County Secundum Statum & Facultates, and to bring these Sesses by distress, & quos rebelles invenerint, to imprison their persons.

My Lords, If the Writ had stayed here and gone no further, the Command, though full in words, yet had been void in Law, because as yet it appears not for what end this Ship was to be provided: 42. Ass. Plow. A Commission to Sess mens goods notoriously suspected of Felonies before Conviction adjudged void, because therefore the Command without Cause shewn, and that sufficient in Law too, would be void. In the second place therefore they are set down to be these pro defensione Regni, tuitione Maris, securitate Subditorum, & salva conductione Navium, both outward and inward, the Sea being infested with Pyrats, and more Shipping being daily prepared ad Regnum gravandum; these are the Ends.

In the third place, the Legality of it, that every man secundum statum & facultates, should be hereto sessed, is thus enforced.

First, From custom and continued use, in these words, That the Sea per gentem Anglicanam ab olim defendi consuevit. And secondly, this use proved to be from a common ground of Equity, in these words, onus defensionis, quod omnes tangit, per omnes debet supportari: And the Rule of Equity backt by the Common Law, in these words, promt per legem & consuetudinem Regni Anglicanam fieri consuevit; the Argument stands thus: All have benefit by defence of the Realm, and therefore by the Law the charge ought to be born by all.

Thence it is further enforced, that every man, even by his Allegiance, is bound to contribute to this Charge, the Command being in fide & legiancia quibus nobis tenemini: of these parts the Writ consists, which all, being put together in brief, declare the Scope and End of the issuing forth thereof, to be the Defence and Safety of the Kingdom; a thing so necessary that it must needs be Legal, for it is too near and too narrow a conceit of the Wisdom and Policy of the Law, to think that whilst the care thereof should be confined only to the preservation of the general Members of the Body Politick, from the wrongs and pressures that might be offered from others to the Fellow-Members, that in the mean time it will leave the whole to the Violence and Will of Enemies; so that whilst each Subject considered as a part of the whole, hath a known and sure Estate in Lands, and a real property in his Goods, not to be impeached by any whatsoever within the Realm; yet considered altogether as they make up the unum compositum, they should have in them only precariam possessionem or Tenancy at Will in regard of Forreiners.

My Lords, This cannot be, for the Law is so careful herein, that even afar off it foresees and prevents all dangers in this kind, and that is the reason that an Alien, though a Friend, hath not capacity to purchase any land in the Realm. And if the Law be so quick-sighted, as that to prevent but possibility of danger, it keeps such Strangers from having any Land within the Realm, which desire to come by it peaceably, and for valuable consideration: By this we may easily see the great care it hath to prevent apparent dangers, which usually proceed from open force and violence; which further appears by the greatness of the Punishment which the Law inflicts upon Offenders in this kind, which is High Treason, of all other the greatest, 13. El. Dyer. 298. Story conspired beyond Sea with a Foreign State to invade

Anno 1637. vade the Realm, and though nothing was attempted, yet it was adjudged High Treason. And 21. E. 3. fo. 23, & 45. E. 3. 25. A man killed a Captain that was going with 20 Men at Arms to the King in his Wars, and adjudged to be High Treason: And so, by some Opinions in print, is to burn or sink any of the Kings Ships. By the greatness of the punishment for breach of the Negative part of the Law, we might understand the peremptoriness and force of the Affirmative part; so that my Lords, in this Case the question is not de Re, for by the Law the safety of the Realm is to be provided, for Salus populi suprema Lex. Neither is the question de Personis, either in respect of the persons who are to bear the Charge of it, or of the persons whom the Law hath intrusted with the care and power of this Common Defence. For the first, that is, the Persons that are to bear this Charge that is in the Writ, quod omnes tangit per omnes debet supportari, the reasons of the Writ are weighty and agreeable to the Rule both of the Civil and Common-Law: Qui sentit commodum sentire debet & onus; so that I conceive the burthen lies upon all in respect of our bona natura: our lives and persons are equally as dear to one as to another, in respect of our bona fortuna; so secundum statum & facultates, because the greater the state and means of livelihood, the greater the Benefice by the Defence. The Law in this case of defence against the Invasions of living Enemies, being the same with that against our Soyl and Ground, by the Inundations and Outrages of the Sea and fresh Water: For by the Law, as appears by the Commission of Sewers, as well before the Statute 28. H. 8. as since, to the repairing of a Bank, or Cawsey, River; or other Sewer, all are chargeable that have thereby defensionem, commodum vel salvationem qualitercumq; all that have defence must be Selled. The Asses must be equally distributed, and therefore laid upon every man within the level, pro rata portionis tenura sua, seu pro quantitate communis pastarum vel piscariae, the more Land; Common, or Benefit each man hath, according to the proportion the Asses must be set: So that, my Lords, in the second place the question will not be, Whether my Clyent by Law be exempted from the Charge of the Defence of the Realm, for with other His Majesties Subjects he ought to bear the common burthen, and more or less may be thereof laid upon him proportionably to his Estate and means of Livelyhood.

Neither thirdly, is there any question to be made, but the Law hath intrusted the Person of His Royal Majesty with the care of this Defence: The Defence and Protection which we have in our Bodies, Lands, and Goods against any within the Realm, we know it is from Him; for all Jurisdiction legal, both Ecclesiastical and Civil which defends us in them, is wholly in His Majesty; The same it is in case of Forein Defence, even by the Jus Gentium, as appears in the Text by the Peoples desiring that they might be like all other Nations, by having one that might judge them, and go out before them and fight their Battels, That the King (and that legally) calleth the Kingdom Regnum nostrum; And every City and great Town Civitatem & villam nostram quoad proprietatem, it cannot be, because that it is the several Landowners. It must be so therefore principally in this respect, quoad protectionem & defensionem. Neither hath the Law invested the Crown with this height of Sovereignty, only as an Honorarium for the greater Splendor of it, but likewise as a Duty of the Crown, or pars Ministerii, for the good and safety of the Realm, which in many of the antient Commissions of the Sewers before the Statute 28. H. 8. is thus expressed, That the King, ratione Regie Dignitatis & per Juramentum, est asscriptus ad providendum Salvationi Regni circumquaque; So that both in Honour, and by his Oath, he is bound to provide for the safety of the Realm, and that circumquaque.

My Lords, by the Law the King is Pater-Familias, who by the Law of Oeconomicks is not only to keep peace at home, but to protect his Wife and Children, and whole Family from Injuries from abroad.

It is his vigilancy and watchfulness that discovers who are our Friends and Foes, and that after such discovery first warns us of them, for he only hath power to make War and Peace.

Neither hath the Law only intrusted the care of the Defence to His Majesty, but it hath likewise, secondly, put the Armatam potestatem and means of defence wholly into His Hands; for when the Enemy is by Him discovered, and declared, it is not in the power of the Subject to order the way and means of Defence, either by Sea or by Land, according as they shall think fit; for no Man, without Commission or special License from His Majesty, can set forth any Ships to Sea for that purpose; neither can any man without such Commission or License, unless upon sudden coming of Enemies, erect a Fort, Castle, or Bulwark, though upon his own Ground; neither, but upon some such emergent cause, it is lawful for any Subject, without special Commission to Arm or draw together any Troops or Companies of Souldiers, or to make any general Collections of Money of any of His Majesties Subjects, though with their consent.

Neither in the third place is His Majesty armed only with His Primitive Prerogative of Generalissimo, & Commander in Chief, that none can advance towards the Enemy until He gives the Signal, nor in other manner according to His Direction: but likewise with all other Powers requisite for the full execution of all things incident to so high a Place; as well in times of eminent Danger, as of actual War.

The Sheriff of each County, who is but His Majesties Minister, he hath the Posse Comitatus, and therefore it must needs follow that the Posse Regni is in Himself.

My Lords, not to burn day-light longer, it must needs be granted, that in this business of defence the Suprema potestas is inherent in His Majesty, as part of His Crown and Kingly Dignity.

So that as the care and provision of the Law of England extends in the first place to Forein Defence, and secondly, lays the burthen upon all, & for ought I have to say against it, it maketh the quantity of each mans Estate the Rule whereby this burthen is to be equally apportioned upon each person: So likewise hath it in the third place made His Majesty the sole Judge of dangers from Foreiners, and when and how the same are to be prevented; and to come nearer, hath given him power by Writ under the Great Seal of England, to command the Inhabitants of each County to provide Shipping for the defence of the Kingdom, and may by Law compel the doing thereof.

So that, my Lords, as I still conceive the question will not be de persona, in whom the Suprema potestas of giving the Authorities or Powers to the Sheriff, which are mentioned in this Writ, doth ly, for that it is in the King; but the question is only de modo, by what Medium or Method, this Supreme Power which is in his Majesty, doth infuse and let out it self into this particular; and whether or no in this particular, such of them have been used as have rightly accommodated and applied this Power unto this Writ in the intended way of Defence; for the Law of England, for the applying of that Supreme Power which it hath settled in his Majesty to the particular Causes and Occasions, hath set down a Method and known Rules, which are necessarily to be observed.

In his Majesty there is a twofold Power, Voluntas, or Potestas Interna, or Naturalis; Externa or Legalis: which by all the Judges of England, 2 Ric. 3. fol. 11. is expressed per voluntatem Regis in Camera, and voluntatem Regis per Legem.

My Lords, The Forms and Rules of Law are not observed in this Case; this Supreme Power not working per media, it remains still in himself, as Voluntas Regis interna, and operates not to the Good and Relief of the Subject, that standeth in need.

To instance;

His Majesty is the Fountain of Bounty; but a Grant of Lands without Letters Patents, transfers no Estate out of the King to the Patentee, nor by Letters Patents, but by such words as the Law hath prescribed. His Majesty is the Fountain of Justice; and though all Justice which is done within the Realm, flows from this Fountain, yet it must run in certain and known Channels. An Assize in the Kings Bench, or an Appeal of Death in the Common Pleas, are coram non Iudice, though the Writ be his Majesties Command; and so of the several Jurisdictions of every Court. The Justice whereby all Felons and Traytors are put to death, proceeds from his Majesty; but if a Writ of execution of a Traytor or Felon be awarded by his Majesty without Appeal, or Indictment preceding, an Appeal of Death will lie by the Heir against the Executioner, if the Process be legal, and in a right Court; yet I conceive that his Majesty alone, without assistance of the Judges of the Court, cannot give Judgment: I know that King John, H. 3. and other Kings, have sitten in the King's Bench, and in the Exchequer; but for ought appears, they were assisted by their Judges. This I ground upon the Book-Case of 2 R. 3. fol. 10, & 11. where the Party is to make Fine and Ransom at the King's Will and Pleasure. This Fine, by the Opinion of the Judges of England, must be set by the Judges before whom the Party was convicted, and cannot be set by the King: The Words of the Book are thus, In terminis, & non per Legem, per se in Camera sua, nec aliter coram se nisi per Iudiciarios suos, & hoc est voluntas Regis, scilicet per Iudiciarios suos, & per Legem suam to do it.

And as without the Assistance of his Judges, who are his settled Council at Law, his Majesty applies not his Laws and Justice in many Cases unto his Subjects: so likewise in other Cases; neither is this sufficient to do it without assistance of his great Council in Parliament. If an erroneous Judgment was given before the Statute of 27 Eliz. in the King's Bench, the King could not relieve his grieved Subjects any way but by Writ of Error in Parliament: Neither can he out of Parliament alter the old Laws, or make new; or make any Naturalizations or Legitimations, nor do some other things; and yet is the Parliament his Majesties Court too, as well as other his Courts of Justice: It is his Majesty that gives Life and Being to it; for he only summons, continues, and dissolves it; and he by his le vent enlivens all the Actions in it, and after the dissolution of it, by supporting his Courts of Justice, he keeps them still alive by putting them in execution. And although in the Writ of Wast, and some other Writs, it is called Commune Concilium Regni, in respect that the whole Kingdom is representatively there. And 2ly, that the whole Kingdom have access thither in all things that concern them; other Courts affording Relief but in special Causes. And thirdly, in respect that the whole Kingdom is interested in, and receive benefit by the Laws and Things there passed; yet it is Concilium Regni, no otherwise than the Common Law is Lex Terra, that is, per Mandatum Regis, whose it is, if I may so term it, in a great part, even in point of Interest, as he is the Head of the Commonwealth, and whose it is, wholly in trust for the good of the whole Body of the Realm; for he alone is trusted with the execution of it. The Parliament is the King's Court, and therefore in the Summons, the King calls it Parliamentum nostrum: so the Returns of the Knights and Burgeses, Quod sint ad Parliamentum Domini Regis, Fleta lib. 2. cap. 2. Habet Rex Curiam suam in Concilio suo in Parliamentis suis. And therefore the Pleadings there anciently were usually to begin for the most part Queritur Domino Regi, Petitions by private persons, Supplicavit Domino Regi, though for relief against others; Inquisitions and Venire fac' returnable there sometimes, coram Domino Rege & Concilio suo, as appears by infinite Precedents in the Parliament-Pleas of E. 1. E. 2. times, both in the Tower, and many Cases Adjourned into the King's Bench.

The Patents past by Authority of Parliament, and likewise the Acts of Parliament, had anciently so much of the King's Name and Style in them, that as it appears in the Princes Case in the 8th. Report, it was a hard matter, otherwise than by Circumstances, to know whether they had any thing of the Parliament in them or not; and from those times even until now the Alteration is nothing in substance, for the Acts most part are thus; It is Enacted for our Sovereign Lord the King, with the Assent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons; the King both then and still is Pars agens, the rest are but Consensientes. My Lords, to apply all to the Case in question by the Cases before-cited, it appears, that what was done in Parliament by the Law-phrase and Dialect is said to be done by the King; for as the Civilians say of the Senate, that it is pars Corporis Regis; the Maxim of Justinian, Quod Principi placet Legis vim habet, is agreed by Bracton and all the Civilians: and both he and many of them say, that both must pass the Senate, though done in the Senate, yet they be Placita Principis. So is it, although when we speak ut Vulgus, we say Fines are said to be set, and other things to be done by the King's Court; yet the Law when it saith that they be done and set by the King, by the same reason therefore, though when we speak ut vulgus, we say such a thing is done by the Parliament, yet in the Loyal account these are done by the King, the Medium or way of doing of them with the assistance or consent of his great Council in Parliament.

The

The second thing which I observe, is this; by the Cases before cited it appears, that, without the Assistance in Parliament, his Majesty cannot in many Cases communicate either His Justice or power unto his Subjects.

Hence Thirdly, it necessarily followes, as I conceive, that the Kingly Dignity doth most operate and manifest it self there, which was the opinion of all the Judges of England, declared in a Parliament 34 H. 8. as appears by Crompton Jurisd. fol. 10. who by the Kings Commandment meeting together about Point of Priviledge of Parliament, the King afterwards in declaring their opinion doth it in part of the Case in these words; 'Further we be informed by Our Judges, that we at no time stand so highly in Our Estate-Royal, as in time of Parliament, wherein we as Head, and you as Members, are conjoynd and knit together in one Body Politick; which his Declaration of it shews likewise that it was the Kings own Opinion, That he at no time stood so Highly in his Estate, as in time of Parliament: It appears not by the Record that this Writ which giveth power to sell and alter the property of the Defendants Goods, issued from his Majesty Sitting in his Estate-Royal in Parliament, and therefore cannot be intended by your Lordship and the Court so to doe; If therefore it hath issued from his Majesty in the Chancery, or otherwise then in Parliament, where he stands in that height of Sovereignty and perfection, that he hath not so much as a posse nocere, the question is whether it be erroneously issued yea or no? My Lords, I have now put the case, which although in this Particular case it concerns the defendant only, yet in consequence as it appears it concerns both his Majesty and the whole State, and that in matters of the highest nature possible. His Majesty is concerned in the way and manner of execution of the highest and greatest trust which the Law hath reposed in him, the safety and preservation of the kingdom; the Subject is concerned in that wherein he is most tender in the property of what he hath.

My Lords, the greatness and height of the case puts me in this Dilemma, not to argue it were to deny that full submission of the command of some of your Lordships that is sitting; neither should I doe any Clyent that service which he expects; If I proceed the cause is to weighty and too great for me to Argue, but I know the safest way is obedience, and that the Court cannot expect much from me. I having therefore already put the case I will go on in the next place to State it, and afterwards to argue it; the Question being concerning the validity of the Command in the writs, which extends so far, as to the altering of the property of the Subjects goods without their consent, and yet this being for a thing so necessary as the defence of the Kingdom, both at Land, and Sea, for the ends of the issuing forth of the writ, as by it appears, are pro Defensione Regni, Tutione Maris, Securitate Subditorum, salva Conductione Navium, both outward and inward. In the stating of this great Question, I will in the first place endeavour to present your Lordships with these known and undoubted ways and means, whereby the Law hath provided for the defence of the Realm both at Land and Sea without the way in the Writ; the first whereof is by Tenures of Land; The Services which grow hereby due are of two sorts:

Services in kind, which tend immediately to Action in times of War; some whereof are for Land-Service, and some for Sea-Service: The second, such as supply his Majesty with Money for that purpose.

The second Way is, Those many Prerogatives which the Law hath settled in the Crown, and made peculiar unto it, for the defence of the Kingdom in general.

The third is, The particular Supplies of Money for the Defence of the Sea alone in time of Danger, both ordinary and extraordinary, the thing principally intended in the Writ.

These, My Lords, will be Materials whereupon afterwards I shall state the Question.

In that of Tenures, I shall begin with the Services in kind, and those which tend immediately to Action in time of War.

The King's of this Realm, as they are the Heads of the Commonwealth in general, so are they the Head and Root from whence all Tenures spring; for as our Books agree, all the Land within the Realm is held mediately or immediately of the Crown: As therefore the Law hath appropriated the Defence of the Kingdom to the Kings thereof: so hath it, as one of the principal ways for the effecting thereof, trusted them with the reservation of such Services as might serve for that purpose.

Amongst which, intending first to speak of Land-Service, I will begin with the Tenures by Knights-Service: Every man that holds by this Service from a whole Knight's-Fee, to any part of it, ought to find a man competently Armed for the Wars: neither doth the finding of Arms satisfie this Tenure; for he that holds by a whole Knights-Fee, ought to be forty days in the Service, and he that holds by the Moyety of a Knights-Fee, twenty days, and so in proportion.

By the Books of the Knights-Fee of H. 2. E. 1. and H. 6th's. time, in the Exchequer, it appears, that there were many Thousand Knights-Fees held of the Crown: And in the Red Book it is said, That it was in ore omnium; That in the Conqueror's time, there were 30000 held of him; some since have computed them to 60000; which perhaps may be with addition of those that are held of common persons; upon which I shall insist.

But it may be Objected, That in respect that these Services are reserved by the King, that therefore they were not instituted only for the Defence of the Realm, but may be exacted for Foreign Wars, or other-where, for his Majesties peculiar Service, as he shall think fit, which may be enforced both from the Name which our old Books and Deeds style this Service by, when due to the Crown, that is Forinsecum Servitium; and secondly, from the use thereof; it having been performed in Normandy, Gascoigne, Thoulouse and Ireland, as appears by the Red Book, and many Cases put together in the Institutes in the Chapter of Escuage.

To the first objection of the Name, the answer is clear; for anciently when those that held immediately of the Crown by this service, did enfeof others of the Land so held, desiring to free themselves of the burthen of this service, besides the services which they reserved to themselves; they likewise commonly in the conveyance made provision for their own acquittal against the King, and the Feoffee took the whole burthen thereof upon himself: And therefore in the Book of Knights Fees of H. 2. time, in so many hundred Certificates of those that held immediately of the King, William London of Wiltshire, shire certifies thus; Quod nullum Militem habeo Anno feoffatum, sed debeo defendere Feodum meum per 1637. servitium Corporis mei; of this nature are three or four others: All the rest after certifies by how many Knights Fees he holds, then likewise he certifies that defendit, &c. against the King, by such and such Milites Feoffatos: and in these Deeds of Feoffment, after the reservation to the Feoffer, was this Clause, & faciend' inde, sometimes forinsecum servitium, sometimes Regale servitium, Bract. lib. 2. fo. 36, 37. and Fleta, lib. 3. cap. 14. saith, that it is called Regale servitium, quia est servitium Dom. Regis; and by them Regale servitium, and servitium Domini Regis, are all but one and the same thing; to that therefore I shall need give no further answer.

Car. 13.

By the same Authors it is called Forinsecum servitium, quia capitur foris, sive extra servitium, quod fit Domino Capitali; and that is the meaning of the word: and that it is called Forinsecum, in regard the service is to be done foris, that is, out of the Kingdom, is cleared to your Lordships by these Cases, P. 49. H. 3. Com' 31 E. 1. Ro. 32. Dor. Com' Hill' 33 E. 1. Ro. 52. Dorset. Cornage, which we know is to wind a Horn within the Realm; in all those three Cases is called Servitium Forinsecum Domini Regis Cornagii; and Castle-guard in the County of Northumberland, at the Castle of Bamburgh, called Forinsecum Domini Regis.

To the second part of this Objection, that this service hath been often performed beyond Sea.

For the present, I shall give answer thereunto but in part, by telling your Lordships, without making proof of it as yet; that Escuage, which is all the Penalty that lies upon the Tenant for his default, cannot be assessed but in Parliament; which if it be so proved that the King cannot command this service otherwise, then for the good and defence of the Realm, in regard that if it be otherwise, no Escuage can be assessed without consent in Parliament, which likewise by indentment, according to the good of the Kingdom, is likely to receive by the service, will proportionably lessen or increase the Escuage.

My Lords, that this service was instituted for the defence of the Realm, appears by the care which the Law hath always taken for the increase and preservation of these services: So that if the Lord purchase part of the Land, yet the whole service remains; which being entire, and to be done by the body of a man, in that of being a Steward, or Bayliff, or other private services, makes an extinguishment of the whole.

The Authorities in point are many in this; the Statute of Mortmain, 7 E. 1. The mischief by conveying Land to Houses of Religion is there expressed to be quod servitia que ex hujusmodi feodis debentur & qua ad defensionem Regni ab initio provisum fuerunt indebite subtrahuntur: And besides the Declaration, that they are for defence of the Realm, that Statute likewise provides for increase of them; for if the Lord enter not within the year and day after the Feoffment, the King is to enter; and as the words of the Statute are, Alios inde Feoffavimus pro certa servitia nobis inde ad defensionem Regni nostri facienda; the words are observable, pro servitia nobis inde facienda: for though the service be to be done to the King, yet it must be so done to the King, as it be ad defensionem Regni.

This explains the Charter of H. 1. enrolled in the Red Book in the Exchequer, and cited in

Mat. Paris, in the first leaf of H. 1. Reign, where the King frees Knights service Land from all Gelds and Taxes, that being eased of this burthen, & parati sint ad servitium meum & ad defensionem Regni mei. In the Black Book in the Exchequer, fo. 3. Scutage defined ut imminente in Regnum hostium machinatione, it is then due. So Bracton in his second Book, fo. 36, 37. that they are so propter exercitum & Patria tuitionem, and to be performed certis temporibus, cum casus & necessitas evenierit: Britton, fol. 162. Les Fees de Chartre fuerunt purvus at defence de nostre Realme. The Books are express, 35 H. 6. H. 8. R. fo. 105. Talbot's Case, 6 Report fo. 2. Bruerton's Case, Inst. p. 103. Co. Preface to the ninth Report.

For the further clearing of what is said already, and what I am to add, it is observable, that these services are not created ex provisione hominis, but ex provisione Legis; for as it is in 33 H. 6, 7. and 6 Report, fo. 7. Wheeler's Case, and in the ninth Report, fo. 123. Laws Case. If the King grants Lands without reserving any service at all, or absque aliquo inde reddendo, the Patentee shall hold the Land by Knights service in Capite. The Books of 24 E. 3. 65. Stamford Prerog. fo. 10. Inst. Pl. said, that the first Kings of this Realm had all the Lands of it in their own hands, which appears likewise by this, that all the Land within the Kingdom is held mediately or immediately of the Crown, in the transferring of these Lands to the several Inhabitants: We see by the Cases before-cited, that the care and provision of the Law was, that all should by Tenure of the Crown be made liable to the defence of the Kingdom: I shall shew briefly therefore, how the Kings of this Realm have executed the Trust, for the defence both of Land and Sea.

And first a little further to prosecute the Land-service, because the Tenures by Knights-service ties the Tenant only to forty days service, and that for the defence of the Realm, only in the general they therefore reserved divers other Tenures for particular and certain services, as Grand Serjeancies, some whereof, as in the Institutes, fo. 106. is observed, were for service of Honour in time of peace, and some for Military service; of which last sort, as appears in the Books of Serjeancies in the Chequer, and many Rolls of them in the Tally-Office, were very many, some whereof were to carry the Kings Banner, some to summon the Tenants ad exercitum, some to be of the Vanguard, some of the Reer, some to serve in Wales, some in Scotland, some infra quatuor maria, some infra 5. Portus Anglia, of these are services of all sorts necessary for an Army; and in respect of the multitude of these Military Serjeancies over the others, as forgetting them, Brit. fo. 164. in his definition of Grand Serjeancy saith, that they are per defence del' Realme, & Fleta, lib. 3. cap. 16. Magna Serjeantia Regem tantum respiciunt & Patria defensionem: Besides the Grand Serjeancies of this nature likewise are the Tenures by Cornage, to give warning of the Enemies coming into the Kingdom, and the Tenures by Castle-guard; these by Litt. were 111. to defend the Castles when the Enemy enters the Realm; within ancient times were Forts and Bulwarks of the Realm, whereof as Mr. Camden, p. 815. observes, there were 1115 in H. 2. time, whereof a great part, and especially such as were upon the Sea-Coasts and Frontiers of Scotland and Wales, the places of greatest danger were the Kings.

And

And besides those Grand Serjeancies which were to be performed by the bodies of men, there are Petty Serjeancies for the finding of Armour of all sorts for the Wars.

My Lords, that the former Kings did execute this power of Tenures for the defence of the Realm, according to the trust by the Law reposed in them, appears further in this, that in the places of greatest danger, there were ever most of them.

All along the Sea-Coasts of Kent and Sussex, nearest of all others to France, are the Cinque-Ports, who besides their Sea-service, have all Jurisdiction within themselves; that the Inhabitants for weakning these Ports, might not be compelled to travel out of them for any matters of Justice, and divers other Priviledges, both to invite the people to live there, and to encourage them to the defence of those places: And Dover Castle, the Key of the Kingdom, as of greatest consequence, so hath it two hundred Tenures by Castle-guard, wanting very few, besides divers Tenures for the repairing of the Castle, which appears by the Record called the Quire of Dover, remaining in the Chequer; which that it is of Record, and determines the services of the Cinque-Ports, as Dooms-day doth the Tenures of Ancient Demeasne, appears in Com. 27 E. 1. Ro. 35. and by another Record added to that of Dover, 20 E. 4. It likewise appears, that in times of War the King is to maintain in that Castle 1000 Foot, and 100 Horse for the defence of it.

Next, to come to the Borders of Scotland, there we find the Franchise of the Bishoprick of Durham instituted likewise for the defence of those parts, which William the Conqueror, as Malmf. fo. 157. observes, first made a County Palatine, and Walter Bishop thereof Ducem pariter & Episcopum & refrenaret Rebellionem gentis gladio & reformaret mores eloquio.

And besides all this, in all the Counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, and Westmerland, are more Tenures for the defence of the Realm, than in any of the In-land Counties, and those likewise most proper for bodies Com. Pa. 31 E. 1. Ro. 32. Dor. Its therefore found by Inquisition returned into the Chequer out of Parliament, that every Lord of a Town within the County of Northumberland, held by Cornage, when the Scots entred the Realm. Mr. Camden in his Brittania, pag. 794. & 799. mentioning the great number of Petty Baronies and Castles all along those Marches which Britt. fo. 87. and Institutes fo. 73. say were instituted for the defence of the Realm, observes herein likewise the policy of the Law, and likewise in the many Serjeancies, therein advancing of the Kings Army to be of the Vantguard, and in the retreat in the Reer, those people best knowing the ways and passages of the Country.

Whence, my Lords, when we come to the Marches of Wales, there we find another County Palatine, I mean that of Chester, and the care of Chester and his Barons to oppose the Welch Invasions. Upon those Marches, besides the like services, as upon the borders of Scotland, there were likewise many Lord Marchers of several Baronies, who had administration of all Justice within themselves, secundum legem Marchie; and for their services to be done against the Welch, they had two special priviledges, that is the third peny of all the spoils in War, as was adjudged in Parliament, 20 E. 3. B. R. Rol. 123. in that great Case between the Earls of Glocester and Hereford, and in the Parl. Book 20 E. 1.

And secondly, all the Prisoners that they took in the Wars, per consuetudinem Marchie, belonged to the takers of them.

Tr. 25 E. 1. Roll. 28. Cor. Roger de Knewell in partibus Montgomery in Guerra Wallia 23 E. 1. had taken three Welch Prisoners; and because by the Kings Command they were released of their imprisonment, it is there adjudged that the King should pay him 40 l. in recompence; and so it was adjudged Com. Hill. 25 E. 1. Ro. 11. Dor.

My Lords, his Majesty is in the actual possession of these Military services, by taking the profits of Wards, Marriages, Reliefs, Licenses and Forfeitures for alienation, and Primer Seisin, as fruits of them.

That the profits of Wards and Marriages are to be spent in Wars for the defence of the Realm, as well as for bringing up the Ward; the Books are 35 H. 6. 41. Britt. 162.

That the Lords receive the profits, because he is not able to do the service: If the Kings Ward was within Age when the Tenants were summoned ad exercitum, he paid no Escuage, as is adjudged, M. 20. E. 4. Ro. 9. & 20. Com. and M. 28. E. 1. Bra. irrott. So it is for reliefs and Licenses, and forfeitures of Alienation of the Kings Tenant without his consent might not be altered, and for Primer Seisin the King was to receive the profits, till the Tenant by his homage had assured the King of his service, the Summons always commanding him to be at the place of Rendezvous in fide & homagio quibus nobis tenemini: All these things being but fruits that fall from these Military services.

My Lords, now to come to Sea-service, the care of the execution of this trust by Tenures was extended likewise to the defence of the Sea.

The Town of Lewes in Sussex holds by this service, Quod si Rex ad Mare Custodiend. suos mittere voluisset, they paid so much money; Et hos habebant qui in Navibus Arma Custodiebant, This, my Lord, is in Dooms-day: in Colchester, every house to pay 6 d. per annum, ad victum Soldatorum Regis ad expeditionem terra vel Maris Warwickia si Rex per mare contra hostes suos ibat. The Town was to find four Boatswains, Salisbury then to pay so much money ad Pascendum Buflecorlos Domini Regis, which as Florentius explains the word, be Ministros Nauticos: Glocester and others such a weight of Iton, and Claves Navium Regis, others to find Horses to carry Armour and weapons, to the Ships: My Lords, of this nature are many in that Book, which particularly to mention, to gain time, I will omit.

That the Tenures of this kind after the Conquerours time continued in use, and were well known, appears by the Register fo. 2. which amongst other services is this of Shipping also instanced in these words, Quod clamat tenere de nobis per liberum servitium inveniendi nobis 5. Navis pro ann' servitiis. In the Iter Roll of Essex, 13 E. 1. Ro. 7. Its presented that the Town of Maulden tenet per Serjeanciam inveniendi unam Navem, quandocunque Rex necesse habuerit personaliter ire vel mittere propter negotia Regni. And from the time they came to the place of the Rendezvous, to stay in the Town forty days, sumptibus propriis; and being there presented, that they made default at the Welch War; they plead, they had no Summons.

So, my Lords, in the Books of Serjeancies of E. 1. time in Kent, the Town of Killingborne is to find one Ship; and in the County of Berk, Fulk Candry holds the Mannour of Padworth per Serjean-Serjeantiam inveniendi servientem, to perform Sea-service, Bxa. 8. E. 2. Rot. 40. Will. Dyer in the County of Sussex to find a certain proportion of Cordage.

Anno 1637.

Iter Kantia 21 E. 1. Rot. 46. Solomon de Campis holds per Serjeantiam tenendi Caput Dom. Regis when he is at Sea, sive necesse fuerit, and so Rot. 30. another in the same Iter Roll.

The Cinque-Ports and their Members are to find fifty seven Ships, and twenty men in each Ship, and a Master, Armatus & bene ariatos; from the time that they come to the Randezvous, they are to continue in the service fifteen days at their own charge, and afterwards as long as the King pleaseth; but after the fifteen days, the King is to pay the Master and Constable 6 d. a day, and the rest 3 d. a day for their wages: This service appears by the Record of the Quire of Dover before-mentioned, and the Patent-Roll 7 H. 7. pars. Both which Records imply, that this service of theirs cannot be exacted otherways than for the defence of the Sea; for it cannot be demanded above once in a year, nor then neither, nisi necesse fuerit, Parl. Pet. 1 E. 3. Rot. 4. The Barons of the Ports in consideration of this Sea-service, pray a Confirmation of their Liberties pro Salvatione dicti Navigii & Regni; and commonly when the Land-service was summoned, these likewise were summoned to the same service at Sea, as appears in the close Rolls, 28 E. 1. M. 15. 31 E. 1. and 34 E. 1. M. 15, 16. In all which years the Land-service was summoned for Scotland, and the Summons both for the one and the other run in the same words, commanding them to be at the place cum toto servitio vestro quod nobis debetis, which shews it to be a service by Tenure.

That these services of theirs are for the defence of the Realm, and likewise that there are many of the like nature besides these, which by a superficial reading of two or three Iter-Rolls, I have cited, appears by the Parliament Roll 13 E. 3. pars 1. num. 11. where is declared in these words, that the Cinque-Ports, and other great Towns and Havens, are franchised pur estre guard & mure inter nous & aliens; if it fall out that they shall endeavour nostre terr' inter, & assay terr', & sunt tenus a ceo faire. My Lords, a fuller Declaration than this there cannot be, that both the Ports, and Havens, and Sea-Towns, are bound to the service of Shipping for the extraordinary defence of the Realm, as well as the ordinary.

I have now done with the services in kind; and because these which immediately tend to action alone were not sufficient to defend the Realm, and this in the frame and first constitution of the Common-wealth being foreseen, and that the Land, or fundus Regni, the most visible and constant supplier of our wants, was best able to supply this likewise; therefore besides them, there were divers other Tenures created for that purpose: Those which next I am to speak of, are such as supply his Majesty with money for that purpose.

In the Black Book in the Chequer, lib. 1. cap. 7. its said, that in Primitivo Regni statu ad stipendia & donativa Militum, & alia necessaria ex Castellis, and other Lands, in quibus Agricultura non exercebatur, pecunia numerata succedebat; it might from hence be colourably inferred, that in respect ex provisione Legis upon the Kings passing of Lands, a Tenure for Knights-service for the defence of the Realm was to be reserved, that in case upon such Grants Rents only without any such Tenure were reserved, that yet this money should be employed for Souldiers wages, and other necessary affairs of the Commonwealth, ad stipendia Militum, & alia necessaria: But not to press this further;

Its plain, that all men within the Kingdom were not equally inheritably, either to the freedom of body, or propriety of Lands or Goods, but that there are degrees and ranks each differing from other in all these. 1. Villains. 2. Freeholders, either by Knights service, or free Socage. 3. Tenants of ancient Demesne, and that held by Burgage within Cities and Borough-Towns.

First for the Villain, we know, that as to his Lord he had freedom in neither, in respect of his body he could not ire quo voluit, but the Lord at his will might imprison him, in respect of his Land and Goods he might tax him de haught & de basso.

The Free-holders, the greatest part of the Realm, always had an absolute freedom in both.

The third, and that is the Tenants in ancient Demesne, and Burgers, they had an absolute freedom in their persons, but qualified in the other of propriety; not taxable at will as Villains, but for the defence, and other necessary affairs of the Realm, they might be taxed without consent in Parliament.

My Lords, that these had a divided Estate from other free Tenants is clear; and first for Tenants in ancient Demesne; if it be questioned whether such Land be ancient Demesne yea or no, the issue is in these words, whether it be ancient Demesne, or frank-free: By this it appeareth, that they have not a frank and free Estate as the others have, as all our Books agree; they have no Vote in Parliament, for they have no voice in Election of Knights, nor pay to the expences of the Knights that serve in Parliament, nor Subsidies granted in Parliament, Nat. Br. 79. & 14. is often disputed in our Books, whether Acts of Parliament extend to them, unless they be especially named; neither can they sue at Common Law for any thing that concerns the Free-hold, but only by a Writ of Right close within themselves; and therefore Bracton fo. 209. calls them Villanos Privilegiatos.

The same it is of Burgesses within Cities and Boroughs; and therefore the Statute of Merton makes it a disparagement for the Lord to marry his Warde, Villanis, & aliis sicut Burghensibus, N. B. 1. and other books, no Assizes will lye for such lands, but they are impleadable without Original Writ by a Bill of fresh force; and as a Chattel they may devise their land: by the Statute 1 E. 2. de militibus for such land, and for ancient Demesne, no man is compellable to take the order of Knighthood: much more might be brought in proof of this, which I omit.

My Lords, all our Books agree, the Tenants in ancient Demesne were to plough and manure the Kings Lands, being his Demesnes. In a Manuscript that I have seen, the Author saith, that he hath an ancient Manuscript which saith, that the Corn and other Victuals rising hereby was to store the Kings Garrisons and Castles; and considering the number of those Mannours, there being above a thousand of them in the Kings hand at the Conquest, as it appears by Doomsday, and that those Mannours for the most part are great, and that the greatest part of the Socage cage Tenures till H. 2's time, as appears by the Black Book, lib. 1. cap. 23. were to find Victuals of all sorts in kind for the provision of the Kings House, and were in his time turned into Rents; although this may seem probable, yet because I have not seen the Manuscript, I will insist no more upon it.

That for which these, and the Tenures of Burgage in the Kings Cities and Boroughs, were mentioned in the raising of money for the necessary affairs of the State, that these were anciently talliable without their consent in Parliament, is so plain and frequent in the Chequer Rolls, and the Patent Rolls, as that I intend to cite nothing in proof thereof; it will be admitted by them that argue on the other side: That which I shall endeavour to prove is, that these were not talliable at the Kings will and pleasure, but only for the defence and other necessities of State, Nat. Bre. fo. 15. 49 E. 3. 22. They be not talliable de haut & Basse, as Villains are; and therefore Bracton, fo. 209. calls them, Villanos Privilegiatos lib. Parl. fo. 112. Talliare & rationabile auxilium dare pro necessitate, N. B. 14. E. Talliable pro grand Cause, Rot. Parl. 6 E. 3. Commissions to tax Cities and Boroughs, and Ancient Demesne upon Petitions of the Commons revoked, and Writs in due form to be set, and for the time to come the King shall not assess forso, in such a manner, come ad estre fait en temps de ses Anceturs, & come il deveu par raison.

The occasion not requiring it, I shall say nothing of it when these Talliages are refused.

My Lords, I have now done with the Tenures, the first way whereby the Law hath provided for the safety of this Realm, which of themselves not inabling the Kings intrusted therewithall sufficiently to do it: the Law therefore, besides the Honours, Castles, Mannours, and other constant Revenues of the Crown, for the supportation of the ordinary charges thereof, hath appointed unto it divers Prerogatives for the extraordinary, and for this of the defence of the Realm, as one of the chiefest of them. These Prerogatives then have an influence into the Estates of all the Subjects in the Realm, and are so many, that to gain time, I will omit to mention any of them; that which I shall insist upon, will be to prove, that the Kings coming to the Crown by this Prerogative way, are to be employed for the defence, and other publick affairs of the Realm. In his Majesty there is a double capacity, Natural and Politick; all his Prerogatives are Jure Coronæ, and of all such things he is seized Jure Coronæ; and therefore, as in other Corporations, such things are Patrimonia & bona publica, to be employed for the common good; so likewise by the same reason here, the reason why the King hath Treasure-trove, and Gold and Silver Mines in the Earth, in the Case of Mines is declared to be, because the King is hereby to defend the Kingdom; and in Institutes in the Title of Soccage, fo. 28. 131. the reason of many of the rest, Quia Thesaurus Regis est fundamentum Belli, & firmamentum pacis. This I conceive to be the reason, that by the Statute 14 E. 3. ca. 1. Escheats, Wardships, Customs and Profits arising of the Realm of England, should be declared to be spent for the safeguard of the Realm, more than the profits of the Kings Mannours and Lands, and of the difference made in the Com. M. 3. R. 2. London, between Rectas provisiones Regni, which by the advice of the Lords of the Council, were to be spent in the Household, and the other profits of the Crown to be spent circa saluationem & defensionem Regni, in the Parliament Roll of 6 R. 2. N. 42. The Commons Petition, that the King will live of his own Revenues, and that Wards, Marriages, Reliefs, Escheats, Forfeitures, and other profits of the Crown, may be kept to be spent upon the Wars, for defence of the Kingdom; which sheweth, that there was always a difference made between the profits arising of the Kings Mannours and Lands, and that which rose by the Pretogative, in casual and accidental ways.

My Lords, I have now done with these.

The third way whereby the Law hath provided for the defence of the Kingdom, is particular supplies of money for the defence of the Sea alone in times of danger, both ordinary and extraordinary; for besides the supply of money before-mentioned, which are to be employed for the good and defence of the Realm in general, as in the other Cases where the Law putteth the King to any particular charge for the protection of the Subject, it always enables him thereto, yields him particular supplies of money for the maintenance of the charge: So here the Courts of Justice, for the preservation of us in our Rights, are supported at his charge; and that is the reason why he hath all Fines and Amerciaments, the Goods of Outlawed men in Personal Actions, Bract. lib. 3. cap. 15. fo. 129. and Fines for purchasing Original Writs, & pro licentiis concordandi, which in supposition of Law are paid, for not proceeding, and for troubling without cause the Kings Justices, who are maintained in their places at the Kings charge; these they are the Vestigal Justiciariorum.

The defence of the Realm extends it self to many particulars of the Church, and of Religion; and therefore in the Summons of Parliament, the cause of the calling of the Parliament is always declared to be pro defensione Ecclesie Anglia in particulars, as well as totius Regni.

His Majesty therefore hath the temporalities of Bishopricks (sede vacante) a Prerogative, and that which Patrons have not, with an addition of the first fruits and tenths of them, and all other Ecclesiastical Promotions and Benefices in H. 8th's time, and likewise the tythes of all lands which lye not within any Parish.

2. For defence of Land alone, besides those Military services before-mentioned, the profits of Wards and Marriages, which, as I have read, no other Christian Prince hath as a fruit of them, or received for that purpose. So it is for the Sea in Rot. Scot. 10 E. 3. m. 16. It is said that the King and his Ancestors are Domini Maris Anglicani & defensores contra Hostium invasiones ante hac tempora extiterunt; for the supporting of this charge therefore, they have only had the grand Customs of the Mark and Demi-Mark upon the Wooll, Wooll-fells, and Leather, and the Prifage; that is, one Tun of Wine before the Mast, and another behind of every Ship, which were even due by the Common Law, as appears by the Book of my Lord Dyer, 1 El. 165. and Sir John Davis's Reports, fo. 8, 9. and implied by Magna Charta, cap. 30. that Merchants may Trade per rectas & antiquas Consuetudines; but likewise divers other things were afterwards granted by Act of Parliament in addition to them. As first, the Petty Custom began 31 E. 1. and made perpetual by the Statute 27 E. 3. cap. 26. and likewise divers Aids and Subsidies, which are an increase of Custom upon the Staple Commodities of Wooll, Wooll-

Anno 1637. Wooll-fells, and Leather, and Tunnage, and increase upon Wines and Poundage, and increase upon all other things imported or exported either by Denizens or Aliens.

That which in this kind was taken by his Majesty 11th of his Reign, when this Writ was 300000*l.* and upwards. The Aids and Subsidies, and likewise the Tunnage and Poundage, anciently granted upon particular occasions only, and afterwards to the late Kings and Queens for their lives by Act of Parliament, and being now granted to his Majesty; and likewise the new Imposition, which altogether make up the aforementioned sum of 300000*l.* Of the legality hereof I intend not to speak; for in case his Majesty may impose upon Merchandize what himself pleaseth, there will be the less cause to tax the Inland Counties; and in case he cannot do so, it will be strongly presumed, that he can much less tax them. The proving of these two things herein will serve my turn.

That his Majesty de facto takes them, and that this judicially appears to your Lordships and the Court. And 2. That these, and the Ancient Customs, are for defence of the Sea.

For the first, it was declared by his Majesty in the last Parliament, and annexed to the Petition of Right, as part of it, that his Majesty took them, and could not be without them; whereof he likewise desired the Judges to take notice; and that they might so do, it is inrolled both in this, and other the Courts of Westminster-Hall.

For the second, that the grant of Custom is principally for protection of Merchants at Sea against the Enemies of the Realm, and Pyrates, the common Enemies of all Nations, is Sir John Davis's Reports, fo. 9. & 12. And that those, and likewise the Impositions are for that purpose, was held by many of the Judges in the Argument of Balls his Case, 7 Jac. in the Chequer, in the Case of Impositions upon Currants; and likewise by the Kings Council, when the same Case afterwards came to be debated in Parliament, and was one of the main reasons urged by them for the maintenance of that Judgment: That the Aids and Subsidies, and likewise the Tunnage and Poundage, before they were granted for life, were not only for the protection of Merchants, and the ordinary defence of the Sea, but also for the defence thereof in times of extraordinary danger, and from Invasion from Enemies, appears by the several grants of them in the Parliament Rolls.

Rot. Parl. 1. R. 2. pars 2. N. 9. & 27. the Kingdom being in point to be lost by the Enemies of Spain and France, and divers others there mentioned, who made War both at Land and Sea; a Subsidy upon the grand Customs was granted, as the words are pur le defence & Rescous del' Kingdom; this was for two years, and persons assigned to receive and expend the money. Com. Mich. 3 R. 2. London: William Walworth, and John Philpot, Citizens of London, the Treasurers of it upon their Account shew the particulars how this money was expended circa salvationem & defensionem Regni, and discharged.

Rot. Parl. 3 R. 2. N. 16, 17. the same Cause as 1 R. 2. continuing, Enemies intended to blot out the Name of the English from under Heaven; the Subsidy continued for a year longer.

5 R. 2. pars 2. N. 14. & 15. Tunnage and Poundage granted issint que soit apply sur safeguard del' mere, & nul parte a il hors, and the King, at the Petition of the Commons, appoints Receivers.

6 R. 2. pars 2. N. 13. The Commons complain, that notwithstanding the grant of Tunnage and Poundage, the Sea is not kept; and therefore persons named and assigned in Parliament to receive the money, and do it. 10 R. 2. N. 1. Tunnage and Poundage, and Subsidy for a year.

11 R. 2. N. 6. & 12. Tunnage and Poundage, and Subsidy for a year.

13 R. 2. N. 20. both for a year.

14 R. 2. N. 16. both for a year.

17 R. 2. N. 12. both for three years.

20 R. 2. N. 28. Subsidy for five years, and Tunnage and Poundage for three years.

2 H. 4. N. 9. both for two years.

6 H. 4. N. 9. & 10. both for two years, upon condition to cease, if the King before S. Hilary provide not a sufficient Army for the Sea.

8 H. 4. N. 9. & 9 H. 4. N. 26. both as 6 H.

4. 11 H. 4. both for two years, for the common Commodity and defence of the Realm.

13 H. 4. N. 10. & 11. for one year, so as the same be confessed to proceed of their own good will, and not out of duty.

5. H. 5. N. 17. for four years, and upon many conditions.

1. H. 6. N. 9. for two years.

3. H. 6. N. 17. Subsidy for three years, Tunnage and Poundage for one year.

4. H. 6. 22. 6.

H. 6. N. 11. for two years Tunnage and Poundage, viz. 6*s.* 8*d.* upon every man within a Parish Church that hath 20 Nobles, and 6*s.* 8*d.* upon every Knights Fee held immediately of the King.

8 H. 6. 15. Tunnage and Poundage to continue until the next Parliament.

9 H. 14. both, and for two years.

10 H. 6. 21.

4 H. 6. 14. for two years.

23 H. 6. 16. for four years, and double upon Aliens.

27 H. 6. 20. as 23. for five years.

37 H. 6. N. 8. and 42. Tunnage and Poundage first granted for life, and N. 41. assigned into the Subjects hands for three years, for the good of the Seas.

My Lords, either by the grant it self of them, or by the Declaration of the cause of the calling of the Parliament it appears, that these were all granted upon extraordinary occasions; and when they came to be granted for life, as appears by the Rolls, and the printed Statutes of 12 E. 4. c. 13. they were not only granted for the ordinary defence of the Realm, and principally of the Sea; but likewise that the Kings might always have in readiness a stock of money in their hands to withstand an Invasion, as is declared by the very words of those Statutes.

My Lords, his Majesty is in possession of them, and was pleased by his Proclamation printed 1626. declaring the cause of the dissolution of the last Parliament, as appears by pag. 17. to declare that they were always granted to his Progenitors for the guarding of the Seas, and the safety and defence of the Realm; and in the 18th page is graciously pleased in these words to declare, that he doth and must still pursue those ends, and undergo that charge for which it was first granted to the Crown; and pag. 44. that he receives it for the guarding of the Seas, and defence of the Realm.

My Lords, I have now done with the ways which I first propounded, whereby the Law hath provided for the defence of the Realm; I shall add this only, that by the Statute of Winchester, which 1637. which was made in 13 E. 1. every man secundum Anno statum & facultates; for the words of the Statute are, according to the quantity of his Lands and Goods, is to find Horse and Armour for defence of the Realm; for that Statute in this particular, extends not only to the keeping of the Sea, but likewise to the defence against Foreigners; as is declared in the Parliament Roll of 3 R. 2. N. 36. and by the Statute of 5 H. 4. in the Parliament Roll 24. not printed, juxta quantitatem terr. & bonor. against Invasions each man is to find Armour: And by the Statute 1 E. 3. ca. 5. These men, upon sudden coming of strange Enemies into the Realm, may be compelled to march out of their own Counties where they live, whether they may be compelled so to do without wages, I shall have occasion afterwards to speak; how far the Statutes of Winchester, and 5 H. 4. for Arms, upon the Statutes of 4 & 5. Phil. & Mar. cap. 2. & 1. Jac. c. 25. are in force, I shall not speak.

My Lords, I shall now proceed to the stating of the Question.

Bracton in the beginning of his Book says, That in Rege necessaria sunt hac duo, Arma scilicet, & Leges, quibus utrumque tempus Bellor. & Pacis recte possit gubernare; and Glanvil in the beginning of his Book, Regiam Majestatem Armis cont. Gentes sibi Regnoq; insurgentes oportet esse Decoratam: His Majesty, as he is Lord of the Sea and Land; so by that which hath been said it appears, that he is armed with power for the defence of both.

My Lords, the reasons in the Writ, as they are weighty; so from these known supplies, whereby the Law hath provided for the safety of the Realm, they will all of them be confessed, and yet thereby receive answer; and that the Law hath foreseen, and provided the supplies accordingly, without the way in the Writ. 1. The Command in the Writ being in fide & legantia quibus nobis Tenemini; it's thence inferred, that each Subjects Allegiance binds him to contribute to the defence of the Realm. In the old Customs of Normandy, cap. 43. Allegiance binds ad Concilii & auxilii Adjustamentum: This although it be principally performed by the Parliamentary, both Advices and Aids; yet besides these extraordinary, by that which hath been said, we see both by the Tenures in kind, and pecuniary supplies, that without the assistance thereof our Persons, Lands and Goods, by his Majesties Command alone, are made contributory therunto, and that in a large proportion. 2. If the Rule whereby this Contribution must be regulated, as in the Writ, Secundum Statum & facultates, that likewise is satisfied, and that both for Sea and Land.

1. For Land, in case either the Statutes of Winchester, or 5 H. 4. be a-foot, then in words in that of finding Arms juxta quantitatem terrar. & bonor. So secondly, in respect of the Tenures by Knights-service in the Wards, Marriages, and Reliefs, these I confess concern the Tenant only; but those other Tenures in Capite and Grand Serjeanty, these concern all others, in respect of the Licenses of Alienation, and of the Wardships of Land held of other Lords; and that all the Tenants Land is hereby become Wardable: And 3. In respect of the Prerogatives before-mentioned; for the greater the Subjects Estate is, the greater influence they have into it, and proportionably raise more profit out of it.

5. In respect of the Sea, this is so by reason of the Customs, Aids, Subsidies, Tunnage and Poundage before-mentioned; for the charge of these is not born by the Merchants alone, but by each Subject within the Kingdom, and that Secundum Statum & facultates. Car. 13.

For first, in respect of the Export, the greater the Estate, the more Wooll, and Wooll-fells, and Leather, Lead, and other Staple Commodities it exports; if that be done by the owner, he bears the immediate charge; if by the Merchant, according to that proportion is his abatement in price unto the owner.

2. So it is for Goods imported, for the greater the Estate and means of livelihood, the more each person buys of those, and at a dearer rate. This is cleared by the Petition of the Commons in Parliament Roll, 22 E. 3. n. 41. that the Merchants had granted to the King 40 s. upon a Sack of Wooll en Charge du peuple, & nemy des Merchants; and by the Statute of 36 E. 3. cap. 11. that no Subsidy or charge be granted to the King by the Merchants upon Wools, without assent in Parliament.

3. Hence likewise that other ground of Equity in the Writ, Quod omnes tangit per omnes debet supportari, receives answer; for as all have benefit by the defence, so the Compensatio publica, we see it come from all: the fuller answer, is the Parliament Summons of 23 E. 1. provision against the French, who intended linguam Anglicanam omnino delere, Cloß. 23 E. 1. M. 14. Dor. Lex justissima provida & circumspectioe sacrorum principum stabilita statuit, & quod omnes tangit ab omnibus approbatur: The Charge, as it must be born by all, so must it be approved by all.

4. If his Majesty be entrusted with the defence of the Realm, as in the great Case between the Earls of Hereford and Gloc. it's said, that incumbit Domino Regi salvatio populi sibi Commiss. and that per Jurament. est astrictus ad providendam salvationem Regni necumquaq; because no man goeth to War at his own charge. We see by that which is already said, that the Law hath provided the Stipendia Ministerii; which that they do not bind his Majesty to the defence and safety of the Kingdom, not only in point of care and vigilancy, but even in point of charge too, I shall endeavour to prove to your Lordships and the Court. Allegiance, we know, is an Act of Reciprocation, for as it binds the Subjects to Tribute and Subjection, so therefore must it the King to the charge of Protection, by the expence of those; Rex ad Tutelam Legis, Corpor. & bonor. erectus: the supplies he hath for that purpose ties him to the supportation of the Laws, the execution of Justice, 20 E. 1. In the Case before-mentioned, between the Earls of Glouc. and Hereford, it is said, that Dom. Rex est omnibus singulis de Regno suo Justitia debitor; which that he is so even in point of charge, appears by his Majesties supportation of the Courts of Justice, and the Sallaries, not only to your Lordships, and other the inferiour Ministers of Justice, and anciently to the Sheriffs, but likewise many other ways, 4 H. 7. ca. 12. The King shall not let for any favour of charge, but that he shall see his Laws fully executed, Parl. 23 E. 1. Rot. 12. Exchequer. A Clerk that attended a Commission of Grievances, recovered Salary from the King, although the Commission was for the relief of that County. This I conceive to be the reason of the Declaration in the Statute of 14 E. 3. c. 1. and other Statutes; that Aids, though granted in Parliament for defence, shall not be brought into example, in that it might be conceived that the Commons were to bear that charge which principally Anno 1637. pally belonged unto the King. Pat. 48. H. 3. M. 8. It is recited, That whereas in a late Parliament, in Articulo necessitatis pro defensione Regni contra hostilem adventum Alienigenarum, the Commons granted him a large Subsidy, ultra quam retractis temporibus facere consueverunt. Now the King, eorum indemnitate prospicere vellens, grants, that non cedat in prejudicium, nec in posterum non trahatur in consuetudinem, in Wiseman's Case. In 2 Report, fo. 15. It is resolved, That a Covenant to stand seised to the use of Queen Elizab. in consideration that she is the Head of the Commonwealth, and hath the care of repelling foreign Hostility, is not good, because (saith the Book) the King is bound to do that ex officio.

Com. 315. One reason why the King is to have Royal Mines (alleged by all that argue for the King) is because he is at his own Charge to provide for the Defence of the Realm; which he cannot do without Money.

In the Earl of Devonshire's Case, Co. 11. 91. 6. Instit. fol. 28. & 131. Theaurus Regis is called Nervus Belli, for the practice. The proof of the particular Charges, the several Kings have been at for Defences of all sorts, would be so tedious, that I'll omit the citing of any thing in this kind.

Sir John Davis reports fol. 12. many Authorities, and in the Treatise De Regalibus, p. 81. Principes totam Navigationem pro vectigalibus prestare coguntur.

But because his Majesty in the before-mentioned Proclamation, pag. 18. 44. is pleased graciously to profess, that he holds himself obliged to undergo the Charge of the Defence of the Realm, and of the Sea in particular; I spare any further proof in this.

If that in the writ, That the Sea per gentem Anglicanam ab olim defendi consuevit, be not answered by the Scottish Roll of 10 E. 3. before-recited, which says, That the King and his Ancestors Muris Anglicani defensores antehac existierunt, nor by what is now said. If it be admitted, yet that even the Charge of this Defence is born per Gentem Anglicanam, is before proved.

The Sixth, and one of the main Things, whereupon I shall state my Question, is this:

His Majesty is in the actual possession, not only of the Services in kind, for the defence of the Land, by taking of the benefit of the Wardships, Marriages, Reliefs, Fines and Licenses of Alienation and primer Seisin, and of the Prerogatives before mentioned; but likewise of the Service of the Cinque-Ports (unless they be released since 7 H. 7. for then their Service was summoned) and of the Tunnage and Poundage, and other Duties for the defence of the Sea, it appears not by any part of the Writ, nor by any thing in the Record, that either the Service of the Cinque-ports was summoned, or that any Money at all of his Majesties was expended, either for this Service, or at any other time, for the defence of the Sea.

My Lords, I desire to be understood: I do not affirm, That none was expended; only this appears not to your Lordships and the Court.

All that can be inferred from the Writ to this purpose, is, that this Ship for Buckinghamshire, is commanded to be at Portsmouth by such a day ad proficiscend' exinde cum Navibus dicti Domini Regis, & Navibus aliorum fidelium Subditorum suorum. By this it appears not to the Court, that though the Ships are the King's, they are to be set forth at the King's Charge; for the Charge may be born by the Subject, for ought appears.

Neither secondly, doth it appear how many these Ships were, whereby the Charge, in case it were born by the King, might in any proportion appear to be answerable to the Supply before mentioned.

Those other Ships aliorum fidelium Subditorum Domini Regis, as in truth they were not those of the Cinque-ports; so neither can they be so intended, unless it had been so expressed.

The Services of the Cinque-ports, and Tunnage and Poundage, and other Duties are the ordinary, the settled and known ways, by Law appointed, for the defence of the Seas.

The way in the Writ by selling and altering the property of the Subjects Goods (without their consent) as in the Writ, must needs be granted to be a way more unusual and extraordinary against the Legality of it. I shall thus frame this Argument by way of admission. First, That in case the Services of the Ports had been summoned, and the Money by the before-mentioned ways had been expended upon the Defence, and they had not been sufficient; that though in this case the Writ had been legal, that yet, as now it is not, Reylies Case in the 10. Rep. fol. 139. and Trin. 18. E. 2. B. R. 174. adjudged, that so long as he that is bound by Tenure or Prescription is able to do it, the whole Level cannot be set to the reparation of a Wall or Bank.

It's a Maxim, Lex non facit saltum, nor that we are to run to extraordinary, where the ordinary means will serve the turn. These Rules are often put in our Books, I intend to instance but in one or two Cases.

The Common Law is the common Reliever of Persons wronged: that in Chancery is extraordinary; and therefore no man can sue there, when he hath remedy at the Common Law. The ordinary Trial for Life is by Indictment and a Jury; when therefore this may be done, and that the Sheriffe, with the Posse Comitatus is able to keep the peace, it cannot be done by Martial Law, or by Judgment of the King and Peers in Parliament without Indictment; as was adjudged in the Case of the Earl of March, Tr. 28. E. 3. B. R. Rot. 21.

My Lords, The great reason of this Maxim of Law, is, as I conceive, this; in Actions extraordinary, as extra ordinem, and done only in times of necessity, we are not tyed to any Rules of Law; and therefore not to be brought into example, nor have any warrant but only that of necessity; nor Rule to guide them, but what pro hic et nunc shall serve for the bringing of them about: The same power then that may once do them in omitting of the ordinary, may by the same Rule always do them; and so by consequence, how far such power is tyed at any time, or in any thing, to any Rules of Law, I shall humbly submit to your Lordships consideration.

My Lords, I have now done with stating the question: Those things whereupon I shall spend the rest of my time, are these.

First, Admitting that the ordinary means before mentioned had been all used, and that they had not been sufficient; whether in this case his Majesty without consent of Parliament may in this case of extraordinary defence, alter the property of the subjects goods for the doing thereof?

In the next place, I shall endeavour to answer some objections which may be made to the contrary.

1637. In the third place, for qualifying of this, I shall admit, that in some cases the property of the Subjects, for the defence of the Realm, may be altered without consent in Parliament; and shall shew what they be in particular, and compare them, and the present occasion together,

In the fourth place, Because of some presidents of the matter of fact, and likewise legal authorities, that may seem to prove a legality in this particular of Shipping for the defence of the Sea, what ever it be in the general; I shall therefore endeavour an answer to such of them as I have met withal.

From the first, That to the altering of the property of the Subjects goods, though for the defence of the Realm, that a parliamentary assistance is necessary.

In this, it must be granted, in the first place, that the Law ties no man, and much less the King, to impossibilities.

And secondly, that the Kingdom must be defended.

As therefore the law hath put this great trust upon his Majesty, so when the Supplies, which by the ways before mentioned it hath put into his hands, is spent therein; it hath provided other ways for a new supply: which is the first thing that I shall present to your Lordships, and this is the Aids and subsidies in Parliament

That amongst the ardua Regni negotia, for which Parliaments are called, this of the defence is not only one of them, but even the cheif, is cleared by this, that of all the rest none is named particularly in the Summons, but only this; for all the Summons of Parliament shew the cause of the calling of them to be pro quibusdam arduis negotiis nos & defensionem Regni nostri Anglie & Ecclesie Anglicane concernentibus. and in the conclusion, the party summoned is commanded to be there sicut honorem nostrum, & saluationem, & defensionem Regni & Ecclesie diligis.

And in all the Ancient Summons of Parliament, when Aid was demanded, the particular cause of Defence, and against what Enemy in special was mentioned.

My Lords, to gain time, I will instance but in one or two of each Kings Reign. Clasf. 23 E. 1. m. 4. Dorf. That the French King, ad expugnationem Regni nostri classe maxima & Bellatorum copiosa multitudine Regnum jam invasis, & Linguam Anglicanam omnino delere proponit.

Clasf. 3 E. 2. M. 3. Dor. and 7 E. 2. M. 8. Dor. That the Scots had entred, burnt, and destroyed the Marches, and put them to a tribute.

Clasf. 1 E. 3. pars 2. M. 6. and 22 E. 3. M. 32. Dorf. That the Scotch and French had invaded the Realm.

Clasf. 7 H. 4. M. 29. Dorf. That the French were with a great Fleet quasi in ore Thamesis to invade the Kingdom, and the King to go in Person.

After this Kings Reign the form of the Summons was as now.

That these Ardua defensionem Regni concernentia, are the Aids and means of Defence, and not the way and manner of doing it, as their Counsel therein, is clear.

In the Parliament Roll 6 R. 2. pars 2. N. 9.

This of the manner and way of prosecution of the War being given in charge to the Commons to advise upon; they answer, that this ne doit nec solayt appertainez a eux mes al Roy.

Rot. Parliament. 13 E. 3. pars prima N. 11. The same being given in Charge to the Commons, they pray que ils ne font Charge a Councel Dover al choses des quel ils n'ont pas Cōmence; and so Rot. Parliament. 21 E. 3. N. 5. they excuse themselves, Car. 13. and that this belongs to the King and his Council.

And that these Ardua circa defensionem were the Aids, is exprest in words in some of the Summons. Clasf. 7 E. 2. M. 8. Dorf. The cause of the Parliament to withstand the Scots, and that in tam arduis debitis extendere manus adjuvices opportuna auxilia facienda.

Clasf. 31 E. 3. M. 21. Dorf. That Summons circa necessarium defensionem Regni, quantum ad dictum negotium expediendum auxilium n. cessare habere oportet.

Clasf. 5 R. 2. M. 2. Dorf. The King being to make a voyage pro defensione Regni & gravamine inimicorum Regni, which could not be done without borrowing great Sums of money, therefore the Parliament called to advise about the Assurance.

So that my Lords, it's clear that the Law hath Provided this Parliamentary way for the supplying of the Kings wants for the extraordinary defence, and hath likewise put the power of using it into His Majesties own hands; for he may call Parliaments when, and so often as he pleaseth.

My Lords, the Parliament, as it is qualified; and fitted to make this Supply for some of each Rank, and that through all the Parts of the Kingdom being there met, His Majesty having declared the danger, they best knowing the Estates of all Men within the Realm, are fittest, by comparing the danger and Mens Estates together, to proportion the Aid accordingly.

And secondly, they are fittest for the preservation of that fundamental propriety, which the Subject hath in his Lands and Goods, because each Subjects Vote is included in whatsoever is there done; so that it cannot be done otherwise, I shall endeavour to Prove to your Lordships both by Reason and Authority.

My first Reason is this, That the Parliament by the Law is appointed as the ordinary means of Supply upon extraordinary occasions, when the ordinary supplies will not do it; If this in the writ therefore may, without resorting to that, be used, the same argument will hold as before in resorting to the extraordinary, by way of the ordinary, and the same inconvenience will follow.

My Second Reason is taken from the Actions of former Kings in this of the defence.

The Aids demanded, by them and granted in Parliament, even for this purpose of the defence, and that in times of imminent danger, are so frequent, that I will spare the citing of them: It is rare in a Subject, and more in a Prince, to ask and take that of gift, which he may and ought to have of right, and that without so much as a Salvo, or Declaration of his right.

The second way was Loans and Benevolences demanded by them, with promise of repayment both for the ordinary and the extraordinary defence of the Realm, and that as well of all the Subjects equally by Commission, as of some few.

Part. 48 H. 3. M. 16. A commission to the Earl of Leicester, and others, contrahendi mutuum in nomine nostro de denarijs & victualibus, and other things in munitionem Navium pōendis & nautarum stipendijs contra hostilem adventum alienigenarum in Regnum nostrum, ad defensionem & tuitionem ejusdem Regni, and promiseth repayment.

Visus Compie, in the Clerk, 26 E. 1. Rot. 100. The King borrows of the Merchants 28966 l. pro defensione Regni, and promiseth re-payment.

H. 31 E. 1. Rot. 4, &c. and Trin. 31 E. 1. Rot.

41. Divers Sums borrowed pro defensione, and re-payment promised.

Anno 1637. Bratt. irret. H. 34 E. 1. R. 82. 10000 l. paid by the King at one time for Money borrowed; this I confels is only pro Arduis Regni negotiis.

Bra. M. 11 E. 2. Ro. 1. the Scots having entred the Kingdome, diversa homicidia, incendia & depredationes perpetrantes: The King being in Person to go against them, writes to His Council to provide Money, and they diversas vias pro denariis providendis exquirentes, resolveth to borrow.

P. 12 E. 2. Co. 1a. for the same cause a Loan upon all Merchant-strangers.

Ro. Scot. 1 E. 3. M. 3. The Scots having entred the Realm, taken divers Castles, and threatened a Conquest of England and quia crescit sumptuum multitudo in tantum quod Thesauri nostrum ad sustentationem exercitus nostri nequaquam sufficit, he borrows.

Clau. 14 E. 3. M. 8. The King had borrowed 3333 l. pro salvatione & defensione Regni, & vult promptam solutionem fieri promt decet and now assigns it to be paid out of the Customs.

Walsingham P. 179, 44 E. 3. The King sinistro usus consilio magnas summas pecunie of all sorts, mutuo petijt, asserens quod in defensionem Ecclesie & Regni illas expenderet but the people would not lend.

Clau. 5 R. 2. M. 12. Dor. The King, pro defensione Regni, being to make a Voyage at Sea, desires to borrow Money, and a Parliament called to give assurance.

7 H. 4. Rot. Franc. Money borrowed pro defensione, volens promptam & securam solutionem fieri.

Rot. parliament. 11. H. 6. N. 13. 10000 l. borrowed pro defensione, and spent, and the Parliament orders pro securitate.

Rot. Parliament. 15. H. 6. N. 3. 10000 l. borrowed pro defensione, by the King.

Stat. 11 H. 7. Cap. 10. it appears that a Benevolence had been desired by H. 7th. for the defence of the Realm and wherein he went in person.

The known Commission to Cardinal Wolsey for the Benevolence in March 16 H. 8. It was to withstand Infestissimos Hostes of France and Scotland, who intended to invade the Realm, and that the Kings Coffers were now empty; and therefore they have power Communicandi & inducendi, persuadendi & praticandi cum subditis Regis super amabili pecuniarum concessione.

Secunda pars Pat. 37. H. 8. Cum pro sustentatione ingentis oneris nostrorum operatum, quos in presenti tam per mare quam per terram conficere, & in promptu habere cogimur ad resistendum, Propellendum hostem nostrum Francorum Regem, in defensionem, tutelam & securitatem dilectorum subditorum nostrorum, quorum ille dampnum & interitum omnibus vijs & modis molitur; statui & ex consensu, & sententia Concilij nostri decrevimus aliquem opem de dictis subditis nostris petere, & eandem cum eorum benevolentia recipere, pro eorum cujuslibet facultate ministrandam, nihil dubitantes quin sponte & liberaliter quisque, pro sua partitione & facultate elargiturus sit, eoq; magis & citius, quod id totum consumat & cedit in suam ipsorum defensionem & tuitionem: and the power is given to levy it as a Benevolence only.

By the statute of 35 H. 8. Cap. 12. it appears that for the defence H. 8. had borrowed divers Sums of Money.

The third way was anticipating their rents.

Tr. 29 E. 1. Ro. 58. in the Exchequer Writs to all the sheriffs of England, pro conservatione Regni ejusque, incolaram salvatione & inimicorum depressione: that all the profits arising out of their Counties, & the Rents of all the Kings tenants due at Michaelmas be paid at Midsummer, and allowance promised in the next half years Rent, and that this ad tam ardua negotia necessaria alias in consuetudinem non trahatur.

My Lords, that not one or two, but so many Kings, and of such Power and Wisdome, as in many of them were, and that in a matter of such consequence, and in times of necessity should so far descend from their greatness, or so far prejudice their Right, as to borrow that of the Subject, who without being beholden to them they might take of right, and bind themselves to re-payment, and all without any Salvo of the right, your Lordships will conceive that it can hardly be imagined.

My third Reason is taken from the incertainty of the way intended in the Writ; for the Law delighting in certainty, to the end that the Subject might be sure of somewhat that he might call his own, hath made all those things which the King challengeth as peculiar to himself from the Subject, either certain in themselves, or else reducible to a certainty, either by the Judges, Jury, or Parliament, or by some other way than by his Majesty Himself, as indifferent between the King and his People.

In this I intend not such things as are common to the King with the Subject; of which nature are the Ayds for Marrying the King's Eldest Daughter, or Knighting his Eldest Son; for these are due to every common person, that is Lord as well as the King; as appears by the Statute of Westminster, 13 E. 1. cap. 35. N. 82. and are not due by any special Prerogative, but by Tenure; and yet the Common Law, for avoyding excess therein, calls it Rationabile auxilium: and yet even this, by the Statute of Westm. 13 E. 1. cap. 35. is put into certainty; and the cause of the making of the Statute, as therein is expressed, was because the People were grieved by paying more than was requisite, and thereby that which was reasonable, became an unreasonable aid.

The Statute was general, and named not the King particularly; but the Statute of 25 E. 3. cap. 11. is only in case of the King; and Nar. Bre. 82. fo. gives the reason of the making of that Statute, because the King before did restrain for more than was fit; and therefore by reason of the excess, was restrained to a Certainty, as well as the Subject: Neither are the Taxes and Tallages upon Cities and Burroughs, and ancient Demefnes against this.

In respect of the baseness of their Tenures before mentioned: And secondly, because the Subject that is Lord of such Burroughs and Mannors of Ancient Demefne, have them as well as the King; as appears by the Case of New Salisbury, 33 E. 1. in the Parliament-Book, and in the New Parliament-Roll; 8 E. 2. for the Burrough of Cirencester, and Br. Tr. 33. E. 1. Ro. 22. and N. Br. 97.

Those things which are peculiar to the King, either they be certain in themselves, as are Treasure-trove, Deodands, Wrecks, and the like; where the King is to have the thing it self; and so if it be in Money, as a demy-Mark, when in a Writ of Right the Tenant prayeth that the Seisin may be enquired; Fines pro licentia concordandi, it is the tenth part by the Law comprised in the Writ of Covenant, and the Post-Fine one half so much more; and Fines for purchasing original Writs 2 s. 8 d. where the thing demanded is 40 l. or Anno 1637. or 10 s. where 100 l. and so in proportion.

 Or else it is reducible to a Certainty, as in all Cases, where the Party is to be amerced; though he be in misericordia Domini Regis, yet the Jury must affirm the amercement; and when he is to make Fine and Ransome ad voluntatem Domini Regis, yet this Fine must be set by the Judges, when the Tenant by Knights-service makes default in the Summons, ad exercitum, he is to pay Escuage for the default, as a Penalty: This cannot be set but in Parliament, as I shall prove hereafter.

My Lords, To apply all to the thing in question, there is a cause of raising money for the defence of the Realm, non definitur in Lege; what will serve the turn if his Majesty, as in the Writ, may without Parliament levy 20 s. upon the Plaintiffs goods; I shall humbly submit it, why by the same reason of Law it might not have been 20 l. and so ad infinitum, whereby it would come to pass, that if the Subject hath any thing at all, he is not beholden to the Law for it, but it is least entirely to the mercy and goodness of the King.

My Lords, I am now come to the second kind of proofs, and that is by Authority: The Cases which in the first place I shall insist upon, will be to prove it by Induction; for if I shall prove that his Majesty without Parliament cannot tax his people, for setting forth of Land Forces for the defence, for making and maintaining of Forts and Castles for defence, for Victuals for a defensive Army, for maintenance of Prisoners taken in a defensive War, nor Pledges and Hostages given by Forreign States for the keeping of Peace, if it be so in all these particulars, the five supports of a defensive War, I shall then offer it to your Lordships, whether it can be done at all.

Before I proceed to these particulars, I shall observe thus much, my Lords, in the general, that if those that hold by ancient Demesne and Burgage, which are but base Tenures, cannot be taxed, nisi sur grand Cause, and that have many Privileges in point of Jurisdiction, ease and profit in consideration thereof, as they have much less, then can the Tenants by Knights-service and Soccage that are free Tenants, and that have no privilege in support of that Charge, be taxed.

And as they are not taxable but sur grand Cause in the general, so neither in particular, for this of the defence, as is proved by that of Escuage; for if his Majesty, without consent in Parliament, cannot tax his own Tenant, nor proportion the Fine according to his pleasure, when the Tenant holds the Land ad exercitum, for the defence of the Kingdom, much less can he do it where there's no Tenure for that purpose.

That Escuage cannot be set without Parliament, is first the Statute of Rummy Mead, 17 Johan. in express words, Nullum scutagium vel auxilium ponam in Regno nostro nisi per Commune Concilium Regni nostri; which though it be not printed, yet it is of Record, and inrolled in the Red Book of the Chequer, and cited in Matthew Paris, p. 343. and that as well before the confirmation of it, 9 H. 3. as since, it hath been by the Judges reported to be a Statute, and in force, appears by the Book of 5 H. 3. Mordauncester 53. where it is pleaded, and called by the name of Mag. Charta, and allowed; and M. 19 E. 1. Finient 20. incipiente B. R. Rot. 56. in the Case of Rulse de Tonney, its pleaded by the name of Mag. Charta. Johannis Regis de Rummy Mead, and allowed.

In the Book of Knights-Fees of E. 1. time, there is a Writ cited which went to the Sheriffs of Hereford, thus; Datum est nobis intelligi, quod plures sunt qui tenent per servitium Militarium de Car. 13. nobis qui contradicunt solvere scutagia que nobis sunt concessa per commune Concilium Regni nostri; therefore he is commanded to levy them, Com. M. 5. E. 2. Ro. 4. Dors. Many Processes issued for the levying of Escuage in E. 1. time, superseded and quite released; the reason entered in the Roll; Quia dictum servitium non fuit communiter factum, that is, as I conceive, that it was not done per commune Concilium Regni.

The Books are express, 13 H. 4. 5. Barke Nat. Br. 83. C. B. Instit. sec. 97.

My Lords, that those that hold in Soccage or Fee-farm, or not by so many Knights-Fees as they were distrained for, were always discharged, as appears by infinite Precedents; I shall make no use of it, as the manner of entering these discharges upon the Roll, is observable that he is distrained, ac si teneret per servitium militare, whereas he holds the Land in Soccage, pro quibus servitium aliquod Regi exercitibus suis facere non debet, and in some Rolls that ratione alicujus autoritatis, he ought not to be distrained; Therefore, quia Dominus Rex non vult illum in hac parte injurari, prout justum est, the distresses are released. Amongst divers Precedents for this, I shall cite but one or two, Br. Tr. 34 E. 1. Ro. 20 the Abbot of Abbingdon, and John Arden the Iler Roll of Suffex, 7 E. 1. Ro. 107. of Gilbert Gifford. My Lords, if the King might have raised money, and lessed money for finding of Souldiers for their Armies, this manner of Entry, as I humbly conceive, would never have been suffered.

I am now come to the first particular that I have instanced, that is, the charging of the Subject for finding of Souldiers to go out of their Counties for the defence of the Realm. My Lords, in that, I shall in the first place admit these three things.

1. That every man after the Statute of Winchester, secundum statum & facultates, was to find all manner of Arms, as well for the defence of the Realm against Forreigners, as for the Peace; and that I have before proved by that of 3 R. 2. N. 36. and after by the Statute 5 H. 4.

2. That upon sudden coming of strange Enemies, these are compelled to travel out of their own Counties; is the Statute of 1 E. 3. c. 5. and so for the appealing of any notable Rebellion, when the King, for the doing thereof, goes in person, as appears by the Stat. 11 H. 1. c. 1. & 18.

3. I shall admit, that so long as they remain at home, and go not out of their Counties, that they are to have no Wages; and that the Maritime Shires, for Borders upon Scotland and Wales, were not to be at the Kings charge; so long as they remained at home in their own Counties for the preservation of them; but that they were in that case themselves to bear the charge against Forreign Invasion, as of making Hue and Cry, assisting the Sheriff when he took the Posse Comitatus, and all other things concerning the keeping of the Peace.

But that the Subject is taxable either for Wages, or for Victuals, or otherwise for sending of Souldiers out of their Counties, though for defence of the Kingdom, or that any are compelled to do it at their own charge, I shall humbly deny.

The Stat. of 1 E. 3. says, that in this case it shall be done, as usually hath been done in times past for the defence of the Realm. My Lords, I will not deny, but that before E. 3's time, Commissions have issued out of the Chancery for that purpose;

Anno 1637. purpose; against which matters of Fact, not only to balance them, but to weigh them down, its as clear, that whole Armies, some of them of 30000 at the least, over and above them that were summoned by their Tenures, have been maintained at the Kings charge, from the time they have departed out of their Counties, during the whole time of their service; and that not only with promises of payment, but that they were paid, ex Thesauris Regis, out of the Chequer; and many times upon fail of payment of Victuals, Wages, and other things, upon Suit for them in the Chequer, full payment hath been made, of which sort in most Kings years there are many Cases.

My Lords, this is the Answer which I give the Commissions to the Country, That de facto, the King was at the Charge usually for defensive War.

By the Stat. of 19 H. 8. Cap. 1. Those that have Annuities of the King must attend him when the King in Person goes for the defence of the Realm, or against Rebels: But there is a special Proviso, that they shall have Wages of the King, from the time they set out, till they come to the King, allowing 20 Miles a day, and afterwards as long as they shall remain in the Service.

Upon a Rebellion in the North, 28 H. 8. against whom the King intended to go in Person, Privy Seals were sent to most of the Gentry of the Kingdom to attend the King with the best Retinue that they could make; and likewise to bring the Bills of their Expences, and payment promised, as appears by many of those Privy Seals remaining in the Palace Treasury.

And besides the Indentures themselves, whereof I have seen many: It appears by the Stat. of 2, and 3 E. 6. Cap. 2. that the retainer of Souldiers at the Kings Charge was as well for offensive as defensive Wars. And by Stat. 3 H. 8. Cap. 5.

My Lords, in the next place I shall endeavour the proof hereof by clear Authority, the Stat. 25. E. 3. 8. is, That none shall be compelled to find but such as hold by such Service, if it be not by Grant in Parliament: That this was not Introduktionum Nova Legis, appears by the Petition whereupon the Statute is made, that it is encourter le droit del' Realm.

That the Common Law was so before the Statute, and likewise in case of a defensive War, appears by the Authorities following.

P. 26. E. 1. Rot. 35. Dor. The Scots entring the Borders, a Commission issued Reginaldo de Gray, to press Souldiers in Lancashire and Cheshire; he certifies by his Letter Inrolled there, que sans deniers prest, he could not procure them to march out of those Parts; and therefore order taken in the Chequer to send Money.

That the Scots had now invaded the Kingdom, appears by Bra. Irrot. M. 26. E. 1. in Seacc where Commissions are Inrolled for many thousands to be levied for this War at the Kings Wages. Bra. Tr. 32. E. 1. Rot. 18. Co'ia de Wardens of the Marches de Cumberland and Westmorland writ to the Barons of the Chequer; That whereas the Scots lay near the Marches with a great Army, and that the People of the County would not march out of their Counties without Wages and Victuals, that they would provide for both.

2. Pars Pat. 10 E. 2. M. 26. and 9. E. 2. in Parliament, a Grant to find one Souldier for 60 days, at the Charge of the Town, against an Invasion of the Scots; now the King grants quod hujusmodi concessio non cedat in prejudicium nec trahatur in consuetudinem in futuro.

At the time when this Aid was granted, the Scots had entred the Realm, and wasted the Bishoprick of Durham, as appears in 14. E. 2. B. R. 60. Rot. Scot. 12. 13. E. 2. M. 7. & 13. The same indemnity upon the like occasion of defence, when they found the Souldiers ad Rogatum Regis, and the King commanded the Chancellor to declare as much.

Claus. 13. E. 3. M. 38. Dorf. pars prima. The Abbot of Ramsey discharged pro Custodia Maritima, in the County of Norfolk, because he remained in his own County of Huntingdon, cum Equis & Armis, to the defence thereof, with this, that therefore it was not rationi consonum, to charge him further. The same it is Rot. Franc. 21. E. 3. in prima parte 11 Oxon, because they were prompti & parati at home to defend the County. Ro. Scot.

But the practice, as it should seem, not agreeing with the Right in the Parliament, 20. E. 3. N. 12. The Commons complain, that Commissions had issued out of the Chancery, to charge the People in this particular, and otherwise without consent in Parliament, and pray, that they may disobey such Commissions.

The Answer is, That the Commons had heretofore promised to assist the King with their Bodies and Goods, in the War with France, and likewise for the defence of the Realm; and that the great Lords, considering the necessity, as well for defence, as the Kings Wars, agree thereto, and yet promiseth, that this which is done en cel necessity ne soit treyt en consequens n'ensample. My Lords, this is a full declaration of the Right, even when for the defence; and yet some practice to the contrary, before the making of the Stat. of 25. E. 3. procured the Complaints in this particular in the Parliament, 21. E. 3. N. and 22. E. 3. N. Pat. 8. H. 3. M. 4. Falsatus de Brem. Inimicus publicus & excommunicatus, that imprisoned the Justices Itinerants in Bedford Castle, and held the Castle against the King, propter graves & manifestos excessus quibus Regnum multipliciter perturbavit, besieged the Castle; and whereas the Clergy, de mera gra, had granted the King Aid for the doing thereof, Rex nolens gratiam sic nobis exhibitam ad debitam retorqueri, declares as much by his Letters Patents.

My Lords, it is here declared, that the King cannot, de debito, or de jure, take any Aid against the Subjects Wills for besieging a Castle held against the King by a publick Enemy.

Rot. inquisitionum 3. E. 1. Ro. 4. Kent coram auditoribus querelarum post Bellum Evesham & pacem proclamatum: The Castle of Tunbridge being held against the King, the Hundred at Feversham was Seised at 15 l. pro Insultatione of the Castle; the Jury present this as a grievance, which the Justices would never have received, nor suffered to be entred into the Roll, if this Seis might have lawfully been made.

My Lords, this Castle and Hundred they were in the same County; and being before the Stat. of Winchester, they are not compellable to besiege the Castle; and if they were compellable to go in Person, and with Armies, yet no Seis could be laid for the doing thereof.

My Lords, I shall only offer to your Lordships consideration the Scotch Roll of 20. E. 3. M. 6. the Wardens of the Marches of Scotland were to appoint exploratores & vigiles, which were to espy out, and to give notice of the Enemies Intentments; by the Commission in H. 4. H. 5. and H. 6. time they were explorandum pro defensione Regni & partium sumptibus incolarum; but how? only de assensu assensu & voluntate sua prout fieri consuevit.

My Lords, I am now come to that of Victuals, the Stat. of 14. E. 3. Cap. 19. That for the Wars the Provision for them shall be done by Merchants without Commission, or other Power from the King, or any other Power, that the People may not be compelled to sell against their wills: That this was as well for defensive as offensive Wars, and that this was not Introduktivum nova Legis; but so at Common Law is, by your favour, clear.

Pat. 29. E. 1. M. 16. & 19. ad reprimendum malitiam Scotorum; and to repel them, Commissions to most Counties to provide Victuals; and because they refuse, therefore the King there offers them security.

Bra. Trin. 8. E. 2. Ro. 99. Victuals bought juxta forum patrie pro munitione Marchie Scotia, and their payment upon Suit adjudged.

Sometimes at Newcastle, sometimes at Carlisle, at Barwick, as the Wars required, were the Store-Houses where the Victuals were laid, and Clerks of the Store to issue them: That the King not only paid for the Victuals, but likewise for the House where they were laid in, appears Bra. Tr. 2. E. 3. about the end of the Roll, Dorso. The Burgesses of Newcastle complain in Parliament, that their Houses had been taken up long time for the keeping of those Victuals; this was transmitted to the Chequer by Writ, which says, Volumus his pro domibus suis predictis sic occupatis satisfacere prout decet, & prout justum fuerit, & prout temporibus Progenitorum nostrorum fieri consuevit.

My Lords, in the next place: For the defence, when those that served with Horse, ad vadimonia Regis, they lost their Horses in the Service, the Owners did not bear the loss, but they were always paid for by the King; and therefore when they first entred into the Service, the Marshal, or else the Warden of the Marches, who had the command of them, did set down in a Roll the Horse of each Man, and their Marks, and Price of each Horse, to the intent the Owner, by this Certificate, might be assured of the full value to be paid to him in regard the Horse was lost. This appears Clo. 34. E. 1. M. 16. where the Custodes Marchie Scotia, assigned pro defensione Marchie, were to do it.

Bra. Irrot. M. 26. E. 1. Rot. 105, 106. The Scots having entred the Realm, diversa homicidia, incendia, & alia facinora perpetrantes, there the Horses, ad vadimonia, for defence, were to be appraised.

Secunda pars Pat. 10. E. 2. M. 7. the same, and the Scottish Roll of 21 E. 3. M. 7. the same prout Moris est: That thereupon since, the Subject hath recovered accordingly of the King, are many Cases; I will instance but in two or three, M. 24. of E. 1. Ro. 16. Dor. Ro. Heigham, recovered 20 Marks in the Chequer, pro Equo perduto in conflictu Dover, inter homines Regis per hominum illor, & Inimicos Francie; at which time the French had assaulted Dover, and burnt the Priory, and a great part of the Town.

Br. Hill. 17 E. 2. pro restaur. trium Equor. perditor. ad Carlisle, 9 E. 2.

Com. p. 9. E. 2. Richard Walgrave recovered for Horses lost at Carlisle.

Co. l. Hill. 2. E. 3. for Wages, pro restaur. Equor. perditor, and burying the Dead when the Scots had entred the Realm at Stanop-Park, for one Troop 18000 l. allowed habita inde deliberatione, and adjudged.

For Castles, the Ancient Forts and Bulwarks for Defence, the Stat. 14. E. 3. Cap. 19. says, That Merchants, without any Commission or Power from the King, shall victual them so, that the people shall not be compelled to sell against their will. That this Statute in this Particular is not Introduktivum Nova Legis, is cleared by the Case Tr. 16. E. 1. Ro. 13. Wills in a little Roll, and in a great Roll of the same Year Ro. 19. When in Trespas, by John Eveshorne against John Flax, quia blada & garbas suas cepit: The Defendant says, he was Constable of the Kings Castle of the Devises, and that he had in preceptis Regis munire faceret, the Castle de mortuo Statu de bladiis, and other things; and that by virtue of this Writ he took an Enquest to know where he might have best laid these Victuals, ad minus nocumentum patrie, and the Jury found that the Defendant might take it ad minus nocumentum patrie of the Plaintiff, and that he came to the Plaintiffs House, and offered to buy pro denariis & ad justum Regis; and that because the Plaintiff refused to sell, he departed from his House: The Issue joyned, and found against the Defendant, and 100 Marks Damages given the Plaintiff, adjudged.

There were always anciently Visores operationum appointed, and they upon Oath certified, that they saw the Kings Money expended, which was demanded in the Chequer; and for Victuals, as they were bought with the Kings Money, so when they grew stale, or that the danger was passed, they were sold again to the Kings use.

My Lords, that even in times of War, when the Frontier Towns and Castles were besieged, and the Borders invaded, that even then the King did bear the Charges, appears by the allowance in the Chequer.

Trin. 27. E. 1. Rot. 47. pro tuitione Castri, now Castles, contra Scotos qui hostiliter Regnum in partibus illis invaserunt.

M. 31. E. 1. Rot. 2. The Scots besieged Carlisle 26. E. 1. and allowance now de exitibus Castri, which was the Kings.

And M. 27. E. 1. 75. 10000 l. pro quatuor ingent. and Trin. 32. E. 1. Rot. 11, 12. visus compus 28. E. 1. Rot. 71. prout justum, quia Scoti contra Regem hostiliter insurgunt; therefore de Thesuro Regis Barwick fortified, & Rot. 78. Dorso; it appears that the Sheriff of York-shire had carried 40000 l. de Thesuro Regis to those Parts.

Bra. in 17. E. 1. propter frequentes egressus Scotorum in Regnum; the Castle of Sandall at the Kings Charge, fortified, & prout justum, allowance; and Br. l. Hill. that year the Castle of Hornby, for the same cause the Scots having entred circum predictum Castrum, & apud Lancastre.

4. E. 3. P. & Mar. Dyer 162. b. One in execution for debt in the Fleet, who, as the Book saith, was a man very necessary for the Wars, and it was moved by the Kings Attorney per Mandatum Concilii, if the Prisoner may be licensed by the Queen with a Keeper, to go to Barwick for the defence of it or no, and it was held by all the Judges of B. R. and C. B. that the License was not good; and 13, & 297. the same cause cited accordingly to have been the Opinion of all the Judges.

My Lords, For Prisoners taken in defensive Wars, and likewise for Pledges and Hostages for the securing of Peace, that the charge of the maintenance of these, and the carrying them to the several places of their abode, have been always born by the Kings of the Realm, the allowances in the Chequer are so frequent, as that I intend to cite none of them, save that for the Pri-1637. Prisoners taken in conflict at Dover before spoken of, which is Co's Hil. 4. E. 2. Rot. 22. Dor neither do I find it at any time stood upon, save only 8. E. 2. amongst the Bra. Trin. 8. E. 2. Rot. 88. Dor. but the reason is, because that after the death of E. 1. in the Commission of granting the Constableship of the Castle, no mention was made of the Prisoners, and yet even in that case upon a Monfranc Regi, a Writ of Privy Seal is awarded for allowance, prout Justum.

My Lords, If in all these particulars of Soul-diers, Victuals, Castles and Forts, Horses, Prisoners, and Pledges, in case of defensive Wars, the main supports of them, the Kings could not tax their Subjects, but have born the charge thereof themselves, I shall thence offer it to your Lordships to be so for the defence in general.

My Lords, The allowance in the Chequer in all the particulars before-mentioned are frequent in the case of Mines in the Coasts. The profits of Silver-mines that they upon an account in the Chequer were always answered to the King, was one of the principal Arguments for the Kings right unto them, and there fol. 320. it's held that in all things that concern the Revenue of the Crown, because they are there abated, that the Record of the Exchequer shew not only the course of the Court, but what the Law is throughout the Kingdom.

My Lords, that in Cases of War and Embassies, that the Chequer made no allowance what great Consideration appears by the Statute of 5. R. 2. Cap. 10. that they were not allowed by the Court till the Party brought the Great Seal, or the Privy Seal for it.

And if a Writ of allowance come to the Chequer before the Court had examined the Account, yet they never made allowance till the Court had examined it.

H. 25. E. 1. Ro. 22. licet Bre' de Allocato pendeat de dno 1000 l. allocandis; tamen ante allocationem factam oportet si pecunia illa ad opus Regis devenit, & quod ipsi doceant super hoc curia Regis, and Trin. 25. E. 1. Ro. 47. the allowances never ingross, but by particulars.

My Lords, The next proof that I shall humbly offer unto your Lordships, is in that of borrowing of Money for the defence of the Realm, which as they have usually done it, so it is as clear, that, not only upon Petitions, at their own pleasures, and upon grace, but likewise upon suit, they have been adjudged so to do in the ordinary Courts of Justice.

Co's p. 31. E. 1. Ro. 41. 149 l. borrowed of Henry Sampson pro defensione totius Regni, and repayment ordered M. 10. E. 2. Ro. 160. Grandes Pecunie summas borrowed by the King for that purpose, order for repayment.

Bra. M. 3. E. 3. Circa princ' Ro. 654 My Lords, in this particular I shall cite but this one Case Com. p. 29. E. 1. Ro. 18. the King pro urgentissimis Regni negotiis & defensione totius Regni, had seized divers Sums of Money in all the Abbeyes, and Cathedrals, and other Religious Houses within this Realm, & quo citius commode poterit promised payment. In the Parliament 29 E. 1. at Lincoln the King is petitioned for repayment of these Monies, who promiseth payment, Itaque Regis Conscientia super hoc promittitur and there Ro. 19. divers Sums adjudged to be paid, and there Ro. 65.

My Lords, I shall thus humbly offer this to your Lordships, that if the King had conceived, that when himself wanted Money for the defence, he might have charged his Subjects, he would never have made this answer of repayment ad exonera- dum Conscientiam; for then in Equity and in Conscience the Parliament should have taken care for the satisfaction of these debts, or should at leastwise have distributed part of this Charge upon all his Subjects; neither should the Parties have had full satisfaction for all their debt, but should have born part themselves.

By the Stat. 35. H. 8. Cap. 12. the King for the defence of the Realm, had divers great loans made to him; now likewise there being cause of a new defence against France and Scotland in Aid of the King, and likewise release to the King all Suits and Petitions concerning those Monies. My Lords, it will need no application; these were general loans, and for the defence.

My Lords, I am now come to the other Authorities for proof thereof, which is by the Acts of Parliament.

My Lords, before I come to the Acts of Parliament themselves, I shall humbly offer to your Lordships the Summons and Preparatives to them.

First, The Ardua Regni Negotia, for which they are called, are principally defensionem concernentia; that these are not the way and manner of defence and their evidence therein, but the supplies and aids for this defence, I have presented clear proofs to your Lordships before. That these Aids cannot be raised without their consents, is strongly inferred in this, that the Knights of the Shire are to have plenam & sufficientem auctoritatem pro se & communitate Comitatus pred' ad faciend' & consentiend' to the things in negotiiis amediis: If this might be done without the consents of the Commons, this in the Writ would be needless; but that this cannot be done without their consents, is cleared by the words following in the Negative, Ita quod pro defectu potestatis hujusmodi dicta negotia infecta non remaneant quovismodo. This, My Lords, is the constant form of the modern and all the ancient Writs, and shews clearly that the Commons, without their consents in Parliament, are not chargeable to a defensive War.

In the Acts of Parliament, I will begin with that of William the Conqueror, the fourth of his Reign, which besides that is cited in the Preface of the eighth Report and Institus. fol. 76. b. and by Ingulph. fol. 519. and Mr. Selden in his Eadmerus p. 171. It's likewise of Record and enrolled in the Red-Book in the Chequer. The words are thus.

Volumus & firmiter precipimus et concedimus, quod omnes liberi homines totius Monarchia Regni nostri habeant et teneant terras suas et possessiones suas bene et in pace libere ab omni exactione injusta et ab omni tallagio; Ita quod nihil ab eis exigatur vel capiat, nisi servitium suum liberum, quod de jure nobis facere debent et facere tenentur, et concessum jure hereditario in perpetuum per commune Concilium totius Regni nostri predicti.

My Lords, the words, by reason of the disjunctive et ab omni Tallagio, are plain, that the King shall not exact nor take any thing of any Freeman, but what his tenure binds him unto; as in words, by reason of the generality of them, it extends to cases to the defence of the Realm: that it doth so in intent, I shall endeavour thus to present it to your Lordships.

The Military Services, before mentioned for the defence of the Realm, they are by Bracton attributed to the Conquerors Institutions; for in his 2d. Book fol. 36. speaking of them, he saith thus, Secundum quod in conquestu fuit ad invicem, Plowden in the Argument of Thomas Tresham's Case.

Means

Means the Conqueror had to do it, by reason of the many Attainders of those that take part with Harold, and after his death with Edgar Etheling: That he did it in a great part, appears by Math. Paris, fol. 8. That he put all the Clergy which before held in Frankalmoigne sub servitute militari, to do service tempore hostilitatis, and by the County Palatine of Durham and Chester in those places of danger. In the Book of Knights Fees in H. 2ds. time, it appears by the Certificates, that they had sometimes de veteri Feoffamento, and sometimes de novo: And by some of them it appears, that the Tenures de novo Feoffamento were before King Stephens time, and therefore it's probable that the vetera might be those created by the Conqueror. The provision for Souldiers pay by Tenures, was likewise of his Institution, as appears by that before cited out of the Black Book, lib. 1. cap. 27. That in primitivo Regni statu post Conquestum, ad stipendia et donativa Militum, out of the Castles and other Lands in quibus agricultura non exercebatur, pecunia numerata succedebat.

The Policy and Provision of the Conqueror, for the defence being by Tenures, when in this Act of Parliament he lays quod nihil ab eis exigatur vel capiatur, nisi servitium suum, quod de jure nobis facere tenentur, as I humbly conceive, shews plainly that the Subject was not otherwise to be charged for the defence, nor further, than by their Tenures.

This, My Lords, further appears by other parts of the Parliament, where speaking of any thing of charge that is to be done according to their Tenures, as that all bene se teneant in Equis et Armis ad servitium suum integrum faciend; But in the next place speaking of the defence, it saith that all within the Realm sint fratres Conjurati pro viribus et facultatibus, to defend the Kingdom and the Peace, et ad judicium rectum, et justitiam faciendam, the coupling of the Defence with that of the Peace, and doing Justice, shews the personal care that all by their Oath of Allegiance ought to bear to the Common Peace and Good of the Realm.

The next Statute that I shall present to your Lordships is that of Runney-meade 17 Johannis, the words are these, Nullum scutagium vel auxilium ponam in regno nostro, nisi per Commune Concilium Regni nostri, nisi ad Corpus nostrum redimendum, and to Knight his eldest Son, and to Marry his eldest Daughter; as in words this extends to the defence, because all supplies for that purpose from the Subject, they are only in auxilium or in subventionem expensarum of the King, who, as before is proved, is principally bound thereto. So may the intent likewise be further gathered, first, from this, that the word Auxilium is joyned with that of Scutage, which is for the defence; and likewise from this, that particular satisfaction is made by other parts of that Statute to those that had been disseised by R. 1. and King John, which were things done only for the increafe of their Revenue without shew of the common defence, that both before 9 H. 3. and afterwards 20 E. 1. this was a Statute and so accounted, I have before proved: And in the Book of 5 H. 3. it is called by the name of Magna Charta, Sans addition: So 37 H. 3. in that solemn Confirmation observed by Math. Paris, p. 1155. This of Runney-meade is confirmed by the name of Magna Charta; and 50 H. 3. p. 1220. which I note only to this purpose, that of speaking of Magna Charta, this of Runney-meade is intended as well as that of 9 H. 3. as part thereof, and bodied both together; yet that neither of them were observed either in King Johns time and of H. 3ds. time, our Histories are full of it: And by the Popes Bulls of 12, et 13. H. 3. the Pope absolving the King from his Oath in their Confirmation, doth it, because as the words of the Bull are, Juramentum peccati vinculum esse non debet; neither till 29 E. 1. as I shall hereafter prove, were they at all observed in the things concerning the Kings Prerogative.

The next that I shall cite, are the Statutes of 25 E. 1. and the Stat. de Tallagio non concedendo.

That of 25 E. 1. c. 5. & 6. the grievance is for aids and prizes taken through the Realm for the Wars; the King grants that such aids and prizes taken through the Realm for the Wars, shall not be brought into any Custom for any thing before done, be it by Roll, or any other Precedent that may be found; and further grants, that for no business from henceforth he will take such manner of aids, tasks and prizes, but by the common consent of the Realm, and for the common profit, saving the ancient aids and prizes due and accustomed.

My Lords, although by the Copulative it is clear enough, that there must be common consent and common profit concurring; and although the saving of the ancient prizes and aids accustomed might well enough have been satisfied in the aid excepted in Runny Mead, and the prizing of Wines and Purveyance.

Yet to out these, and all other scruples, the Statute de Tallagio made afterwards for that purpose is general, that no Tallage or aid shall be taken by the King, nor that any of his Officers shall take any Corn, Leather, Cattel, or any other Goods, without the consent of the Party.

My Lords, to bring these Statutes to the thing in question, that these things cannot be done, though for the defence, the times of the making them, and the circumstances concurring thereto, I shall present to your Lordships.

That of 25 E. 1. by the date appears was the tenth of October, 25 E. 1. My Lords, the King the twelfth of August before being at Odimer, ready to go over to Flanders, the Parliament being then summoned by his Letters Patents, Rot. Pat. 25 E. 1. m. 7. taking notice of the Constables and Marshals departure from the Court in displeasure, and of the rumours of the people that the King refused to seal Articles sent him for the common profit, for redress of divers grievances done to the people: For the grievances, he saith, that without those things he could not have defended the Realm, and yet saith that he is sorry for it, and prayeth that this may be his excuse, as he that hath done those things, neither to buy Lands, nor Tenements, nor Castles, nor Towns, but to defend himself and the whole Realm; and that if he returned again, he would have all know, that he had an intent to amend all those things, to the honour of God, and content of his people, and that he hath done much already; that if he dies in this service, his Heir shall make amends.

Hereby it appears, that the grievances which procured this Statute were for the defence of the Realm; therefore from hence it follows, that the aids and taxes there mentioned were for the defence; so likewise that the exception of the ancient aids extends not to those of the defence, that being the thing wholly complained of. This Declaration of the King was the twelfth of August, the September after, the King being at Winchelsey, those Articles are sent to him, to which he deferred for the present to give his assent unto, because his Council was not there, and so fails over into Flanders. This Statute of 25 E. 1. is past by the King beyond the Sea; the Teste Edwardo filio nostro at his return, as appears by Walsingham, p. 42. The King is desired to confirm these Articles, which in Walsingham p. 40. are the same word for word, as in the Statute de Tallagio which the King then deferred.

27 E. 1. They desire it again, which the King doth with a Salvo Jure Corona nostra in fine adjecta quam cum audissent Comites cum dispendio ad propriam suam, saith the Author, Sed revocatis ipsi ad eandem Pascha ad votum eorum absolute omnia sunt concessa.

That the Statute de Tallagio was after that of 25 E. 1. is plain in this, by the Kings going over to Flanders without assenting to any Articles. In Septemb. and 10th of Octob. following, as appears by that Stat. 25 E. 1. it self, it was made; and likewise by the Statute de Tallagio it self, in the Kings releasing all rancour to the Earl-Marshall and Constable, who had most offended him, and first presented these Articles to the King.

My Lords, I shall add this only; as I conceive, it will not be proved that this King, either before or after the making of this Statute, or any of his Successors since, ever claimed this absolute power over the Subjects, as to lay Aids and Tallages upon them for the supportation of their own private Estate, abstracted from the common defence or good. This King at this time, we see by his own Declaration, was far from it, this last Statute fully satisfied those that desired it; for as Walsingham saith, ad eorum votum absolute omnia sunt concessa. If therefore it extends not to that of defence, I shall humbly offer it, by what construction of it our Ancestors Judgments and Discretions will be freed from a great deal of censure that were so well contented with it.

My Lords, Magna Charta being confirmed at the same time when the Statute of 25 E. 1. was made; and both that and the Statute de Tallagio being only Articles upon Magna Charta, they were all of them, as I conceive, intended in the subsequent, and so often confirmation of Magna Charta.

My Lords, the next is the Statute of 14 E. 3. c. 1. that the people shall not be compelled to make any aid, or to sustain any charge, but in Parliament: That this cannot be done for the defence, will (as I conceive) be enforced from the words; for a great Subsidy having been granted, as well for the Wars on this side the Sea, that is, for defence, as for the French Wars. It's declared, that this shall not be drawn into example, and that out of Parliament they shall not be compelled to sustain any charge; and then it is further Enacted, That that Subsidy, and all the profits of Wardships, Escheats, and other profits of the Realm, shall be spent for defence and safeguard of the Realm, and the Wars in Scotland and France, and not other where: So that the Statute, as I humbly conceive, all put together, bears this sense, that the Subsidies granted in Parliament, and the Wardships, being a fruit of the Tenures created for the defence of the Realm, and other profits arising to the King by way of Prerogative, are to be spent for the defence of the Realm, and the Kings other Wars; but that no aid or charge for any of these can be laid upon the Commons without consent in Parliament.

My Lords, that the practice of this King, I mean E. 3. was contrary to these Statutes, and that they were not kept, appears by the Parliament Roll 15 E. 3. N. 9. the next year after, where the Commons shew that their Goods were seized, and their Bodies imprisoned without any Suit commenced against them.

My Lords, the next which I shall cite are the Statutes of 25 E. 3. and 1 R. 3. against Loans and Benevolences, which I shall humbly offer to your Lordships on this ground.

Ad ea, que frequentius acciderint, adaptantur Leges.

As for my part, I have seen no general Loans or Benevolences, but they were for the defence; so I conceive, if they were any otherwise, they are but few in respect of the others: The common grievances therefore being by Loans and Benevolences of that nature, these Statutes, I conceive, were made against them; for these being not within the words of any of the former Statutes, that therefore the Kings might with the more colour put them in practice; so, on the other side, being equally as dangerous to the Subject, because of the displeasure by denial procured the Statutes: That Loans for defence were after 25 E. 3. counted unlawful, appears by Walsingham, p. 179. that 44 E. 3. The King sinistro usus Concilio magnas Summas Pecunie of all sorts, mutuo petiit afferens quod in defensionem Ecclesie, & Regni illas expendere, but that the people would not lend.

My Lords, the next which I shall cite is direct in words, which although it be not an Act of Parliament, yet the weight of the Authority, by the putting it, will appear; it's the second part of the Parliament Roll, 2 R. 2. N. 3, 4, & 5. the Kingdom being beset with the Enemies of France, and Spain, and Scotland, who all three by Land and Sea invaded the Realm: The Privy Council not willing in a thing so much concerning the Realm to take the whole carriage of it upon themselves, nor desiring so soon to call a Parliament, but a little before being dissolved; they therefore resolve to assemble a great Council of most of the Bishops, Lords, and other great men, and Sages of the Realm, who meeting and finding the absolute necessity of a present preparation for defence, and that the King wanted money to do it; what their full and final resolution in this case of extremity for the defence was, I shall read the words of the Roll; they say, Pur conclusion final qu'ils ne poient cest mischeif remedier sans charger les hommes de Realm quel charge ne pait de fait ne grant sans Parliament. And therefore the necessity being urgent, these great men lend money for the present, with advice presently to call a Parliament, as well to provide for the repayment of this Loan, as for a further supply. Its true, my Lords, this King at this time was within age; and it is likely that many of his Council had been E. 3. his Grandfathers Privy Council, who well knew his Prerogative, and extended it as far, by reason of his great Wars, to the charging of his Subjects, as any before or since his time; and that not only the Privy Council, but likewise, as the Record is, almost all the Prelates, as other Dukes, Earls, Barons, Bannerets, and other Sages of the Realm, which as I conceive were the Judges, should be so far from putting this in execution, as that they declare in the Negative, upon full deliberation, that the Commons cannot be charged herein, but in Parliament; themselves likewise thereby being to undergo a present charge, by lending to supply that necessity. The Authority must needs be weighty, that upon second thoughts afterwards the same was declared in full Parliament by the Lord Chancellor, 1637. four, and so afterwards entred upon the Roll without any qualification at all, adds further to the Authority.

Ulr. Febr. 3. Caroli, a Commission issued to divers great Lords, the end, as appears by the words, was for aiding the Kings Allies beyond Sea, and for the defence and safety of the Kingdom and people: They were by the Commission to raise money by Imposition or otherwise, which without extreme danger to the King, Kingdom and people, can admit no long delay, wherein form and circumstances are to be dispensed with, rather than the substance lost. This, my Lords, was a Commission to tax the Subject in time of necessity for defence: The last Parliament this Commission, as against the Law, was condemned by both Houses, and cancelled in his Majesties presence, and sent so to be viewed by both Houses.

Philip de Comines, in his fifth Book cap. 8. observing the same above all other, commends the policy of the English Laws and Government, and both he and Bodinus, Reipublica lib. 6. c. 11. and Pasquierus, Advocate-General, in the King of France his Chamber of Accomptes, in his second Book c. 6. & 7. all shew this likewise to be the ancient Law of France; and how the practice comes to be otherwise, there Pasquierus shews at large; and that the Kings sometime endeavouring the contrary, found so much difficulty, that they afterwards, especially Charles the fifth, procured by the consent of the three Estates these Aids for defence to be granted for three or four years together; and that this consent of the people at the first, was afterwards that which gave the occasion to the King to take it without consent: And therefore he concludes, that France being un Realm de consequence, that they must not easily promise any thing, though but once, which they will not be willing to permit for ever.

My Lords, I have now done with the proofs: In the next place, I shall endeavour an Answer to some few Objections that are obvious both from Reason and Authority.

1. For those of Authority, 13 H. 4. 14. 16. Gascoignes Opinion, That the King may charge his people without Parliament to a thing that is for the common profit of the people; the thing he applies it to is, that the King may grant Pontage and Murage.

My Lords, That the King may grant both these, and Tolls upon Erection of a new Fair or Market, and Pannage, I shall not deny.

The Answer I shall give to them is, First, That these Grants do charge Venalia only; that is, Goods carried to those Places for Merchandize; but that any Tax may be laid secundum statum & facultates, either upon the Hundred or County, I shall humbly deny it.

It is true, My Lords, By the Conquerors Laws it appears that Cities and Walled Towns were for the defence of the Country, and therefore by those Laws, no Fair or Market might be kept but in Civitate & Burgis Muro wallatis; therefore in Doomsday in all such its found that there are so many Mansiones murales, which by their Tenure, when need was, were bound ad murum reficiendum. That no other Land that holds not by that Service is liable, appears by the Parl. Roll, 1 R. 2. pars 2. in 76. Where all the Cities and Burroughs of England petition, That in this time of danger, they not being able with their Merchandizes to do it, that others that had Land within the Town might be made Contributaries avant ceo heures ont port nul charge.

The Answer is, That all according to their Tenure, as they have anciently done; so shall they still; and if this might be done, there would have been no need of the Statutes of 2 & 3 P. & M. cap. 1. 23. El. cap. 4. for giving power to tax men secundum statum & facultates, to repair Castles and Towns within 20 Miles of Scotland.

For the Tolls and Pontages and Panages, as there is a great deal of equity, for those which receive benefit by bringing their Goods to the Market, and over the Bridge, should contribute to the Charge that makes and maintains the Market-Places and the Bridges; so neither are these compulsory, but voluntary Charges; for as no man pays, but he that receives the benefit; so is none compellable thereto, but is left to his liberty.

Neither is there any colour in respect of the Town it self, to whom the Murage or Pannage is granted, why they should not be charged, because the Grant cannot be but at their own Suits; for if it be not at the Suits et commoditates, the Grant is void, and to be revoked, as appears Pat. 5. E. 3. 2 pars in 20.

It may be further objected, That as the Law hath intrusted the way and manner of managing of the Defence wholly and independently unto his Majesty; so likewise of Aids and Means, as the Causa sine qua non; the other cannot be effected, and therefore his Majesty should not be dependent upon the Parliament for them.

My Lords, The near relation between his Majesty and the Parliament, that they are but one Body, hath been presented to your Lordships; and that his Majesty did exercise the Summum imperium there. Bodine lib. 1. cap. ult. says, Ejusdem quod esse potest? tributa nova imponere cujus est legem ferre but that the Legislative power is not in his Majesty out of Parliament, will be granted.

The Subjects Interest being as nearly concerned in the Defence, as his Majesty's, there's no cause why they should not be willing to proportion the Aid to the Occasion; so neither can the Law presume otherwise, which hath so high an opinion of the Judgment and Integrity of this Court, that as it is in the Commun. 398. It's unlawful for any man to conceive any dishonourable thing of it.

My Lords, My last Answer hereto is, That by the Law the King hath as independent a Power to make a Foreign War, as well as a Defensive; it will, as I conceive, be granted, that his Majesty in this Case hath not power to Tax the Subject; for then it would follow, that as well as to the conquering of the next adjacent Realm, so of all Europe, the Subject should be at the Charge, and yet the Land conquered, should be only his Majesty's; and yet upon this ground, in respect of the equality of the Powers, it might be done as well there, as here.

Neither, My Lords, as I humbly conceive, doth this only answer the Objection, but returns upon the other side for his Majesties Highness his Power to make offensive War; which for the most part, causeth a Defensive; by this means it should be in his Majesties power to cause a defensive War, and to tax the Subject for the Maintenance of it.

My Lords, The last Objection whereto I shall endeavour an Answer, stands thus; The Parliament is a great Body, and moves slowly, and that the Cause may be such, that the Cause may be lost before the Parliamentary Supplies come.

My Lords, How means of effecting so sudden and so great a Surprise, can be so secretly carried, ried, I shall not examine it, in reason, but humbly offer hereto these Answers.

Anno 1637. That the Services whereby the Law hath provided for the Defence, both at Land and Sea, they have the same mention of time with the Parliamentary Supplies upon the Summons of the Tenants by Knights-Service ad exercitum, and of Cinque-Ports, 40 dayes warning, is to be given as for the Parliament.

And so is it probable for that of Mould. 13 E. 1. it was for others that held by Sea-Service.

And anciently the Summons ad exercitum to the Ports, and for the Parliament, went out much about the same time, that the Parliament might Assesse the Escheage, and that in case the Tenures and other Revenues were not able to maintain the War, that the Parliament might provide for farther Supply, as appears E. 1. M. 15. 31 E. 1. & 44 E. 1. M. 15, 16. Et oportet neminem Legibus esse sapienterem.

The Tunnage and Poundage when first granted for life, was that the Kings might have always a Sum of Money ready upon such sudden occasions.

In the Parl. 4 R. 2. N. 42. the Commons desire payment of Edw. the Third his Debts, that they might be encouraged to lend the King in Aid of the Realm, if a sudden cause of necessity should fall out; the Answer is, that it shall be done so long, le Petition.

My Lords, By this it appears that this objection was not then taken to be of weight; many of the loanes are in necessitatis articulo.

The authorities that further answer this objection, are great and full in point.

The first is; That of the Parliament Roll of 2. R. 2. before cited: the business of defence could not stay so long as for a Parliamentary supply; yet agreed that the Commons without Parliament could not be charged; and therefore the same men that gave the Judgment, presently lend money for that purpose.

In the statute of 31. H. 8. for Proclamations, the cause of the making of the statute is expressed in these words; Considering that suddain causes and occasions fortune many times, which do require speedy remedies; and that by abiding a Parliament, in the mean time might happen great prejudice to ensue to the Realm; therefore the Kings Proclamation is by that Act made Equivolent to an Act of Parliament, but with a full exception of their Lands, Goods and Chattels: which as it shews that before, by the common Law, the King could not in cases of exigency, that could not stay for a Parliament, take or seize their goods; so they were careful still to preserve their Rights.

My Lords, After the statute of 31 H. 8. the Maxime of Justinian was true in H. 8. as of the Roman Emperors after the Lex Regia: whereby the people transferred their suffrage to the Emperors quod principi placet legis vim habet: so at that time was that other as true on the Subjects part here as there, in the Digest, Lex 10 de regulis juris quod meum est non est universitatis, & quod nostrum est sine facto nostro ad aliam transferri non potest

The 7 Partic. of Spain tit. 1. Partic. secunda, gives something more to the King, for he may take from the Subject pro necessitate Reipublice dato primitus tali casu Domino rei bona lambia ejusdem, vel majoris precij bonorum virorum arbitrio; He may in this Case take, giving a pawn to the Subject for the assurance of a future full satisfaction.

Livy in his 6 Book Cap. 35. Bodine in his 6th Book, fo. 655. affirms, That when Hanibal had put Italy and Rome it self, unto so great hazard, and that their was not Money left in the common Treasury, that yet the Senate, without their consent could not charge the people; but that unusquisque of the Senate, mutuo dedit aliquid in usum publicum.

My Lords, The last authority for the answering of this objection, and clearing of the whole business, is the Commission of the Loan in the West. 2 Car. 4. pars pat. the words are these, the great and mighty preparations, both by Sea and Land, did dayly threaten the Kingdom, that the safety and very subsistence of the King and People, and the common Case of Christendom, were in apparent danger of suffering irreparably, that the Kings treasure is exhaust, and the Coffers empty; that the business of the supply cannot endure so long delay as the calling of a Parliament: and inquiring into all means just in cases of such unavoidable danger: The King is now resolved to borrow of the subject, to enable his Majesty, for their safeties, and Promiseth re-payment.

My Lords, the borrowing of money only is the thing required, that is, for the defence the King had no money left, the exigency such that it would not stay for a parliament; This Commission afterwards in the Parliament; 3 Car. was questioned, upon debate adjudged by both the houses of Parliament to be void in Law, by the Petition of Right presented so to the King, his Majesty denies it not. My Lords, From this objection of suddain danger I come to the next, which is the third thing before offered to your Lordships which is an admittance that the danger sometimes may be such, that the Subjects goods without their consents may be taken from them; for as propriety being both introduced and maintained by humane Laws, all things by the law of nature, being common; there are therefore sometimes like the Philistinis being upon Sampson, wherein these cords, they are too weak to hold us, necessitas enim, as Cicero says, magnum humana imbecillitatis patrocinium omnem legem frangit, at such times all property ceaseth, and all things are again resolved into the common Principles of nature.

These times, as sometimes they are only in instanti, and concern but some few, as in Cases of killing one another in a mans own defence, pulling down houses in a common Fire, making of Forts upon other Mens Lands, or with their Goods, upon sudden Assaults; so sometimes they are longer in continuance, and larger in extent, and concern the whole Kingdom, as it is in times of War, quando agitur pro aris & focus flagrans bello.

And as on the Particulars before mentioned, which are but for a short time, and that concern some few only, the Law hath no power for that time, nor maintaines any property; so in the latter it loseth this power for a longer time, and over all.

A Dissent upon Disseisin in time of War takes not away the Entry of the Disseisee, Litt. Sec. 412. no Plenary after the six Months bars the Patron of his Quare Impedit, upon a Presentation in time of War, 43 E. 3. Q. Imp. 135. N. B. 31.

And in a Writ of Right, where the Seisin makes the Title, the taking of Ejectees must be alledged to be done tempore Pacis, the Law allowing no estate in such times, but calls it an occupation in time of War, Litt. Sec. fo. 12.

And

And as inter arma leges silent, so that of Bract Lib. 4. fo. 240. that tempus guerræ est tempus injuriæ is likewise true, for after the War is ended, the Law, as not having any conizance of things then done, gives no remedy for wrongs in that time sustained, as the case is adjudged in the Roll of Rent, 7 E. 1. inter placita de quærelis Willielmum Parleton queritur de Petro Rardinum quod ipse die Mercurii ante festum St. Tho. 46 H. 3. came to the Town of Cleve, and took of the Plaintiffs Goods three Oxen, four Cows, and three Heifers, and yet detains them; the Defendant alleadgeth the pardon of H. 3. of omnes transgress. factas ratione turbationis tunc in Regno existentis, and that it is tempus guerræ when the Goods were taken; the plaintiff replies, That the King can pardon only offences done to himself, & non transgressionem aliis illas; the defendant rejoins that tempus illud was tempus guerræ, & non tempus Pacis, and upon this the issue joyned. The Jury find, that when the Defendant took the Goods, fuit tempus Belli, & non tempus Pacis; and therefore it was adjudged for the Defendant.

Tempus Belli, When property ceaseth, is not upon every intestine or defensive War; but only at such times when the course of Justice is stoppt, and the Courts of Justice shut up; and this is Tempus Belli in the institutes Sec. 412. p. 39. E. 3. L. R. Ro. 49. the Attainder of treason of Thomas Earl of Lancaster reversed error assigned, quia tempore pacis maxime cum per totum tempus predicta Cancellaria & alia &c. Cur. Domini Regis qua fuerunt, & in quibus Lex cuiusq. fiebat prout furi consuevit; nec predictus Dominus Rex illis explicatis equitavit.

That there were greater Armies asfoot on both sides in this business, when the Earl was taken at Burrow-bridge, our Histories are full; but yet it was not that Tempus guerræ intended by the Law, because the Courts of Justice were open, and the King, with Banners displayed, was not in person in the Field.

My Lords, In these times of War I shall admit not only his Majesty, but likewise every other man that hath power in his hands, may take the Goods of any within the Realm, pull down their House, or burn their Corn, to cut off Victuals from the Enemy, and do all other things that conduce to the safety of the Kingdom, without respect had to any mans Propriety.

12 H. 8. 2. Br. Trans. 406. 8 E. 4. 23. That in such times a Subject may make a Bulwark in another mans Land, and that the Laws already established are silent at such times: And although in that foreseen and lingring War of Hannibal's, whereof I have before spoken, the Senate could not charge the People; yet when there was a Tumultus Gallicus, that is, when the Cisalpine, their Neighbours, on the sudden (as sometimes they did) assaulted the City; by the same Author the Case was otherwise.

My Lords, Besides this sudden and tumultuous War which shuts the Courts of Justice, and brings his Majesty in person into the Field, and wherein Propriety ceaseth; the Law takes notice likewise of other times of War: as when his Majesty upon just cause known unto himself, by his Proclamation proclaims War against any Foreign State; and likewise the Law takes notice of the Effects thereof; that is, that no Subject of such Prince or State is capable to prosecute any Suit, though but in a personal Action, in any his Majesties Courts; and likewise that then it is lawful for any his Majesties Subjects to seize and keep to their own use the Goods of the Subject of any such Prince or State, as the Books Car. 13. are adjudged. 7 E. 4. 13. 13 H. 8. N. B. Propert. 38. 22 E. 3. 16.

My Lords, It appears not by any thing in the Writ, that any War at all was proclaimed against any State, or that any of his Majesty's Subjects had taken away the Goods of any Princes Subjects in Christendom, but that the Party might have recovered them before your Lordships in any of his Majesties Courts; so that the Case in the first place is, whether in times of Peace, his Majesty may without consent in Parliament, alter the property of the Subjects Goods for the Defence of the Realm.

Secondly, The time that will serve the turn for the bringing in of the Supplies and Means of the Defence, as appears to your Lordships judicially by the Writ, that is 7 Moneths within 4 days; for the Writ went out 4 Augusti, and commands the Ships to be at Portsmouth, the Place of the Rendezvous the first of March following; and thereby it appears that the necessity in respect of the Time, was not such, but that a Parliamentary consent might in that time have been endeavoured for the effecting of the Supply.

Yet in the Third Place, it is averred, that Salus Regni periclitabatur, and that was the cause of the issuing of the Writ, and this by the Demurrer, if it should be confessed, yet this is but in general; how or in what manner periclitabatur non constat: By the Law the Defendant may have a Protection when he is in negotii Regni: But when he will make use of it, it's not allowable in that generality; but he must shew in particular, in what Town or Castle, or other particular Service he is in, that so the Court may judge whether the Cause be sufficient yea or no; and yet is that his Majesties Writ too, as well as that in question: see the Books for it, 36 H. 6. 39. 28 H. 6. 1. Yet in the fourth Place, if your Lordships shall give any heed to this General, as to the Particular of Pyrates infesting the Coasts, and Preparations further ad regnum gravandum, mentioned in the Writ, the Case then, as I conceive, is this.

In a Time of Peace, his Majesties vigilancy foresees a danger likely to ensue; the Supplies for prevention of this Danger will serve, if brought in seven Months after, within four days; yet whether in this Case, without their consent in Parliament, his Majesty may alter the property of his Subjects Goods?

Mr. St. John's Second Days Argument.

MY Lords, I have now done with the Defence in general, and in the last place, I shall endeavour to prove that this of the Sea hath no such peculiarity in it, but that it will fall within that of the Defence in general; wherein, in the first place, I endeavour an Answer to some Objections, both from Authority and Reason, that may seem to prove a Right. And secondly, to some Precedents concerning the Use and Practice; of the first Rank I shall begin with Danegels.

It may be said, that the Danes infesting the Realm, that Ethelred for the resisting of them, first by his own Authority laid this upon the Subject, and made it an Annual Charge.

Secondly, That after the Conquest, they seldom infesting the Coasts of the Conqueror, took it not annually as at first, but at such times only ly as it is in the Black Book, lib. 1. case 11. when Anno ab exteris gentibus Bellum, vel opiniones Bellorum 1637. insurgebant.

And Thirdly, That after H. 2. time, the Kingdom being altogether freed from the Danish Invasions, although the Danegelt lost the name and use, it never after this time being taken by Hides of Land as before; that yet the succeeding Kings by the same Authority did lay other Taxes upon the Subject for the Defence of the Sea.

My Lords, For Answer, In the first place I shall observe this only by the way, that the best and certainest Authorities for the Danegelt agree not what it was.

I mean the Laws of Edw. the Confessor, cap. 11. and the Black Book, for the Confessor's Laws say, that it was one shilling upon every Hide of Land, and the Black Book 2 s. by which it should seem that it was little in use in H. 2. time, nor much known.

The 111th Chapter in the Confessor's Laws, were this is mentioned, was no part of the ancient Laws themselves, but something afterward added, appears by the words themselves.

First, It speaks of the freedom which the Church in the first institution of it had, which freedom, we know, was not lost till after the Conquest, and likewise of the granting of it to William Rufus by Parliament; and therefore it should seem to be inserted in those Laws afterwards out of the Laws of H. 2. for this 111th Chapter, and that of Danegelt in H. 2. Laws are the same de verbo in verbum as appears in Hoveden, fol. 544.

But admitting the thing, I shall endeavour answers to each part of the Objection, as first, That the Danegelt was granted in Parliament.

Mr Camb. Brit. p. 142. observed that the Danes first infested the Coasts Anno Dom. 800. and, as his words are, with sic' Hurly Burlies, as the like was never heard of, havock of all, razing of Cities and burning of Churches, and for their continual Piracy had got the name of Weccingles; that is, Pyrates.

The Danegelt first began in Ethelred's time, almost 200 years after the Danes first Invasion; for he began his Reign A. D. 978. That provision for Sea-defence was made in the Interim after 800, and before Ethelred's time, appears by the many Sea-fights of Alfred and other Kings with them: That this Provision was usually in Parliament, is probable from that of Ingulphus, Lond. Print. fol. 488. Where Anno Dom. 833. which was 33 years after the Danes first Invasion; A Decree to the Abbot of Crowland is dated thus: Coram Pontificibus, Proceribus, & Majoribus totius Anglie, in Civitate Londini, ubi omnes congregati sumus pro consilio sapiendo contra Danicos Pyratas littora Anglie assidue infestantes. If King Ethelred by his own Authority might have imposed this, it is like some of his Predecessors, the Case so necessary requiring it, in almost 200 years space would have done it before this time.

That this of Danegelt was done in Parliament, the words carry as much; for the Words of the Law are Danegeldi redditio primitus statuta fuit; a Word most proper for the Parliamentary Authority.

But fully by the Laws of that King, I mean Ethelred's Laws, in Mr. Lambert's Saxon Laws, fo. 58. there ex sapientum suorum consilio peace is made with the Danes, and a certain Sum of Money, in present granted to the Army, as our Historians observe. The Danes by composition were to send away the whole Fleet saving 45 Ships, which were to remain to defend the Kingdom against other Enemies; and the King was to maintain those Ships at his Charge; that the Danegelt was paid to the Danes for this Defence, many of our Historians observe. My Lords, That at the same Parliament this was provided for, appears by the words of the Law, Si quis igitur post hoc Navalis apparatus in Anglia predam fecerit, hic nobis auxilium ferat exercitus, nosque ei quamdiu (in fide manserit) qua ad comitatum paravimus omnia, that this was a Parliament, as the words shew it, so is it held in the Preface to the 9th. Report, Huntingdon, fol. 205. If this was not the Danegelt, yet this is clear, that in that King's time then provision contra navales apparatus was made by Parliament. Primum statuerunt Angli infansito concilio quod ipse Danis censum persolveret Regibus, namque nostris modo persolvitur ex consuetudine quod Danis persolvebatur ex ineffabili terrore. That Danegelt, which after the Conquest was paid to the King, we see by that Author primum statuerunt Angli; Statutum Anglorum must needs be by Parliament.

If the Danegelt in time of such great danger, was not imposed without Parliament, it must strongly make against those that shall object it.

The Danes having quitted the Realm, that the Danegelt was released by Edward the Confessor, as Ingulph. fol. 510. and Hoveden, fol. 253. and all our latter Historians. That of Ingulph. (my Lords) alone is without all exception, who lived in those times; for he was brought up in England in the Confessors days, and therefore knew what he wrote. He afterwards went over into Normandy, and was the Conqueror's Secretary, came over with him to the Conquest, & at his own Charge maintained 12 Horses: he was so great at the Court, that as himself writes, fol. 514. quis voluit humiliavit, quos voluit exaltavit: and p. 518. A Charter of the Conqueror's to the Abbey of Crowland was made ad petitionem familiaris mei Ingulphi, and therefore in all likelihood would not report this partially against the King.

My Lords, That we are not to put out our Fires at the Ringing of the Coverfew-Bell, we have no other Law for it, but Disuse, and the Testimony of Historians, that H. 1. released it.

For that of the Black Book, that William the Conqueror retained it quando Bella, vel Opiniones Bellorum insurgebant; as that Book is mistaken in the thing, saying it was 2 s. every Hide, being in truth but one; so it is possible he might mistake in the other too: That it was released in aeternum is apparent; that many things were done de facto, to the infringing of the liberty of the Subject, both in his time, and of H. 1. and H. 2. too, it is clear by our Historians. And if it were not released before, yet that King Stephen released it, is written by Huntingdon, fol. 221. Hoveden, fol. 276. Hoc Deus voluit, say those Historians, sed nihil horum tenuit; and as all our Historians agree, that after H. the Second's time, in whose Reign the Black Book was compiled, it was never paid, so may it be collected out of the Red Book; for all or most of the Aids and Escuages in H. the Second's, and King John's time being there mentioned in 8 H. 2. quod Danegeldum assensum fuit; but after that, neither of his time, nor of King John's, is any more mention of it.

Sir Henry Spelman in his Glossary, that when it was taken in the Conqueror's time; and since that, it was Consensus Magnatibus Regni & Parliamentariis demum Authoritate.

My Lords, In the last place, if the succeeding Kings

637. Kings mutato nomine, only have in lieu thereof laid other Taxes upon the Subject, they must then hold proportion with that of Danegelt, that is, that they have been equally set upon all the Inland Towns throughout the Kingdom as that was. 12. Upon every Hide of Land: and likewise in time, and that there was no intermission but that in R. 1. and King John's times which were active, that then it was put in execution.

Clo. 15. Johannis m. 3. Dor. & 7. and Matthew Paris p. 312, 313. The Pope had granted the Crown of England to the French King, who was ready to invade the Realm; great provision of Shipping was made ad liberationes Regis, & ad stipendia Regis. So far was this King in this time of necessity, to impose any aid upon the Subject for the Sea-service, as that he himself bore the charge.

My Lords, The next authority from the right which I shall insist upon, is that in the terms of the Law, fol. 114. in the Title of (Hydage) the taxing by Hides was much used in old time, and that chiefly in King Ethelreds days, who in the year 1006. when the Danes landed at Sandwich in Kent. taxed all the Realm by Hides, and every 910. Hides of Land should find one Ship.

My Lords, My first answer is, That this was done when there was a formidable Enemy, and which soon after conquered the Kingdom, was upon the Shore, as by the Book appears, and therefore likely that the Courts of Justice were shut, and that the King was in Person in the Field.

Secondly, This was but actus unicus, and even by the Common Law that so easily admits of Customs is not good, it's actus Binus that hath any colour inducendi consuetudinem.

Thirdly, it appears not by any thing in the Book, but that this might be done by Parliament, many of the ancient Acts of Parliament are statuit Rex &c. And whereas the Book saith, taxing by Hydage was much used in old time; That these were by parliament appears both by use and authority, express in Print. Doomsday in Barkshire, quando geldum dabatur communiter per totum, Barkshire dabat Hydum 3 s. Matthew Paris, p. 780. many Caruragia and Hydagia recited in Parliament that had formerly been given to that King in Parliament.

Bracton, in his second Book, fol. 37. is express in the Point, that they cannot be taken but by grant in Parliament, his words are these, Sunt quedam communes prestationes qua servitia non dicuntur, nec de consuetudine veniunt, nisi cum necessitas intervenerit, sicut sunt Hydagia & Caruragia de necessitate & ex consensu totius Regni introducta, Rot. p. 8. h. 3. m. 4.

My Lords, The next authority I shall insist on, is the case of the Abbot of Roberds-Bridg in Kent, which because prima facie it seems to be in point, I will put it at large.

M. 25. E. 1. finiente C. B. R. 77. The Abbot brought a Replevin again Adam de Bridgland and others for taking his Castles; the Defendants avow in these words, dicunt enim quod occasione turbationis inter Regem & Regem Francia suborta assignatus fuit Will. de Leyborn ex parte regis ad Custodiam Maris faciendam, ratione cujus custodia faciende Terra & Tenementa hominum ejusdem Comitatus agitata fuerunt ad Custodiam faciendam, and the Abbot was seised 22 E. 1. at 7s. 23 E. 1. at 13s. and 24 E. 1. at 15s. ad predictam Custodiam faciendam, and because he resisted to pay that, the Defendants being Collectors for the Town distrained the Abbot. The Abbot in Bar of this Avowry says, that for his Lands he was assailed to find a Horse and Man in Subsidium Custodia predicta, and that he found this Man and Horse accordingly, ad eandem Custodiam faciendam, and therefore demands Judgment, si una & eadem occasione Custodia predicta, he ought to find the Horse & militemus predictam pecuniam solvere. The Defendants maintain their avowry, and say, that the Abbot had divers Lands within the Town, and that he was seised for them for money, and that he was not seised for those for the Man and Horse, therefore issue is joyned and day given without any more thereupon that I have seen.

My Lords, Besides the Authority of it in point, these two things may further be objected from this Case.

The Common use that 22, 23, 24. E. 1. the County was agisted ad Custodiam Maris, and likewise to find Forces.

My Lords, For the last I have before admitted, and by the Statute of Winchester this may be done; for the Service was to be performed in Kent, the same County where the Land lay.

My Lords, Because this Case prima facie hath some shew of Authority in point, I shall endeavour a full and clear answer to it.

By the Case it self it appears, that these Seises were in time of War, the words are occasione turbationis inter Regem & Regem Francia; neither was the War with France, only at that time, but likewise with Scotland and Wales, and all the effects of War.

The French had landed in divers parts of the Realm, and in particular 23 E. 1. in this County of Kent, and had burnt the Priory, and the greatest part of Dover Haven was shut up for a great part of that time, the goods both of the French and Scotch seized throughout the whole Kingdom, the Lands of all Priors Aliens seized, and those that were upon the Maritime parts removed, and Natives put in their Houses, and all Strangers whatsoever that landed within the Kingdom to be arrested: all these, if any of them shall be denied will be made good, not only by our Histories, but likewise by the publick Records of the Kingdom: so that my first answer is that these Seises were in time of an actual defensive War from the two next and greatest States unto the Realm.

My Second answer is, that it appears not at all by any thing in this Case, that these Seises were made by any Authority from the King, for the words are only in the general, that the County was assailed, and that the Abbot himself was assailed, says not by whom or whose Authority.

That it was not by the Kings Authority appears by Leyborns Commission, appointed ad Custodiam predictam faciendam, as the words of the Case are; for by his Commission whereby he was to do this, which is Rot. vas. 22 E. 1. M. 8. He was so far from having any power to tax the County hereunto, that he is Commanded for Victuals, Arms and other things that he shall need in this business, that he shall pay those from whom he shall have any such thing, which likewise is entred in the Co's 23. E. 1. Rot. 77.

My Lords, That there were Parliaments in every one of these years, appears by the Summons, and those in words not usual; for the great Fleet of France being mentioned, and that the French did intend Linguam Anglicanam omnino delere, they were now called ad tractandum, Ordinandum & faciend. nobiscum, and the Lords & allis incolis Regni qualiter sit hujusmodi periculis obviandum; and it is in the Close Roll, 23 E. 1. M. 4. dorf. and 24 E. 1. Anno M. 7. dorf.

1637. My Lords, That accordingly order was taken cum incolis, and that the Gentlemen and other Inhabitants, by way of by-law or agreement amongst themselves, did make provision in this particular, I shall endeavour to prove to your Lordships, that it hath been done at other times, and such by-laws good, appears in 14 E. 2. B. R. Ro. 60.

The Scots entring Duresme, a by-Law was made by the Inhabitants for the raising of money; and one that refused it, was adjudged to pay it: Besides, Leybourn who was Admiral of all the English Fleet, there were Custodes Maris in each Maritime County: These, as appears Com. 24 E. 1. Ro. 78. dorf. were chosen by the Commonalty of each County.

And that these, together with the Sheriff and Inhabitants did make Orders for those things, appears by the Com. 23 E. 1. Ro. 79. where Writs are directed to the Sheriff of Kent, and all the Sheriffs of other Maritime Counties, commanding them, that Circa Maris Custodiam visis presentibus Milites, & Potentiores liberos homines de Balliva tua evoces, & cum ipsis provida circumspectione deliberes, how he should do it. This, I conceive, is expressed in point, and the practice grounded upon that in Parliament, ad ordinandum cum incolis.

My Lords, my third Answer to this Case is, that these Sesses were for Land-service only, and not for Shipping.

And this appears first by the Case it self, for the Abbot in Bar of the Avowry says, that he was fessed to find a Man and Horse in Subsidium Custodia predicta, which must be for Land-service, and therefore demands Judgment si una & eadem occasione custodia predicta, he ought both to find the Horse, and to pay the Sess.

My Lords, this is not denied by the Defendants; but they say that the Abbot had other Lands, and that this Sess was for those other Lands; so that its admitted that the Sess for the Horse, which must be for Land-service, and that for which they avow, were both of the same Case; all the difference is, whether the Sess were upon the same Land, or not.

My Lords, if the Sesses for which the Defendants avow had been for Shipping, they might have admitted all that the Abbot had said in Bar of their Avowry, that is, that notwithstanding he found Arms for Land-service, that yet he might for the same Land have been fessed again to the finding of Shipping: Neither do I doubt, but that the parties in the actions now before your Lordships do find Arms, and yet they are fessed for the Shipping, and that it will be stood upon by the other side, that the finding of Arms for Land-service, excuseth not for the Shipping.

But it may be said, that the very words are, that the Sesses were pro Custodia Maris.

My Lords, by divers Records it appears expressly, that the Custody of the Maritime parts of the Land is called Custodia Maris.

Claus. 23 E. 1. m. 4. dorf. A Writ directed Collectoribus pecunia ad custodiam Maris in this County of Kent, commanding them, that in respect that the Cinque-ports were at the charge of Shipping quod quieti sint de custodia Maris facienda, which must needs lye at Land.

Com. 24 E. 1. Ro. 79. A Writ to William Bonill, & Sociis suis ad custodiam Maris in Com. Suffolk assignatis, and yet all that they are to do in that Office is for defence at Land: So Tr. 31 E. 1. N. 20. Com. This Custodia Maritima, how it is to be done, appears Rot. Parl. 46 E. 1. N. 49. and by the Statute of 5 H. 4. c. 3. it is to be done as heretofore it hath been done; according to the Statute of Winchester.

My fourth Answer to this Case is, that the Plaintiff was a Clergy-man, and the Clergy having denied in Parliament to aid the King as the Laity did this year, and at this time they stood at the Kings disfavour; and in Hill. Term, as appears Com. Hill. 25 E. 1. Rot. 17. the King commanded all his Courts of Justice, that if any Clergy-man was Plaintiff in any Action, quod nullum ei fiet remedium; and therefore Wals. p. 41. in his Annalis Concilio of this year of 25 E. 1. says thus, that it was Clero Anglia importabilis, quia de protectione Regia est exclusus, & per Regem nihilominus deperditus.

But, my Lords, if I should let all go that hath been said, yet under your Lordships favours, the Case is of no Authority at all; for admitting that the Sesses were for Shipping, and that by the Kings Authority, yet had the Plaintiff no reason to put himself upon the point of Law, when the matter of Fact would help him.

For the Plaintiff says, that he had been fessed before for those Lands; the other part says no, but that it was for other Lands; and upon this the Issue is joyned.

Nay, my Lords, if there be any Authority at all in the Case, under favour, it's strong the other way. For if the Sesses were for Shipping, the Abbot says, that before he had found Arms for the Land-service, and demands the Judgment of the Court, if therefore he ought to pay this Sess too. The other part, if the Law had been clear, might have demurred thereupon; so that the Authority sways this way, that none for the same Land are chargeable for Arms at land, and shipping too.

My Lords, not only for the clearing of this Case, but of all other things that concern it, either in the meer right or matter of Fact before the 29 E. 1. that before the Parliament at Lincoln, 29 E. 1. all things concerning the Kings Prerogative, and the Subjects Liberty, were altogether upon incertainties.

The Statutes of Rumsey Mead of Mag. Charta and Charta de Foresta had been confirmed at least eight times, from 17 Joh. unto 29 E. 1. and yet not only the practice, but likewise the judgments in Courts of Justice were clear contrary to the plain, both words and meaning of them.

By the second Chapter of Mag. Charta, a Baron pro Baroniam integra was to pay but 100 Marks for his relief, the practice and Process out of the Chiquier till 29 E. 1. was always for this relief 100 l.

M. 28 E. 1. Rot. 34. Com. after the death of John Gray that held per Baroniam, the question was, whether he should pay 100 l. as the Record says, prout ante hac onerari solebant, or only 100 Marks propter confirmationem secundum Mag. Charta. and this the Court would not determine before they had consulted with the King, and yet the Statute of Magna Charta had been confirmed but 25 E. 1. and likewise the same year, as appears by the Statute de Articulis super Chartas.

Com. M. 23 E. 1. Ro. 26. Philip Marmion died 23 E. 1. and 100 l. paid for his relief.

It was now 29 E. 1. in question, whether 100 l. or 100 Marks should be paid; and accordingly adjudged but 100 Marks; and Judgment thus entered sciendum enim quod fines isti of 100 Marks admittuntur, licet hactenus they were always 100 l. because 1637. because the King had confirmed Mag. Charta 29 of his Reign, and by his Writs had commanded the Courts to inroll it, and would have it de cetero in omnibus suis Articulis observari. My Lords, of this kind there be many Cases.

The Charter of the Forrest, cap. 10. is nullus de cetero amittat vitam vel membrum pro venatione nostra, and yet against the plain letter and meaning, Com.Tr. 27 E. 1. Ro. 44. Adam Gower of Scarborough, as appears, had in this Kings Reign been beheaded pro venatione in the Forrest of Danby, and now an Inquisition went out to find what Lands and Goods he had, and then upon the return the question was, whether his Land was forfeited, and should Escheat upon such an Attainder, and resolved that his Land was not to be forfeited, P. 22 E. 1. Rot. 48. The Kings Shepherd had put the Kings Sheep into a mans ground who had distrained them, and for this Process went out of the Chequer to punish the man, who there pleads that he knew not they were the Kings sheep.

And there Roll. 51. Dorf. Lessee for life of a Mannour of the Kings with an Advowson excepted, by presenting to the Advowson, the Court declared that he had forfeited the Mannour it self.

By these Cases, it appears that neither the practice nor proceedings in the Courts of Justice in those times, in things between the King and the Subject, are so much to be relied upon as the words of the Law.

Obj. 4. My Lords, It may further be objected, that at the Common Law, before the Statute of Winchester, the King might compell the Subject to find Arms for the defence of the Land, and therefore by the same reason he may charge them to find Ships for defence of the Sea.

My Lords, not granting the thing, yet for the present admitting it, I shall thereunto give these Answers.

1. That his Majesty, by the Tunnage and Pannage, and other Duties at Common Law mentioned, hath a particular Supply for that of Shipping, but hath nothing in particular for the other of Arms, and therefore that may with more reason be laid upon the Subject then the other.

And yet for one of the principal things in that Statute of Winchester, that is, for Watching and Warding, the Kings before that Statute, had a particular and certain Farm or Sum of Money of each County for doing of it, which after that Statute, the County was discharged of; because by that Statute, the Counties took the Charges of doing it upon themselves, as the Cases are, Co's Hil. 20. E. 1. Ro. 10. and Br. Tr. 33. E. 1. Roll. 23. Dorf. 18 l. pro Can. and 76 l. pro Northumb.

My second Answer is, That each Subject, and that secundum statum & facultates, is already chargeable for that of Ships, as hath been before proved; and therefore if he be chargeable both in Money and Kind too, the Charge is double in the one, and single in the other: Neither would it hold proportion with these Cases of Watching, where the counties were discharged of the Money, when they took the things in kind upon themselves: And therefore this Objection cannot (as I perceive) be made, unless his Majesty first quit all the before mentioned Duties upon Merchandize.

My Third Answer is, That in that of Arms, there is only Mutatio speciei, changing of Money into Arms; for they remain the Subjects still in property, and are in his own custody; he may sell them, or employ them at his pleasure for his private use.

But in this way of Shipping, there's Oblatio rei, in respect of the Victuals and Mariners wages 26 Weeks. Car. 13.

My Fourth Answer is, That that of Arms is not only for the defence against Foreiners, but in Watchings and Wardings upon Hue and Cry, and otherwise, to keep the Peace within the Realm, and for the execution of Justice, by assailing the Sheriff, when he shall have occasion to use the Possessio Comitatus, and otherwise; all which do fall in the other.

And as the use of Arms is more general, so are they for the more immediate Defence of that Element, wherein we have our most usual and certain livelihood.

And yet the ordering of these for 300 years and upwards, was by Authority of Parliament.

Lastly, My Lords, In respect of the Victuals and Mariners Wages to be found for 26 weeks; the Case in question is as I conceive, cannot be compared to that of Arms, but rather to that of taxing the Country for finding of Souldiers to go out of their Counties.

5 Obj. My Lords, the next Objection that I shall endeavour to give answer unto, is, That it is in His Majesties Power, for the safety of the Realm, to shut up the Ports and Havens of the Kingdom, and thereby to make a general stoppage of all Foreign trade: And therefore, as his Majesty may anticipate gain, by barring Men from the exercising of their Callings, so by the same reason may he take something away.

My Lords, My first answer is, That the Law therein doth trust the King only with that, which being done, is most to his own loss: as in respect of the Customs, and other Duties, this of prohibiting Forreign trade would be.

My second answer is, That this cannot be done but in time of War, and imminent danger; and that this objection therefore will not be seasonable, until the other be put in execution.

6 Obj. The last Objection is, That in divers old Charters of Liberties and Exemptions, the Patentees are freed de Danegeldo & Navigio; hereby is implied a Right. My Answer is, from the same Charters it may as well be inferred, that the Subject is bound to make and repair the Kings Parks and Houses, and to make new Bridges, and divers other things, these Charters of exemption freeing them ab operationibus omnium Regalium Parcorum & Pontium, and divers other things, which by Law the Subject is not bound unto.

My Lords, for the Precedents, that from matter of Fact and Charge may be brought for proof of the use and matter of Fact: As I do not profess to know them all, so if I did, yet time would not permit a particular Answer to each of them; I shall therefore offer this general Answer to them.

That most of them, or all of them, are for charging the Sea-Towns and not of the Inland-Counties: That besides the Cinque Ports, many great Sea-Towns and Havens, which have Ships, have many great Privileges, and are enfranchised for that purpose, is declared in the Parliament Roll of 13 E. 3. N. 11. before cited. These that are to find Ships, besides the many prescriptions for Wrecks and benefit of Fishing, are discharged of Arrayes and defence at Land, as appears not only by that Parliament Roll, but by the Scotch Roll 10. E. 3. M. 28. Dorf. The Town of Shoreham in the County of Sussex, time out of mind had found Ships, and therefore being by the Commissioners for the Array taxed to Arms for the Land-Service, a Superfedeas for that cause awarded.

Rot. Pat 26. E. 1. N. 16. The Town of Yarmouth, pro servitio Navium impenso & impendendo, are discharged of all Subsidies granted in Parliament, pro Corporibus Navium & attito, & Co'ia Tr. 31. E. 2. R. 30. The Town of Baldsey in the County of Suffolk, for the same cause discharged by Judgement of the Court.

Iter. Cant. 21. E. 1. Ro. 44. Dors. Certain Landholders within the Cinque Ports have Tall de quolibet homine applicante, upon their Lands.

Petitions 1 E. 3. Ro. 9. Office de Pa', in consideration of the Charge of providing Ships, the Town of Southampton petition, That their Privileges of having Customs within their Ports be confirmed unto them: That they had these, appears Hill. 13. H. 4. B. R. Ro. 39. where they are indicted for Extortion, for taking more Custom than was due, Rot. Par. 45. E. 3. The Commons pray, that the Franchises of the Sea-Towns and Havens may be allowed them as heretofore, and that by default thereof the Navy of England is much decayed, to the disaffurance of all the Realm, if need should be. That these that are not Maritime Towns, ought not to be charged, which is the very Case of the Defendant: I shall cite to your Lordships express Precedents.

Claus. 13. E. 3. M. 14. Dors. pars secunda, The Town of Bodwine in Cornwall discharged of Ships, because dicta villa portus non est, & longe a Mari distat, and hath not used before-time to find Shipping: And an inquisition awarded to enquire of these particulars; whereby it appears, that the Inland-Counties had not so much as de facto been usually charged with Ships.

Rot. Franc. 21. E. 3. M. 17. Those Towns quae naves non habent & quae aliis naves habentibus contributoria non existunt, that they should be discharged, it appears thereby, that there be some Towns that are Members of great Sea-Towns, and are contributory to Shipping, and other Inland-Towns are not contributory, 2 Pars Pat. 2. Ro. 2. M. 42. A Charter 51. E. 3. recited, whereby it is likewise recited, that the Burgesses of Beverly had by their Petition in Parliament complained, that that Town is in loco arido, & a Mari, that ad sinistram procuracionem quorundam Machinantium ipsos indebite praegravare ad contribuendum simulcum hominibus villa de Kingst. super Hull, to the making of a Barge, per mandatum Regis. Now they pray de omnibus & singulis huiusmodi oneribus insolitis, to be discharged by the Charter; it appears that they are discharged accordingly, and this now exemplified 2 R. 2.

To those of 48 H. 3. both for Taxes for Soldiers, and some for Shipping, I shall give a particular Answer: That it was then Tempus Belli, when the Courts of Justice were shut, for the Commissions went out after April: And in the Red Book fo. 241. 6. It was Tempus Belli from 4. Sept. 48 H. 3. until the 16th. of Sept. 49 H. 3. and that the Courts of Justice were shut up, appears in 49 H. 3. R. 4. Co'ia Scaccario non fuer' Barones residentes in Scaccario ad Pas. 48. H. 3. and Co'ia Pas. 49. H. 3. propter turbacionem nuper habitam; there were no Sheriffs in aliquibus Comitibus, 48 H. 3. and those that were, non potuerunt sic facere quae ad Officium Vic' pertinebant.

To those Commissions that went out before 29 E. 1. I have given an answer already, That the liberties of the Subject had been adjudged against the direct words of Magna Charta.

To the Commissions 30 E. 1. M. 9. In the Patent Roll de puniendo homines that refused, it is, quia ad rogatum Regis mittere concesserunt so many Ships, and if a By-Law were good to bind them, (as is before proved) as well as their own promise; neither have I seen any legal Proceedings against any of those, that refused at that time, save only against the Cinque Ports that are cited by their Service.

P. 53. E. 1. R. 38. B. R. & Ro. 82 against Seaford, as a Member of the Ports, and the Charge is, That per servitium tenent' invenire unam navem.

For those of E. 3d's time, his Reign, for the most part, was a time of War, and that the offensive brought a defensive upon the Kingdom, is plain: Walsing. says, that P. 119. 10 E. 3. the French, Walsing. P. 131. burnt Southampton. Stone P. 234. 12 E. 3. they assaulted Southampton, and burnt part of Plimouth. 13 E. 3. They assaulted the Isle of Wight, Rot. Parliament 13 E. 3. pars prima, N. 9. That they had done much mischief upon the West-Coast, and conquered the Isle of Jersey.

Scotch Roll 10 E. 3. M. 5. Dors. & M. 2. All the Ports throughout England shut up.

My Lords, in these years, wherein most of these Writs issued, the great danger appears; and yet that the Charge laid upon the County was by Law and Agreement, I shall cite to your Lordships the Scotch Roll 10 E. 3. M. 3. The French riding at Anchor at the Isle of Wight, the King sent divers Privy Councillors to Dover, and commanded all the Officers, Masters of Ships, Mariners, and Inhabitants, from the Thames to the West, to come thither, & ad tractandum with those Lords of the Council about the Defence of the Sea by Ships; and in the Records it is cited, that notwithstanding the Kings former Command, haftenus quicquid non fecer' in praemissis, the Writs for Shipping issued before, and were not executed, and therefore now a Commission, if so it might be done with consent. 20 E. 3. Other writs went out.

Rot. Fr. secunda pars, M. 24. 20 E. 3. writ to Yarmouth, propter pericula Maris, to Rop up their Havens; and Rot. Fr. prima pars M. 19. Dors. That no Fisherman go out to Sea.

I shall endeavour a particular Answer to this: Claus. 10. E. 3. M. 23. The Writ says, That vadia pro defensione super Mare solvi non solebant temporibus Progenitor' of the King.

To this I shall give this Answer: That these Wages were demanded before the time of their going to the Service, and the Record is, That huiusmodi vadia have not been paid.

My Lords, if this Answer be not sufficient, my second Answer is, by denying the thing; for besides that of 15 John, in that time of necessity, the Ships were to serve ad liberationes, & ad stipendia Regis, and 46 H. 3. M. 4. both in E. 1. E. 2. and this Kings time, before the tenth year of His Reign, Wages for defence were frequently paid.

My Lords, because I know not how far this will be stood upon, I shall spare the citing of any of them, and shall to this purpose cite to your Lordships only this Case. It is amongst the Parliament Petitions 1 E. 3. and transmitted into the Chiquer, H. 2. E. 2. Dors.

The Fishermen upon the Coast of Yarmouth, 20 E. 2. were daily robbed and killed, and for rescue of them those of Yarmouth were commanded to set out some Ships to Sea, and Adam Bridlington, the Kings Clerk, sent with 300 l. to set out this Fleet, which the Men of Yarmouth intended they should have as Wages for the Voyage; but the Clerk would not let them have above 230 l. and that as Money

Money borrowed of the King; and for this they gave their Bond of re-payment thereof: 1. E. 3. They complained in Parliament, and pray that they may be discharged of the 230 l. and that the Bond may be cancell'd, which is adjudged accordingly into the Exchequer for a Tryal, whether they had done the Service or not.

My last Answer to these Precedents is, That the Matters of Fact in these years, to the violation of the Subjects Rights, procured upon fresh Suits, not only the before-mentioned Stat. of 14 E. 3. cap. 1. against any charge to be laid upon the Subject without assent in Parliament: But afterwards they complain in Parliament 15 E. 3. N. 9. That their Goods were seized, and their Bodies taken without any Suit commenced against them, contrary to Magna Charta, and the Statutes and Ordinances made thereupon with so much discretion of their Ancestors.

And in particular, in the Parliament Roll of 22 E. 3. N. 4. for the guarding of the Seas. And in 36 E. 3. N. 9. and 37 E. 2. N. 2. as before in 15 E. 3.

My Lords, I now come to the last thing, which is the Proofs in the point which I shall humbly offer to your Lordships.

My Lords, the first Authority that I shall cite to your Lordships, is the Patent Roll 26 E. 1. M. 21. whereby I shall endeavour to prove to your Lordships these two things.

1. The confession of that King and His Council, that he was so far from having power to tax the People for the Custody of the Sea; as that he is bound to make satisfaction for any thing taken from the People for that purpose.

2. The second, That the Charges laid upon the People for the Custody of the Sea, were the principal grievances that occasioned the making of the Statutes of 25 E. 1. and de Tallagio non concedendo.

For the last, the King there declares, That he had a desire to redress the grievances made to the People in His Name, and instanteth what they were, veluti de rebus captis in Ecclesiis, & omnibus aliis rebus captis & asportatis, tam de Clericis quam de Laicis, sive pro Custodia Maris, vel alio modo quocumque: Whereby, my Lords, there's an acknowledgment, that it is a grievance, and to be redressed, to lay any Tax upon the Subject for the Custody of the Sea.

Commissioners are there named throughout all England to enquire of these grievances; herein they are to proceed accordingly to certain Instructions from the King and the Council; Which are these three.

1. Whether the things were taken without Warrant; and if so, then the party that took the Goods is to make satisfaction, and further, to be punished for the Trespass.

2. If there were a Warrant allowed, if so, then the Officer was to make satisfaction.

3. If all were done according to, and in pursuance of the Warrant, and no more; then upon certificate thereof unto the King (as the words are) & en ferra tant que il se fendra appayes pur reason.

The King hereby promiseth, that whatsoever things were taken from the people by any command of His, for the Custody of the Sea; that he will make reasonable satisfaction to the Party for such things.

My Lords, for the second thing, that is, That the grievances occasioned the making of these Statutes, is clear from the words of the Patent; for they were made Post guerram inter Regnum & Regem Francia; which, as appears by the Case of Car. 13. the Abbot of Roberdsbridge, was from 22 E. 1. until 25 E. 1. and by all our Historians and many Records.

It appears likewise by those other words, that the King before His going into Flanders, intended to have remedied those grievances; He went over in September 25 E. 1. and the Statute 25 E. 1. was made the 10th of October after.

Hence likewise it follows, that the exception of the Kings ancient Aids and Prizes mentioned in the Statute of 25 E. 1. extends not to this of charging of the People to the Custody of the Sea; that being one of the principal grievances that occasioned the making of it: That the same grievances caused the making of the Statute de Tallagio, I have before offered the Proofs to your Lordships.

2. My Lords, The next Authority which I shall present, is the Co'sa H. 23. E. 1. Ro. 77. there the King commanded 30 Gallies to be made by several great Towns; every Galley was to have six score Oares a piece: These were pro defensione Regni & securitate Maris. My Lords, the Cases are many in the Chequer, where the Money for making of these Gallies was recovered against the King.

I confess, My Lords, that the King had promised payment to those that made them, which I shall thus submit to your Lordships; That in case the King might have commanded the making of them at the Charge of the Towns, that then the Kings Promise was but nudum pactum, in promising payment for that which by Law they might have been forced to do; And so the payment rested only in the Kings Grace and Pleasure. But, my Lords, upon Suits in His own time of E. 2. and E. 3d's time, the Moneys for making these Gallies were recovered by several Towns.

M. 29. E. 1. Ro. 29. Dors. for York.

M. 31. E. 1. Ro. 77. Ipswich and Denwich.

P. 5. E. 3. Ro. 21. for him, prout iustum fuerit, nothing having been paid before.

Bra. M. 16. E. 2. Ro. 14. both for the Galley made at Southampton, and bringing her to Winchelsey at their own Charge.

Præcepta P. 1. E. 3. All the Money from Southampton not being paid, now ordered that it should be paid.

My Lords, the next Authority that I shall present to your Lordships, is the Parliament Roll of 13 E. 3. Pars prima N. 9. and 11. The Causes of calling the Parliament are declared to be these.

1. The keeping of the Peace.

2. The defence of the Marches.

3. The Safe-guard of the Sea, that the Enemies might not enter the Realm to destroy it.

These three Points, for the Commons to advise upon, are put into Writing and entred in the Roll.

My Lords, by the Articles themselves propounded on the Kings part, it appears that the Commons are not chargeable to the guarding of the Sea; that this advice of theirs should not be prejudicial to them, to bind them thereunto; and that there are Ships enough in England to do it, if the People were willing, N. 11. The Commons afterwards in debating of these Articles, when they came to this of the Sea, Notwithstanding the caution before, they are afraid, that if they should debate it, that it might imply that they are chargeable to do it; and therefore they protest against giving any advice therein, as a thing whereof Anno 1637. whereof they have no cognizance; and do further declare, that the Cinque Ports, and divers other great Towns, that have Franchises, and are bound thereunto, that they should do it. And therefore the Merchants, Masters of Ships, and Mariners through England, are summoned to be at the next Parliament for advice about Shipping.

4. My Lords, the next Authority is the Parl. Roll 22 E. 3. N. 21. The Commons petition in these words que le guard de la mere se face deseries Res soit le guarda fit man adrefait amant vis senois, ut semble que Mellin guard ne poit estre fait que le Roy ne frit no post il de marrit issint per de la sur Ca' guer' & pr' de faire de cest terr'.

My Lords, the Commons having formerly granted the King divers aids and subsidies upon Wools, Wool-Fels, and Leather, and otherwise for the guarding of the Sea, they now grew weary of it, and desire that the King himself from thenceforth should bear the whole burthen thereof, and charge him with his promise to that purpose.

My Lords, This Petition, although in the name of the Commons, yet the Lords joyned in it; for otherwise all our Acts of Parl. of those times being made upon Petition and Answer, should be without the Lords assent: Hence it appears, that the whole Kingdom at this time, was so far from thinking that the King could charge them without their contents, to the guarding of the Sea, as that they alledge, that the King himself ought to bear the whole Charge: neither doth the King deny His Promise, nor wholly deny the thing; for though he saith, that it should be done as it hath been done before, yet it is with a qualification, because the Sea cannot be kept better than he hath kept it, by reason of his so often being at Sea in Person, in going and returning from France, and and diverting the Enemy by his Wars in France; if the King had given His absolute denial, yet here's the Judgment that both the Houses of Parliament express in point.

Rot. Franc' 21. E. 3. Secunda pars N. 11. and 9. The Merchants had granted 2 s. 8 d. upon their Goods till Michaelmas, for providing 120 great Ships pro secura conductione Navium & Merchandizarum, & pro defensione caterarum marinarum Regni, & alius periculis his guerrinis temporibus regno venientibus. This Grant being made, the King alledging that this was not sufficient for the Service, and the causes of the stoppage of Trade by reason of the Wars, the King now lengthens out the time from Mich^l to East^r following, and to satisfy the People, the King by His Proclamation declares, That the 2 s. 8 d. shall cease at Easter according to the Grant; which, as it should seem, not satisfying the People, or the King still continuing the taking thereof, the Commons in Parliament 22 E. 3. N. 16. pray that it may cease, and that by procurement of no Merchant, Plus Pargent soit continue.

The Answer is, that it should cease.

An Imposition but for half a year, and that upon Merchandize, and by consent of the Merchants for the defence yet taken off upon complaint.

The Answer is, that it should cease.

My next Authority is the Parliament Roll 2. R. 2. Pars Secunda N. 5. before cited, where the great Council and Sages of the Kingdom resolve, That the Commons are not chargeable to the defence of the Realm without Parliament, extends to this Particular of the Sea, for the present preparation whereto the Commons are not chargeable for defence at Sea; and therefore the Money lent was to provide an Army for the Sea en defence & sal- vation del' dit Realme, & de la Navie, & de costiers del' Mere.

My Lords, the next Authority is the Parliament Roll 2 H. 4. N. 22. Commissions to charge the People to make Ships for the defence of the Realm without consent in Parliament, repealed by the King, and the whole Parliament for that very cause.

Item pur ceo quere tarde divers Commissions furent fait au divers Civies, Burroughs & Villis du Roylme, pur faire certain barges & ballengers s' assent du Parliament, & outment que estre fait devant ces biens, n' les Commons pray a nostre sur le voy que le dits Commissaris soyent repeales, & quils ne soyent de nul force ne fait a quors loi' fut respondus que le Roy voer que m' les Commissions soyent repeales in tous points mes pur le grand necessitie, que ad des tiels vesselx pur defence du Roylme, en case que les quens se priment le Roy voit Communer de rest matter ovesq, les sirs' & puis apres le monstre an dits Commons pur eut saver leur Counsel advise in tiel part. The first Commissions repealed, because the Commons were not chargeable without consent in Parliament; and now the King will put it into the Parliamentary way by doing with assent of the Lords and Commons.

8. My Lords, my next authority, is the Parliament Roll 9 H. 4. The cause of the calling of the Parliament, is for the safeguard of the Sea, and of the North Marches; and N. 17. great mischief shewn for default of the safe keeping of the Sea, and N. 21. It's there inrolled by the Kings Commandment, that there was communication had between the King and the Lords of the defence of the Realm, and for resisting the Enemies, who made preparation on all sides; whereunto sufficient resistance cannot be provided, without that the King have in His Parliament some notable Aid granted unto him.

My Lords, the King hereby acknowledgeth, that he cannot without the Parliament charge the People for the safe keeping of the Sea; that being the principal part for the defence there intended. The same with the Summons, that without the consent of the Commons, negotia prad. infraremanerent; and with the Summons in the Close Roll, 23 E. 1. before mentioned, quod omnes tangit per omnes debet approbari.

My Lords, the next Authority is the Parliament Roll 4 H. 4. N. 28. The Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons grant to the King a Subsidy upon the Staple Commodities, and Tunnage and Poundage, and likewise a 10th and 15th with this Protestation: Protestant que cest grant en temps avener ne soit post in example de charger les dits sur ne les Commons du Realme de nul maner Subsidie ne 10th ne 15th a les guerris descore, gates on safeguard de mere sans ne soit per les volunts des Seignors & Commons du Realme & ceo a novel grant faire in plein Parliament.

Rot. Parl. 6. H. 4. N. 12. And Rot. Parl. 1. H. 5. N. 17. the same Protestation as before.

My Lords, that the charge of the defence at Sea, and that in a large proportion, by reason of the before-mentioned Duties, is to be born by His Majesty; I conceive that it will not be denied, that in Subsidium, and Aid of His Majesty, therein the Commons are not chargeable without their consent in full Parliament: In these three Records, there is not only these Protestations of the whole Realm, being made by the Lords and Commons, but likewise those Kings consents, by accepting the things granted, and that without any qualification of the Protestations. Those Protestations, that they are not chargeable to the guarding of the Sea

Sea in a certain way, as are 10ths and 15ths, do much more fail in a way uncertain, as here.

Anno 1637. My Lords, my next proof is from the practise of former Kings, in their frequent demands of Aids in Parliament for the defence of the Sea, as well before the Statutes of Tunnage and Poundage, as then; and sithence Monies borrowed by the former Kings for Ships and defence at Sea, and Indentures of Retainer for that purpose at the Kings Charge: And not only so, but upon Suit-allowances in the Chequer for Victuals, Mariners Wages, Archers, Prisoners taken in Sea-Fights, pro defensione, and also other things necessary for Shipping, when for defence of the Realm. Whereupon the same Argument may be made in this particular for the Sea, as was before, for the defence in general.

The last thing which I shall press, is that of the Cinque Ports. Their Service is certain in respect of the time, but 15 days in a year in respect of the Charge; but 20 Men and a Master, the number of Ships certain.

Besides, that they are discharged of Arms for the Land-Service, they have divers other privileges for the doing hereof; they were free from all Aids and Subsidies granted in Parliament, and are by Privy Seals discharged thereof, H. 2. E. 3. Co'ia, about the end of the Roll.

They are freed from all Tolls, Murage and Pontage throughout the Realm, which bringeth a greater Charge upon the rest of the Subjects.

My Lords, I shall thus offer it to your Lordships; If they that have these Privileges shall serve but 15 days in a year, how the others that have no Privileges at all shall do it for 26 weeks, as in the Writ.

Secondly, their Charge is certain in the number of men and Ships; how the rest of the Commons, that are so far from having any privileges or recompence for it, as that they do contribute to this Charge of the Cinque Ports, shall, as by the way in the Writ, be altogether uncertain in the matter of Charge, both in the number of Men, and of Ships, and of every other thing.

My Lords, I shall press this further, thus; when the Ports exceed their Charge in the number of Men or Ships, allowance by the King is to be made unto them. This, as it appears by the Quier of Dover, and the Patent Roll of 7 H. 7. before cited, that after the 15 days they were to be at the Kings Charge. So in the Patent Roll 19 H. 3. M. 14. because they found 40 Men in the Ship; the King promiseth payment for all over and above the number of 21. B. R. Tr. 33. E. 1. R. 22. allowance to Service in Scotland. The Scots, as appears by Walsh. p. 53. and other-where, having about that time burnt divers English Towns and Ships, and a School-house with 200 Scholars in it.

Visus Com. P. 33. E. 1. R. 70. Pro ingenti Ro. Scotland. 3. P. 34. E. 1. Ro. 37. Co'ia la Composition.

My Lords, if the Ports, who are bound to the defence at Sea, when they have performed their Service, be not compellable to any further charge; I shall humbly offer it to your Lordships, whether those that be not bound at all from the same reason, are chargeable at all?

My Lords, I have now done, and shall not further press upon the patience of your Lordships.

I know that, Nullum tempus occurrit Regi: the disuse thereof, I shall press it no otherwise than as it is an interpretation of the Statutes made against all Aids and Tallages in general, and of the complaints in the Parliament of 15. N. 9. 36. N. 9. and 37 E. 3. N. 9. That those Statutes had not been duly kept. And further, as it is an Interpretation likewise of the before-mentioned Declarations, Petitions, and Protestations against this in particular, and as it is an Execution of them, and putting them into practice.

Proxis Sanctorum, (as the Divines say) est interpretis Præceptorum.

The Claims which anciently the Subject hath made upon the Crown, that none of the great Officers of the Kingdom could be chosen but in Parliament, nor that the King had power to sell any of the ancient Crown-Lands, the disuse it shews, that those Claims of theirs were not legal.

Bra. in his 4th Book, fo. 209. says, That longa patientia trahatur ad consensum; The Non-Claims therefore of so many of the latter Kings and Queens, I shall present unto your Lordships, as so many le Voets and Declarations of their several consents, that without assent in Parliament they could not have laid the like Sefs upon any of their Subjects, as is now laid upon my Clyent.

Finis Mr. St. John's Argument.

Sir Edward Littleton his Majesties Solicitor General his first Days Argument in the Case of Hambden, Novemb. 11. 1637.

May it please your Lordships,

At the 22th. last issued out a Scire fac' out of the Exchequer to the Sheriff of the County of Buckingham, to warn Mr. Hambden to shew cause why the 20 s. should not be charged on him, towards the finding of a Ship of War, with Men, Munition and Victuals, expressed in a Writ Dated 4 August. 11 Car. And the Sums and the Names of the Defaulters was certified into the Chequer by a Mittimus Dated 5 Maii, 13 Car. to be there proceeded upon, for the levying of the 20 s. according to the Law and Custom of England. Mr. Hampden appeared, and desired that all the Writs might be read to him: They being read, he demurred; and Mr. Attorney joyned with him in Demurrer, and adjourned out of the Exchequer into this Court, to have the Advice of all the Judges of England.

Before I enter into my Argument, because the true stating of our Question, in this, and all other things, doth exceedingly conduce to the clearing of the thing in question; I shall in the first place observe the Writ Dated 4 Aug. 11 Car. (the ground of this Asses) which was directed into Buckinghamshire, and others into all the Counties of England; and this was for raising Ayds for Ships for the Defence of the Kingdom, with a notable Circumstance, Quia Salus Regni periclitabatur; which being expressed in the Record, is confessed by the Defendants Demurrer; and not only so, but testified by the King himself under the Great Seal in the Mittimus, and in all Matters especially concerning the publick Safety, the King is Recordum superlativum & superpræcellens, as in the great Case of the Earls of Gloucester and Hereford, 20 E. 1. So that the Question is only this:

Whether the King finding in his Judgment the Safety and Preservation of the Kingdom and People, necessarily and unavoidably to require the Ayd commanded by the Writ, may not command Anno 1637. mand such Ayd as the Writ for saving and preserving the Kingdom and People?

Having stated the Question, I shall now discard diverse things, as impertinent to the Question: not that I, that am sworn Counsel for the King, do agree in those things against the King; but that they are now in question.

It is not now in question what may be imposed by the King upon the Subject, for defence, at their Charge, for Conquest or for Conservation of Foreign Countries or Territories beyond the Sea.

Neither is it in question what may be laid by the King upon his Subjects, for vindicating Injuries done by foreign Princes.

Neither is it in question, Whether Arbitrary Impositions or Taxes may be laid at pleasure on the Subject for the meer increase of the Revenue of the Kings Treasure.

Neither, Whether an ordinary and common Defence, for preservation of the Kingdom, though necessary, may be thus imposed.

But the Question is, Quando Salus Regni periclitabatur? In truth the Question is, Whether we can be charged salvatione nostri & nostrorum?

Again, It is not in Question, Whether the Subject hath a property in his Goods, or can lose them without consent in Parliament? I shall shew that his Property shall remain unto him notwithstanding this Asses. And the Argument on the contrary favours more of Malignity than Reason, to say, That by this, the Subject shall lose his Property in his Goods.

It was rightly admitted, That the Law of Property must give place to the Law of Nature for common Defence. The levying of a Debt or Duty publick or private, upon any Subject, is so far from deferring the Estate, that it doth affirm it: He hath as good Property that payeth Debts to the King, as he that doth not.

We are agreed de re the Kingdom is to be defended; no man in his five Sences will deny that.

De Personis; according to that equitable Rule in the Writ, Quod omnes tangit, & per omnes debet supportari. We are in this, as in the Conqueror's Laws; Sumus fratres conjurati ad Regnum defendendum.

De Persona, whom the Law hath intrusted with the Defence of the Kingdom, viz. the King; the only difference is de modo, whether the right Media be observed by the King? And while we are disputing whether he may do it, I am told he may do it in Parliament; and I shall be sorry to hear that there is no Salvation for the People but in Parliament. And while this was the Question, though a great deal of Care was had, and though it was done with Advantage and Policy, yet the Bulk and Mass of what was said, shall appear to fall quite off, as nothing to the purpose. There were multiplicity of Particulars, and a pretty Survey of the King's Revenues, no ways concerning the Case, and as much mistaken in it as he that reckoned without his Host.

He hath done like a discreet Gentleman, and went as near the Question as his Client would let him: He hath agreed Cases more prejudicial than this: as thus; It was admitted, that if there be an actual War, though there be but light Skirmishes, the King may do it; nay if there be but a War denounced, though there be never a Blow stricken, sure then it cannot be done; Quando Salus Regni periclitatur.

This is the true State of the Question.

Before I go further, I am not ignorant, and therefore cannot but be sensible with what disadvantage I come to argue this Case, every man being a party interested that hears me; but I fear not but that I shall satisfy all parties: I have Truth to conduct me; Et magna est Veritas, & prevalebit.

The Method whereby I may maintain the Right of my Master and the Crown, is this,

I shall first ground it upon Reason. Every humane Proposition is of equal Authority; only Reason makes the difference.

I shall ground my Reason upon the Law 1. Of Nature. 2. Of State. 3. Publick Safety, Necessity and Conveniency; neither shall it be against the Statute-Law, Common Law, or any of the Hereditary Rights and Liberties of the Subjects of England, but consonant to, and warranted by all.

I shall not only prove it ex rationibus cogentibus; or as Lawyers say; ex visceribus Cause, but de similibus ad similia.

I shall confirm it by a Bedtoll of Examples and Precedents of former Ages, and compare them with this, and see if the Case be altered:

1. I shall shew it from the Foundation of the Kingdom, to that which they call the Norman Conquest.

2. From the Norman Conquest, to that of Magna Charta, made 9 H. 3.

3. From Magna Charta to the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo, made 25 E. 1.

4. From De Tallagio non concedendo, to the first time of granting of Tunnage and Poundage.

5. From Tunnage and Poundage to this very day; and that the Petition of Right doth no way concern the Dispute.

I shall confute all Precedents, Objections, Reasons, Inconveniencies, Authorities and Records, of which a great number were cited, that there shall not be a Syllable left. And in that,

1. I will either shew that the Record is mistaken, or impertinent, not to the Question.
2. Or those that are pertinent, I'll agree them, or take the force of them away, that none of them shall be able to stand in the way of the King in this way of Defence.

The Fundamental Reason is the exact Rule of the Law in the 10th Rep. (cited by that Learned Gentleman Mr. St. John) Salus Populi Suprema Lex: All other Laws positive are subordinate to this Law, and to be regulated by it. We are not to talk of positive Laws, till we have a Kingdom to use them. Glanvil saith, Regiam Majestatem non solum Armis oportet esse decoratam, sed & Legibus. Arms to defend us, Laws to protect us. Bracton, fol. 1. In Regibus duo sunt necessaria, Arma & Leges; and gives the Reason: If no Arms, the Kingdom would be at least as a prey to the Enemies: And truly it is a strange Imposture, that the Law should so provide, that the King can give us by his Writ a Remedy for White Acre and Black Acre for a Clod of Earth, and not to be able to give a Writ to defend the Kingdom when it is in eminent danger.

Nay, positive Laws are abrogated, by reason, when the Safety of the Kingdom and People are in danger: As in Rome, a man in the night might not come over the Wall; but if an Enemy did approach the City, then it was lawful for him to do it.

In

Anno. 1637. Reaf. 2. In the next place, I take that ground which is taken in all Laws. The Common-wealth is to be preferred before all private estates, 13 H. 3. fo. 15. Opinion of Shelley, rather than this shall suffer, the Law will turn some prejudice to particular persons, who are but a part of the Common-wealth, 21 H. 7. fo. 28. 8 E. 4. fo. 23. Bro.

40. 29 H. 8. Dyer 36. If the enemy doth approach; for the defence of the Kingdom, one man may make Bulwarks and Forts in another man's Soil, and shall not the King keep the Out-works at Sea, lest the Enemy should Land at our doors?

Reaf. 3. By the King's Command, Suburbs may be razed. In 88. when three great Land Armies, 20000 Foot, and 1000 Horse; 30000 Foot, and 1000 Horse; 20000 Foot, and 1000 Horse. Now lest other Armies should Land in other places, direction was given to keep them from Landing, but if they could not keep them from Landing, then that they should burn down Houses, and come and destroy all whatsoever, that they might not have food and provision to stay there. Where is the Law of Property in this Case, which is so much talked of? The publick and private are so near connext, that they can hardly be separated. The publick loss falls immediately, and by consequence upon particular persons. Be a man in what condition he will be, if the publick loss come to the State, though it fall on his Wedding-day, he shall suffer in it. It is impossible to save private fortunes, if the publick be lost, Unaqueque pars amat Cor'a, bonum totius, &c. And another saies very well: No man repines at that which is done for the Common-wealth. If a Subject then can be enabled, without Parliament, to make Bulwarks and Forts in another man's ground, shall not the King that is Pater Patria do the like for the defence of the whole?

Reaf. 3. My third Reason is, to inform, or rather to mind your Lordships, that the Crown hath many Powers and Prerogatives over the Estates of private persons. May not the King enter into another man's House, or at the least Out-houses, and dig for Salt-Peter, because it is for the defence, 11 Rep. 81. Bowles his Case; and enter into his Lands and dig Royal Mines? There is Proprietas, Dominium, that belongs to the Subject; but hath not the power over all without the property Ratione protectionis Jurisdictionis, &c. Private interest must give place to a common good. Private prejudice, that any man hath is very well repaired by the publick utility that comes on the Kingdom; Fishermen may justify their going on the Land of others to Fish, because it is pro bono publico, 8 E. 4. 18, 19. 6. 29 H. 8. Dyer 36. 21 H. 7, 28. A man may pull down the House of another, when the next to it is on Fire.

Jam tua res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet. The private must suffer for the publick Cause, 22 E. 4. fo. 2. 6. 26 E. 1. fo. 45. If two men are fighting, a man may part them and put them into several Houses, because it is for the good of the Common-wealth. If a mad man be abroad, he may be taken, whipped, and imprisoned, lest he do violence to himself and others, 22 E. 4. fo. 45. A Chirurgion may cut off one Member to save the rest, 22 Aff. Plp. 56.

Necessity is the Law of time and Action. Many things are lawful by necessity, which otherwise are not, Quicquid necessitas cogit, defendit; and the Law of time must regulate the Law of the place in such publick things. If a Storm arise at Sea, to cast out Goods into the Sea is lawful for the safety of other Goods, and they whose Goods are not lost, shall be sharers with the others. If it be for safety of Lives, all must be cast out, Dasseld's and Mowse's Case, P. 6. Com. P. 16. but if the party hath taken more in than is fitting, and that be the cause of casting away the Goods and not the Tempest, there the party had his remedy.

48 H. 3. There was a sudden Summons to be in Arms both at Sea and Land; They plead there was not a just time of Summons; The King tells them that no man shall excuse himself for want of convenient time of Summons; nay, they shall not alledge the time of Harvest, &c. It being safer to be somewhat diminished in Estate, than the publick to suffer, necessitas est lex temporis; what ever is done for publick safety is best, the Laws are tributary, and must give place to the Law of necessity.

What talk we of Formalities, when we are like to lose the Kingdom, when the keeping of the Laws would end the Common-wealth? But this needs not, for I shall shew that his Majesty hath trod in the steps of all those Kings who have worn the Diadem, and swayed the Scepter of this Kingdom.

In the next place I shall shew divers exemptions, A Custodia Maritima, not only ancient but late, I will put you one, that is King's Colledge in Cambridge, 21 H. 6.

When these Grants are made, it extends to ordinary defence of the people, and not to extraordinary, no more than if the King Grant an exemption to a man that he shall not be of a Jury; yet if there be no other, that shall not excuse him; Matth. Paris 838. he speaks of Priviledges granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, London, &c. All are granted in Liberam Eleemosynam, they are bound to do nothing but to pray, and yet not exempted from publick defence, Nec adeo libertates, &c. sed propter publicam utilitatem Regni ut pro ea resisteret hostem. I shall give Mr. Saunders John's Argument an answer by and by; yet by the way, if Tenures, Feods Military did begin as was alledged out of Britton in the Conqueror's time. How was the Kingdom defended before, if Wardships, Marriages, and Accidents thereupon did not go to the foundation of the Kingdom, what was before?

The King is as much Lord of Sea as Land; Aequo Dominus Maris ut telluris, Selden Mare Claus. 6 R. 2. Doctors and Students, lib. 2. 51. 5 Rep. 108. It is observed by a great Lawyer, of whose consequence it is to have power at Sea. The Naval Dominion of England is of great consequence and use, for it is called Doxem Regni. If then the Kingdom of England consist of Land and Sea, I hope we shall not stand at half defence to defend the Land, and leave the Sea. Koll. Parli. 2 R. 2. Ro. 25. It is a great advantage to have defence at Sea, else we should have hot Wars at our Thresholds; while the Sea is in safety, men may go to Plough, and have the Court of Justice open.

The King's of England, of themselves, of their Prerogative Royal, in times of Foreign War, denounced, intended, or suspected, for the preservation of publick safety, may seize the Lands of Priors, Aliens, 48 E. 3. fo. 10. 22 E. 4. 43, 44. 14 H. 4. 36. And can the Kings of England take the possessions of Aliens? and cannot he enforce his natural born Subjects to defend the Land and Sea? God forbid.

Anno 1637.

Nay if we would parvis componere magna, we shall find in lesser Cases of consequence, (if they have relation to defence) he may do it, as the King may lay a charge on the Subject for muring of a Town; the reason is, because they have benefit by it in time of danger, and hath not all the Kingdom safety by the Navy at Sea? 3 E. 3. Aff. 445. Westm. 1. ca. 3. 13 H. 4. fo. 14, 15. Sir John Davies Reports, fo. 13. Hist. fo. 58. 33 E. 1. 105. Parl. Book, Wals. 14 E. 1. 60. 7 E. 3. par. m. 2. And the King did not only command it, but took an account of it; and if it was not done, he took it into his own hands, Tr. 27 E. 1. m. 14. Ex Theff. Murage of Carlisle taken into the King's hands, Pat. 14 E. 1. pars 1. m. 14. and the surpluse paid into the Exchequer, and this agrees with the reason of all Laws, where they have a benefit, they must contribute to the charge, 10 Rep. 141. out of 44 E. 3. Nay, for lesser things, as for Paynage and Pontage the King may impose that for a publick good, and the King may distrain all Terr-Tenants, and Land owners, to make contribution, Secundum statum & facultates.

The King may dispose of the preparation for defence, he may compel men to be Knighted, because it was for defence, 19 E. 2. Cl. m. 16. Mar. Paris 12. 37. Westm. 465. No man is exempted from defence, Judges are not exempted, yet Judges are not to fight; yet when it comes to necessity they are not exempted, T. 5 E. 4. Moyle 13 H. 4. fo. 23. Clergy-men compelled; Nay, a Serjeant at Common-Law sworn at Common-Pleas is compellable; Sir Jo. Halbert in Henry the Seventh's time, was compelled to be a Knight, 9, or 29 H. 6. Rolfe, a stout Serjeant, Pleaded that he was a Serjeant at Common-Law, and not bound to be a Knight, but he is forced to it; but why talk we of these? There ought to be a Common-wealth before there are Laws, and private ought to give way to publick.

Eminent dangers and perils to a State, doth dispench with ordinary proceedings in Law, Inter arma silent leges.

Reas. 9. Nay, if there be but Rumours of Wars, Laws are silent, we must look then to the Kingdom upon Rumours and Opinions, p. 15 E. 1. B. R. Ro. 70. dorf. The Scotch Army they besiege Rippon, the People they promise a sum of Money to them to depart, and give them in Hostages; and that Money should be levied amongst themselves; when the War was over, they would not do it, but they were compelled to it in 14 E. 2. B. R. 60. The Scots besiege Duresme, but they must have ready money; they would not take Hostages. While this peril was on them they met together, and swore that what should be agreed amongst themselves they should stand to. It was ordered, They should go into the Houses of others, and take what money they could find for this purpose. They took from one man sixty pounds; Oh, he was not satisfied, he had a property in his Goods: He brought an Action, and at Duresme it was adjudged for him: but when by a Writ of Error, it was brought into Westminster-Hall, into the King's Bench, Judgment was reversed. And in the time of Queen Elizabeth greater things was done upon lesser occasion.

Reas. 10. The next thing, is the Ships taken from time to time, and the Command of Persons, Watches, Beacons, shutting up of Ports, which are the Gates of the Kingdom, 14 or 10 E. 4. Pa. m. 12. dor. 3 H. 5. 18. dorso. A number of other things commanded by the King for safety; when the Law considers what may happen, it is not material what doth happen; nay, if there be but vulgaris opinio it is enough, much more when the King, by his own Judgment, foresees it, 6 Rep. 64. Clark's Case, there they were compelled to build a Hall in St. Albanes for the Judges to sit in, much more in this Case; see Cleggat's Case for Triumphs; and if for State, shall not the King compel for safety of the Kingdom? 12 Jac. & Hill. Hawk's Case for paving of the Way, he may take Corn out of the Sacks of those that come by.

Reas. 11. It is a Droit Royal to meddle with War and Peace, Subjects have nothing to do withal, Parl. Roll 13 E. 3. no. 5. 19 E. 4. fo. 160, or 6. Bryan, Chief Justice, saith, That if all the Subjects of England do War with the Subjects of another Kingdom, this is no War, but if the King denounce it, it is War, 22 E. 1. Vascon, m. 16, or 10. they must have a power from the King; true, Henry the Seventh brought Military Discipline to the Parliament to advantage his own ends. Sometimes dangers are fit to be communicated to the people, and sometimes not. The King should best know what is done abroad, who hath his close Council of War, he knows what is done abroad, what can the people tell of these things? and it is very fit that preparation be made aforehand. It is not good to find the Kingdom without a Navy, especially when such combustion is abroad, 18 Eliz. c. 23. It is as much to prevent danger as to remove it, when it is in being, 1 E. 6. Mar. 1. A desired provision to be made before hand; and this hath been the practice of all times. Jervaisius Tiliurienfis, Black Book in Henry the Second's time, Danegelt before the Conquest paid Annually, but afterwards when there were Bella or Opinioes Bellorum, and datum est nobis intelligi Audito Rumore, &c. are frequent in the Records; nay, if there be but vulgaris opinio. Ay, but perhaps dangers will not come? But if they come unawares, where are we then? In the said Case between the Earls of Gloucester and Hereford, there was a great Tumult between them about the Marches of Wales, and this was contrary to the King's Command, and exception was then taken because there was no Record to warrant the Scire Facias. The King did affirm it, Et Dominus Rex in multis casibus est suprallegem, &c. Dominus Rex est Recordum superlativum & superprecellens.

It is Treason for any Subject to raise an Army, unless a Town be besieged.

Henry the Seventh was a wise King, and he had his Spies abroad in the time of Peace, to see how things went, and his Navy prepared; and the preparation of a Navy doth much more good than the spilling of blood: And so hath our Navy these two years done a great deal of good to the Kingdom, and Honour to the King.

Now I come to Authorities: But first we shall observe what an Authority shall be in this Case.

I conceive there may be, and are direct and full examples in point for compelling the Subjects at their own charge to guard the Sea and Land, though they are not ruled in particular Courts of Justice;

Anno 1637. Justice, nay, under favour, they are stronger than any Judgment. There were then no need of Suits in Courts of Justice; If men would pay, what need Judgment?

I conceive that though I find not direct Authority in Printed Books, yet Records are as good testimonies, and greater than Reports that are but Extracts, and but second Authorities drawn out of them, and those that concern Jus publicum came not into ordinary debate, but remains inter Arcana Imperii, and those will speak fully.

I shall observe that our Precedents are not only in open War and Hostility, but upon Opinions, Rumours, Relations, and Informations of War.

I shall shew this in all Ages to Queen Elizabeth; and if it be not so full in the years of King Stephen, and Henry the Fourth, who were Usurpers, 'tis no wonder if they had had right to the Crown, as his Majesty hath, they would not have used Complements, but Fide & legiantia quibus nobis tenemini.

Before the Conquest, I find that King Edgar had his Tenants, who swore to co-operate with him per terram & per mare. King Etheldred he did command, that he that had 310 Hides of Land, should find a Ship; and those that had less, should find other Arms, and at their own charge. For every Ship eight Oars ut tempore præs. That was Canutus, and it was Tributum Classiale.

My Lords for Danegelt, If those Kings that were called in by the people, did lay this on the people, much more our natural born King, which shews it to be an undoubted right: For it is not likely that they would put that in practice which was not an undoubted right.

In the Laws of the Confessor by Mr. Lambert, and the black book in the Exchequer, it was sometimes one shilling, sometimes two, annually in usus Maritinus, and still the charge lies on the Subject; this shews an inherent right in the Crown, and it was paid for several purposes, but still at the Subjects charge. And to say, it should not be so, because of the word Statutum, cannot be, for in those times Statutum (as in Cicero) was a Constitution; there was no Parliament then; and if it now doth alter from that way, truly petty circumstances, when the substance is observed, alters not the Case. There must be a defence, and it was not certain, doth not the danger suscipere majus & minus; and the King may say as E. 1. said, Nay, I have heard him say, that he hath bought neither Mannors, Lands, &c. with it.

After the Conquest, the Danegelt is supposed to be released by the Confessor, because he dreamed he saw the Devil dancing upon the Dane-gold. But the black Book saith that it was paid in the Conquerors time; it was then quitted till there were Bella or opiniones Bellorum. Neither was it released by W. Rufus, or H. 1. King Stephen swore that he would release it at his Coronation: but Nihil horum tenuit; nay, it was unpaid in H. 2. time, 4 H. 2. Pipe Roll, and though the name be altered, yet other things came in the room of it.

And now I'll begin with Doomsday-book, which began in the 14 of the Conqueror, and ended the 20 year. There were divers Towns and Shires charged, and there we may see what assistance they did give both for Sea and Land. In the black Book fo. 56. they that waited on the King's Revenue liber non erit for publick things. And in King John's time, which was a troublesome time, 5 Joh. Pat. no. 17. and 7 Joh. Claus. m. 9. they gave a fourth part of their Revenues for defence. And there was a command for staying of all Ships, and to repair to a certain place appointed, and to come to those great things, when King John was deposed by the Pope; the King of France made preparation, and England made preparation. And all Ships were imbreviated, because he would not put all upon Land Forces. And so 88. Mat. Paris, fo. 312. It is said the people were ad liberationes nostras, but that voyage was to Poitou; if it were ad lib' nostras, yet the command of the persons and Ships were at the Kings; and true, all Mariners were paid, and no question immediately by the King's hand; but it was first raised and levied of the people.

Whereas for Escuage and Knights Service, the Summons was quod intersuis cum equis & armis, &c. ex inde profecti nobiscum; but this was only to come with their Horses and Arms, by reason of their Tenures. And it further appears, that Earls, Barons, Knights, and Free-men, all that had Arms were to come ad defendenda caput suum & Regis, & quod nullus remaneat qui arma portare possit; Nay, those that had neither Lands nor Arms, yet all must come; and if they had nothing to maintain themselves withal, they were to be ad solidatos nostros, which shews, all the rest were not at the King's charge, 5 Joh. Cl. o. m. 1. Qui ad arma habet vel qui heret possit. If the King could command for Land, he may for Sea, for both are one Kingdom. In H. 3. there are divers Arrayes, 14 H. 3. Cl. o. 7. dor. when the King went into France, there went a Command to all the Sheriffs of Englands Ports, to swear those that staid behind to Arms, as they were sworn in King John's time. All this shews they were bound to Arms.

The Statute of the Conqueror, which they stiled a Statute, That there should be no Tallage; Tallages must not be understood of those kind of Aids, as in that famous year of 48 H. 3. And observe when that year is; not only after Mag. Charta, but confirmed by 20 H. 3. when he was of full Age.

48 E. 3. Cl. o. m. dor. Divers Captains & Constabularii, and three divers not able to maintain themselves, and the King's command that they should be paid de Co'i Comitatus.

48 E. 3. m. 2. de pecunia levand' circa tuitionem maris. The King commands there, that they should come out of their Counties; Summons is two fold, 1. Of Escuage, which is servitium debitum. 2. General for defence cum necesse fuerit.

48 H. 3. Cl. o. m. 3. pro Militibus secundi Johannis & m. 6. dor. quod omnes qui nobis & Coronæ nostræ jure astring', &c. All Free-men must do this service, 48 H. 3. m. 4. dor. Cl. o. Vis. Essex.

48 H. 3. Cl. o. m. 3. dor. Nullus excludatur sexus aut ordo.

48 H. 3. Cl. o. m. 7. Citizens of London, and the men of Greenwich were commanded to keep the Thames that none should enter per ora eorundem, the men of Greenwich plead that they were distressed upon common Summons for their Service in Kent. And the King commanded, That they should be freed in Kent, and joine in defence of the Thames.

Cl. o. 48 H. 3. m. 11. dor. to excuse one who pretended he did attend in another place with all his strength. This shews that he ought to attend the defence.

Nay, 48 H. 3. m. 4. when they refused to come, the King commanded to seize their Lands, and take the profits, and answer them into the Exchequer.

48 H. 3. Pat. m. 5. He commands them to attend,

Anno 1637. tend, letting all things apart, 48 H. 3. Pat' 48 H. 3. Pat' m. 10. or 5. Like Writ to Dunwich, Ipswich, Dover, and per Costera Maris; nay, when some went away when their forty daies was expired, the King tells them that propter Inopinatos casus they should stay.

Pat' 48 H. 3. m. 4. 100 Marks paid by the Abbot of St. August for Stipends for those at Sea for defence of the Sea.

M. 5. dor'. when they would have went away they were commanded upon pain of all they had to stay.

The Abbot of Robertsbridge brought a Replevin against one in B. that lies in the Confines of Kent and Suffex, so (Campestris.) The Officers did avow, by reason of War between France and England, the Abbot was Assessed three several years, at several sums; nay, the fourth time, and no hurt done. But now if the Writ go out but two years together (ob inaudium!) But what doth he Plead? Doth he deny the Writ? No, he Pleads he was Assessed for other Lands. He found a Horse ad custodiam predictam; so that the Horse for Land, and the Money for Sea. It shall appear to all the World, that the King hath done nothing but what his Predecessors have done. And that there is not more testimony to prove Lin'. first Case that the Heir at Law shall have his Patrimony, than there is to prove this the King's undoubted right.

Mr. Solicitor his Second days Argument, Novemb. 13. 1637.

May it please your Lordship,

THE last day I left at the end of R. 2. I do not love to repeat; yet in regard the Records that are of weightiest evidence for the King to men of understanding, perhaps not so clearly understood by every one that hears them, I shall sum up what hath been read. It hath appeared by the Records that have been read, that the Sea and the Land have been guarded by the Commons when danger did appear to the King. If the danger were great, the whole Commons, no Age, no Sex, no Order to be spared; all Ecclesiastical persons bound to defend. If the danger were less, those parts nearest unto it to defend. No reason to trouble the whole Kingdom, when a few would serve the turn. Those that refused were compelled by imprisonment, seizure of Goods and Lands. The Writs have expressed fully and significantly, that no wages ought to be paid by the King. That when there was apparent danger, it appeareth by some Records, that one man should not serve for another. Care taken by Commission that all equality should be used in making of Contribution: And when complaint, as 25 E. 1. was made against it, it was remedied. Yet it was not Ratione contributionis, but violenta extortionis.

This constant usage of former Kings, is of much more authority and weight then scattered Judgments here and there, or Judicial proceedings in any Court; and these are not wanting. Notwithstanding I shall now proceed, and come to the time wherein so many great Lords did dye, and so much Noble blood was spilt in Civil Wars from H. 4. to H. 7. Henricus Rosas Regna Jacobus. There was not then such great cause to look to preparation for Sea, for the War was in the bowels of the Land: And the Sea and the Land make but one Kingdom, and the Reasons are the same for both. And for H. 4. when he was newly come to the Crown: It appears Cl^o 1 H. 4. pars 1. m. 12. dor^r. Writs directed to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and other Bishops; and it recites that the French had prepared a great Navy, which was seen on the Coasts, and intended to invade the Kingdom: And that Abbots and Priors should be arrayed, sine deliberatione, &c. & juxta statum & possessiones, &c. & tridecim Milienis Centenis, &c. Korulus viagij begins 1 H. 4. to 11 H. 4. m. 20. de proclamatione faciend^r to go against the Rebels of Wales de Aratione faciend^r in the same, and Barons assigned to the custody of the Marches of Wales, called Battelfield; less reason for this place of any, for they say there were Lords Marchers to defend it, m. 14. 23. De proclam^r faciend^r to go with the King in person against Henry Percy a Rebel, and there was an array of men by the Sea Coasts to resist the Enemies, &c. And in the same de hominibus congregandis, divers other Proclamations de hominibus defensibil^r.

In the same Roll de Militibus infra Comit^r Lancast^r upon the Insurrection of the Earl of Northumberland to bring them to Pomfret, m. 10. & 27. Again to go to the Prince, H. 5.

And in 1 H. 4. this goes to Northumberland, Darby,

Darby, Lancaster, by Robert Duke of Anno to invade the Kingdom.

1637. All Lords, Noblemen, Vaillets, &c. & omnes homines defensibil between sixteen and sixty; and that was juxta statum upon warning of two days, which was in defensio Regni nostri, to go with the King, m. 20. De hominibus levandis & congregandis.

And for a binding Authority Car. 12. The Resolution of all the Judges, under their hands, and enrolled in every Court at Westminster. A man would have thought that that would have given satisfaction: It would have done so in former times. And truly, that the King hath done nothing, nor the Judges, but what the Kings of this Realm have done before, is most apparent to all those who will read our Law Books. How often have the Judges been assembled by the King's Command, both in the outward and inward Star-Chamber, and there asked them Questions. 2 R. 3. fo. 10. 8 H. 8. 190. 6. 101. the King was there, and reasoned there; Is this a new thing for Judges to deliver their Opinions? A new Doctrine. But his Majesty hath been pleased likewise to give way that it might be brought to a publick Debate in a Judicial way. He hopes there is very few that do oppose it, do it out of any averfeness from the Publick Service, but to satisfy themselves, and so to submit.

To Answer the Argument.

Before I come to answer in particular to what was objected by this learned Gentleman, Mr. St. John, who hath taken a great deal of pains, and made as much use of it as was possible for a Cause of this nature to bear. I shall in the first place give a general Answer.

I say, That the testimony by Records given on the other side, whereof many are vouched, which I am glad to hear of, and that men look into a business of this nature. To make such a search, is for the honour of the King, that there is according to the Law, the freest access to the Records that ever was in England. And that great Lord (meaning the Lord of Holland) doth know the King commanded with his own mouth, that free access should be to the Records in this business. And I appeal to all Officers that keep the Records, that I did not only give that command from the King, but desired them my self, to shew to the other party what end I had. I say, these Records, take them at the best, they are not of such weight in point of Right, as the other are which are for the King: For if a King shall voluntarily, in case of his Subjects, or special Grace, do any thing, yet I conceive that is not of such weight as when he produces a constant use of compulsive Power from the Crown, and obeyed by the People: For if any of the Kings have spoken gentle Language, as King John when he was deposed from his Crown, I conceive that will not be so much as gentle words used in the Writs. I shall answer particularly to all the Records that have been cited: It doth much concern the King that this Argument be answered fully.

The first thing that was said, is, That to seize Goods without Suit or Cause is void in Law. But this was not used as an Argument, but as an Introduction: But in the next place he comes to a high Objection, That there is Voluntas interna & externa; His inward Will, which he doth declare in his Chamber; and his Legal Will: And without that the King cannot judge himself. 2 R. 2. f. 10, 11. which was grounded upon that Book Case. But that is not our Case. The King cannot judge in his own Person, but hath left it to their Lordships, that are sworn to do equal Justice between him and his People. But to say that the King cannot judge himself, I question. Can that be wanting in the Fountain which issues in the Stream? That I utterly deny. Is it not said, Coram Rege in the Kings Bench; and in the Star-Chamber, Coram Conciliis nostris? This is a new Doctrine.

And shall not the King judge? Did not King E. 4. sit in Person in the Kings Bench in a Trial of Rape? And that famous Justice Popham sit at the King's feet, and other Judges sit at the King's side, and therefore called Justiciarii à latere Regis? Sure he forgot King James, who adjudged two Cases in the Star-Chamber, that of Bellingham and Sir Thomas Lake's Case, the Book doth no way warrant his inference. The Book doth not say, The King shall not judge; but saith, If a man be convicted before the Judges, the King shall not set the Fine, because he heareth not the Case: This no way concerns our Case.

Object. That no Law can be changed, but by Act of Parliament? As a Naturalization and Legitimation. Nay, no Writ of Error, but in Parliament, till by the Statute 27 El. And the Parliament is Curia Regis, and part of the King's Body, and cited 34 H. 8. Crompton Jurisdiction. The King is at no time in such his state Royal, as in Parliament. All that was made out of this was, That this was a change of Law, viz. the Writ for Shipping. We are so far from believing that it is a change of Law, as it is the custom of all Ages in former times. Now (he says) the Parliament is the highest Court, and the King is there at highest both for magnificence and power: But yet out of the Parliament the King is King of England. It doth not follow, that because he may do it in Parliament, that therefore he cannot do it any where else. And it is too poor a comparison to say that the King should have the ordering of War as a Generalissimo over his Subjects and Vassals. All other Generals have their power from him.

Object. Oh but the King hath provision for War.

This is but a cunning insinuation to make a survey of the King's Revenue, and to insinuate with the People.

And begin with Knights Service, Tenure, and these in dangerous places, as Dover, Durresm, Chester. 34 H. 6. Britt. That the King should not only have his Wards Lands to breed them up, but to maintain the War in the mean time. And that Knights-Service 37 H. 6. were instituted for ordinary defence, as Horsemen. And because the Kings of England, out of their care to have men trained up for Horsemen to follow them, that therefore they should have no aid when the Kingdom was in danger: Shall we have no Footmen, no Archers, nor Slingers to be used in War? No Guard at Sea, because he hath some Tenures of Horsemen? This doth not discharge the Subject. This is but for forty days, and was instituted to suppress the sudden incursion from Scotland, 19 R. 2. Guard. 165. old Tenures. They do restrain particularly Escuage and Knights Service to Scotland and Wales. 22 E. 1. for Gascoign afterwards discharged, but not for Mr. St. Johns Reason. 5 E.

Anno 1637. 2. Cl. Ro. m. 27. These were discharged of Escuage; because the King was not there in person, and because it was extraordinary. 5 E. 1. Rot. Scot. 27. That Record doth shew the Kings of England did conceive that they were somewhat less then Enemies, Rebels; for Forreign Service, I never meant to object it.

Object. Then he saith Escuage is to be assessed in Parlamento, though for the defence of the Kingdom.

Ans. If that were the proper Question, I could shew when Escuage was not by Parliament; for it was by another Reason. It was altered by an Act of Parliament 17 Johannis Stat. Runney-Mead Nullum Scutagium, for it was not so before.

Ans. 2. Because it concerneth the Subject as well as the King, 9 H. 3. ca. 37. The true Reason of the assessing in Parliament is this, Other men were to have Escuage as well as the King. Now it is a true Rule, No man shall be Judge in his own case; but therefore not the King, that holds no proportion. And Kings are thought to do no wrong. The true Reason why it was assessed in Parliament was, because the Lords would take too much. This is far from the business, I pass it over.

Object. That the King is in actual possession of the Wards.

Ans. That this should go towards maintenance of Wars, he cannot shew any Authority worth the value. Neither Bract. nor Britt. hath any such thing; for 35 H. 6. the words are par ceo, &c.

The Argument will be but thus; Because the King out of his especial care, out of his own Land provided some Tenures for that purpose, therefore he shall have nothing from the Subject.

The King did never give nor could give other mens Lands for those Tenures; for it was most apparent the Normans came not in as Conquerors. William was no Conqueror; for after he came in, men did recover their Lands which were their Ancestors. That was the wisdom when H. 4. took the Crown by Conquest, when he would have altered the Laws: No; take our Laws and take our Lands. An Argument no ways conducing. Because he hath some Horse by Tenure, therefore neither Foot; nor provision for Sea-fight, nor Trained Band, because provision is made by Tenures? This is contrary to all reason and experience. What obligation hath the Soakmans and Ploughmans Tenure? What do they pay to defend them? No consideration for it. These were rather Insinuations than Arguments.

Object. Then it was said, There are like Tenures for Sea; and cited two or three: One to hold the King's head at Sea, and some such like: As if two or three Tenures were like to defend the Sea.

Object. It is said the Cinque Ports, that they have priviledges to that purpose.

Ans. 13 E. 3. Parl. Roll 11. Is the Cinque Ports Service a competent provision to defend a Kingdom against Hostility? I know no Reason but the whole Body should defend it self. 13 E. 3. no. 9. appears expressly that the Commons made defence at their Charge. No man can be discharged of keeping a thing that he did not keep. So because the Subject is said discharged, an Argument that he was charged.

That of Cinque Ports is not for the defence of the Kingdom, but for intercourse of Merchandize, not quando Salus Regni periclitabatur.

Then they object, That Tenures in Ancient Demesne were Talliable without consent, and their Services for the King promised in their House, no reason that should excuse them from the general Service: For though it be true that the King's House employs such Tenants, yet the Kingdom must be supported by them and the rest of the Subjects together.

Then he did object, That there was another way of Supply of extraordinary means; as Mines in other mens Lands. And here remembered M. 3. R. 2. Prerogative Communia, difference taken between Annual and Casual for defence, 6 R. 2. n. 42. Parl. Roll The King would live of his own Revenues, and that the Mines should be for the defence of the Kingdom.

Ans. Onslow that argued the Case, said, The King was the most excellent person both at Sea and Land: Therefore the Royal Fish at Sea, and the Gold and Silver Mines at Land was given to him, because he was able to give a stamp on Money. And fo. 2. R. 2. they of London prayed that the King would not put them to Charge, but live of his own. Your Authority vanisheth into Smoak.

The King must live forsooth of his ordinary Revenues. M. 3. R. 2. which expresth that the King would at that time do so. That the King by advice, for salvation of the Kingdom, would use these things given unto him, that indeed was a reasonable thing for that time. But must it be now turned for a necessity, 6 R. 2. no. 42. pars 2. that good government be about the King? Then they Petition that he would live upon the Revenues of the Crown, and that all Wardships, Marriages, Reliefs, Forfeitures, &c. should be for the defence le Roy de bon volunt, &c. The King is willing, and doth desire much to do and ordain in this Case by the Lords of his Realm, which may be best for his honour and profit. This is not a granting of the King, but referring it to his Lords; at best, it is but a temporary desire.

Object. But he hath objected the old Customs and petty Customs, Tunnage and Poundage, of the legality of taking it, he will not speak. If the King doth impose it on Merchants, he need not take it of other Subjects. Duties to the King in this year 11. were 300000*l.* and that Tunnage and Poundage was granted for ordinary and extraordinary defence, 3 R. 2. 5 R. 2. 1 Mar. on condition granted that by the Statute of Winchester they were bound to have Arms; and no such Statute for Sea.

I shall answer all this; but for Tunnage and Poundage reserve it for a peculiar place. They say the Courts of Justice are maintained by the Courts of Justice. The King hath a profit thereby; but the maintenance of them cometh out of the Subjects purse: And the first fruits were for defence of the Faith, that no Heresie should creep into the Church: Therefore because the King is Lord of the English Sea, he must defend it at his own charge, and not command the body or purse of his Subjects. Pretty Argument! He saith the King hath the old Customs, which are the ancient Inheritance of the Crown, and so for petty Customs, and that these must go towards defence of the Sea. See Judgment in the Exchequer in E. 1. time. Search into the Fine Roll 3 E. 1. and see for what causes these old Customs were. It was never said, till he spake it, that the old Customs, or lesser, were for this purpose. And for his saying, That the Statute of Winchester, 13 E. 1. doth enjoin to keep Arms, and thereupon all defence

Anno 1637. fence comes. That Statute is repealed in Philip and Mary, and set afoot by King James; and again by him repealed. I shall shew before 13 E. 1. many Records for Land Service long before; for that Statute doth only set a form of Arms, and is not the beginning of Arms. So for the Objection of the King's Revenues, it signifies nothing, be it more or less.

Now I shall come to Tunnage and Poundage, the darling Argument, which I affirm was never given nor taken of it self simply for extraordinary defence; I have seen all the grants of it. It may be when there hath been Wars abroad, and then the Subject in Parliament hath given Tunnage and Poundage with Tenths and Fifteenths; There they have been all said to be for the defence. That Tunnage and Poundage hath been given and taken merely for intercourse of Merchants. And in that sence the King said we do and must pursue those ends for which it was granted to the Crown, I shall make that appear by Reasons, and out of the Grants themselves and other Authorities.

If Tunnage and Poundage were merely for the defence of the Sea, How was the Kingdom to be defended before the time of the Saxons? At first time of it was six pence a year, then to two and three shillings for Tunnage and Poundage, then three shillings upon a Tun of Wine, and twelve pence a Pack on Merchandizes, that was all for Tunnage and Poundage, the rest was for old Customs. If this was for extraordinary, how was the Kingdom defended? When it was given for half a year; Truth, it was for the defence of the Kingdom; that is, with relation to the intercourse of Merchandize. Recital 1. Jac. saith, that it hath been taken time out of mind. Hath Tunnage and Poundage been given time out of mind, then it is since R. 1. time?

Henry the Sixth had it for life: The Statute doth expresse it as plain as can be. Time out of mind is beyond memory of any man living.

The very interpretation of the Statute explains it for safety of the Sea, and for the intercourse of Merchants. In all Ages before the granting of Tunnage and Poundage, the King upon a general Defence hath had other Aids then this by their own Power. Ordinary charge for an ordinary Defence. I could have given a legal Answer that it was not given unto the King. No Act of Parliament for it: Yea, but it is taken de facto. Shew your Instruments by which it was taken; that had been a legal Answer. But I shall carry the King's Honour along with his Power and Practice. 6 R. 2. Rot. Franc' 7 H. 4. no. 23. Ro. 11. Tunnage and Poundage granted to Merchants to guard the Sea for intercourse of Merchandize; which sheweth plainly it was for that purpose. To put it without all manner of question, 6 R. 2. no. 8. Franc' Roll. 2. Merchants & Mariners had Custodia Maris; and the King granted them 6 d. a pound. Doth any man think that he would trust the safety of his Kingdom with Merchants and Mariners? It was merely for the guard of the Sea for Merchandize; expresse exception in the very Grant, that they should not be bound by this to help against Invasion of Enemies, unless a Royal Power come (Regali potestate excepta) therefore this was for no extraordinary Service. 7 H. 4. Parl' Roll. is of the same manner. And in the Clause Roll, that the Custodes Maris should put there a lawful power, for the safeguard of the Sea against the Enemies of the King, except a Royal power, then notice to the King; for it must be understood merely for intercourse of Merchants. I can shew you a Book Car. 13. Case for this, 9 H. 6. 12. Q. case title Customs, Bra. 26. He saith Aids and Subsidies granted to the King, to the intent that the King by his Admiral should guard the Sea, to the end that Merchandize may pass and repass. Not a word for the defence of the Kingdom. And in the year 11. Car. the King was at great charge with his Navy. Cast up the Accompts of the Sea Duties, and then it will appear there is not left to him a penny for the defence of the Sea. Impositions and prellage of Wine was to furnish his House, and not for defence of the Sea. Not only upon this, but there was an ancient Lawyer that wrote the Doctor and Student (whose name was S. Jermaine) who wrote in H. 8. time, he tells you, lib. 2. c. 15. fo. 153. The King out of the old Customs of the Realm, as Lord of the Narrow Seas, is bound twice in the year to scour the Seas, but not against all outward Enemies, but only to put away Pyrates and petty Robbers, History of Tunnage and Poundage. 25 E. 3. Parl' Roll' no. 11. The Commons did pray that 6 d. of 2 s. a Sack of Wooll and of Wine granted, that the Merchants might have safe conduct beyond the Seas; If it would please the King, the Merchants would make their own Conduct for the Customs.

* All the Rolls go in that manner, 3 R. 2. H. 4. and they cannot shew that Tunnage and Poundage was made for extraordinary defence, unless for some great Defence.

Object. Next, That Sea Duties are born by every man in the Kingdom, and that is secundum statum. 22 E. 3. no. 4. Parl' Roll, which saith, That it was in charge of the People, & ne my des Merchants.

Answer. All men must proportionably bear their Defence. What a Consequence is this? Because one penny or two pence a year out of the Subjects purse, for their Commodities, therefore their Land shall be discharged in case of extraordinary Defence. Oh! say they, but this may be by Parliament. By a may be a man may answer any Argument: But a may be will never answer a Nil.

23 E. 1. Rol. 3. dorso. The Writs were in October, the Parliament at St. Martins in Winter: In that to Archbishop of Canterbury, the King doth but a little complement with the Clergy, and telleth them he knoweth what dangers were abroad. The business of Shipping was done before the Parliament: So the Parliament might consider of it afterwards. That it was done before appears; This Parliament was not held at the day; but the King doth Prorogate it till after St. Andrews day, because he was busie in preparing his Shipping; so they came about Shipping when it was gone to Sea before: For the Writ of Summons was in 1 Octob. day of meeting after St. Martins; that to the Archbishop was the 3d of September; the Ship Writs August 28. and September the 3d. then the rest the 3d and 6th of October, but all long before the meeting in Parliament, and so all grounded upon (it may be.) And to say that the King, because he did a thing voluntarily, therefore he must be necessitated to it, I know not what Argument it is. H. 7. indeed did bring things to Parliament for advancement of his Ends. Did Queen Elizabeth send any of her Commands out of Parliament, and yet the Subjects give her Subsidies? 24 E. 1. Summons therefore the Clergy to come, if the truce did not hold with France. I think think it not fit at all times, when it standeth upon intelligence to communicate it to the whole people, August 26. Summons to Parliament divers Writs in February and April before. No Money granted these Parliaments: therefore to tell us it might be by Parliament, it is a poor Argument. The King had great business at this time.

Object. Walsingham saith, Allegiance bindeth the King to Protection, as it doth the Subject to Tribute.

Answ. The Subject hath a double Protection from Injury and wrong. In time of Peace by his Law, and in time of danger by his power. Must this be done by the King's single person? Nay it must be done by the body of his Subjects at their charges. Indeed it is fit that particular Souldiers should be paid.

Object. Oh but they tell us that Fortescue, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, to shew the Law of England to be better than the Law of France, saith, that nothing could be taken from his Subjects, that is, but in the ordinary way; Doth he say that no man shall defend himself in eminent danger? Ne verbum quidem, 27 E. 1. m. 7. Pat's. He did not buy Lands or Castles, but to defend the whole Realm: No more doth this King, but to defend himself and the whole Kingdom.

Object. In 33 E. 1. Ro. 12. It is Objected that the Clerk sued for his Salary, and had it allowed him. And the King supports the Courts by the Fines.

Answ. But they come from the Subjects, and may not the King give a Salary when he pleaseth? 14 E. 3. cap. 1. And this should be prest, that Aids, though granted in the Parliament for defence, shall not be brought into example.

Object. These were not to be spent upon the safeguard of England, but Scotland and France, and so it comes not to our Case, 48 H. 3. When the Tenants came with greater charge than their Services were, that then non trahatur in exemplum.

Answ. True, if Knights Service at that time did do greater services in time of danger; it is reason that it should not be drawn to be yearly to make their Tenures higher, Plow. fo. 315. b. Wiseman's Case of Myne. A Covenant to stand seized to the use of the Queen, in consideration she is the Head of the Common-wealth. No good consideration to raise an use, because there wanteth quid pro quo. And the King ex Officio is bound to do that.

Answ. Under my Lord Cook's favour, it was not in the Case; the Case was upon divers good considerations, and he put in this by way of admittance; I can shew when this was declared to be no Law.

Object. Next that the King hath the possession of the Cinque Ports, Tonnage and Poundage; and that this appears not to be expended, and other duties for the defence of the Sea. And that lex non facit saltum & tempus Belli, I reserve for another place, for that is one of the three things considerable in this Argument. That learned Gentleman Mr. Sr. John did confess, that (as necessity requires) when the safety of the Kingdom is in danger, the Subject is bound.

If it were material to make it appear whether any thing were spent or not, it should have been pleaded in the Exchequer, if he would have taken any advantage upon it.

But admitting that they had been all expended, yet the property of the Subjects Goods, say they, cannot be altered out of Parliament. He did agree the Kingdom must be defended, and did yield thus far, that the manner of it did not belong to the people, 6 R. 2. 2 E. 1. Men and Money belong unto Wars. The Commons did write, it belonged unto the King for ordering of it. In all times, the Caution of former Ages, was to demand it in Parliament, we shall then in all Ages he did it without Parliament.

This is a pretty thing that the King is to direct the Wars, and yet neither Men or Money without asking his Subjects leave. And for that of Property, it being taken away, in the opening of my Argument I cleared it, I shall not trouble you with repetition of it.

Object. Oh but they tell us, the King hath borrowed Money to spend in the Wars, and promised to repay it, and that without any salvo of his Right: this is an Argument they think of consideration.

Answ. 48 H. 3. 16 Patr. I know no Law that barreth the King from borrowing of Money, as he hath occasion. Is it not of necessity that the King must borrow, notwithstanding both ordinary and extraordinary? Must the King carry Millions about him? His occasion may be such, that he must borrow, and also fit it is, as it should be paid again. Doth any man think, that if the King borrow 10000 l. of any particular man, he must not be repaid again? 48 H. 3. no. 15, or 16. Power given to the Earl of Leicester to resort to the City of London to have Money; great reason: Because it is the Chamber of the King; But the King's Money not being come in, desireth to borrow so much of the City, and shall be paid when the other Money cometh in: the end was for the defence of the Kingdom; But therefore the King cannot command his Subjects Aid, because he borrows of his Subjects, is no Argument.

Object. Next, The Law delights in certainties, as in the Aids pur file Marriell, and to make the King's eldest Son a Knight. Those are certain, 25 E. 3. All defence is uncertain till we know the offence, certain he must be a wise man that can do it. How shall a man know how to defend, and not know what the defence will require, whether ten or twenty thousand? And must it not be proportionable to the offence? Is not this to suscipere maius & minus? Where is the Argument, that because Aids which were uncertain by the Common-Law, are made certain by Act of Parliament, therefore must this be certain for which there is no Act of Parliament?

Object. Oh but the Tallage in Antient Demesne and Burgage, they are certain, and Mr. Hampden was at 20 s. it might have been as well 20 l. this is uncertain, it doth rest only in the King's mercy.

Answ. This Writ taketh care they shall not Sefs unequally: If Mr. Hampden be too high Selled, the Sheriff might be called in question for it; but the Sheriff of Buckinghamshire is rather to be Fined for setting him at so low a rate as 20 s. We know what House Mr. Hampden is of, and his Estate too; for anything I know it might have been 20 l. But to the legal part, some must be trusted with it, and who should be but the Sheriff, and the party is not without remedy.

Then they come at last to Authority by Jurisdiction, and that they that have priviledges are not Talliable to the use of the King, Nisi per graund cause, and that Escuage must be set in Parliament, which is by Act of Parliament, 17 Job. That it was called Magna Charta, and confirmed Anno 1637. by H. 3. so it was in Mat. Paris; he speaketh of it as a thing of a story; These were for Foreign Wars, and so not for our Case.

Object. Next, Oh but it was admitted every man was to keep Arms, 13 E. 3. 11 H. 7. cap. 18. while they are in their own Counties, to be at their own charge, but not to be drawn out of their own Counties without wages, as in 88.

H. 7. afraid of his own Title, maketh a Law that no man should be questioned for being with the King in Arms; this was to take away the occasion of the peoples talking whether they went upon just ground.

That many Armies have been paid by the King, 2 E. 6. ca. 2. 28 H. 8. the Rebels in the North. The King promised satisfaction, 11 H. 7. ca. 1. the duty of the Subject is recited in it. What Argument is this? We shew in all Ages where the King commanded his people to attend him, or his Lieutenant, and you tell us that he paid other Armies, 19 H. 7. doth extend to Wars without the Kingdom as well as within, 11 H. 7. this last did expire by his death; this doth appear plainly, this was by a special gift by the King, 4 Eliz. Dyer 211. expressly it did not extend to the service of any other King but him, 25 E. 3. Ca. 8. None constrained to find men at Arms, but those that held by such service.

This must be understood with relation to the Tenure. They were not to come upon common Summons for Escuage; But when the whole Kingdom was in defence, that they should not come was no excuse.

Object. 26 E. 1. Reginald de Gray durst not Levy men without pay: The Marginal Note clears this, and so no part of our Question.

And it appears, Walsingham 74, 75. that the King was actually then in Scotland, where he fell from his Horse, and lost two of his Ribs.

Object. Tr. 31 E. 1. Next place here is a refusal to go without pay. The Wardens of the Marches of Cumberland, and Westmerland writ to the Barons, That whereas the Scots lay near the Marches with a great Army, and that the people could not march out of their Counties without pay.

Ans. Easily answered; There was the East Marches, and the West Marches of Scotland, several Counties belonging to each, What reason had they to go out of their own Marches, unless they had Money for the keeping of them in their absence? Par. 2. pars 10. or 11 E. 2. m. 26. for war of Scotland, 9 E. 2. the same discharged in the County of Norfolk, 13 E. 3. m. 38. Abbot of Ramsay, because he remained in his own County, it was no absolute discharge, but dum sic intendit, 21 E. 3. Rott Franc. Some are discharged from the custody of the Sea, because they were prompt at home; some from finding Hobblers and Archers, and this was by reason of a Grant in Parliament; some were discharged, because of stay at home to guard the Coasts: this proveth the right both of the personal service and contribution.

Object. Another Objection, 21 E. 3. Rott Franc. that they should not be kept continually in Array, but suffer them to stay in their own Counties: But they were to go as soon as any notice of an Enemies coming.

Ans. This was for the wars of France, and not for the defence of the Kingdom.

Oh but 20 E. 3. m. 6. Scot. Roll. There were exploratores & vigiles, which were incole, but how? De assensu & voluntate; But this was nothing, for it was with assent in the Northern parts, and had been done in former times against Scotland, 100. Roll of Fenshaw (which I conceive maketh for us rather than against us) for the Castle of Tunbridge is to Levy 15 l. for the King pro insultatione of the Castle, and to Levy it by distress, 14 E. 4. ca. 19. The King could not compel the Subject to sell Victuals for wars, nor to provide for the Castle in the Town, 29 E. 1. that was for Scotland, for payment of Victuals, And who can command a Purveyance but the King? And that of the Castle, it was the Victualling of his own Castle, and Subjects were bound to victual their Castles, 8 E. 2. Ro. 99. Marches provided for victuals, and particular men were paid for victuals, but they do not shew from whence those Monies came.

Next is Horses for the King's Service marked, that if they were lost, might be satisfied for, 24 E. 1. Robert lost a Horse worth twenty Mark, and received in the Exchequer somewhat for wages, cited also M. 26 E. 1. Ro. 105, 106. that is only a Concordatum how men should be paid, only an Order sent down from the King what the Horse-men should have, and what the Foot-men for Yorkshire, Northumberland, and Cumberland should have, no wages from the King, but to go against Scotland; yea, that is another thing, Si contra Scotos, and that distinction upon the stating of the Case, will go throughout, 14 E. 3. 34. for Castles.

24 E. 2. 72, 78. dors. Jo. de Sandal. Barwick was taken from the Scots; and for the furnishing of Barwick Castle the people compelled to trust them.

Object. Oh but the Prisoners and Hostages taken in war were redeemed at the King's charge, 8 E. 3. allowances in the Exchequer, 5 R. 2. ca. 11. examined in the Exchequer. The King hath a Prisoner taken in war, he is to have his Ransom, Shall not the King pay for his charges? 4 E. 2. Ro. 12. Roger de Savage, Scottish Prisoner; so because the King payeth for a Prisoner, for which he is to have benefit for his Ransom, therefore, &c. he is to defend the Kingdom, Dyer 162. A man in Execution cannot be forced to go to War.

Resp. Our Writ doth not desire to send men in Execution to war, for there are enough besides them.

Then again, Borrowing of Money; and they paid again for it pro negotiis urgentissimis. The King may have occasion to borrow Money, reason he should pay it. Nothing to the question.

But the Case is, Whether all the people, for their wives and their families safety, and for the safety of the whole Kingdom, may not be compellable, &c?

The Abbot of Gloucester gave Money to maintain a Damofel; the King took this Money, for the present, and paid it back again; this was exoneretur conscientia Regis, 26 E. 1. That for things taken away without warrant, the Ministers should answer for it, not pay nor repay, but shall hold themselves satisfied with reason.

But they Object, That in 26 E. 1. a Commission went out to enquire de rebus Captis sive pro custodia Maris, &c. and the King saies that il fera taunt & se tendeont a payse per reason.

True se tenderent a payse, &c. which is not the King, will pay or repay; but that they should hold themselves satisfied per Reason, that is, he would give them reason why they should be satisfied.

Anno
1637. Mr. Solicitor his Third daies Argument, Novemb. 14. 1637.

I Shall go on where I left, only inform you of one Record, 1 H. 4. The Writ that went for the Array of the Bishop of Canterbury, which doth recite that, Whereas there was danger upon the Sea, he and all the Clergy should Manus opponere adiutrices; I speak of this, because it was at so low a time as Henry the Fourth. And it was pro salute populi.

Co'ia Pl^o 14 Jac.

Common Pleas between Weaver and Ward; Command came from the King and Council, that the Bands in London should be Mustred for the Training and making of them ready to defend the Kingdom. One in Training hurt his Companion, and he thereupon brought an Action against him, and this was pleaded in Bar, that he was Mustred by Special Command, and this was adjudged a good justification, because it was for the preservation of the Land, 28 H. 8. which recited, that the King did pay them in Lincolnshire: But for the other, he saith, he will remember their pains.

Now I shall go on.

Object. It was Objected of the Statute of William the first, that the people should enjoy their Lands freely, Sine omni injusta exactione sive Tallagio.

This was for Money to be received for a general thing, but that it was not for this thing, appeareth in one Chapter, that Knights Service Tenure should do what belonged to it; the rest Fractres conjurati ad Monarchiam Angl^{ie} defendenda, 14 E. 3. c. 1. 25 E. 3. 1 E. 1. Walsingham 184. All these are set aside by the Statute, and concerns not our question. Ours is ratable and proportionable by old practice. And it is one thing to compel a particular man; and another thing, to set an equal rate upon the whole Kingdom.

Last of Febr. 3 Car. a Commission for Loans for the defence of the Kingdom, they meant the Commission, which was a consideration to Levy Money, by reason of the necessity of the time. It appeareth in the Journal Book Impositions, or otherwise to raise Moneys, not concerning this question. It appeareth by that the King gave a gracious answer unto it, and that it was done for the present time: a Warrant for advice only. It was done to raise Money in general, but no determination of right, and said that at your desires it shall be cancelled. Then there was a Commission of Loans, Feb. 5. 2 Car. and this they say was for the defence of the Kingdom. It appears that it was for the defence of the Palatinate and Denmark, and for that a Bishop was sentenced for this mistake, for Mr. Pyme brought up the Articles against him: I shall now come to an Objection worthy the making by Mr. St. John; and because it is a thing not truly understood, but taken at random, I shall crave your Lordship's patience: And that is the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo, 25 E. 1. made after the King went into Flanders, and agreed upon here by the Prince as Vice-Roy, and after sent into Flanders to be sealed by the, as it is put in some Books. The words are general. No Tallage to be taken without consent of the Lords in Parliament. For this I desire the liberty to inform you of the Story of the Times to make a better Answer. Car. 13.

1. This is not all, in some Statute Books it's not mentioned; in others, no Kings Reign mentioned. And in E. 1. no year of it, and now they would apply it to 25 E. 1. and this they would ground upon compelling of Aid, 23. 24 E. 1. and the Commission in 24 E. 1. did issue upon that, and consequently that this Aid was the Aid complained of, and then redressed. Walsingham, a Monk of St. Albans, they relye upon for this, that writ some seven score years after the thing done. Sir Edward Cook saith, Chronicle Law is not much to be regarded. True, he saith Chronicle Histories may shew us the Times, if it tell us what the Law is, not to believe them: No Historian that I ever knew that ever read the Record, therefore no true History; for the most part they are taken up in Pauls or the Streets. To take something in consideration, by way of stating the Case upon the Statute Confirmatio Cart. and the other de Tallagio non concedendo, that is, that no Aid shall be Levied but by assent in Parliament.

The first Statute is, That so such Aids shall be Levied, the nature of it, and the Acts themselves rightly compared, there remains no scruple against this Case. Three things for the true understanding of this must be considered.

First, What kinds of Aids had been in use before the Acts, 25 E. 1. and for what they were taken.

Secondly, How and what remedy was given by that Statute.

Thirdly, How far that Statute de Tallagio is in force and of Authority in this Case.

For the first, It appeareth in the common Story, that in 21 E. 1. the King of France had seized all the Dutchy of Gascoigne, upon pretence that he did not appear at his Parliament at Paris upon a Summons; thereupon Edward the first took a course for regaining of his Dutchy, and the War continued with various success till 25 E. 1. and had also wars with Scotland and Wales, for though Wales was taken 12 E. 1. yet there was one Maddox that pretended himself to be of the blood of the Prince, and he was not taken till 23 E. 1. And till that year they were not quieted; having all these wars against Flanders, Gascoigne, Scotland, and Wales, some at one time, some at another, and most together, upon these occasions divers Aids and Supplies were taken on several natures, some were by voluntary Grant of the people, some were by Impositions and Levies by the name of Tallages or Taxes to be paid to the King, some by Agistment of Lands. As the Abbot of Robertsbridge, 25 E. 1. All this appeareth in the Commission for Extortion.

Besides all these, some by prizes of Goods and Money taken from the Possessors, without any Payments, Rates, or Taxes; nay, there was then ransacking of the Monasteries, and taking of the Money, found there, Mr. St. John's Case for Money taken out of the Treasury; besides all these there were some by way of Ransom, as Mr. St. John rightly observed, and shewed his Learning and Industry; that the Clergy upon their denial to the King, were put out of the King's Protection, they did Ransom themselves by giving a fifth part of their Goods, Par^o 25 E. 1. par^o 12. m. 11.

The People being thus grieved with such Aids and Prizes, so extraordinarily taken for the maintenance of Foreign Wars, obtained that it might be enacted that such Aids, in a relative Term, may may not be granted nor taken without their consent.

Anno 1637. Observe this one thing, The Merchants of England three years before had granted the King Subsidium guerr. upon every Sack of Wool five Marks, three Marks upon Wool-fells, upon every pack of Skins five Marks, and this was granted of their own Free-will, and to continue per diennium aut triennium, 22 E. 1. m. 2. Fine Roll. where it is there Registered. Next year before Confirmac^o Chart. all the Layety, except Cities, Burroughs, and ancient Demelines had granted to the King in Subsidium guerr. the eleventh of their Goods, 24 E. 1. m. 2. Patt's pars 2. And the Summer before Confirmac^o Chart. an eighth granted by all the Layety except the Cities and Burroughs, and they granted a fifth, and this was still for the War, 25 E. 1. m. 11. Pai^o. Application is this, those many Aids of these several kinds having been granted for the War, divers men of that time did doubt and fear, that however they meant it for a certain time; yet, being not so clearly expressed it might bind them for the future; that they so doubted, appeareth by Confirmac^o Chartar.

And forasmuch as divers people of our Realm are in fear, that the Aids and Taxes, which they have given us before time towards our War, and other business, of their own gifts and good will, might turn to a bondage to them and their Heirs; And likewise for the prizes taken, we do grant for us and our Heirs, that we shall not draw no such Aid, Taxes, or Prizes into a custom for any thing done heretofore, be it by Rule or by any other Precedent that may be found.

Then, my Lords, for no occasion such manner of Aids, Taxes, or Prizes shall be taken but by common consent. But it endeth not so, saving the ancient Aids and Prizes due and accustomed; this being the state of the Case, be pleased to observe the complaint of the people. This kind of Aid it is plain, was never meant there, when Salus populi periclitabatur and may be lawfully Levied notwithstanding the Statute.

Reas. 1. The Act is only such kind of Aids and Taxes as have been voluntarily granted by the people, some by Merchants, and some by others, that they should not be taken against them hereafter, but by consent in Parliament: (such) is a relative. It is not general, no Aids, but no such Aids.

Reas. 2. It refers to those that were voluntarily granted to the King for Scotland, and Wales, and his other Wars.

Reas. 3. Another Reason why these Aids that had been for the custody of the Sea, could not have been said ayd of their own good will: For observe the Abbot of Robertbridge's Case, it appears plainly it was done against their will, for the custody of the Sea by vertue of the Law, and the King's Writ.

August before Confirmac^o Chart. those that had given an eighth part, they did expressly obtain Letters Patents, that such their free gifts might not be hereafter in Servitutum, 25 E. 1. 2. that is the very thing doubted in Confirmac^o Chart. Now those that had granted an eighth, had no reason to do it, for they had a Charter to free them, but the other had not: And therefore the Statute might well say some did fear, not all did fear: So on the whole matter, there are no other Aids but these voluntarily granted at that time, none in the body of the Act, but those granted with a good will, for those Foreign wars, and upon the 40s. remitted by the King upon every Sack of Wool with three Marks granted, 22 E. 1. was by the Merchants only; for the War in Gascogne, thereupon it was enacted the King should not take such things without common consent.

2. There is in the Statute Confir. Chart. an exception.

That all ancient Aids due and accustomed was excepted, and therefore what kind was meant in the body of the Act, the exception makes clear, ancient Aid excepted, this was an ancient Aid, and therefore never meant there; nothing to induce a new Law, that no Aid should be taken, but no such Aid, no Imposition should be taken, but the practice of all Ages shews that this was Levied ever since from time to time, which is an interpretation of the words of the Law. This I do open to make way to the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo; thrice in the Statute is this word (such) but that they would make use of that Statute de Tallagio non concedendo of it self, without relation unto that; whereas it will appear it is a meer extract out of this, and no Statute of it self, for debate of that, this de Tallagio is the same with Confirmac. Chart. it is a plain extract of it, or some other thing at some other time; sometimes in some Printed Books Nullum Tallagium. No Aid shall be taken by the King, sometime without notes of time, and at the best it is no more; but it is said it was in the time of Edward the first. If we shall compare Confirmac. Chart. and the Articles that are in this, we shall find it to be nothing but an extract out of the Statute, and that it was no Act of Parliament.

Now to make it appear that it was an extract taken out of it,

1. The several heads de Tallagio.
2. The Charter against Prises.
3. Another against Wool.
4. A general confirmation of Laws and Liberty.

5. Pardon to divers Lords there.

These are the things in which they would make it a Statute of it self, all expressed in Confirmac^o Chart^o they do not differ in substance.

6. A sixth head it is the very year of 21 E. 1.

For the pardon of those Lords was made 5 N. 25 E. 1. this same was sealed by the King, word by word proved by the Statute Roll, the very same Roll that hath the Confirmac^o Chart. the next fo. the Monk did mistake this Statute. No man will believe a Monk that writ seven score year after against a Record.

I shall shew what it was that was sent over into Flanders, and that was Confirmac^o Chart. and did bear date 10 October, the King being then in Flanders, and there Sealed by the King himself, that it may appear there is no manner of question of it, here is the very Copy of the Statute Roll, and the whole Confirmac^o Chart. is recited verbatim in witness, 10 October, 25 of our Reign, whereas Walsingham saith, that this very Charter word for word was sealed in Flanders under the great Seal of England, 5 N. 25 of our Reign, and sent back into England, for this Statute Roll of that time doth expressly say, that this was the Charter that was sent over into Flanders, and hath the same teste word for word, and this was sent back into England. To confirm it further, the next thing that followeth upon the same date and Roll, is, the pardon to the Earls; this was dated, 5 No. when this Confirmac^o was sealed.

They

Anno 1637. They have not yet shewed that this Statute de Tallagio was ever entered upon the Roll; nay, it could not be entered, Who would think that an Extract of an Act of Parliament should be entered upon the Roll?

If they can quit Wallingham, they are wise men; they must carry the practice of all times; Where did ever any man see that this Act of Parliament was ever shewed to discharge men of the defence of the Kingdom since 25 E. 1? Did no body know this mystery to plead not to defend the Sea and their Lands? Did no man hear of this till now? Shall this against all the practice of times since, take away the flower of the Crown to compell people to aid for themselves? A harsh construction.

If this should be true it would destroy even Acts of Parliament, to what purpose is that Statute made of 25 E. 3. if that were totally taken away before? and if no aid, those aids pur file marrier, &c. was taken away also; nay, if this be an Act of Parliament, When was it made? before 25 E. 1. or since? it appears not where. It is Individuum vagum, I know not what, but in truth an extract. Nay if this be an Act of Parliament under these words, no Tallage is equivocal as well as aid; that is proper Tallage that is laid upon Villages, 25 E. 3. 100. Avowry Entries 406. b.

8 E. 2. Execution 36. 15 E. 3. 106. Avowry. A rent may be released by the name of Tallage.

No mention of this in all Ages. Then it was further objected that 25 E. 1. m. 7. pars 2. expressed in the King's Proclamation, August 12. before ever he was going into Flanders, that he was sorry for the Aids demanded of his people; Let him remember for what reason he did demand them; these Aids, which he was sorry for, and sent over unto him, were Aids granted not for the defence of the Kingdom in general, but for the defence of the Kingdom mixed with Foreign defence, by reason of his Wars with Gascoigne, Wales, Scotland, and elsewhere; for that it was for Foreign Wars. Upon this followed the Commission, 26 E. 1. Parl., that went to all the Kingdom that makes for us. There are three parts in that Commission, First, observe if the Officers did any thing without warrant, they should return it. Secondly, If done wrong, the King should answer it. Thirdly, They should be satisfied with reason, if the King did warrant it.

The Answer thereunto given, was upon another Construction made of the words of the Record in 2 R. 2. Parl.. The cause was this, the Chancellor declaring the causes of this Parliament, he doth shew that the King in the end of the last Parliament, had assigned some Lords to be of his continual Council for the year following; the number was seven that were assigned, and were sworn to give good Counsel for the aid of the Kingdom: These Councillors treating of the perils of enemies of all parts, and the matter requiring dispatch, they durst not undertake the ordering of so perilous a thing; therefore ordered a grand Council to be assembled; the grand Council was assembled, to whom was shewn the great peril and mischief of the Kingdom apart, by Wars, by Land, and Sea, that nothing was remaining in the Treasury for the maintenance of Wars for a final conclusion, that they might remedy this mischief; they say, that it cannot be granted without Parliament; this was the English of it, and in the meantime an Army might be Landed. And for the present Supply of the charge of such an Army, lent the King great sums, which by great security, and other things, he did engage himself to pay; upon this the Lords did advise how it might be done at the least charge to them all, and how the King's right of his Crown, and other Inheritances beyond the Sea might be safe, and the Kingdom and themselves defended, to the confusion of all their enemies. To this purpose the Treasurer was directed to be ready to shew what was expended next Parliament, to be bestowed for the Marches of Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, and said in that great Parliament, they could not remedy that mischief of that time, without charging of the Commons, which cannot be done, say they, without Parliament.

It is plain, by the Story of that time, and the words of the Chancellor, that it was for the continuance of Wars in France, Scotland, and Ireland. And though the defence of the Kingdom be mentioned with these Wars, yet the main supply was for these Foreign Wars.

Next place in the Parliament a little before, the like Aid for the like occasion desired by the King, 2 R. 2. no. 24, 25. Parl. Roll; What did the Commons say now? They ought not to bear such Foreign charges: the King gave them a fair answer, admonished them, for Gascoigne concerned the Kingdom of England, for they are Bulwarks of the Kingdom of England; Babacon is an old Fort de hors, for the Aid demanded in that Parliament, was, with this relation, as consonant both together, concerned the defence of the Kingdom, that they might be Bulwarks for the Kingdom of England.

Next place, Who spake these words? The Lords said they could not remedy the mischief without Parliament; the Lords assigned by Parliament they durst not do it, it was dependant upon the other part; the Lords could not do it that way.

But shall we come home and speak plain English? We know this was 2 R. 2. a young King. It doth appear expressly, that these things were brought into the Parliament for advice, which were fit for Royal Authority for expence for Wars, and for Council, and for governing of this Realm. It appeareth further by the very Chancellors Speech, that the Council had been heretofore ordained for governing of the Kingdom, 2 R. 2. Parl. Roll. This Parliament taking notice of the King's tenderness of age, they took much power into their hands: There was to be a consent not only for the governing of the Kingdom in general, but the Councillors should be chosen to govern the State for two years, and these Councillors not to be removed from the King without Parliament. And more than that, his Treasurer was to be governed by the Parliament, and his Councillors chosen in Parliament. At the end of the Petition of Right, neither Lords joyn't nor severall can declare a Law without his consent, and that your Lordships, and none but you are Interpreters of Laws: Wife King James did, &c.

Next thing considerable is, Tempus Belli, to define it.

It is, when the condition of the Time is such, that the Current of Justice and Law is by such violence stop't, as Judges not to sit, nor Sheriffs dare execute, nor any Courts open, especially the Chancery, which is Officium Justicie.

Object. It was thus, that there was a time when the King might command this Levy to which they did agree.

They

Anno
1637.

They do agree, That the King may command this Levy when he hath Proclaimed a War, though no blow stricken, nor danger, nor Arms, nor opinion of any force coming; this doth put it into the King's power by their own consent. And by all Reason, 19 E. 4. 6. Bryan's opinion how many Wars have been Proclaimed in this latter Age. No War denounced in 88, though consulted of in Spain, and they did not think fit to denounce a War, saith Sir Walter Raleigh; those daies are past. Now they begin by the Sword, not by the Trumpet, or Herald.

Next place they say, If the King be in the Field with his Banners displayed: This, they say, was Tempus Belli. Cannot the Courts of Justice sit then, but there must be peace? 39 E. 3. Ro. 10. Did not the Courts of Justice sit then, 10 E. 3? Our ordinary Printed Books shew what Causes of Law then was. And in H. 6. time in all our Civil Wars; and in H. 7. time also they sate then. But the true time to make it Tempus Belli, is to make it a war against the King.

In the North, towards Scotland, when the Enemies approaches, is it necessary that there must be a time of peace, because the Courts of Justice sit at Westminster Hall? There may be as strong a war in the North and West as ever was in England, when the Courts of Justice sit here.

That Tempus Belli may be in some places of the Kingdom, and in some places not, appeareth, 33 E. 3. And who shall discern if there be any danger? They agreed in general, the King will do it, and the power of discovering in his Majesty, I shall leave it to the King, till Mr. Sr. John find a third person to do it.

Object. 13 H. 4. For the Murage that this doth only charge things that are Venalia, for men need not go to Market.

Ans. How shall they then live? True, not compulsory, to go thither but compulsory to pay the money.

Object. 1 R. 2. no. 76. 2. pars, Petition for the City of London to have all owners of Lands to be rated with them in the danger of wars, not having Lands in Tenure to do it.

Ans. This doth make for us, that not only Merchants, but every man in the Lieu of Tenure to do it. Lord of St. Albanes saith of Henry the Seventh, that Kings may fall from their absolute power when they see cause, but not be compelled to do it. They say Supplies are called those things Sine qua non, the Kingdom may not be defended. And because there was a way in Parliament, therefore no other way? They say that it will not be affirmed, that the King hath the same power for an Offensive war, as for a Defensive war. I affirm nothing, nor defend. The Parliament is a great Body, and the Kingdom may be lost in the interim.

Object. There is forty daies for Escuage, like for Parliament.

Ans. Many times impossible, nor convenient to be done by Parliament.

First, Impossible, the necessity may be such, that it will not brook the delay of a Parliament, 48 H. 3. Summons ad Cinque Ports. They come day and night to the King when any danger is.

Object. It hath been said, There are seven Months between the Test of the Writ, and the Ships being at Portsmouth, in the mean time a Parliament might be Summoned.

Ans. The great one, and the true answer is, that this resteth still in the King's Judgment. If the King hath intelligence that Foreign States will set out the next Spring a Fleet. And for the conveniency of his people, sendeth seven Months before; Hath the people cause to complain of this? Mr. Hampden hath not paid his money yet, being two years after.

If they should have gone by Parliament, see what Rubs in this Case might be: forty daies is spent before the Parliament sit; then when they meet in Parliament, there is a Ceremony in choosing of a Speaker; Solemnity in these takes up time; then the Lords take things into consideration: then they must have Conference, Disputes, in both Houses, before they agree: the Kingdom may be lost in the meantime. Suppose this come in some reasonable time, there must be Writs made out, and that is not soon done, for all the Counties in England, some reasonable time to make assessments. First in the Cities, then in the Burroughs, then particular Assessments, then divisions; after all this, there must be Collectors appointed to levy the Money. What a deal of time is spent in this, every man may see.

Our Case, say they, is an In-land County, they cannot find a Ship suddenly, therefore the greater the King's favour to lend them his Ships instead. When all this is done, and Ships provided reasonable time to Sail from the North to Portsmouth; But this doth rest in the Judgment of the King.

31 H. 8. ca. 8. An Act of Parliament, not to take any of their Inheritances or Lands.

Here is no Lands or Goods taken away. Only let them contribute to the defence of themselves. Mr. Hampden hath had none of his Goods touched.

Object. They say for Shipping, it was not done in King John's time at the Subjects charge, they do not meddle with Land Service at that time.

15 Fo. 13. dor. Cl^r Roll, King John had business beyond the Sea, that this was rather for beyond the Sea than for the Kingdom, appeareth thus. The Writ saith to have such Ships as would carry eight or six Horse; and that must needs be, for some Foreign service, not for service at home. N. 1. dor. Cl^r Roll. The King was well Landed at Rochell.

Object. For the terms of the Law which concern Hidage, and other things, Brac. fo. 37. Some services introduced by common consent, and not so from time to time, I will not trouble you with it.

To come to the Case of the Abbot, that Arms was laid on by the Statute of Winchester; that will not serve, Arms were long before that time. They say the Assess was in time of war.

The French had burnt Dover, 23 E. 1. and that the Sefs was not made by the King's Authority: But it appears, it was by the King's Authority by ver tue of his Writ, 25 E. 1. Lord Treasurers Remembr. Layborne was Admiral of all the Kingdom, and was Custos Maris Maritim of some parts, but that it was for Land service and not for Sea.

Ans. Custos Maris & Maritim are verbal, he that hath one defends the other.

They have left no stone unturned to take away the force of this Case. They tell us now the Clergy was put out of the King's Protection this year, and so appeared in the Exchequer, but they have not shewed any such Writ delivered into into the Common Pleas, only Spencer's word of mouth, that they should have no privilege there. Suppose it were so in other Courts, 25 E. 1. it appeareth plainly that the Clergy came all to be in the King's Protection, and gave Ransoms; and this Cause was not till Michaelmas after. And whereas it is said, This Abbot's Case did only concern the Land Service, it proveth both the one and the other Land and Sea Service Money for Sea Service; Horses for Land Service.

Oh they say, 29 E. 1. Magna Chart. was not observed; John de Gray, and Philip's Case, whatsoever was the practice of that time not material. And for that of the Charter of the Forest, they say, though it be said, Nullus amittat vitam vel membrum pro veneratione nostra, yet one was beheaded; but what is all this to the safe custody of the Sea?

Nay they have not shewed your Lordships, that there was any thing in that great Charter for the custody of the Sea, 51 H. 3. fo. 84. Brist. 177. Fleta & Fit. 2. L. Co. Littleton.

Perhaps question might be about this in the Exchequer. At this time the Case of Shoreham discharged of Land service, because they found Shipping.

They that were nearest danger, most fit for that defence, as the King in the tenth year sent only to Maritime Towns, 2 R. 2. m. 42. Beverly, they say, were discharged because that it was an Up-land Town, therefore no In-land ought to pay them.

Writ directed to William Russell, Admiral, commandeth only the Sea Coasts.

13 E. 3. 35. m. Cl. 1. pars afterwards discharged, because of other Service. And for that of Beverly, a complaint that they were to contribute with such a Town to find a Ship, and they say they have privileges; and the special Reason why it was freed for reverence they bear to St. John de Beverly discharged, Rott. Franc. 21 E. 3. m. 17. there was a discharge of, &c.

Mr. St. John knows it, 120 Ships granted to the two Admirals, North and West, for service beyond the Sea, 31 E. 1. de inveniend' Horses, because of great business in his Wars abroad; he bound them to make Gallies for Foreign service. Truth, at this time, the King was in Scotland, and kept his Christmas there. Then they come to 31. as though he should do it by service of the Cinque Ports.

Object. Newcastle upon Tyne at their own wages, but when into Scotland at the King's pay then they came to this, 10 E. 3. Cl. 6. Roll. sent for Ships into North-Wales and South-Wales; the Writs did say that wages were not used to be paid for such service, and did express in his Writ satisfaction should be made unto them, not of right but de gratia, and reciteth the clause that the people were bound unto it, 2 E. 3. 16. dors. that there should be 300l. to relieve the Fishermen, the King should not have it of the people of that Town, they say all these Records being matter of Fact, did occasion the making of divers Statutes of redress, 14 E. 3. ca. 1. Great Aid for France, Scotland, and Gascoigne, 15 E. 3. no. 9. contrary to Magna Charta, 22 E. 3. no. 4.

36 E. 3. 9. No Goods taken without consent, these are things comprehended within the Petition of Right, 37 E. 3. n. 2. speaketh only of the great Aids.

23 E. 3. Gallies made; they said the King paid for them; that is, upon the King's own promise, but they said that is nudum pactum; then they say, Is the King's words nothing? 13 E. 3. no. 9. called a Parliament propounded as on the King's part not liable to the defence of the Sea. If the Commons have nothing to do with the guard of the Sea, Why is it propounded unto them?

10 E. 3. no. That the guard of the Sea be made henceforward at the charge of the King, as hath been promised, and there the people discharged. They do not affirm in their own Case there was any right, 21 E. 1. Fran. Roll. m. 9. 2 s. on the Merchants, and 6 d. poundage for a certain time, and to cease ram quam, &c. 22 E. 3. 2 s. upon a Sack may cease.

Answ. All these things granted for Foreign Wars, and if the Cause cease the thing should cease.

2 H. 4. Commission for building of Gallies; the King would confer with the Lords about it; then 19 H. 4. 17, 21. touching the guard of the Sea not bound unto against Wales.

4 H. 4. 28. m. Tonnage and Poundage not to be taken without common consent, protestation of the Commons doth not bind the King.

Thus to conclude, if upon ordinary occasions, or for Foreign Wars, this Aid have not been Levied, &c. or if any disusage thereof, these are no Arguments in this Case, not the last forty, Nullum tempus occurrit Regi.

Mr. Holborne's first daies Argument, Decemb. 2. 1637. in the Case of Hampden.

May it please your Lordships,

IN obedience to your Lordships Command, I am ready though not as I desire, nor as the Cause deserveth, it being impossible for one in so short a time to be fitted to make a reply to the life of the Cause of an Argument so long learned, and so full of Records, wherein neither labour nor learning was wanting; I may say of him as one said once, Eriam hac defensa fuisset. I shall now rather shew your Lordships what I might do than what I shall for the present, I shall proceed well, hoping the Subject will excuse, and your Lordships greater care supply my defects, which have been without any default.

My Lords, The Case upon the Records stands thus: In May last there issued out of the Exchequer a Writ of Scir. fac. to the Sheriff of Bucks to warn my Client to shew cause why he should not pay 20 s. assessed upon him by the late Sheriff of that County, for the finding of a Ship of War upon the Writ of 4 Aug. 11 Car. sent into that Inland County, and the 20 s. certified into the Chancery to be unpaid and sent over into the Exchequer by Mittimus to be Levied there. Mr. Hampden hath appeared and demanded Oyer of the Writs, 4 Aug. of the Mittimus, &c. and upon the reading of them all hath Demurred in Law generally; and the King's Council joined in Demurrer and I humbly conceive Judgment ought to be given for my Client.

My Lords, I shall proceed to the stating of the Questions, which are three.

The first, which is a chief one, is this, Whether upon the whole Record the Case so appears for the King that 4 Aug. 11 Car. being the day of the date of the Writ, the King could charge the County of Buckingham to find a Ship at their costs and charges

by

Anno 1637. by way of admittance? If he could, yet whether the King can give power to the Sheriff to assess the County, as in this Case, by a further admittance? Admit that the King have power to charge and to assess, whether he can Levy the Money unpaid by this course of Certiorari and Mittimus, as he might do if it were his own proper debt? Of the three Questions, whereof the two last remain untouched, and not Argued by us.

For the first Question, though Argued fully, yet I doubt as yet whether it standeth rightly stated, Not but that I conceive Mr. Solicitor had good colour to state it as he made it, partly by the Record, yet somewhat out of our admittance, yet by admittance only, and so expressed. Again another reason which I conceive, there was a necessity on the King's part, so to make it as the Solicitor stated it, or else to waver the debate.

The first Question is, Whether or no upon the whole Record the Case so appear for the King, that 4 Aug. 11 Car. being the date of the Writ, the King could by his Writ charge the County of Buckingham for finding a Ship of War. This on his Majesties part hath been stated in those words whether the King finding in his Judgment, the safety and preservation of the Kingdom and people necessarily and unavoidably to require this Aid commanded by this Writ, might not command such Aid by Writ for saving and preserving of the Kingdom and people, wherein I confess there is not one word but hath its weight as to this Question thus made. I shall take three Exceptions which are things taken in to be granted, which I shall not argue if I can avoid them.

First, That at least in the King's Judgment, the safety and preservation of the Kingdom was endangered, 4 Aug. that is, that the Kingdom was in danger to be lost.

Secondly, If it be so that the Kingdom was in such danger, and that the danger was so instant and unavoidable, that it necessarily required this Aid by this Writ, that is, it required a present charge of Shipping presently, 4 Aug. 11 Car. to be forthwith commanded, and that the expectation could not expect a Parliamentary consideration and Supply.

These be things wherein we differ. And lastly, For the truth of it the Certificate under the Great Seal, was sufficient in a legal way.

My Lords, To find out whether the Record doth warrant these three things, is of great importance. Firstly, I shall seek for them in the Writ 4 Aug. and next in the Mittimus; there is no colour elsewhere to look for them.

To open the Writs rightly, will clear these differences, as I humbly conceive without any great Argument: And first, the Writ dated 4 Aug. 11 Car. I shall read the words wherein the dangers of the Kingdom are expressed, and then explain what words give that sense that is taken out of them.

Quia datum nobis intelligi quod predones quidam pirata & maris grassatores tam nominis Christiani hostes Mahumetani quam alii congregati, Naves & bona & Mercimonia non solum subditorum nostrorum verum etiam subditorum amicorum nostrorum in Mare quod per gentem Anglicanam ab olim defendi consuevit nefarie diripiunt homines & spoliantes ad libitum suum deportaverunt homines — in eisdem capti & acutissime mancipantes, cumque ipsas conspicimus Navigium Indiarum preparantes ad Mercatores nostros ulterius molestando & ad Regnum gravanda nisi citius remedium apponatur, eorumque contra viriliter obvietur, & consideratis etiam periculis que undique his guerrenis temporibus imminet; Ita quod nobis & subditis nostris defensione quam poterimus accelerare convenit. Nos volentes defensione Regni tuione Maris securitate subditorum, &c. Here are the causes and occasions; all that come after are not material to the stating of the question. My Lords, In the opening of this Writ, it is true there was mention of loss by Merchants of some particular Members of the Kingdom.

And this loss but by predones Pyrate quam Mahumetani & alii, and though alii, yet Pyrats still and no more. Then it saith ipso still those Pyrats daily prepared Ships, but not armed with men, What to do? Molest the Merchants ad gravandum Regnum, as Pyrats still hitherto. I conceive there is not a word of danger from an Enemy but from Pyrats; not a word of danger to the Kingdom, but to Merchants, however all this is quod intelleximus. The Record goes on thus, Consideratis etiam periculis, &c. imminet. This part as I conceive is not so positive, the dangers are but consideratis, nor the danger to the body of the Kingdom. No word of that, or if to the Kingdom, yet nothing whether it be in point of safety, but only in point of molestation, none of all these appears; and besides, the clause is too general, not expressing any particular danger from whom or how. However, be the danger to the one or to the other, be it to the Kingdom, or to the Merchants; be it for trouble or safety, hitherto I may say that there is no mention of any such instant danger as necessarily did require this instant command in the Writ, not so much as in the King's Judgment.

For ought it appears, a Parliament, even in the King's Judgment might have been called, and consideration taken for defence, here be all the premisses upon which the conclusion must arise, and hitherto nothing material to make a danger to the safety of the Kingdom, and so instant that a Supply nunc aut nunquam must come in.

Although the premisses I conceive are only considerable, yet in the conclusion will be but this convenit accelerare, but it is fitting to hasten, but no such necessity, and though it be convenit accelerare pro defensione Regni. If that were material, it cannot be construed but with relation to the premisses whereupon it is built, and whether in fear of trouble or danger or loss, non constat, and though it be cum omni festinatione, yet it is quam poterimus, and that is possimus quod jure poterimus, that is, by all the hast that by Law ye can make, which way that is your Lordships have heard.

Now, My Lords, under favour it appears on the Record, that there was no such instant necessity but that a Parliament might have been time enough; for as it was observed, that between the Test of the Writ and the Rendezvous, there were two hundred and odd daies, where a Parliament requireth but forty daies for meeting, in the remainder of these two hundred daies, the Parliament might have considered of the means of defence, but I leave it to your Lordships to judge, notwithstanding those expences of time cunningly numbered up to your Lordships by the Solicitor. And though it be true that things are oftentimes long in settling and in deliberation; yet nature tells us, that they can be sooner done, if there be a necessity, we know that will force.

I have but opened this Writ, 4 August; I am now come to the Mittimus. The only doubt which I conceive in the Writ of Mittimus is only

Anno
1637. only that where the Case stands but thus in this Writ is recited the tenor of the Writ, Aug. 4. and then the Writ goes on, and saith, Quia Salus Regni, &c. and that is all the clause in the Record that gives colour to the Case so to be made. And to the whole Record we have Demurred. Here it hath been said, that we have confessed all by the Demurrer, and if that hold not, the King, who is the Judge of the danger he hath said, so he hath certified it by the Great Seal, and on these depends the weight of both these Processes.

To this I have many Answers, but I shall select few from many others, on which I shall relie.

My first Answer is this, Here the words are that Salus Regni periclitabatur; these words in show seem to be positive, but in substance but relative, and is rather but a Comment on the Writ or an abstract in point of those dangers mentioned in the Writ, for the clause was brought in on the return of the Writ, and if we have the Writ it self, the Comment thereupon or further explanation thereof is not material.

Second answer, I doubt, I say no more, If the King put particular reasons into the Writ of 4 Augusti, whether the Law (I speak of the legal course) doth permit an after Writ to put in further clauses of the same nature with the former, and to the same end.

If the Case be thus, our Demurrer will be no confession of any such danger.

In the next place admit the words in the Writ had been positive and materially expressed, yet according to our Rules of Law, it cannot make use of that sence they are now applied unto, for at the least the word Salus being only proper to a Physical natural body is applied to a body Politick. It is but a Metaphor which the Law will not indure in Writs, for it would bring in great mischief. In Writs and Pleadings Metaphors are dangerous, we know not how to take Issue upon it, and therefore is not regularly allowed, but I leave it to your Lordships Judgment.

There are no words of the danger of the loss of the Kingdom, that is such instant danger, for apply the words to a natural body as Salus J.S. is in danger, it doth not presently imply, that he is in such instant danger of Death. A Doctor will say that a Patient hath not his health, yet no danger of Death, which is the common speech, the same sence it must have in a Body Politick. If the words were good and did imply a danger, yet not such a danger as shew a danger that may hazard the loss of the Kingdom, for the words are only Salus Regni periclitabatur, and the thing may be now in Action which twenty years hence may lose the Kingdom. A man may say that safety is in danger. At the best the words will not make the Case as it is put.

Mr. Solicitor out of his great care, searching into every hole where he thought we might peep out, doubting our Demurrer would not be a Confession sufficient, he takes in another help, which is this, that if this be so declared by the King's opinion, and under the Great Seal, that this alone had been sufficient, for this there hath been urged the legal weight of the King's affirmation, and of a Certificate under the Great Seal, and both be concluded in this Case.

My Lords, Before I answer to this matter, I profess for my Client and my self, that we make no doubt of the King's word, and believe that there was danger, though not so apparent to us, but only both to allow it as sufficient in a legal proceeding, and that his Majesty, who in his own worth deserves it, by after Princes might turn to disadvantage.

That which we urge is, how far in form of Law this may be allowed; we shall Argue, and that briefly, for the Case needeth not help.

For this point, I take it for clear under your Lordships favour, that in legal proceedings, and regularly his Majesties opinion and Certificate in things of fact, is not binding.

Yea, but they say it is matters of State and Government.

For that, To ask the question, Whether or no raising Forces thus is left to his Majesty, that stands or falls on the main cause.

My Lords, I do agree in divers Cases, the King's affirmative shall be conclusive in matters of Fact, that is, when it is not so triable elsewhere, as in a Writ de Rege in consilio to stay proceedings when the King certifies in matter of Fact, the Writ must be obeyed; but therewithal the matter is triable elsewhere.

But these Cases will not match ours. As for that great Case of 20 E. 1. concerning the Lords Marchers, that the King was Superlativum Recordum, to say no more, it is but an allegation of the King's Council.

My Lords, The reason whereon I shall most relye to avoid the sence of the Writ, Salus Regni, &c. is thus.

That though it do now appear by the Mittimus that 4 Augusti, the Kingdom was in danger of being lost, yet it is not sufficient in Law, nor can our Demurrer hurt us, because it must have so appeared in the Writ 4 Augusti itself, for the Writ and Declaration in Law must ever contain precisely so much of matter as is necessarily true to warrant the demand.

In this to see the mischief, if a danger now declared makes the case, how shall the Subject know by the Writ 4 Augusti, whether to obey or no? The Law binds no man to divine.

And if this subsequent Declaration shall mend the Case, then the Subject shall be a wrong doer ex parte facti, which is against the reason of our Books.

I shall remember the Cases put by Mr. St. John to another purpose.

A Commission sent forth without cause exprest, that Commission is not good, and it is not denied by Mr. Solicitor, that a Cause must be set to make it good in Law.

And if your Lordships be pleased to look on the Precedents, as I know you will, which the King's side shall bring unto you, your Lordships will find the danger turned from the first Writ to the last; nay, in the Writ of this year I am told it is so, out of their opinion fearing the Writ of 4 Augusti was not so good as they would have it. They put it into the Mittimus which they know could not do good, but they did it only to Cavil.

But lastly, Admit that the King had said that the Kingdom was in such instant danger of loss, and that there was an instant necessity of the command this way, and that this could not have expected consideration in Parliament, yet if the contrary appears in the Record, then neither was the Demurrer a Confession, nor the Certificate conclusive.

I could stand on many other things as that the danger should be more particular, for so are all the old Precedents: to say Salus Regni is in danger, is too general. As in a Protection they must alledge in what place the party protected is.

Anno 1637. But it is said, That the Law will not presume any such thing.

The Law doth not presume a will, but the Law looks on things that may be, as well as what will be.

True, the Books say, The King can do no wrong; which proveth it is possible for a Governour in his inclination to incline to wrong, and therefore the Law hath taken a care that he should do none; for he cannot make a disseisin, nor discontinue: There may be an inclination to an entry, but the Law, because he should do no wrong, hath made this Act void; which is not a disability in the King, but a Prerogative to make him come nearer to the Divinity in the Attributes.

I shall offer the Judgment of the several Ages in England, they ever thought it a dangerous thing where they thought any restraint fitting to allow any Exception whatsoever, though there were cause for it, lest the party that was meant to be restrained, should be judged, and then go out when he would.

Thomas a Becket he would not swear to the Laws of King H. 2. unless he might put in this Exception, Salvo honore Dei. The King never meant to violate any of these. But if that had been allowed, the Clergy had been Judges of that, therefore they would not be satisfied; at this day we have an experience of the opinion of Kings themselves in this Case. I shall proceed to the practice of our Kings; in all Acts of Parliament, where they had ever a desire to declare the King limited or restrained. If they did admit of an Exception, they would have it in words so punctual, that they would not admit of any matter of evasion, for fear hereby his proceeding to be at large. In the grand Charter of K. John, when there was a Clause, Nullum Scutagium apponatur, true, there was a reason to except how all (not as E. 1. would have done) saving the Aids due and accustomed, but the pur faire fuz Chevalier; and so was Magna Charta, though not on the Roll; so careful they were to leave no words that give any such light.

I come to the Statutes of 25 E. 1. against Aids, saving the ancient Aids due and accustomed, no doubt but in these words there was no more saved than the Law must allow the King, and the Parliament did so mean; yet when that same Act came out, the Subject was not satisfied, and therefore the Statute de Tallagio was made to take away the Exception in that Act.

Stat. de 28 E. 1. after the confirmation of two Charters, and divers additions, there cometh at last Salvo jure Corone, your Lordships will find in Histories how all this was satisfied. And 29 E. 1. a Parliament held at Lincoln, the King made a confirmation without a Salvo, and yet none will deny the right of the Crown; the Lords did intend to preserve that. Thus your Lordships see the Opinion of the Kingdom from time to time, how careful they ever were in all their Acts, to leave any way, whereby that which they did intend for their good might be avoided: Now whether in this case there might not be an avoidance, I humbly leave it.

But before I go further, it might be demanded, How came in those Savings into those Acts, if the Parliament did not like them, and if they were put in here was a trust?

I shall give a double Answer in the Case: Though a Salvo, yet it will differ from our Case; the King was not Judge there, but your Lordships to be Judges between the King and his People: But in this Case the King is to be Judge of the necessity.

But to give you the true Answer, the exception never came in originally from both Houses, not from the Commons, but from the Lords themselves. Car. 13.

This may seem strange. It was the difference of their time and ours, in making Acts of Parliament, that was not a time of granting all, or denying all, but to answer some, as to some part sometimes more alteration, and sometimes an exception; and this being read, the Act drawn up upon the whole by the Kings Council, and upon the whole course we shall find this mischief was found out 5 H. 4. And from that time all Petitions were wholly granted. So your Lordships see how these Savings came in; not by the Subjects, but by the pennage of the Act by the Kings Council.

Last Example is in late times, in the late Parliament, in the Petition of Right now printed, which was long in debate in Parliament against Loans and Billeting of Souldiers; after the Petition had passed the lower House, that those things were against the Law, there was a Proposition in the upper House concerning the addition of a Clause of Saving.

Upon the Journals it appears, that there were several Conferences between both Houses, where the Reasons are mentioned and do appear.

And on the several Conferences the Commons did not yield, but the Petition passed absolutely; and the reason was, Because to put in that Saving was to undo the Petition.

To conclude this, to shew the experience of such an Exception, sine assensu, what it hath wrought in former times, as that of Normandy, though Forreign, yet to shew what such a thing did work there; It had the same priviledges we claim, and much of their Law came in here. Lewes the 11th taxed them high: They made complaint; he on the complaint, acknowledgeth it, and would tax them no more, but on great occasions, cap. 7.

Having, as I hope, taken off the Bulk of that distinction, I shall further shew how it doth not stand with the practice of our Common Law.

It is a fundamental Rule in our Law, Rather a Mischief then an Inconvenience: For when nothing can be so absolute in Government, but that there may be one case or other, wherein there is no provision made, all the care that men take is to choose the least. Now his Rule is rather a Mischief then an Inconvenience. Now Mischief is that which perhaps may fall out, perhaps never; or if it doth fall out, yet seldom: For if it were a thing that might commonly fall out, it were an Inconvenience. On this fundamental Rule, the Law concerning Lands and Liberties was grounded. True, there might be a Mischief for want of this power in a case extraordinary, but the Mischief perhaps never falleth, or seldom; but to allow the other, would be a Mischief daily.

I desire your Lordships to cast your eye upon a learned Writer Communeus, fo. 107, 131, 180, 181. where in the whole, putting them altogether, speaking of the danger that might come to a State for want of power to raise Supplies for resistance, giveth a commendation to the Government of England. True, he doth not go so far: saith he, It is hard in a Defensive War, that any preparation, which must be great and long about, can be so acted, but that Princes may take a timely notice to call together and advise by Parliament.

Anno. 1637. In the Low Countries, where there are Wars, though they have an Excise for ordinary, yet they do it not for extraordinary without consent in Parliament.

My Lords, I go on; Admit an Enemy ready to Land, no possibility for a Parliament, so how the case will now stand, I shall leave to your consideration, Whether there be an absolute necessity infra & extra to command; and then to shew there is a command, and by what Law: And by that Law that is stronger then the positive Law of the Kingdom, and doth work more in the point of fear. I put this by way of admittance.

In that case there goeth out a Writ, a Mandamus Rogantes; but it is in Articulo necessitatis, & quatenus a mandamus rogantes, not sub pena forisfacturae, of all you can, but for your own salvation, and safety of the Kingdom. These Writs have gone forth in such times when there hath been a near danger, and that hath served the turn: For that instinct of Nature that did make some part of the Kingdom desire Government for protection, the same instinct of Nature doth force to contribute for Defence. Nay, that is a stronger Law then ours; for that Law which ariseth from ones own Breast, as it doth command, so it doth compell. There needs no Law without, when we have a Judge within. Now in necessity there is a Law that doth compel; nay, there is a stronger penalty then our Law can imagine: For our Law can make but a penalty of all that you have; But how? To the King. But when there is a danger from an Enemy, there is not only a danger of losing all that he hath, but losing Lives and Lands, and all into the hand of an Enemy.

Put the case an Enemy were landed, to shew what the powers are by our Law; for in that case, for defence, when there is particular appearance of instant and apparent danger, in that case particular Property will yield much to Necessity. These Cases our Books warrant, as building of Bulwarks on another mans Land, and burning Corn. In 88 there was an actual Danger, and then just to take Corn or Horse, or any thing to raise Supplies. But where do any of our Books say, That upon fear of danger, though in the King's Case, any can without leave make a Bulwark in my Land, I do not read, as your Lordships do observe in this case of apparent danger of the power of the King; observe withal the power of the Subject, and out of what Principle this doth grow, Whether out of a form of Law, or out of necessity? In these cases of instant Danger and actual Invasion, it is not only in the power of a King, but a Subject may do as much in divers cases: For if there be an actual War, the Subject, without any direction may do any Act upon any Land, and invade any Property. It is the Law of necessity that doth it. Nay, in that case the Subject may prejudice the King himself in point of Property. If an Enemy be landed, and a Subject take away the Horses of the King, he may justify it in an Action, as in case of a Castle or City. If they can justify that there was a necessity, they may pull down the Walls, and blow up the City.

In this case there is no manner of Mischief, if Subjects Goods be taken by the King, or any man, and in that instant necessity employed to the Publick use.

Now levis timor will not serve, for then a man cannot enter for fear of force, but such a fear as must arise from an actual and apparent Danger; then there can be no loss to the Subject in that case.

Secondly, on the other side, If Goods taken, what was taken for publick good, was taken by way of Loan, and I shall shew satisfaction made. Car. 13.

Mr. Holborne's second days Argument, Decemb. 4. 1637. in the Case of Hampden.

May it please your Lordships,

TO remember the Question whereupon I left off my Argument the other day, Whether a King of England can charge the Subjects for finding of Ships at their own costs only out of the King's Judgment and instant danger: 1. Whether for defence of Merchants against Pyrates? 2. Or for ordinary defence of the Sea? 3. Or for defence extraordinary against an Enemy, only out of the King's apprehension of an instant danger, which cannot in his Judgment expect a Supply elsewhere?

Not to repeat, yet in a word or two I shall open my proceeding in this Question, and the rather for that I find some misapprehension, as if I had granted more then I meant, which is fit to clear.

The sum of all was but thus; That the King could not charge the Subject in any of these cases. The Reason I used was but shortly thus, That the Subjects of England, having an absolute property in their Goods and Estates, and the policy of the Parliamentary advice, being to prevent charge only, then on no occasion one might erre by weakness, by any evasion, or by will; That therefore a King could not charge in any of these cases without Parliament, for that so he might charge, if he would, as on occasion, so on no occasion. As to 7 l. so to 17 l.

That if this held in ordinary charges, you may not expect extraordinary occasions, though instant in the King's opinion; for so a King intended by his policy to do nothing without Parliamentary assistance he may; if he would so declare to charge at pleasure on ne necessary occasion, or beyond all property.

This distinction I endeavoured to take off, shewing it did destroy the end of the policy.

That there was no necessity of such a distinction here, I shew'd, there was one thing which I forgot, for destroying of the distinction from necessity, and leaving the King Judge of the necessity; that in Judgment so to do, it is all one to leave it to him arbitrarily, if he will, which is that only which was intended to be prevented, if he will. Part of the charge, if not the principal, in the lower House of Parliament against the Divine for his Sermon, I have seen; the charge for holding the King had a power in case of necessity, and leaving the King Judge, and so at liberty and pleasure if he will. This I do but touch here; for I must make use of it in the main, and shall, under favour, make the case somewhat like.

For the other two matters, that when danger is apparent, there was no need of positive Law, I urged it thus, (Not admitting any thing wherein I desire not to be mistaken;) Admit no Writ of positive command, yet the Subject will be then under a stronger Law, which as it doth command, so it doth compell, that is, the Law of Necessity, which is the strongest of all Laws, with which the Judgment carrieth an Execution; and that this Law commandeth under as great a penalty; for though not under pain of forfeiture to the King, which, as to the clause of forfeiture, is but in Terrorum. Yet

Anno 1637. by way of admittance? If he could, yet whether the King can give power to the Sheriff to assesse the County, as in this Case, by a further admittance? Admit that the King have power to charge and to assesse, whether he can Levy the Money unpaid by this course of Certiorari and Mittimus, as he might do if it were his own proper debt? Of the three Questions, whereof the two last remain untouched, and not Argued by us.

For the first Question, though Argued fully, yet I doubt as yet whether it standeth rightly stated. Not but that I conceive Mr. Solicitor had good colour to state it as he made it, partly by the Record, yet somewhat out of our admittance, yet by admittance only, and so expressed. Again another reason which I conceive, there was a necessity on the King's part, so to make it as the Solicitor stated it, or else to waver the debate.

The first Question is, Whether or no upon the whole Record the Case so appear for the King, that 4 Aug. 11 Car. being the date of the Writ, the King could by his Writ charge the County of Buckingham for finding a Ship of War. This on his Majesties part hath been stated in those words whether the King finding in his Judgment, the safety and preservation of the Kingdom and people necessarily and unavoidably to require this Aid commanded by this Writ, might not command such Aid by Writ for saving and preserving of the Kingdom and people, wherein I confess there is not one word but hath its weight as to this Question thus made. I shall take three Exceptions which are things taken in to be granted, which I shall not argue if I can avoid them.

First, That at least in the King's Judgment, the safety and preservation of the Kingdom was endangered, 4 Aug. that is, that the Kingdom was in danger to be lost.

Secondly, If it be so that the Kingdom was in such danger, and that the danger was so instant and unavoidable, that it necessarily required this Aid by this Writ, that is, it required a present charge of Shipping presently, 4 Aug. 11 Car. to be forthwith commanded, and that the expectation could not expect a Parliamentary consideration and Supply.

These be things wherein we differ. And lastly, For the truth of it the Certificate under the Great Seal, was sufficient in a legal way.

My Lords, To find out whether the Record doth warrant these three things, is of great importance. First, I shall seek for them in the Writ 4 Aug. and next in the Mittimus; there is no colour elsewhere to look for them.

To open the Writs rightly, will clear these differences, as I humbly conceive without any great Argument: And first, the Writ dated 4 Aug. 11 Car. I shall read the words wherein the dangers of the Kingdom are expressed, and then explain what words give that sense that is taken out of them.

To this I have many Answers, but I shall select few from many others, on which I shall relie.

My first Answer is this, Here the words are that Salus Regni periclitabatur; these words in show seem to be positive, but in substance but relative, and is rather but a Comment on the Writ or an abstract in point of those dangers mentioned in the Writ, for the clause was brought in on the return of the Writ, and if we have the Writ itself, the Comment thereupon or further explanation thereof is not material.

Second answer, I doubt, I say no more, If the King put particular reasons into the Writ of 4 Augusti, whether the Law (I speak of the legal course) doth permit an after Writ to put in further clauses of the same nature with the former, and to the same end.

If the Case be thus, our Demurrer will be no confession of any such danger.

In the next place admit the words in the Writ had been positive and materially expressed, yet according to our Rules of Law, it cannot make use of that sence they are now applied unto, for at the least the word Salus being only proper to a Physical natural body is applied to a body Politick. It is but a Metaphor which the Law will not indure in Writs, for it would bring in great mischief. In Writs and Pleadings Metaphors are dangerous, we know not how to take Issue upon it, and therefore is not regularly allowed, but I leave it to your Lordships Judgment.

There are no words of the danger of the loss of the Kingdom, that is such instant danger, for apply the words to a natural body as Salus J.S. is in danger, it doth not presently imply, that he is in such instant danger of Death. A Doctor will say that a Patient hath not his health, yet no danger of Death, which is the common speech, the same sence it must have in a Body Politick. If the words were good and did imply a danger, yet not such a danger as shew a danger that may hazard the loss of the Kingdom, for the words are only Salus Regni periclitabatur, and the thing may be now in Action which twenty years hence may lose the Kingdom. A man may say that safety is in danger. At the best the words will not make the Case as it is put.

Mr. Solicitor out of his great care, searching into every hole where he thought we might peep out, doubting our Demurrer would not be a Confession sufficient, he takes in another help, which is this, that if this be so declared by the King's opinion, and under the Great Seal, that this alone had been sufficient, for this there hath been urged the legal weight of the King's affirmation, and of a Certificate under the Great Seal, and both be concluded in this Case.

My Lords, Before I answer to this matter, I profess for my Client and my self, that we make no doubt of the King's word, and believe that there was danger, though not so apparent to us, but only both to allow it as sufficient in a legal proceeding, and that his Majesty, who in his own worth deserves it, by after Princes might turn to disadvantage.

That which we urge is, how far in form of Law this may be allowed; we shall Argue, and that briefly, for the Case needeth not help.

For this point, I take it for clear under your Lordships favour, that in legal proceedings, and regularly his Majesties opinion and Certificate in things of fact, is not binding.

Yea, but they say it is matters of State and Government.

For that, To ask the question, Whether or no raising Forces thus is left to his Majesty, that stands or falls on the main cause.

My Lords, I do agree in divers Cases, the King's affirmative shall be conclusive in matters of Fact, that is, when it is not so triable elsewhere, as in a Writ de Rege in consilio to stay proceedings when the King certifies in matter of Fact, the Writ must be obeyed; but therewithal the matter is triable elsewhere.

But these Cases will not match ours. As for that great Case of 20 E. 1. concerning the Lords Marchers, that the King was Superlativum Recordum, to say no more, it is but an allegation of the King's Council.

My Lords, The reason whereon I shall most relye to avoid the sence of the Writ, Salus Regni, &c. is thus.

That though it do now appear by the Mittimus that 4 Augusti, the Kingdom was in danger of being lost, yet it is not sufficient in Law, nor can our Demurrer hurt us, because it must have so appeared in the Writ 4 Augusti itself, for the Writ and Declaration in Law must ever contain precisely so much of matter as is necessarily true to warrant the demand.

In this to see the mischief, if a danger now declared makes the case, how shall the Subject know by the Writ 4 Augusti, whether to obey or no? The Law binds no man to divine.

And if this subsequent Declaration shall mend the Case, then the Subject shall be a wrong doer ex parte facti, which is against the reason of our Books.

I shall remember the Cases put by Mr. St. John to another purpose.

A Commission sent forth without cause exprest, that Commission is not good, and it is not denied by Mr. Solicitor, that a Cause must be set to make it good in Law.

And if your Lordships be pleased to look on the Precedents, as I know you will, which the King's side shall bring unto you, your Lordships will find the danger turned from the first Writ to the last; nay, in the Writ of this year I am told it is so, out of their opinion fearing the Writ of 4 Augusti was not so good as they would have it. They put it into the Mittimus which they know could not do good, but they did it only to Cavil.

But lastly, Admit that the King had said that the Kingdom was in such instant danger of loss, and that there was an instant necessity of the command this way, and that this could not have expected consideration in Parliament, yet if the contrary appears in the Record, then neither was the Demurrer a Confession, nor the Certificate conclusive.

I could stand on many other things as that the danger should be more particular, for so are all the old Precedents: to say Salus Regni is in danger, is too general. As in a Protection they must alledge in what place the party protected is.

Anno

Secondly, In the Mittimus it should not be that Salus Regni, &c. but it should have been how Salus Regni periclitabatur, I believe it is meant so. But we must now look to Rules of Law; true, it might have been in danger before, but not tunc, as in the Case of Indictment upon the Statute of 8 H. 6. for an entry upon White-acre existens Tenementum, &c. The Law will not take notice of the time without saying tunc existens, at the time of the entry.

My Lords, In the conclusion upon all this discourse, it appears I have so pared the Case, that in the Writ dated August 4. there appears no danger to the Kingdom being then lost, and that in the Mittimus there is no home express words of danger to the Kingdom instant or unavoidable. If it were so, it cometh not time enough, for it should have been in the Writ dated August 4.

And if there had been such expressing of such instant danger in the Writ, Aug. 4. and Mittimus, yet not material if otherwise on Record.

And lastly, This Certificate doth not conclude us. Thus then to shew what the Case is, and what it is not, I have put out of the consideration of the Case, all consideration of such danger to the safety of the Kingdom as are unavoidable.

I have left nothing in the Case but consideration of protecting Merchants against Pyrats: But for ordinary defence of the Sea. If the Case do fall thus, I humbly conceive that in this place without further Argument, I might with some confidence venture my Client upon your Lordships Judgment, notwithstanding any thing offered on the King's part.

Then by your Lordships command, I shall proceed, having laid aside the Mittimus, and Salus Regni, and taking the Case only on the Writ, Aug. 4. which, as I take it, is nothing of danger to the Kingdom, but against Merchants, and but of common defence. The Case stands thus,

That though there be no actual Invasion, no known or declared Enemy, yet the King out of his Judgment, Aug. 4. 11 Car. apprehendeth and foreseeeth danger to the Kingdom in point to be lost, and that the danger is so instant and unavoidable, that it requireth this Aid, whether the King, out of Parliament, by his Regal power can command this Supply.

I have endeavoured not to mistake Mr. Solicitor; it were an injury to requite him so ill. In my Arguments I shall desire leave to hold his course, because the two main Questions are both of one nature though different in degrees.

Our question is in case of common good against Pyrats.

Upon the whole, My end is to shew that by the fundamental policy of England, the King cannot out of Parliament charge the Subject neither for common good, unless in special Cases, and of a different nature, or upon different reason, nor for a necessary defence, though in the King's Judgment instant and unavoidable.

My Lords, In the Debate of these two Questions, I have learned of Mr. Solicitor, not to say all that I could, but so much as is necessary, and as he hath chalked out the way, I shall enquire of this power by Arguments upon practice constant and allowed in time of good Government, when the Liberty of the Subject was not trampled upon, and shew it by Acts of Parliament, reason and Authority on both.

My Lords, I am now come close to the Arguments on the main. Before I begin, give me leave to profess that I am in a Dilemma. The Question on will be, What the King can do in these Cases by his Regal Power? It much concerns him, and I have learned out of a Speech of his late Majesties what it is to debate such questions. Not to Argue it, were to disobey the Assignment of the Court, and to desert my Client and the Cause.

For my part, As your Lordships see I have laboured to decline the main Question, I should be glad it might so sleep.

I shall offer it if happily the Case fall off in the penning of the Writ, and not of the King's Power, I doubt whether the way of Argument shall do the Crown a disservice.

Out of my duty to his Majesty and Service to your Lordships, I humbly offer whether your Lordships, may not think it fitting to determine the Question upon the framing of the Case before it be further Argued. And here I shall rest, or upon your Command, am ready to go on.

Lord Finch.

We do not use to Judge Cases by Fractions.

My Lords, Since it is your command, I shall obey, and go on notwithstanding the Bicornium Argumentum which on each side threatneth.

I hope his Majesty will excuse us for Arguing of that which cannot else be determined; and as he hath given way to an Argument, I hope his goodness will excuse us while we do our duty for our Client; and if I err in my materials, or in the way of my Arguing, it is from the defect of my wisdom, I cannot be wiser than God hath made me, and not out of my disaffection to the service.

My Lords, I hope neither his Majesty, nor your Lordships will think it a presumption if I make strict enquiry into a point of a higher nature; yet thus far I assure your Lordships, that if any matter or consideration of State come in my way, I shall tread as lightly as I can; yet I must crave liberty to pick out some to refer to your Lordships consideration, and forbear these things which are unfit.

Lord Finch.

Keep you within the bounds of duty as befits one of your profession at the Bar at Westminster, and you shall have no interruption.

My Lords, I shall be very wary and tender, I shall now open the division and parts of my Argument.

My Negative part is this, That the King cannot out of Parliament charge the Subject, not only for guard of the Sea against Pyrats, but also not for the ordinary defence of the Kingdom, though the King Judge the Kingdom unavoidably endangered to be lost. And in this I must take in the defence; as well the defence at Land as Sea.

My positive part regularly is, The King is to be at the charge for guarding the Sea against Pyrats, and for defence of Land and Sea against Enemies so far as he is able, and further, if he were more able; and the King hath provision and consideration for both, and especially for Sea Service.

In the prosecution of these two general parts, I shall not only propose my own consideration, but join them with Mr. Sr. John's, as I can further enforce them or justify them against the Solicitor's denial or evasion.

And the course will necessarily bring in many of his Arguments, which I could be glad to spare if the Cause would bear it, because your Lordships should not think that I do nothing but repeat; in this way, I shall humbly endeavour to clear each part part, by giving a Reply before I descend to other Particulars; and where I conceive a new Objection, which will not fall within any former Answers, I will raise it, and endeavour to lay it: Into these General Questions will fall many others of great consequence.

For such as not being the main, I will not draw upon particular Debate: Where there is any thing concerning State or Revenue, I hope to admit such, and save my Clients Cause.

Having thus unfolded my form of Argument, I descend to my Negative, That the King in none of these cases, without Parliament, can charge the Subject.

First, I'll prove it from Reason, which is the Master of all Authority, as said Mr. Solicitor; and from Reason drawn from the fundamental Policy of the frame of this English Government, in the necessary attendance of the publick advice in Parliament upon the Royal Power.

And secondly, from the absolute property the Subject hath in his Lands and Goods. From these two things I shall draw my Reasons.

For the Political advice in Parliament, I shall hereby decline all School Disputes. The Spider may make Poison out of which the Bee sucks Honey: I shall omit the consideration of some points; I shall make my rise from the Judgment of King James, 1619. in his Speech in Parliament; wherein his Majesty agrees, That the King in Concreto can do no more then the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom alloweth; for more I assure my self his Majesty desireth not.

Before I enter into the Argument further, Whether the Law hath intrusted the King out of Parliament in either of the Cases put, I here profess for my Client and my self, that while we speak of Political advice, and how far a Governour subject to error and will, may use a Regal Power; we do always, with thankfulness to him, acknowledge our present happiness, to be blest with so just a Prince, and we fetch it from our hearts. And were his Majesty so immortal as he deserves, and that his Successors may be Heirs to his Vertues, as well as his Crown, we should wish that the Regal Power might be free from Political advice, and unlimited.

L. Finch.

This belongs not to the Barr to talk of future Government: It is not agreeable to Duty to have you bandy what is the hopes of succeeding Princes, when the King hath Children of his own, who are like to succeed him in his Crown and Vertues.

My Lords, For that whereof I speak, I speak as looking farr off many Ages, five hundred years hence.

My Lords, Because I might run on to further error, if I should not take your advice, I shall slip over much, and the sum of all is:

1. An Argument from the Policy of England in the necessary attendance in the particular advice in Parliament.

2. It will be from the absolute property that the Subject hath in his Goods, taking that for granted against the Book of Cowell, the Proclamation against it in the Year of King James, that Cowell hath written under the word Parliament, of the Kings Power out of Parliament, saith, That the power in Parliament is but a pious Policy. But this was complained of in Parliament, and by Proclamation the Book was denied. Your Lordships know another Book that was sentenced upon the same occasion.

The use that I make of it is, If the form of English Government stand in the Regal Power, and the Subject hath property in his Goods, then the adequate reason from both these, That therefore the King cannot without Parliament charge the Subject in his Estate, though in pretence of Common good; Then a Prince 500 years hence, if subject to error or will, may, if he will, upon any occasion, or no occasion, at what rate he will, charge the Subject to the height.

As to the advice Political, If the King can do this alone, what is become of the policy for which the Political advice was made attendant to the Regal Power; Ne Respublica, &c. Secondly, If the Subject hath a property in his Goods, how is it in the power of any one alone to charge that with any Impositions? This Reason I must not leave; for on this the Case stands or falls. Though there be many Books and Cases, yet all are from Reason, but especially when these stand together.

The Reason seems so strange, that it ever holds in ordinary power: It held pro bono publico & pro defensione, he cannot make a charge in ordinary things, and the Solicitor did not deny it. The force of this Objection Mr. Solicitor did foresee. His answer stands thus:

Admit it be agreed, That by the policy of the Kingdom the King cannot charge the Subject; yet the King may without advice in Parliament in cases extraordinary, when in his Judgment the safety of the Kingdom is in instant danger, and that the business will not admit the calling of a Parliament.

He fortified this part of his distinction with strong reason; for in such cases a property must yield: For Salus populi est suprema Lex, & necessitas est lex temporis, & quod cogit defendit, all are true: And to this some home Cases were put; as for building of Bulwarks on my Land, and burning of Corn in 88. And then foreseeing the encounter of a Reply, he saith, The Subject must not say (that although the power be in the King) he will enlarge his power; For the King can do no wrong.

This prima facie hath a fair show, and may go far; yet I hope to give it a full Reply. By this distinction the whole frame of Political advice is, under favour, destroyed, I shall shew the contrary by reason and experience.

For the distinction between danger ordinary and extraordinary, when the King doth think a danger, and a Parliament cannot be called, that distinction, I say, must destroy the policy in the whole: For, as I conceive, the end of that policy was but this; for else what could it be? As it will ever be in the will and desire of a good and wise Prince to do all good to the Subject, to whom this advice by Parliament can do no hurt; so in what Case soever should happen many Ages after, for that Posterity will look upon it: It should never be in the power of any Governour to become subject to will and error (if he would so do) to hurt the Kingdom.

That policy was not so much made for a good King, but looking many Ages after.

If you allow such a Prince power in extraordinary Case, and make him a Judge of the occasion, then in substance though provision be made, yet after his Declaration we must make further provision.

Yet may some say, Here is a posse and esse, because he may, so he will. True, it is unmannerly to say so of any ordinary man; but, under favour, it is allowable to say, He may if he will. Then if we leave him that liberty in such Cases, he hath no restraint but his will.

But

But it is said, That the Law will not presume any such thing.

Anno 1637. The Law doth not presume a will, but the Law looks on things that may be, as well as what will be.

True, the Books say, The King can do no wrong; which proveth it is possible for a Governour in his inclination to incline to wrong, and therefore the Law hath taken a care that he should do none; for he cannot make a disseisin, nor discontinue: There may be an inclination to an entry, but the Law, because he should do no wrong, hath made this Act void; which is not a disability in the King, but a Prerogative to make him come nearer to the Divinity in the Attributes.

I shall offer the Judgment of the several Ages in England, they ever thought it a dangerous thing where they thought any restraint fitting to allow any Exception whatsoever, though there were cause for it, lest the party that was meant to be restrained, should be judged, and then go out when he would.

Thomas a Becket he would not swear to the Laws of King H. 2. unless he might put in this Exception, Salvo honore Dei. The King never meant to violate any of these. But if that had been allowed, the Clergy had been Judges of that, therefore they would not be satisfied; at this day we have an experience of the opinion of Kings themselves in this Case. I shall proceed to the practice of our Kings; in all Acts of Parliament, where they had ever a desire to declare the King limited or restrained. If they did admit of an Exception, they would have it in words so punctual, that they would not admit of any matter of evasion, for fear hereby his proceeding to be at large. In the grand Charter of K. John, when there was a Clause, Nullum Scutagium apponatur, true, there was a reason to except how all (not as E. 1. would have done) saving the Aids due and accustomed, but the pur faire fuz Chevalier; and so was Magna Charta, though not on the Roll; so careful they were to leave no words that give any such light.

I come to the Statutes of 25 E. 1. against Aids, saving the ancient Aids due and accustomed, no doubt but in these words there was no more saved than the Law must allow the King, and the Parliament did so mean; yet when that same Act came out, the Subject was not satisfied, and therefore the Statute de Tallagio was made to take away the Exception in that Act.

Stat. de 28 E. 1. after the confirmation of two Charters, and divers additions, there cometh at last Salvo jure Corone, your Lordships will find in Histories how all this was satisfied. And 29 E. 1. a Parliament held at Lincoln, the King made a confirmation without a Salvo, and yet none will deny the right of the Crown; the Lords did intend to preserve that. Thus your Lordships see the Opinion of the Kingdom from time to time, how careful they ever were in all their Acts, to leave any way, whereby that which they did intend for their good might be avoided: Now whether in this case there might not be an avoidance, I humbly leave it.

But before I go further, it might be demanded, How came in those Savings into those Acts, if the Parliament did not like them, and if they were put in here was a trust?

I shall give a double Answer in the Case: Though a Salvo, yet it will differ from our Case; the King was not Judge there, but your Lordships to be Judges between the King and his People: But in this Case the King is to be Judge of the necessity.

But to give you the true Answer, the exception never came in originally from both Houses, not from the Commons, but from the Lords themselves. Car. 17.

This may seem strange. It was the difference of their time and ours, in making Acts of Parliament, that was not a time of granting all, or denying all, but to answer some, as to some part sometimes more alteration, and sometimes an exception; and this being read, the Act drawn up upon the whole by the Kings Council, and upon the whole course we shall find this mischief was found out 5 H. 4. And from that time all Petitions were wholly granted. So your Lordships see how these Savings came in; not by the Subjects, but by the pennage of the Act by the Kings Council.

Last Example is in late times, in the late Parliament, in the Petition of Right now printed, which was long in debate in Parliament against Loans and Billeting of Souldiers; after the Petition had passed the lower House, that those things were against the Law, there was a Proposition in the upper House concerning the addition of a Clause of Saving.

Upon the Journals it appears, that there were several Conferences between both Houses, where the Reasons are mentioned and do appear.

And on the several Conferences the Commons did not yield, but the Petition passed absolutely; and the reason was, Because to put in that Saving was to undo the Petition.

To conclude this, to shew the experience of such an Exception, sine assensu, what it hath wrought in former times, as that of Normandy, though Forreign, yet to shew what such a thing did work there; It had the same priviledges we claim, and much of their Law came in here. Lewes the 11th taxed them high: They made complaint; he on the complaint, acknowledgeth it, and would tax them no more, but on great occasions, cap. 7.

Having, as I hope, taken off the Bulk of that distinction, I shall further shew how it doth not stand with the practice of our Common Law.

It is a fundamental Rule in our Law, Rather a Mischief then an Inconvenience: For when nothing can be so absolute in Government, but that there may be one case or other, wherein there is no provision made, all the care that men take is to choose the least. Now his Rule is rather a Mischief then an Inconvenience. Now Mischief is that which perhaps may fall out, perhaps never; or if it doth fall out, yet seldom: For if it were a thing that might commonly fall out, it were an Inconvenience. On this fundamental Rule, the Law concerning Lands and Liberties was grounded. True, there might be a Mischief for want of this power in a case extraordinary, but the Mischief perhaps never falleth, or seldom; but to allow the other, would be a Mischief daily.

I desire your Lordships to cast your eye upon a learned Writer Commeneus, fo. 107, 131, 180, 181. where in the whole, putting them altogether, speaking of the danger that might come to a State for want of power to raise Supplies for resistance, giveth a commendation to the Government of England. True, he doth not go so far: saith he, It is hard in a Defensive War, that any preparation, which must be great and long about, can be so acted, but that Princes may take a timely notice to call together and advise by Parliament.

Anno.
1637. In the Low Countries, where there are Wars, though they have an Excise for ordinary, yet they do it not for extraordinary without consent in Parliament.

My Lords, I go on; Admit an Enemy ready to Land, no possibility for a Parliament, so how the case will now stand, I shall leave to your consideration, Whether there be an absolute necessity infra & extra to command; and then to shew there is a command, and by what Law: And by that Law that is stronger then the positive Law of the Kingdom, and doth work more in the point of fear. I put this by way of admittance.

In that case there goeth out a Writ, a Mandamus Rogantes; but it is in Articulo necessitatis, & quatenus a mandamus rogantes, not sub pena forisfactura, of all you can, but for your own salvation, and safety of the Kingdom. These Writs have gone forth in such times when there hath been a near danger, and that hath served the turn: For that instinct of Nature that did make some part of the Kingdom desire Government for protection, the same instinct of Nature doth force to contribute for Defence. Nay, that is a stronger Law then ours; for that Law which ariseth from ones own Breast, as it doth command, so it doth compell. There needs no Law without, when we have a Judge within. Now in necessity there is a Law that doth compel; nay, there is a stronger penalty then our Law can imagine: For our Law can make but a penalty of all that you have; But how? To the King. But when there is a danger from an Enemy, there is not only a danger of losing all that he hath, but losing Lives and Lands, and all into the hand of an Enemy.

Put the case an Enemy were landed, to shew what the powers are by our Law; for in that case, for defence, when there is particular appearance of instant and apparent danger, in that case particular Property will yield much to Necessity. These Cases our Books warrant, as building of Bulwarks on another mans Land, and burning Corn. In 88 there was an actual Danger, and then just to take Corn or Horse, or any thing to raise Supplies. But where do any of our Books say, That upon fear of danger, though in the King's Case, any can without leave make a Bulwark in my Land, I do not read, as your Lordships do observe in this case of apparent danger of the power of the King; observe withal the power of the Subject, and out of what Principle this doth grow, Whether out of a form of Law, or out of necessity? In these cases of instant Danger and actual Invasion, it is not only in the power of a King, but a Subject may do as much in divers cases: For if there be an actual War, the Subject, without any direction may do any Act upon any Land, and invade any Property. It is the Law of necessity that doth it. Nay, in that case the Subject may prejudice the King himself in point of Property. If an Enemy be landed, and a Subject take away the Horses of the King, he may justify it in an Action, as in case of a Castle or City. If they can justify that there was a necessity, they may pull down the Walls, and blow up the City.

In this case there is no manner of Mischief, If Subjects Goods be taken by the King, or any man, and in that instant necessity employed to the Publick use.

Now levis timor will not serve; for then a man cannot enter for fear of force, but such a fear as must arise from an actual and apparent Danger; then there can be no loss to the Subject in that case.

Secondly, on the other side, If Goods taken, what was taken for publick good, was taken by way of Loan, and I shall shew satisfaction made. Car. 13.

Mr. Holborne's second days Argument, Decemb. 4. 1637. in the Case of Hampden.

May it please your Lordships;

To remember the Question whereupon I left off my Argument the other day, Whether a King of England can charge the Subjects for finding of Ships at their own costs only out of the King's Judgment and instant danger: 1. Whether for defence of Merchants against Pyrates? 2. Or for ordinary defence of the Sea? 3. Or for defence extraordinary against an Enemy, only out of the King's apprehension of an instant danger, which cannot in his Judgment expect a Supply elsewhere?

Not to repeat, yet in a word or two I shall open my proceeding in this Question, and the rather for that I find some misapprehension, as if I had granted more then I meant, which is fit to clear.

The sum of all was but thus; That the King could not charge the Subject in any of these cases. The Reason I used was but shortly thus, That the Subjects of England, having an absolute property in their Goods and Estates, and the policy of the Parliamentary advice, being to prevent charge only, then on no occasion one might erre by weakness, by any evasion, or by will; That therefore a King could not charge in any of these cases without Parliament, for that so he might charge, if he would, as on occasion, so on no occasion. As to 7^l. so to 17^l.

That if this held in ordinary charges, you may not expect extraordinary occasions, though instant in the King's opinion; for so a King intended by his policy to do nothing without Parliamentary assistance he may; if he would so declare to charge at pleasure on no necessary occasion, or beyond all property.

This distinction I endeavoured to take off, shewing it did destroy the end of the policy.

That there was no necessity of such a distinction here, I shew'd, there was one thing which I forgot, for destroying of the distinction from necessity, and leaving the King Judge of the necessity; that in Judgment so to do, it is all one to leave it to him arbitrarily, if he will, which is that only which was intended to be prevented, if he will. Part of the charge, if not the principal, in the lower House of Parliament against the Divine for his Sermon, I have seen; the charge for holding the King had a power in case of necessity, and leaving the King Judge, and so at liberty and pleasure if he will. This I do but touch here; for I must make use of it in the main, and shall, under favour, make the case somewhat like.

For the other two matters, that when danger is apparent, there was no need of positive Law, I urged it thus, (Not admitting any thing wherein I desire not to be mistaken;) Admit no Writ of positive command, yet the Subject will be then under a stronger Law, which as it doth command, so it doth compell, that is, the Law of Necessity, which is the strongest of all Laws, with which the Judgment carrieth an Execution; and that this Law commandeth under as great a penalty; for though not under pain of forfeiture to the King, which, as to the clause of forfeiture, is but in Terrorum. Yet

1637.

Yet under the true pain of forfeiture of all to the Enemy, from whom we may expect no mercy, Lastly, that of an actual Invasion and Necessity withal, that not by any positive Law of the Kingdom, but of the general Law of Necessity, which is above all Laws, for the publick good, private property doth yield on all parts.

Of these two last I have but touched here, to shew what I mean, I shall speak further on them both towards my Conclusion, in my Answers to Mr. Solicitors Objections.

I shall now proceed to make good out of the Books of Law, that our Law doth not leave it in the power of the Prince (in respect of such a Prince as possibly may be) to lay any charge upon the Subject, but only in such cases where the Law hath made such provision, that if he would, he cannot mischarge.

In this place, because it is taken for a Maxim, That the King can do no wrong; and therefore the Law doth repose this trust of charging in him, without any danger at all; I shall shew that the Law doth take notice how, and in what case the King can, as much as in him lieth, do amiss? And where the Law is sparing to leave the King any power to lay a charge on the Subject, even in small things, when the quantum rests in his Judgment. It is true, the Law doth allow the King to command payment of Moneys in some cases; yet where the quantum or occasion are subject to a trial, the ground of all this is, That the Law sees that the King may incline to mistake, though as a King, he can do no wrong.

This may seem a Nicety, yet, under favour, is clear.

This resteth in the distinction of a double capacity of a King. As a natural man; and in this respect, to say he cannot erre, is strange. Human Nature is not capable of that prerogative at best, and they are subject to natural infirmities of the Body, and can dye; even so of the Understanding and Will.

So you see the Law must take notice of possible mistakes in Government, and this possibility in another is no injury to a good Prince, but sets off his Merits: And this is not only true for smaller things, but even in the greatest. How many Acts of Parliament have we in print (of which your Lordships are Judges) declaring the Kings mistakes in the Acts themselves, by way of complaint, and providing remedy for the future, yea, in their own times.

To instance in one long since, cast your eye upon the beginning of the Acts of Parliament of E. 3. time, where we find a Statute for the Government of the Realm.

Distin^t. 2. As the Law saith, He may incline to mistake in the natural, so it hath taken care that in his politick capacity he shall not. And therefore lest the possible Errors of the natural Body should reflect on the Body politick, the Law hath provided ancient means to prevent it, which was a Writ of ad quod dampnum N. Br. in the Writ. That if any damage to the King's Subjects, the Parent is in Law naught.

As if the King grant a Fair, and an ad quod dampnum is brought to enquire what Fairs were kept by it, the Books are full. It is true, that in some cases the Books do allow the King to lay a charge upon the Subject, yet not in every case for publick good, but only in some few, which indeed have been ancient, and indeed of the very essence of necessary traffick and intercourse between one part and another of the Kingdom; as murage to keep the Commodities sold the safer; Toll for a Fair or Market towards the maintaining of it; Pontage and pavage for the bettering of passages. And in all these cases the King may grant a sum of Money to be paid; yet as it is in this common good, some body must have the power to grant, and that same can be none but the King. So if the King should grant on no occasion, or howsoever (which is enough to me) a sum too great, greater then the benefit the Subject shall receive, it is void in Law.

If the Subject have not a quid pro quo, then no charge Rep. 5. and in this case there is a Judge of the justness of the proportion besides the King, and that is when a Patent cometh to be questioned, if a Toll be laid too high, then the same Patent is naught. Thus then you see how far it is that the Law doth agree that the King shall lay charges upon the Subject, only out of common and ordinary necessity, there must be some body to have power. But then there is a further remedy of a mistake?

Here, before I leave this, I make a double use therof: First, to shew that if the Law do not permit the King any absolute power in this trifle, shall the King do it in so great a matter, where you shall have no Judge but himself of the occasion and proportion.

I next observe where the Law permits the King to charge in any case arbitrarily; it is but where this power doth arise by original contract and precedent consideration and agreement for Land. And then not quatenus as a Subject, but quatenus as a Tenant only, as ratione tenura in respect of the particular Seigniorie and dependance, not in respect of the general Seigniorie of the Kingdom.

My Lords, it is true, at the Common Law, the King had a power of liberty, till he was restrained by Statute; which was as aids pur faire fix. Chevalier pur file marrier pur ransome, and taxing of ancient Burrows; and these Aids were in respect of the particular Seigniorie quatenus Tenants. Next thing that I observe, that the policy of the Kingdom so little delighteth in these uncertainties, though it ariseth out of contract and consideration, as in case of these Aids, The Law would not allow that inconvenience of leaving them to an arbitrary charge, but in some case settled a proportion.

It is true in case of Ransome, because no man can tell the certainty of that which is left at large.

This I further observe by the Common Law, where the charge is in respect of the tenancy, yet if the charge come often, as the King please, there the Law did not leave it to the King's Judgment. As in Escuage, which is a profit arising to the King in respect of the Seigniorie. Though the Law allowed the said Aids pur faire fix. Chevalier pur file marrier, &c. because they could hapen but once; but Escuage, that might happen often, the Law would not allow that to be uncertain: It must be assessed in Parliament, as in the Charter of K. John, which was always held no more then Common Law.

My Lords, upon the whole, I desire to consider how unwilling the Law is to leave the King a liberty to charge even in the Kings case at the Common Law, and how restrained by Act of Parliament; where the Common Law before did give liberty.

Next, I observe that the Law in none of the said cases, nor I believe in any other, doth admit a power to lay an immediate charge on the Subject, but only in laying a charge to be paid in respect of the benefit which he that receiveth it is fit to pay, but none compelled otherwise to receive it or pay it; for for if he will not have the benefit, he may refuse to pay it even in Cases between King and Subject.

In the Case of Toll, Pontage and Paviage, it is not laid so on the Subject, that he shall pay it whether he will or no, but as there is a benefit by Pontage, &c. which cannot be maintained without charge, and therefore just that they that have the benefit should bear it.

Lastly, I shall offer that even in these Cases, where the King doth lay a charge quatenus Rex. It is not so left unto him either for the occasion or proportion, as that if he will lay never so much he may; if it be unreasonable the Law doth make it void; as in Case of Toll, if unreasonable.

My Inference is this, If the Law be thus careful in such small things as penny matters, whether or no the Law will make no provision in the main, but leave the Subject unto the absolute liberty of the King to charge, when he will say it is in danger, and where there is no Judge at all?

I will conclude with Book Cases in point, that the Law doth not leave a power in the King to charge, though it be in the King's Judgment pro bono publico, as in Case of granting an Office. The King cannot regularly, at this day, create an Office with a Fee, but in Law it is void, though the Office had in it self a show; nay, it may be pro bono publico.

P. II H. 4. 15, 16. and in 14 a Grant of an Office of Measurage with a Fee void. And that very thing 13 H. 4. was complained of in the Parliament, that it was against the Law, because in charge of the people to which the King answers, Let the Laws and Statutes be observed. In the Roll amongst the Adjudicata the reason is expressed, Quia Sonat in prejudicium populi.

16 R. 2. The King grants to one a rate upon every Barge that passed the Bridge, in consideration that the Patentee had taken upon him the Scouring of the River; in that Case the Patent was repealed.

So in case of Lights to be kept for the benefit of Seafaring men: this was in charge of the people. This Pat was complained of, and your Lordships know the order upon it. I omit many Cases, and conclude with that of Fortescue, De Regibus Anglia, cap. 25. speaking and commending the policy of the Government of England, prefers it before that of France, and shews the good fruit and effect of it, and laies down this for one, That the King cannot charge without consent in Parliament, and he was a man allowed for extraordinary Judgment who sheweth instructions for a Prince for future Government, being trusted more with the Government of him than any other. I conclude these Cases with this Observation.

This denying of Power of laying charges on the Subject is not only in the Case where the King would raise a benefit to himself, which a man may call Tallagia vel auxilia, but in Cases of charges which lie on the Subject, though not for the King's own benefit, though also it be pro bono publico, as in the Cases put before.

I shall now come from the Books by which I shewed what is the Common-Law, that by these grounds the King cannot charge the Subject, I shall now offer the consideration of some things which are Acts of Parliament, or have the force of Acts of Parliament.

I shall begin with that of Will. 1. for a Conqueror I shall not call him; for that name came in about E. 1. his time, for there being an Edward, because they could not tell how to give him a distinction from the Confessor they called him E. 1.

after the Conquest by the direction of Sir Roger Owen the great Antiquary. That which I shall urge, is that which he granted A. 4. That all Free-men should hold their Lands Sine omni injusta exacc'one seu Tall' nothing to be demanded but that which was by Tenures, as in Eadmerus by Selden.

Now whether or no this be an Act of Parliament, I shall not dispute, yet in those times where a thing was granted between the King and the Subject, though it had not all the Formalities that now it hath, yet it was binding: however this is called the Conquerors Law, and I take it for a Law.

Then it resteth to examine the words, whether the words will serve our purpose to clear the Subject in point of a Sefs. It is said that they should be free ab omni injusta exacc'one seu Tallagio, Ita quod, &c. by this all charges (but such as were by tenure) are called exactions; the Rule is Ubi lex non distinguit nec nos debemus; this is a Grant, if not of right, yet of Grace, and must be taken largely, Favores amplificandi.

The Subject could not have demanded of him, especially that of 40 s. if it had not been the Law of the Land before.

I shall humbly leave it, whether this be not the Law by which Edward the Confessor laid down the Danegelt: for the Danegelt was not only against Pyrats at Sea as Robbers, they were indeed Pyrats men strong at Sea, but all other Enemies. These called the King of Man Archipirata; that is, a powerful King at Sea, and that these Pyrats were only strong enemies, and it was to raise men not obviare eruptionem but irruptionem, not so much to keep them within their own Kingdom, as to keep them from falling on the Land. And by the History of those times, when this was raised by reason of the Danes Landing in Northumberland and Essex, and so upon that Eruption of the Danes, Danegelt raised is called by Cambden in his Britt. Irrup'one Hostium; and Lambert in his Saxon Laws; But let it be irrup'one or erup'one, or be it Danegelt to keep them from coming out or Landing here, both of them was for the publick service.

When this had been so much complained of in Edward the Confessors time, it is clear he dampned it, and Ingulphus is an Author without exception in this, and Tilburienfis not to be compared to him.

Ingulphus was a great Courtier and Favourite of William the Conqueror; and to think that he had not a better knowledge of what the Confessor did than Tilburienfis, who wrote many score years after, is much to be wondred at. And it is strange that Ingulphus, who was so much bound to the Confessor, should carry a Law down to Croyland to the prejudice of so great a Lord, if he had not been sure of it.

Tilburienfis was urged as if he speaks that it had been paid to the Conquest. He wrote in H. 2's time; and my Lords observe what he was: an Officer in the Exchequer, and for the rules of the Chequer he teacheth them well: But for History against Ingulphus I leave him.

If this were laid down by E. the Confessor, then I conceive this Law of Will. 1. was but the Law of E. the Confessor, and there was no ground for him to require a Law to lay any charge but what was before; Tilburienfis makes this good, for he himself saith that the Conqueror laid it down, and speaks of taking it up again; if it were laid down, I would know by what Law or particular direction it was laid down, if not by this; for nothing in all the Laws of the Confessor can cause to lay it down, but this, and thus far he standeth with Ingulphus.

Anno 1637. I shall further shew how these Aids and Tallages were meant here. It is a clear ground that exceptio firmat regulam in non exceptis. An exception often doth enlarge the meaning of the word beyond the ordinary sence: As if I grant to J. S. all my Trees here, my Apple-trees pass not; but if I grant all my Trees, except my Pear-trees, there my Apple-trees do pass, because this sheweth that I meant all my Fruit-trees in the word Trees: I apply it thus, here is a discharge of all Taxes, except by Tenures. Now I shall shew that Tenures were for defence and service of the Kingdom in the proper place, when I shall shew what provision and means the Law hath allowed the King for defence.

My last Observation is this, This was not a Charter betwixt the King and his Tenants: but betwixt the King and Kingdom, and so something must be laid down which was due to the King.

There are two kinds of Aids:

1. From the Tenants.
2. From the Commons: one was by command from the King without any more, the other by Act of Parliament.

But here Mr. Solicitor hath taken that grounded Argument, of which I have taken to find out a contrary sence, that is, Sumus fratres conjurati ad Regnum defendendum; wherefore these Aids not possibly meant here; But this is contradictory.

By inference to overthrow a thing express, is against the Law. If the words be express that there shall be no Tallage, then by an Inference to say, that the defence of the Kingdom is not meant, is hard. True, all in their Allegiance are bound to defend the Kingdom: all are to fight for it. Acts of Parliament tell us where we may do it, when and how, but that we must give Aid, is another thing.

It is one thing to supply with the body, another thing to give and pay money. And if there be any Invasion, pro posse suo every Free-man is bound to defence: But whether for every defence of the Kingdom we must give an Aid, is another thing; Acts of Parliament will be the best expositors of things so long since: For as Custom and use will make a Common-Law: So likewise will it declare an antient Act of Parliament.

Now I shall come to that of King John, Quod nullum Scutagium vel auxilium ponatur. The credit of this I shall first clear. It is not only in Math. Paris verbatim, who writ in H. 3's time, the only Historian than living. But,

The Original of it was shewed under Seal the last Parliament by Mr. Selden, and these very words were read, Nullum scutagium, &c. and my Lords, though this be no where on the Roll to be found, yet this no waies lessens the authority of it. It is no part of the essence of a Statute to be found on Record; if all should be burned by mischance, what would become of the Law? Though the Rolls be all burnt, yet the Judges know what are Acts and what not, though they have nothing to make it good but their own Manuscripts, or Printed Books, or Tradition. A man cannot plead against an Act of Parliament nulla Record, that is the Judgment in the Case in the eighth Report Princes Case. The Dutchy of Cornwall stands supported only by an Act of Parliament, not upon Record. That which I shall shew to make this an Act of Parliament appeareth out of the words. There are two things Scutagium & auxilium; Scutagium ariseth from the Tenant, and Auxilium from the Subject.

To shew that Auxilium is laid down; by this it appears that he could not Assess Scutage without Parliament.

I hope to shew that Scutage was for the defence of the Kingdom, and is such a provision, that no King hath a better, and such a one as will raise in England above 40000 men.

Yea, but saith Mr. Solicitor not assessed, that is, not meant to bind the King but the Subject. The King can do no wrong; Dorth any man think that the Commons did come to the King to bind themselves and leave the King at liberty?

I come now to Argue from the exceptions, Exceptio firmat regulam in non exceptis. This exception sheweth the latitude of the words to be to discharge of all Aids. That there had not been care had of the particular Aid, Quatenus a Tenant, they were afraid even those were swallowed up; true, I do not conceive that was a thing of necessity. But as the King may have it in if he would: So the Subjects had no Reason to deny it him, for it was but just; and was never meant to be taken from him; nay, the Lords themselves had reason to take care themselves that this was not discharged: For in all these Cases the King hath no more than a Common person, for he hath per se marrier, so he hath his Aid per se faire Ransome. And that appeareth upon 21 E. 1. Release from a Lord unto his Tenant, so that there was reason that the King and Lords should take care of this, yet they were afraid that those words would be so strong against publick Aid, as that it would take away private Aid. Last Reason, That this Auxilium must be said publick: For look in all the King's desires (when they did desire Aids) still their Introduction is the defence of the Kingdom, which is a cause of the Parliament, which appeareth by Speeches there on Record. Nothing can be intended of these private Aids for himself. I have done with the Charter of King John.

I next come unto Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. For Magna Charta, I humbly conceive that this Charter at first when it was granted, was no more than verbatim the Charter of King John, and originally had in it, very probably, this very clause of Nullum Scutagium. My reason for it, First upon all Histories, That after King John had granted a Charter, the Pope he would have discharged him of it as far as in him lay, but that still the Lords and Commons made claim. He died, Henry the third cometh in: A difference between the King and the French. Then was promised this Charter should be confirmed. Histories say at his second Coronation, he gave his Oath to confirm the Charter of King John. Then in 9. the Lords demanded it; he was unwilling, because it was gotten by duress. But the King said, we are sworn to it and must confirm it. And in Mat. Paris it is said expressly, that the Lords did call for the Charter of King John, and there it was read and confirmed verbatim. And M. Paris lived in the King's Court, and he was adeo familiaris, that it is said he eat with him at his Table, and at that time he writ this Book, and sure he durst not have written it, if it had not been true. But we find it not now on Record? How this might possibly slip, I shall tell you, 1. We have no original Enrollment of Mag. Charta; no Mag. Charta but that of King John. If it be true which Histories say, that H. 3. did revoke his Charters, it is possible that these Rolls might perish in that time.

Authority of the King at Oxford did inforce them to bring in their Records; doubtless they would not leave the Enrollments.

Anno 1637. Next step to look for it is 28 E. 1. confirmed thereand is exemplified, the Original may be lost in so long a time. What became of all Parliament Rolls till 4 E. 3. All perished by fire or some other mischance. Things were afterwards put together, and upon the Roll, this was not the Original Enrollment of 8 H. 1. and written on the Roll, where Acts of later time are written, and with the same hand. If it were once in King John it must be left out somewhere.

Observe one thing more, that is, As this of Scutagium and Auxilium doth concern the Subject in their Lands. There is also a clause concerneth the Subjects in their persons. Nullus liber homo imprisonetur, that might be taken for ordinary imprisonment. But then there cometh provision for the King that he should not do it, which is non super eum Mitteremus; such words as that a man knoweth not what to make of them. But in the Charter of King John it is Nec enim in Carcerem mitteremus. In this great thing we see the mistake, and how the other happened I cannot tell.

I now come to E. 1. time, wherein I hope to make good those Acts of Parliament that we have vouched, and here lieth a main endeavour: 1. Was of 25 E. 1. which is not denied to be an Act nor cannot; the other is de Tallagio non concedendo, which is so full that it cannot be evaded, and therefore is denied to be an Act. 1. For the Act 25 E. 1. which is against Aids and Tallages not to be taken without consent of the Kingdom; I humbly conceive that by these words Aids and Tallages used in former Acts, that this was meant of charges for a publick defence of the Kingdom complained of, and not denied; I shall bring home the Roll of 25 E. 1. That the King doth not promise to pay them by reason, to have words for their Money.

But that they must have a reasonable satisfaction, I will shew that was the sence given upon the Record. 1. For the practice of the times, that there were Ship Writs went forth. These Writs went forth in more terrible terms than any I ever saw, Sub poena forisfactur. vite & membrorum, 24 E. 1. was the Writ; I am sure such a Writ by the Common-Law would not have maintained, that if they did it not, the King should hang them. This Writ was the grievance upon the Subject, and this Act refers to that. True, there was other grievances 4, and 5. but this was one; and these Aids which were then for the defence of the Kingdom, were included within the rest, appears. The King in reading the Articles, speaketh that what was done was done for defence. Though true, he had Wars in Poitou, and in other places beyond the Seas, yet as true that it was a War to be kept from hence by defence. That part was for the defence cannot be denied, and yet no distinction to be made between a Foreign War and defence, and both equally grievances to the Commons.

After this Act of 25 E. 1. there cometh out a Commission, and this was in pursuance of the promise that the King did make at his going into Flanders, and that was to enquire of those Grievances in the Articles; and amongst the rest there was de Lanis & Coriis taken away pro defensione maris; and to that the King saith there, that for those things pays per reason. There hath been an answer given unto this, and much stood upon that the King should say upon this Commission to enquire of Grievance pro custodi maris; if it were so he would il ferre saunt que il tienerent appaid par reason. That this should be no more than that the King should give a reason why he did it, I question; as if he should send forth Commissions and afterwards dispute it; or if he did do it, whether lawful or not: That is not the way of sending out Commissions.

Suppose that the King should say, he would give them a reason for it, this Commission did go forth to enquire of those Grievances. And if the King had not said he would give any satisfaction; yet it is enough that it is enquired of us de gravamine: It is a wrong upon the Subject, Princes may lay Taxes, yet the Subject doth not call for satisfaction: A Princely word that it should be done.

But when the King doth say pays per reason, to think that that is no more than that he would give some reason for it, is a strange inference.

In a Bargain they use to say, you shall hold your self content with reason, you cannot have your own demand, but he is satisfied one way or other, so here.

To begin with a Record 21 E. 1. Parl. Book de Petition of the Commons, and they did desire restoration of all their Moneys, 25 E. 1. there was 2 de Lanis & Victualibus, within that Commission, so the Money and the things taken, and enquired upon by that Commission, 26 E. 1. were for defence, and here ordinatum est per concilium quod Rex satisfaciet eis quam citius poterit, upon this Petition they desired satisfaction. The Commission twenty six ordered by the Parliament that the King should satisfy them as soon as he came, so that they should hold themselves content, Ita quod se contentos habeant, so you see not satisfaction by reason to justify them, but the King should satisfy them one way or other. It is that they should have something for it, and not that they should have reason why they should have nothing.

But I rest not here, There is one Parl. Roll remaining before 4 E. 3. and that was 8 E. 2. pro Priori & Fratibus Sancti Johannis Jerusalem. It is there set forth that E. 1. did command his Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer to make satisfaction for wages taken in Servitio. To the Clergy and Layety veluti pro Lanis & Coriis, &c. and that satisfaction should be part by Money and part by releasing of debts, so as thus the King had no meaning, 26 E. 1. to pay Money back presently, but would give them satisfaction one way or other by payment of debts, or releasing of debts, as it was explained by that of E. 2.

Another Record P. 27 E. 1. Roll 36. satisfaction was there given for an eighth and fifth. These things which were taken before 25 E. 1. complained of, and that confessed by Mr. Solicitor. So as I conceive, though it had been enough that there had been an enquiry of these things as upon a Complaint, though there had been no more answer. If an answer make it better, it is no answer to say, that they should have satisfaction by words, but either in money or releasing debts; If none at all, Confession had been enough.

I shall now come to take of the Solicitors exception to 25 E. 1. where he endeavoureth to shew that this Money for Shipping could not be intended within the Body of the Act, and if it was, yet it was excepted in the saving of the Act.

Objection stands thus, No Aids were charged but such as were granted, and we do not shew that these were granted. And there is a word beyond that, and that is Prizes: How far that extends I leave.

But if in the body of the Act, yet excepted in the saving all ancient Aids due and accustomed.

For the saving of such an Aid due and accustomed

Anno

1637.

customed surely was meant there.

In this answer lieth this question, Whether these were the ancient Aids due or not by the Common Law? This will stand or fall on the body of the Argument.

I shall tell you what these Aids were and cannot be these. There were other Aids mentioned in the Charter of King John, as pur faire fuz Chevalier, &c.

That which takes off all, If these Aids were part of the grievance, though for defence, then they cannot be meant in the saving, for that destroys the purpose of the Act; and for that saving, it never came by the Commons nor the Lords, but the form being so to grant in part, and as the King would grant it, so they must take it. Histories say that they did not like the same, and therefore desired an absolute Act.

It was said that Aids and defences were meant of Foreign ones. If the King and Council were so wary as to put in such a saving as before was not in the Act; it shews what care they had to have what they could have, if by the Law they might have them for Foreign defence, and not at home; they that put in the saving, would have put in a distinction. I shall leave the consideration of this Act to your Lordships, how far it shall extend to Aids for the defence of the Kingdom in that Case. I shall go on and conclude with the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo, that Act of 25 E. 1. was indeed so well penned that it gave Mr. Solicitor a very probable colour to make those handsome Answers.

The Lords did desire a better Act, not with these words, No such Aids, for (such) is a relative word, and those are dangerous words. Next, if no more meant by the saving, than pur faire fuz Chevalier, &c. and yet to have left these in general and not in particular, had left a way open to question what they had been. And in Walsingham the Lords were not satisfied with it, though it was signed and passed the Great Seal. It is true, that at this time a Pardon did pass to these Lords: The words are so strong that this was denied, and much said, and very colourable too.

It is true, That this Charter is no where on Record, that we find, but for that an answer is given before.

It is said, That is no Act but only penned as a Charter, that exception was once made by the Council on other occasions.

Acts of Parliament were then penned; so Mag. Charta, and Charta de Foresta are but in form of Charters.

Yea, but we cannot tell when it was. How many Acts of Parliament are there which we know not when they were? Historians best tell that. It is hard to find it when the Records are lost: But this will appear to be in the time of E. 1. There is the Pardon to those Earls, 24 E. 1. Then we find a Parliament, we know that the Rolls of those times were miscarried and lost: sure it must be after the Stat. 25 E. 1.

But then there is an Exception from the diversity of the penning. Sometimes Nullum Tallagium ponetur, sometimes ponetur.

We know upon the Entry of the Rolls, there have been divers mistakes in the entering of ponetur, if it be with a dash it may easily be mistaken, and so only virium scriptoris and nothing else.

Then let us enquire what it was, if it be no Act.

It is said that it is no Act, but an extract out of 25 E. 1. and that he urged several waies upon several occasions.

By the penning of it, it doth appear that he that wrote it was a Schollar, and not mistaken. To make a thing absolute, that was but relative, for Nullum to make it Tale, and to make that without a saving that had a saving, is a strange kind of saving.

Yea this cannot be an Act, for at that time there was a Pardon to divers Lords.

If that be true which Histories say, when this Act was published, the Lords were not satisfied with it, and these were the main Lords to whom the Pardon was granted, that were not satisfied. And to make their Pardon the stronger, they did weave it into the very body of the Act.

And for Walsingham he is of great credit. They say further, that this was no Act; for this takes away these 3 Aids and Tallages. This is not so, Acts speak of it, and Practice speaks of it, and therefore no Law and Practice of Ship Writs ever since, and for defence of the Kingdom.

For the Aids that is a good Act, yet those were not intended, nor included within that Act, and therefore that practice is not contrary, because it is not in the words of the Act, nor in the meaning of the Act.

For the Aids therein questioned, the Question was between the King and the Commons, and not between the King and Tenants. Then, that not being the question, there must be a consideration according to the occasion and the doubt made: But to take this Nullum auxilium ponamus. These are not Aids put on the Tenant but fruits of a Seignior: As the Dutchy riseth not in the King's Command but from the Law, and so not within these words, Nullum Auxilium ponamus. And so all the practice ever since, will well stand with this Act. And to say Shipping is not meant because of the practice since, is nothing. Let me establish once the Law, and no matter for the practice. If the Law be once settled, we must reduce Precedents to Law, and not Law to Precedents.

And for the practice, yet still the Subject makes a continual claim against them.

My Lords, To prove that this is an Act, Walsingham entred it in his time, who did not write very long after it.

Though it hath been said that he was a Monk, and what he writ he took up in the Street and Market-place, yet I will not think so of Walsingham, who was ever held an Historian of great credit. And no Historian whatsoever durst set down an Act of Parliament, if he had not a sure warrant for it, it had been little less than Forgery.

In the next place it hath been said, Histories are no Authorities in Law.

True, they shall not tell me what the Law is, yet they are good to tell us of res gesta, whether there hath been such things or no. He tells us not that this was for Shipping or not for Shipping, but tells us that there was such a thing.

I have seen and searched after this Act, and I have found it in an ancient Manuscript in Hen. the fourth's time, and it goes in the name of Statutum de Tallagio non concedendo, and find it mentioned no where, but still find it mentioned as a Statute.

I have an Abridgement of H. 8. and there it is put in as a Statute; I will not urge positively but probably, and that an Act in 13 H. 4. A complaint for laying of Taxes on the Subject. The answer is, Let the Laws and Statutes be observed. This is that positive Act that doth more reach it than any other.

But

But the main Answer that I rely upon, if they deny the truth of an Historian, for Res gestæ, is this.

1637. If from time to time it hath been conceived an Act, what more strong? What makes our Common Law, but general Opinion and allowance? And should we doubt of any thing whereof we find the Acts of Parliament themselves, I am afraid we should shake many things done by the Common Law.

That which I rely upon is, the late Judgment of the late Parliament, to which your Lordships will give all reverence. This, my Lords, did not pass sub silentio, but was made a Question, and something proposed on the King's part, Whether an Act or not? In the conclusion, it came into the Petition of Right. The very first Statute mentioned in that Petition was this, De Tallagio non concedendo, made in E. 1. time. How far this question passed at the Committee, it is better known to your Lordships, and is the thing whereon it is built.

If this had not been an Act, it had been dangerous to have put it into the upper House. But it being there read, your Lordships knew what was done upon it.

This Petition being thus debated in both Houses, I shall leave it to your Lordships, how far you will make this Question; and his Majesty in his Answer did not deny the same: But both King and Council agreed that it is a Law.

Mr. Holborne's third days Argument, Decemb. 6. 1637. in the Case of Hampden.

My Lords,

AS the other day, so now again, with your Lordships favour, I shall be bold to sum up my last days Argument in a very few words, and by the way clear my meaning, wherein I was any whit obscure, as also add where I was defective, yet briefly in both.

My Lords, the general Question the other day being concerning the Kings power to lay a charge of Mony upon the Subject, and my general ground against it being but this, That though the Law did instruct the King in many great powers of Government, and with the whole Government, according to the Laws, that yet by the doing of Acts which may charge or prejudice the Subject in his Estate, the Law did see that it was possible Kings, as men, might erre, and therefore did make provision that their Acts, if against Law, should be made void: As in case of a Disseisin or Discontinuance, or where they were to pass Grants, that there should go before an Ad quod dampnum; and also if they were passed, that if they were to the prejudice of another, that regularly in that Case the Law did make them naught, and that they were to be repealed. And I shewed how this did hold, especially in laying charges upon the Subject; I shewed that the Law was not willing to leave the King power to charge in any case notwithstanding, where the occasion might be common, and did require it for the maintenance of Traffick and Commerce between them, so to hold them still as within one Body. The Law must leave in some a power to charge, which charge could be left in none but the King as Supream Governour. The Cases for this were the Moneys to be paid for Murage, Pontage, Panage, Ferriage, and the like, that in those Cases, though the King were trusted with a power to lay a charge, yet it did not leave the charge arbitrarily in the King's breast, so, but that if it were unreasonable, the Grant was naught, and the proportion was to receive trial by another upon whose Judgment it must stand or fall, which were either the Judges or a Jury; like to the Case which I might have put, but did not, of a Fine uncertain upon a Copyhold: I also shewed that in some Cases the Law did allow the King to demand arbitrarily, upon some Subjects, sums of Money, yet that was not upon the Subject, quatenus Subject, but upon some Subjects, quatenus Tenants, which did arise upon the Fine Kemalare, and the giving of the Lands as pur file marrier, to marry the Daughter to make the Son a Knight, or for ranome, or upon those which were little better then Villains, the Kings Burgesses, whom the Law did not so much regard; yet the policy of the Kingdom in those Cases, did afterwards restrain the King unto a certainty by Act of Parliament.

Afterwards I went to the Cases which were in point, That the King could not lay a charge upon the Subject, though for publick good; and instanced in the Case of the Grant of the Office of Measurage with a Fee, adjudged void, quia sonat in oppressione populi. 22 E. 3. Par. 31. The King granted to one Pawle an Office of Alnage of Worsted, and because in charge and burthen of the Subject, and a new Grant, adjudged void, and was repealed.

I began with that of 4 William 1. which I now find more clearly to be an Act of Parliament out of an ancient Manuscript of the Church of Lichfield, mentioned to this purpose in Eadmerus. Here I endeavoured to answer to Mr. Solicitor, when he said, That there was another Law of the Conquerour which explained this, and shewed that the charges for the Publick defence were not meant; because that it is said in another place of the same Laws, Quod omnes sint fratres conjurati. To this my Answer is, That they were so for their bodies, fratres conjurati, to serve, but not to be charged; yet I must confess it is pro viribus & facultatibus, to defend the Realm. Where pro facultatibus may seem to imply that they were bound to be subject unto charges secundum facultates: under favour, pro viribus & facultatibus, they are but words of like nature; viribus, that is, facultates, natural powers, not substance: For it is not only that they should be fratres conjurati ad Regnum defendendum, but also ad pacem dignitatem Coronæ, &c. Et ad iudicium rectum & justiciam faciendam.

I went next to the Charter of King John, which I observe to be but Common Law: It's enrolled, and remaineth under Seal, and recited verbatim in Matth. Paris.

I went next to the Acts of Parliament, 25 E. 1. against Aids and Tallages. There I laboured to shew that the Act was made against Aids and Tallages, though it were for the Publick defence; and that was out of the Articles whereupon the Statute was made, and upon the King's Answer to the Articles. Next out of the Commission, which was after the Statute, to enquire of the Grievances mentioned in the Articles, to the end there might be satisfaction, which was promised upon the Articles; where in the Commission, the whole enquiry was, de Gravaminibus, of Grievances.

It is enough for me that this Commission was grounded upon the former Articles, and that here this very thing, pro defensione Regni, was inter gravamina. It had been strange, when the King had confessed upon the Articles, that he would not legally justify them; and upon the Commission, in pur-

Anno

purfuance of the Articles, had called them Grievances, and so to be enquired of; that now when they were found, he would juſtifie them in any point, and ſay, a pays pur Reaſon, give them a Reaſon for what he did, as Mr. Sollicitor ſaith.

Next, I did conclude with the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo; and there my labour was to prove this to be a Statute, and I am ſorry that I ſpent upon it ſo much time, if that were not denied to be a Statute by Mr. Sollicitor.

But now I underſtand by the Kings ſide, That this was no Statute, but made and ſealed at the ſame time with 25. and to be meant no more but 25. This ſeemeth ſtrange; for why ſhould they be both at one time? Next, How came they ſo much to differ, if made at the ſame time? Why are there ſome things in the Statute de Tallagio, which are not in the 25th?

But the Teſt will clear all. 1. For the Teſt 25. it was Teſte Edwardo Principe, and Sealed by no more then the King. To this, de Tallagio, the Archbiſhops and the Lords put to their Seals. But howſoever, I am glad that I hear it now confeſſed to be a Statute, for then we have no more to do, but to ſee whether the charges of defence were within the meaning of theſe words, wherein ſure the words are general enough, and what Reaſons have been given, why by the expoſitions of theſe charges of defence ſhould be exempted, you have heard, and what my Answers have been unto them, I leave unto your Judgments.

I come to E. 3ds time.

17 E. 3. Parliament Roll; Whereas Commiſſions have been awarded to the People, and Shires to prepare men of Arms for Scotland and Gaſcoign, or elſewhere, at the charges of the Shires, contrary to the Law. The King hath not before this time given any wages, whereby the People have been at great charge, and much impoverished; The King will that it be done ſo no more.

Ay, but it was ſaid, This was to Gaſcoign and to Scotland, that is Forreign Wars, and that was not denied, though not admitted.

I anſwer, That Scotland in thoſe times was in Fee of the Seigniorie of England. And in thoſe times the King of England was Dominus directus Regni Scotia. And ſo E. 1. when he determined that quarrel between Bruce and Baliol, and gave Judgment by Writ, ſettled Baliol King of Scotland, and did juſtifie it, and it is remaining in the Rolls of Scotland in Mr. Squire's Office.

26 E. 1. When there was a Treaty of Peace between Baliol and E. 1. yet he reſuſed to acknowledge the Seigniorie of England; and there the Parliament reſolves, That he ſhould rather have a War then loſe this ſo: See Selden upon Fortefcne. War in Scotland not forreign War, but like to that in Wales; and ſo was it ever held ſince the Conqueſt, to be within the Seigniorie of England. By Statute 12 E. 1. and by the Statute of H. 8. it appeareth to be within the Fee of England. War againſt one another cannot be called a forreign War. In the war to Scotland, Wales, and elſewhere, which is not meant of forreign parts, for then it would have been expreſſed where, as well as Gaſcoign. And by the Hiſtories of thoſe times, we ſhall find that there were Armies carried to no other place. Nay, to ſhew that this elſewhere is meant in England, 1 E. 3. Parl. Roll. before this Parliament. The Scots invaded England, as appears by a Writ of E. 3. where is mention of an Invaſion, and thereupon requires Aid. If there be wars in Gaſcoign, and if occaſions to Scotland and England too, where the Scots are, and this a defensive war. Further, for the wars in Scotland, if that ſhould be called a forreign war, if the King ſhould go thither, and make a war, yet by the Rules of the King's Council, if a war in forreign parts is but to prevent war at home, this war is not forreign, but for defence.

Another Act made on this occaſion, That the King wills, 1 E. 3. ca. 5. that no man henceforth ſhall be charged to arm themſelves otherwiſe then formerly in the Kingdom of England; and not to be compelled to go out of their Counties, unleſs upon ſudden coming of an enemy, and in caſe of neceſſity, and then to be done as it hath been done in times paſt.

This Statute coming in the ſame year, when the complaint was for carrying men out of their Counties at their own charge; Here I obſerve that the Subject ſhall not go out of his County only at ſudden coming of Enemies, but likewiſe on neceſſity, and both together. And when it is ſaid, done as formerly, is an allowance that they had formerly been paid: So then if this be a ſtronger Caſe, admit here is an Actual coming of Enemies, nay, ſuddenly; nay, here is a neceſſity, and the Subject is to go out of his County, pro poſſe ſuo, yet he had his allowance.

Perhaps it may be asked, Why ſhould not the Subject pay? Is not the Kingdom in danger? Are they not to defend it pro poſſe ſuo?

They are ſo in their Counties; and if they go out, the Law hath provided a Supply.

Parl. Roll. 13 E. 3. There was a time when there were known Enemies, actual war at France; they intended to divert war by bringing it home to our own doors. The Enemy threatned, nay, did much hurt, yet did not E. 3. command theſe Supplies this way, but called a Parliament, and there conſideration was had in Parliament for Supply, and that the Kingdom had Ships enough, if they were willing, and this was in way of Defence. From all this I conceive that it is ſtrongly inferred, That he could not force them. And when the Lords and Commons did meet to take conſideration for the wars againſt France and Scotland, the Commons laid the whole charge on the Cinque Ports; they diſclaimed any thing to do with it: And for Land, they ſaid, Let thoſe of every County reſide there, but no charge on the Subject. In purſuance of this, Clauf. 13. 1 E. 3. 11. 14. doſe. pro Villa de Bodmin. doth ſhew the Execution of this Judgment; it being agreed that the Sea Towns and bordering Shores ſhould look unto it.

I ſhall agree, there are ſome Inland Towns are bound by uſe and Tenure, but no otherwiſe. 14 E. 3. ca. 1. That the people are not to be compelled to make any Aid out of Parliament, and that the Aid granted ſhall not be drawn into example. And that the Aid granted is for the defence of the Sea.

But it hath been ſaid, that they are Aids granted for forreign wars. For wars where? Then in France. True, they were in part granted, ſome for wars in France, and part alſo for defence on this ſide. And where there is no diſtinction, why not for one as well as the other? It muſt, under favour, be conceived for neither. And between this time of 14 and 25 E. 3. your Lordſhips have heard from Mr. St. John ſome complaints in Parliament for charging the County with Hobellors, and going out of their Counties, which 1637. Anno. which are not complaints only for proportion in regard of their excess, but also for the thing it self. 2 E. 3. n. 21. The Commons pray to be discharged of the guard of the Sea, and that the King would keep it at his own charge. This shews the Judgment of both Houses; and the weight of it is great.

For, when there is any difficult point concerning the Liberty of the Subject, or the like, it is referred by the Judges to the Parliament, there to be decided. Of that reverence is the Parliament.

But it hath been said, That this is rather a matter of Prayer than Right. Under favour, the matter shews that they claim in point of Right, and it is to be supposed that they would not make such an unreasonable request, as to lay that wholly on the King, if they of right ought to do it. And if words are put in a fair language, it was but a fit and humble language for so great a Prince as E. 3. was. But E. 3. gave no relief.

That doth shew the Judgment of the two Houses; and as there was no granting, so there was no express denial. A handsome prayer and a handsome answer. 14 E. 3. Parl. Roll. There it appears that there was a charge of two shillings on all Woolfells, &c. and this in defence of the Sea; and in 25. taken away in the Parliament.

I shall conclude this with that of 25 E. 3. No Hobellors were to go out of their Counties, unless by common consent. This Statute is general for defence; there is no Exception if any Enemy do invade. The Parliament believes that the Kingdom is provided for.

Yea, saith Mr. Solicitor, the Subject is not charged to go out of the County, that is, upon Summons ad exercitum: For Summons are twofold; 1. Summons ad exercitum; and there is a general Summons. By the Summons ad exercitum only, those were to go that did hold by Tenure; and they say it is enconter droit to be charged out of their County.

It is true, about this time there are some Records of 16 and 18 E. 3. at the Exchequer, where charges was laid on the Subject for finding of Hobellors; and those things you shall find in the Exchequer, as if the Money came thence, which was before the Statute. These things were Grievances complained of: So the practice there will not expound the Statute; for the contrary practice did beget the Statute. But the last of these, in 24 E. 3. who was an active Prince, and maintained wars, and so had great occasions for Money, and there charged the people higher then they would endure, for which he did afterwards repent, and desired to be prayed for; and therefore there were divers Impositions on Merchants, which I pass over all, only this out of the Roll, 30 E. 3. no. 24. It is the Lord Lattimer's Case, a Privy Councillor and Chamberlain to the King: There was a complaint in Parliament against him for divers things, whereof one was in laying an Imposition upon Merchandize. In his Justification he pleads the Command of the King; and for that Particular he was sentenced, imprisoned, fined, and ransomed; so careful were they to revive that Law. And that Act of him, 2 R. 2. made the great Lords so unwilling to talk of the defence without a Parliament. And so I am come to R. 2. upon which I must insist, for that it is of great weight.

It doth appear, as well by the consultation it self, as by History, That the Realm was in danger of war from several parts, from France, from Scotland, and the danger so instant that it could not stay for Parliamentary Supply; therefore the Council of the King were to consider it. They know not what to advise; they meet together; they had not time to call the whole Body, but the Lords both Temporal and Spiritual, and Sages of the Realm, and to consider what to do, when the safety of the Kingdom lay at stake. The Resolution of these Lords and Sages, which were as I conceive, the Judges propter excellentiam, conclude that there was no way but by Parliament; and all this was for defence, and against an instant danger, which cannot expect Summons of Parliament: And the Lords themselves rather lend Money out of their own Purfes, then adventure that which Lattimer did, which indeed was the ground which made them so wary.

To this there were many Answers, yet all will fall off. 'Tis true that it is no Act of Parliament, yet such a Resolution, as that had it been three hundred years before, would have done much. The weight of this is thus; If this had been a Parliament, there is but small doubt, what the resolution would have been for the matter. We have the Resolution of the upper House; and how the Commons would have resolved in a point of Liberty, we may easily conceive. Here we have the Judges in point of the Legal power of the King, What the King could do, as well as what he should do? And in things of this nature the Judges are the Council of the King; and as in the great Parliament they sit there for Council that belongs to matters of Law; so at this time, in this Assembly, which was in stead of a Parliament, these were not left out, being best able to give the Rule: And this was about two years after E. 3. his death; he could not have any other then the Council of his Grandfather, and of these the Resolution was, That the King could not charge out of Parliament. And though it was no Act, yet it was the honour to be accounted so, else it had been never entred upon the Parliament Roll.

But it is said by way of Objection, That R. 2. was an Infant.

True, he was; but he had a brave man for his Protector, John a Gaunt; and he had doubtless a select Council, and they were as fearful as might be, that nothing should be done to wrong the King in his Prerogative.

But he was not only an Infant, but the Parliament had gotten all Power into their hands, and made Ordinances that nothing should be done without Parliament.

It is true, they had a power of doing things by Parliament, yet that was no Act to restrain the King, but an Act of Necessity. The King was an Infant, and therefore it required, that during his Minority, nothing should be done but in Parliament, especially that concerned the Kingdom; which was not an usurping of the Regal Power, but a provident care of the Kingdom over him. And they do protest in that Roll against encroachments. And to say that is good which is to an ill end, is a strange construction.

They say that this Consultation was for foreign wars, for that Brest and Calice were in danger, and to be provided for. And for foreign wars it is agreed that the Kingdom could not be charged.

To this I answer; Admit a mixture of war, yet every one looks home. First, we have a care for our selves first, but they would have made no such difference difference, if the Debate had been for both. However the Lords conclude, That the King cannot charge without Parliament. But I cannot leave this Objection, but shall give a particular Answer. Though Brest and Calice might be in danger, yet that was no part of the Consultation; for it is said in that Consultation, That in a former Parliament sufficient provision was made for them.

True, they were in danger, but provided for in Parliament before. And that which clears all, under favour, there is not a word in that Consultation, but is merely for defence, and no relation to a forreign war. I end this time with 8 & 9 R. 2. Roll. 10. where is a Consultation with John of Gaunt for forreign wars and other mixed together, it appears that the Subject is not chargeable out of Parliament: And so I come to Henry the Fourth.

2 H. 4. Hath been urged, and an Answer given to several Commissions for Calice, and for defence there was then a complaint and a desire that those Commissions might be recalled. 'Tis true, we find not this granted expressly; but as no grant, so no denial: And as we take it, was granted.

This time of H. 4. doth yield many instances, that the King cannot charge, though for Publick defence. And for the Sea in particular, I shall remember a Record which yesterday I vouched, Parl. Roll. 13 H. 4. no. 43. it was upon an Action of the Case, which we find in the Books 11 H. 4. which was ended in 13 H. 4. There was an Office of Measurage erected and granted, and a Fee granted on it; this was complained of in Parliament. First, an Action was begun at Law, 11 and in 13 complaint in Parliament; and they complain that this was against the Statute, that no Taxes and Tallages should be laid upon the Subject: And the Answer is, Let the Statute be observed. This use I make of it; This doth not only shew the confession of the King, that this ought not to be laid, but that this Statute de Tallagio was to be a Statute. And this Statute was not for Aids that come to the King in particular, but against any charge laid by the King on the Subject, though it be pro bono publico, and upon the Record, the Judgment was delivered so, because sonat in prejudicium populi.

I shall remember the grants of Tunnage and Poundage to H. 4. and the grants usually to him were temporary, upon occasion, and not for life, till afterwards; and in his time they were for defence of Sea and Kingdom; and it was granted, upon condition that it should be confessed of Loan and not of Right. 9 H. 4. no. 16. and 11 H. 4. no. 45. and 13 H. 4. no. 10. which is the fullest, they make a protestation that it shall not be drawn into example, yet all that time were on eminent dangers.

But it was said, We cannot shew that purely, and simply, and solely granted, that was but a mixture of other things, as that of Tenth and Fifteenths.

But the Parliament was so wary that they did sever them, and lay the Fifteenth by itself, and Tunnage and Poundage by itself: So though they are the same Acts, yet upon the matter they are several.

I am now come to H. 5. and for him there is not much, but like as H. 4. Parl. Roll. 1 H. 5. no. 17. A grant of Tunnage and Poundage for the defence of the Realm, and safeguard of the Sea, with a Protestation that they should not be charged for the time to come. I think after this time, we find no more Protestations or Grants upon condition.

But that which I argue from these grants made in that manner is, Sure it was the opinion of the Parliament, that they were not bound, and the King by his acceptance doth acknowledge so much. No Landlord accepts that from the Tenant as gift, which he may command of duty, and take it on terms so advantageous, and not only give an Acquittance for it, but put it on Record, as in point of Right.

But here is but an affirmation of the Commons, and they cannot make a Law? Yet that which they do, and the King accepts, shall be of a strong proof.

Again, it is true, that you shall not charge the Subject with Tunnage and Poundage without Parliament. But shall not the Subject be charged another way?

To what end would that Protestation have served, if the King should do it another way? And it is all one, if the Commons bear the charge of defence, Whether they bear it by Tunnage & Poundage, or otherwise; for that which falls on the particular, falls on the other. To charge them thus, were as if the King should say, Though I cannot charge you this way by Tunnage and Poundage, yet I will charge you another.

In the time of H. 6. there's little.

I come next to E. 4. wherein, though there is not much upon Statutes, yet there is a speech of his that shews much of this. 7 E. 4. Parl. Roll. i. There was a Speech made and entred; The King first protests, which was not immediately upon his coming to the Crown, that he will live of his own, and not charge the Commons, but in case extraordinary, and those burthens too should be secundum morem majorum, and that he hopes they will be as tender and kind to him as to his Predecessors, saying, That he would lay no charge upon them, but in extraordinary things.

This shews that which was granted by the Commons, though upon extraordinary Cases, was not out of duty, but out of tenderness; and this was a good while after his victory, and could not upon the matter be called a Brokage.

And this falls not under the Answer by Mr. Solicitor, That Money was borrowed of poor men, and reason that they should be paid again.

But these Loans were by way of Commission, and not to some poor men, but they did concern the general.

And though R. 3. had reason to bring in good Laws, because of the defect of his Title, yet my Lord of St. Albans called it a kind of Brokage, to get the Peoples will; yet however, this must be a Declaration of both Houses in Parliament, and it was not so much offered by R. 3. but because E. 4. had made many borrowings.

I come to H. 7. That which hath been pressed is, 19 H. 7. ca. 11. Provision that the King's Servants that were to attend upon the wars out of the County, should be paid if they were to have it, then a fortiori they that were not to attend. This shews that the King is to be at the charge, not the Subject.

The Answer is, This extends to forreign wars, and then no reason but that they should be paid, and so will not serve our turn.

If there be such a difference between forreign and home wars, Why doth not the Acts of Parliament make a distinction? The words are general, and extend to wars out of the Realm, and in the Realm; and where the Law doth not distinguish, neither I hope will your Lordships.

Now I come to H. 8. who was as unwilling to beg

Anno. 1637. beg, as powerful to command. 13 H. 8. ca. 20. The King desires, for some necessity of Government, and against instant occasion too, a power to make Proclamation for Government, and to do it under Penalties. A Law reasonable for that time, though not continued in E. 6. time.

As he would have liberty, which he could not have without Parliament, to lay these kind of Penalties upon men, so the Parliament was as careful to give him no liberty to lay any charge upon their Estates, Lands, or Goods: So as though for natural Government they leave him a power to lay penalties upon others; yet to lay any charge upon their Goods, that which is Moen & Tuum, he had no liberty, which is a Declaration of the Opinion of the Parliament, that by the Common Law he could not do it.

But in the Preamble of the Act it is said, That there is some intimation of the power of the King if he will, and upon that preamble indeed Cowel would have built the Regal power of the King; but Cowel, we know, was mistaken, and had his reward.

It is true, there is something in the Act that speaketh of the Regal power in necessity, but not absolute, and that too came in by the penning of it on the King's side. And 21 H. 8. your Lordships know his power, and was not to be resisted in small things. If he could pull down these Abbeyes, what could he not do? Therefore it was not for them to question with the King upon the penning of his Preamble, but a dutifulness in them to conform themselves. And when there was provision enough made against that in the Act afterwards, it had been a weakness in the House so to do.

Yea the Act was, That the King could not charge the Lands and Goods, but there is no such thing in our case. It is true, there is no immediate charge laid upon Lands or Goods, but in substance and consequence there is a charge. It is all one to me in substance, where my life and benefit is the same in either way. And if I am taxed secundum Statum & facultates, I must pay the Money out of my Estate, and in the pennage of an Act non litigatur de verbis, sed de intentione. And if I am charged and pay not, my Goods are taken away and sold, it is all one to me if it had been laid upon my Goods.

For the time of E. 6. Q. Mary, Q. Eliz. and his late Majesty King James, I shall put my observation of all these into one. I find not much upon Parliament Rolls for these, for few Statutes were made; yet if every one of these have afforded one Act of Parliament, which is a stronger proof than any of those which have been urged, and such a proof that doth not only come home to the Defence of the Kingdom against Pyrats or common Defence, but for defence of the Kingdom in case extraordinary and necessity, in case of Invasion. All this ariseth out of the consideration of penning the Statutes of Tunnage and Poundage in the beginning of every Reign.

This Act which I mention is 1. Jac. where it is said to this effect, That there may be times of necessity, where the treasure is not to be wanting, and it is unfit to be unprovided at any time upon necessary occasion, and therefore they grant unto the King Tunnage and Poundage. But how? Not for quid pro quo, not merely for defence, but towards the defence of the Kingdom. Then by the Judgment of the Parliament, these being not granted formerly but towards this defence, and towards his great charges, therefore by that the charge by the Law ought to lye on the King.

Now, my Lords, if the King were not bound to the defence of the Kingdom, Whether or no would he accept it on these termes? And whether it seems not more then probable, that in case of necessity the charge may not be laid on the Subject. 1 E. 6. cap. 13. 1 Mar. cap. 18. 1 El. c. 19. 1 Jac. cap. 33. The several grants of Tunnage and Poundage.

I conclude this part with the times of his Majesty, which in the point of Declaration, have been stronger and greater then before, both in point of Law, and in matter of Example.

I take my beginning in this upon that Parliament of 3. upon the Petition of Right, and his Majesties Answer and Judgments to that are something home.

The Commission for Loans and Benevolences, the necessity of the time did require an instant supply; and it appears by the Commission, that there was a necessity which could not bear a Supply in another way: And your Lordships know what was done on this.

This Commission was not to borrow of a few, but it was general, with an equal and proportionable weight; and this, as it appears was for the defence of the Kingdom. It hath been said, That mention is of Supply for the Palatinate, and to send Aids to the King of Denmark.

True, it is so; but that of the Palatinate, and the danger of Denmark, do upon the matter concern us: For that War being upon our Resolutions, there was a kind of Engagement lay upon us.

In that Commission there appears a more then possible danger to the Kingdom; there was a necessity; yet this was laid down, it held not: And in pursuance of that, there was an Order, whereof we have a Copy, 'tis in the Exchequer moved by the King's Attorney for staying the proceeding for Money spent about Loans, which was by his Majesties gracious Command, wherein his Majesty did prevent the Commons desire.

The Petition goes on, That there were Soldiers billeted in several parts, and there was a charge, and this was after a late then foreign War, and Enemy then known and declared; there was a necessity for instant defence, and to stand upon our Guard; the Enemy might in a short time have been upon our Coasts, yet your Lordships know what was said to that.

And as the Petition looks back on those things which are taken off their hands, so it looks forward, and provides that no such things should be taken hereafter by the power of the King alone, though upon matter of necessity. And all this was a Petition, not of favour merely, but in point of right, according to our Laws and Statutes, which is Statute 25 E. 1. the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo, and Magna Charta, the ground of all. And to all these his Majesty promisseth such things should be done no more. And they not content with this, his Majesty gives this Answer, Soit droit fait.

I cannot leave this great strength thus, but bring it home to this very case. The substance of this Petition being for charging the Subject out of Parliament by the Regal power; When this Petition had passed the lower House, it came to the Lords, and there upon some motion, there was a Proposition of a Saving to be put in the end of the Petition: Saving the Sovereign power which his Majesty is intrusted with for the defence of the Kingdom. All this your Lordships know. And after several Conferences, in the conclusion, the Petition passed without a Saving. My Lords, upon what reason this Saving was left out, your Lordships

Anno
1637. ships may see by the Record which your Lordships and the rest of the House best know: And whether upon this Reason,

That the Clause with which the Petition went on; Whether the Saving would stand with those Laws.

My Lords, it appears that the first Answer was, That the Laws should be put in Execution; yet in the close there is put in a Saving of the Prerogative. But this Answer did not satisfy, and therefore there was a general Answer, Soit droit fait. But now, what was granted by the last Answer, then by the former only, That the Law was left more absolute.

To that Commission of Advice, for consideration of means to raise Supplies, and it was for defence, and a necessary defence, and that did not bear delays. That Commission was laid down by his Majesty, yet in that there was no more then this, a consideration how Supplies might instantly be raised, which could not endure delays by Imposition, or otherways, that is, still lawful ways. If there had been any way to lay a charge on the Subject, by way of Loan, then that Commission had not been excepted against; yet his Majesty was pleased to lay down this upon the desire of the House.

I conclude with that which I conceive to be the Judgment of both Houses in point. It is the Judgment against the Sermon touched upon by Mr. St. John, which I shall press as far as it will be applicable to our Case.

The Sermon was to shew the power of the King in case of necessity, to lay a charge on the Subject without a Parliament.

When this came into the lower House, this was the main and principal charge, I say not the sole charge; when it came into the upper House, there it was pressed against the Divine by the King's Counsel. And it appears by the Journals of the upper House, that the Crime was, That he would shew the King's power to charge the Subject without Parliament. It appears by the said Journals, that the Doctors excuse was, That he meant nothing but to shew what Kings might do in extrem necessity of danger.

And your Lordships may read in his Sermon, That he speaks of necessity not attending the slow motion of Parliamentary Advice. So that it is pinched on an extrem necessity. But neither one excuse nor other did serve. The offence is acknowledged; submission made in both Houses; and the Sermon called in by Proclamation.

Ay, but saith Mr. Solicitor, This Sentence was for other matters? I say not that the Sentence was for this thing alone, there was other things, yet those were only by the by, only occasioned by this. Now how far this Case comes to our Case, I leave to your Lordships.

Mr. Holborne's fourth days Argument, Decemb. 8. 1637. in the Case of Hampden.

May it please your Lordships,

I Have thus far gone in my proof, from Reason, Book-Cases, and Authorities, all being of the highest nature, that is, by the Laws of England. That the King cannot charge his Subjects without their consent, though pro bono publico, or of necessity.

It now remaineth that I offer what either the practice hath ever been in the best times, and the contrary practice decried from time to time.

In this I shall do a work of Supererogation: It is not material what the practice is, if the Law be once settled. A Law once made over-ruleth all practice afterwards. And as a Law is Law before practice, so it is Law against practice; yet because practice may be an Expositor of Law, especially where the words may seem general. I shall shew from Age to Age, that without their consent they could not be charged.

From the practice of the Kings themselves, even in all Ages, that on extraordinary occasions they have resorted unto Parliament; and when they could not do good by that, then they have made many borrowings, as appears by the Parliament Rolls. What other courses they have taken, your Lordships have heard it upon the former Argument. And when the King did receive these Supplies, it was expressed that they came voluntarily, and with protestation that those things should not be drawn into example.

I shall go now to the practice on the Subjects part.

First, I shall go as high as the Saxon time; That of Danegelt did begin by a common consent: And in the very Laws in Lambert, it is said Statutum est. Though it did not always signify a Statute, yet when it was written by one that knew the Law, and wrote of the Law, it must be so. Tilburienfis saith, As it was the Act of the King, so it was the Petition of the Commons, Statutum est a regibus, still the King. It is strange in that time of Esheldred, when Danegelt was so great and common as it was, that the Subject being easily drawn unto it, that the King should not ask, when he might have it for asking.

But this Danegelt being raised by Esheldred upon emergent occasions, as it was not like to be always, so the provision was not for all times. After him came in some of the Danish Kings, and they continued the Danegelt: And what became of those that were the Collectors of the Danegelt between King Esheldred and the Confessor, appears in Huntington: And how the people did decry it in general. Then it was laid down, ut gravissimum, as appears in Ingulphus.

Edward the Confessor, he laid it down in the Conquest; still they go on with the Danegelt. It was part of the terms with several Kings, that it should be laid down: And King Stephen did promise to lay it down; though notwithstanding they did ever now and then take it up. In Henry the Second's time yet still more complaints, and that was left out of the Charter of King John. The use of all is this, that though there were a practice under pretence for the defence of the Kingdom, yet the People did decry it. It was not such a practice as could bring in a Law.

When the Danegelt was thus now laid down for the time of King John, H. 3. and E. 1. in which times practice for Shipping will not be material; for in all these times the very Shipping itself was decried. Parl. 25 E. 1. There the very charges of the Subject for Shipping were the complaint. The Complaint is the thing I am upon.

After 25 E. 1. and the Statute de Tall. &c. the course of their proceedings did alter; for before in 24. he sent forth Writs under a great Penalty: And 29 E. 1. m. 10. he contracts for Ships, and they go at his charges.

P. 36 E. 1. R. 35. dorf.

Anno

1637.

Reignald de Gray; That when the Scots entred the Kingdom, he was commanded to bring Seamen out of their Counties, and he durst not without Money; and thereupon he had Money out of the Exchequer. But the Answer was, This was for Scotland.

For that there is no doubt this War was at home; for in 26. the Scots had entred the Kingdom.

Br^y T^y 32 E. 1. Ro. 11.

I come now to E. 2. There is not much against us, but for us. This I shall observe, That the first Writs that went out was 9 E. 2. It is true, a Mandamus went out for Shipping, and against an Enemy, and for defence of the Kingdom. But how? Not a Mandamus firmiter Injunctus; nor Sub pœna forisfacturæ; but a Mandamus rogantes; and the means of compelling; quatenus honorem nostrum & saluationem vestram diligitis. So you see how the course of the Law altered in that time.

I come to E. 3. for I will but touch upon every time, and offer but one thing to shew the practice in it; as I find a Statute in the beginning of his Reign concerning provision made for War, so I find an Execution, Ro. Sco. 1 E. 3. m. 8. There went out two Writs, and they were concerning raising of Shipping; and in respect of the Scots entering that year: This is that I put it for, to shew that upon that occasion, 1 E. 3. Souldiers were not paid, although for the war in Scotland. It doth recite that the Scots had entred the Land that year, and did make further preparation, and if they could not have their Peace on their own terms, they would proceed: consideratis etiam periculis, for it was in Articulo necessitatis, He giveth a Command that there should be Ships, but it is a Mandamus rogantes, nothing at all for compulsion or forfeiture in the Writ, but sicut honorem nostrum. It appears by the Writ that he said He had sent Money in that time for victualling of the Souldiers: And this very Writ was pro saluatione Regni, and that we could not be safe without Shipping; and this was in a poor and innocent time.

I will not say, That in all the Actions of E. 3. he never broke this Rule. Your Lordships know what wars he had, and what necessities, and what those necessities brought him to? But he was so far from justifying himself, as it appears by Daniel's History; that he sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury to pray for him, and desired the People not to think ill of him for laying those charges upon them in the point of necessity.

12 E. 3. Rot. Alm^o. Your Lordships shall see upon that acknowledgment how he began to alter his course.

Parl. Roll. 13 E. 3. Though he laid charges before, now he calls a Parliament, and desires supplies for Shipping that way; and that acknowledgment, 12 E. 3. will answer home that famous year of 10 E. 3.

Next, my Lords, to shew the decrying of the People in this time of Shipping it self. In the Rolls of 21 and 31 E. 3. there the People said they were not to bear the charge; so it was; no practice, for the Commons did decry it.

That for Hobellers, they were at the charge of the County before 25. but they were complained of in Parliament, wherein the Statute of Car. 13. 25 E. 3. was made.

But all that I aim at in this is, Whatever the contrary practice was to out-balance it by the contrary opinion and claim of the Kingdom, and that practice I hope shall not be able to make it Law.

I come now to the time of R. 2. For his time I shall remember but one, Tr. 7. R. 2. m. 15. de contribuendo ad custodiam Maris, there is a recital of Danegelt, and that the Subsidies that the King had was not sufficient, and therefore commanded an Aid but to do it gratuitè. I observe all Ship Writs do end in the time of E. 3. one or two perhaps may be after, and therefore I do end with the practice of those times; but from those times downward to H. 8. this was offered, and not denied, that there are several Records, how the Kings of England, both at Sea and Land, did bear the charge of defence; and all the Answer was, That it appears not how the Kings did raise those Moneys.

For the time of H. 4. 2 H. 4. Parl. Roll. complaint of the Commons for building of Gallies for defence; and the complaint was, That it was done without consent in Parliament, which ought not to be; and this Commission is repealed. This shews the decrying of the Subject, and that the practice hath been, That the defence was at the charge of the King.

I have thus finished the Negative part of the Argument, that the Subject is not compelled to find Shipping for defence at their own charge.

Next, for the Positive part, That the charge both in cases ordinary and extraordinary, lyen on the King, and that by the Common Law; and that the King hath provision and consideration for it.

My Lords, for provision regularly, whatsoever Estate is in the King in the politick Capacity, is in him as in Rege, and not in his natural capacity; and what is in him so, is for the benefit of the Kingdom, and that hath ever been the ground of the Acts of Resumption; and some of Resumption made by H. 7. where Lands are aliened by him, he made a Resumption; and those many Priviledges that the King hath, are in him as King in his politick Capacity. All which Cases are put together in Calvin's Case, in the 4th Report, and not only in England, but in all Christendom, all Estates that are in Princes are held for the benefit of the Kingdom, as well as for themselves; and that is not denied by King James in his Answer to Perront. He would have it absolutely to be to that purpose. All that is to the advantage and honour of the King is for the benefit of the Kingdom.

My Lords, from this consideration of the interest of the Kingdom in the Estate of Princes, the Parliaments have so often offered their Service to the King. And the Parliament in former times did require a hand in naming of a Treasurer; they called it Antiquus mos, and he was 5 E. 3. in a Parliament; but this repealed in 15 E. 3. And for ancient Lands in the Crown, they were not devisable out for that reason, and that none should buy the Land of the Crown, for it was not alienable in that time.

My Lords, in the form of our Government the King by supposition of Law had all these, by the Books cited by Mr. Sr. John, all was in the Crown, and being so, they were for the Service of the 1637.

Anno

Kingdom, and that is the reason that all Land is held immediately or mediately of the Crown.

As the Lord of a Mannor, when he hath a Circuit of Ground, letts part to one man to Plough in Knights-Service, and part he keeps himself; So the King, when all was in him, he disposed of some for himself, and some for the Service of the Kingdom. Hence ariseth the Tenures originally: As they kept in their hands Palaces and Demesnes, so for publick Service they made distribution of certain Lands for publick defence, some by Knights Service, some by Scutage, some by Cornage; and so for Castle-guard and grand Serjeancy, all for the Service of the Kingdom; and Tenures by Baronagium, which was an eminent Service, as appears by the Book of the Knights Fee.

Petty Serjeancy for meaner Offices, and grand Serjeancy for greater Offices.

Divers Lands were given to find Ships, as in Doomsday, besides the Cinque Ports, which were to find a certain number; and so some Inland Towns did find Ships: But how? as by Tenure, not generally as Subjects. And though Mr. St. John did urge one or two Presidents by way of Example, yet he said not that there were no more. Mr. Solicitor did give an Answer, That all those came out of the Estate, what was that charge to the Publick.

It is true, if the King had that for himself originally, he said well; but if it was in him originally pro Regno, as well as for himself, then it is otherwise. But it hath been said, What are a few Men, or one Ship?

But it appears in Doomsday, that the King had a great Navy. There were 60000 Knights Fees in the Conqueror's time: And though divers Serjeancies are turned into Rents, yet the Revenue is the same.

I shew it for this, that there was a provision in the satisfaction of our frame of Government.

But for the guarding of the Sea, more particularly, The King for the guarding of the Seas hath all the natural profit of the Sea, as all great Fishes, Whales, Sturgeon, &c. and all other Profits of the Sea, if the King would take them. And so Letters of Mart, and though they are got into the Subjects hands, yet originally they did belong to the King.

So the old Customs by the Common Law, An- tiqua consuetudo, and so holdeth Sir John Davies in the Customs of Ireland. So Prizes and Impositions are for the defence of the Sea.

So Tunnage and Poundage, which was originally granted, sometimes for ordinary, but oftentimes upon emergent occasions, it appears that it was granted pro Salvatione Regni, and not granted amongst other things, but by itself.

But of latter times, when it was settled on the Princes for lives, then it was for extraordinary defence, and to have Money in readines for an instant occasion. For it is said in the very Grant to King James, that the King must not be without Money, and therefore towards his charges upon an instant he must have it. And though it was granted for particular occasions, yet that is enough that it was granted on great occasions; and this was granted out of their love to him: The words of the Act 1. Jac. speaks of a sudden Invasion; now whether this is by Sea or Land, it is general.

My Lords, I shall now upon the whole observe what I have made good, either upon those general Statutes, That the King shall lay no charge, or rather by the Books, That the King cannot charge for little things; or upon the practice of times, where in every time the King hath been at the charge, and where it hath been on the Subject, they have decried it. How you, my Lords, believe it in point of right, I leave it.

My Lords, I shall go on to the Answer of Mr. Solicitor, I have made a Reply to all his Answers to our Positive part: It remains that I should offer an Answer to his Positive part.

First, I shall give a general Answer to his whole Argument: For if the case be, as we conceive it is, that the point of Salus Regni is not now the Question, then the Argument will fall off.

How far Salus Regni is in the case notwithstanding, I shall argue over, and examin the nature of his proofs.

I am sure he had none from Parliament, either Act or Declaration of both Houses; what there is, is against him. The Answer of the King, with the Judgment of both Houses, is a main thing in point of Right.

I did not receive any material legal Record, but that of the Abbot of Roberts-bridge, nor any Book Cases in point where it is said, The King shall charge, but the Book 13 E. 4. I shall Answer these first, and practice next, and reasons last.

To begin with the Case of the Abbot of Roberts-bridge, 25 E. 1. which opened by both sides, The Abbot had Land agisted ad custodiam Maris, and in an Action brought the Abbot pleads he had found a Horse for the same Land. Here is an Argument that the Abbot doth admit that the King might agist ad custodiam Maris. Now if that admittance in this Case should be of any Authority to alter your Judgment, I shall leave it.

The Abbot's Counsel did no more then a discreet Counsel would have done.

If an Action be brought for words, and it appears the words will not lye; If the Abbot had a Plea that he was agisted to find a Horse, what reason had he to put himself on matter of Law with the King: So the Authority can be nothing against us; and at the last the Case did rest there, and went no further.

For the Book Case, 13 E. 4. where it is said, That the King can lay a charge; that Book is with reference to Toll, and such things are nothing to our main Case: For the main Case in that Book will prove strongest against the King. The main Case was concerning a new Office of Measurage erected with a Fee, this was pro bono publico, yet an Action brought; it begun in 11. then cometh the Parliament in 13. and this was complained of to be against the Statute, that provides that no Aids should be laid.

The Answer is, Let the Statutes be observed.

To the Case of Toll, which is for common necessity to maintain Traffick, and because there must be a power in some body, and without a Fee not possible to maintain the charge: But in our Case here is no common necessity; here is a thing that may seldom or never happen. The ground of granting Toll in other Cases is, That it is pro bono publico, yet not for common necessity, the King could not do it.

Next, the Toll is not so much as a charge, yet it is quid pro quo. In the fifth Report it is said there, That it is no charge, the benefit in the thing itself will quit the charge.

Again,

Anno 1637. Again, The Toll is but inter minima, this is of weight. And though an Argument will hold a minori ad Majus in the negative, because a man cannot do a less, therefore not a greater. But it holds not in affirmatives, because he can lay those, therefore greater, non sequitur.

Next for Toll, No man is forced to pay Toll, because no man is compelled to come to the Market. If he will come voluntarily and receive the benefit, then reason to pay it, but this is not our Case.

Lastly, The Law doth allow in this necessity, in case of Toll, a power to grant; yet the Law doth not leave the King absolute Judge of the quantum: For if the Toll be not proportionable to the benefit, the Patent is to be denied, as in a Case of a Fine uncertain. Now, my Lords, in our Case here is no Judge of the proportion but the King, so the Argument is thus: If the Law admit not the King to charge, but in common necessity, then not in Cases which may happen seldom or never; if not in small things, then not in greater.

I come now to practice.

And for practice where there is no opinion either for Records or Books to warrant it, it is something weak especially when no urgent occasion.

For the practice, I shall give this general answer: If I can satisfy your Lordships by Authority of Parliament, how the Law standeth, the contrary practice either before or after, is not material: And for that, I must leave it too; your Lordships have heard, we have read the words of the Acts of Parliament, and explained our meaning and brought them home to our Case; it will be hard to make an exception by exposition, if the Act be general.

For, my Lords, for the practice it consists of two parts.

1. Arrays of men.

2. Of Shipping, and for Shipping de Navibus congregandis, or munientis, and inveniendis.

For practice of Arrays, I shall lay them by, and give them a general answer for very few or none that went from the beginning of R. 2. are but only to see if they be Armed & prompti, and that is made by the Statute of Winchester. It is one thing, to see that they be armed and in readiness to go; and another thing, at whose charge they shall go. That appears not out of those Arrays. There is no doubt but the Subject on the Stat. of Winchester ought to be ready with Arms, and in his Country to make defence, and upon occasion he ought to go out of his County, but at whose charge that is the Question. And if those Writs of Array were the same with the Commission now to the Lieutenant, yet I know not how, this is my Argument in the Case. And so your Lordships see that a great number of the Arrays 9, and 10 fall off this way.

But if Arrays had been and at the Subjects charge, yet if against the Statute I leave how far practice shall be an Argument.

But for Shipping for Writs de Navibus congregandis, those are nothing, for the matter is whether they shall be paid before they go, and many of the Ship Writs are of that nature. No doubt but the King may command ad congregand. Naves to use them upon occasion, but the matter is at whose charge, and for all the Writs that are to find Ships, I hope those Writs are not concluding.

My Lords, For those Writs that are sumptibus propriis a Writ, and no more without execution is not a practice sufficient to make a Law: nor more than in a common evidence when to prove a Right by usage.

Now whether or no they have shewed a general execution by obtaining and doing it at their own charge, or Money levied upon them, I leave it to your Lordships, I see no proof. It may be such Writs might be, but that there was such an execution of them at their own charge, or money levied on them, we see no such thing. And if Writs were to find Shipping in those times, it is like the Moneys, were returned by the Country, and so the Receipt might shew it, especially of the In-land Counties, where nothing could be had from them but Money.

But, my Lords, to examine on those grounds whereby a practice must make a Law.

If this charge be within the words of the Law, no practice can take this out of the way of exception.

The practice that must either shew what was the Common-Law, and so generalis consuetudo, or which must declare the meaning of a Statute by a constant consent, which must be of those that could consent, and those which did not express a dissent.

We are now upon enquiry as on practice, though the King cannot generally lay a charge, yet whether he can do it in this Case to make an exception of Law. It must be done by use and practice; as to make a Law: practice doth not make Common Law, but as it is a proof of a constant consent.

For all Laws are made two waies: First, by express consent in Parliament, or by use from time to time, whereby it doth appear this was excepted, and the use becometh a Common-Law, so as still if a use do make a Law, such use it must be as must prove a tacite consent.

Next, as the use must bind the Kingdom, so it must be general over all the Kingdom: It is not enough to be at some times, and seldom, but it must be semper eadem practice.

And lastly, It must be reasonable, I shall examine on those Rules, for these are undoubted Rules to examine a Law by.

The Writs of H. 3. E. 1. and E. 3. in all those times, the practice as to this will not make a Law; here will be no proof of a consent. First, for H. 3. to 28 E. 1. here the Subject, for as before the Complaints which begot the Charter of King John was upon the charges; so afterwards till 25 E. 1. the Law of the liberty of the Subject was not settled: For though King John did grant his Charter, yet the Pope did dispence with him, and he broke it, so it did rest till 9 H. 3. So all this time the Subjects of England, were under power, and what in that time he might do by Dureffe was not a consent.

Then 9 H. 3. He makes a Charter, yet from time to time he broke it, though he desired to be excommunicated, if he did it, and so it rested until 25 E. 1. and therewith much ado was gotten a Confirmatio Chartar., yet this satisfied not all till 28 E. 1. Magna Chart. not observed. I could shew diverse Cases point blank against these.

The Statute 28 E. 1. saith expressly that this Charter was not observed. And it was once a punishment for those that were the breakers. Now when Acts of Parliament declare that the Law of the liberty of England, was not observed, I shall not need to shew any Record how it was broken.

So that all the practice in Henry the thirds time, though much, yet that will not serve the turn, for

As the Lord of a Mannor, when he hath a Circuit of Ground, lets part to one man to Plough in Knights-Service, and part he keeps himself; So the King, when all was in him, he disposed of some for himself, and some for the Service of the Kingdom. To begin with the Case of the Abbot of Roberts-bridge, 25 E. 1. which opened by both sides; The Abbot had Land agisted ad custodiam Maris, and in an Action brought the Abbot pleads he had found a Horse for the same Land. Here is an Argument that the Abbot doth admit that the King might agist ad custodiam Maris. Now if that admittance in this Case should be of any Authority to alter your Judgment, I shall leave it.

The Abbot's Counsel did no more then a discreet Counsel would have done.

If an Action be brought for words, and it appears the words will not lye; If the Abbot had a Plea that he was agisted to find a Horse, what reason had he to put himself on matter of Law with the King: So the Authority can be nothing against us; and at the last the Case did rest there, and went no further.

For the Book Case, 13 E. 4. where it is said, That the King can lay a charge; that Book is with reference to Toll, and such things are nothing to our main Case: For the main Case in that Book will prove strongest against the King. The main Case was concerning a new Office of Measurage erected with a Fee, this was pro bono publico, yet an Action brought; it begun in 11. then cometh the Parliament in 13. and this was complained of to be against the Statute, that provides that no Aids should be laid.

The Answer is, Let the Statutes be observed.

To the Case of Toll, which is for common necessity to maintain Traffick, and because there must be a power in some body, and without a Fee not possible to maintain the charge: But in our Case here is no common necessity; here is a thing that may seldom or never happen. The ground of granting Toll in other Cases is, That it is pro bono publico, yet not for common necessity, the King could not do it.

Next, the Toll is not so much as a charge, yet it is quid pro quo. In the fifth Report it is said there, That it is no charge, the benefit in the thing itself will quit the charge.

Again,

Anno 1637. Again, The Toll is but inter minima, this is of weight. And though an Argument will hold a minori ad Majus in the negative, because a man cannot do a less, therefore not a greater. But it holds not in affirmatives, because he can lay those, therefore greater, non sequitur.

Next for Toll, No man is forced to pay Toll, because no man is compelled to come to the Market. If he will come voluntarily and receive the benefit, then reason to pay it, but this is not our Case.

Lastly, The Law doth allow in this necessity, in case of Toll, a power to grant; yet the Law doth not leave the King absolute Judge of the quantum: For if the Toll be not proportionable to the benefit, the Patent is to be voided, as in a Case of a Fine uncertain. Now, my Lords, in our Case here is no Judge of the proportion but the King, so the Argument is thus: If the Law admit not the King to charge, but in common necessity, then not in Cases which may happen seldom or never; if not in small things, then not in greater.

I come now to practice.

And for practice where there is no opinion either for Records or Books to warrant it, it is something weak especially when no urgent occasion.

For the practice, I shall give this general answer: If I can satisfy your Lordships by Authority of Parliament, how the Law standeth, the contrary practice either before or after, is not material: And for that, I must leave it too; your Lordships have heard, we have read the words of the Acts of Parliament, and explained our meaning and brought them home to our Case; it will be hard to make an exception by exposition, if the Act be general.

For, my Lords, for the practice it consists of two parts.

1. Arrays of men.
2. Of Shipping, and for Shipping de Navibus congregandis, or muniendis, and inveniendis.

For practice of Arrays, I shall lay them by, and give them a general answer for very few or none that went from the beginning of R. 2. are but only to see if they be Armed & prompti, and that is made by the Statute of Winchester. It is one thing, to see that they be armed and in readiness to go; and another thing, at whose charge they shall go. That appears not out of those Arrays. There is no doubt but the Subject on the Stat. of Winchester ought to be ready with Arms, and in his Country to make defence, and upon occasion he ought to go out of his County, but at whose charge that is the Question. And if those Writs of Array were the same with the Commission now to the Lieutenant, yet I know not how, this is my Argument in the Case. And so your Lordships see that a great number of the Arrays 9, and 10 fall off this way.

But if Arrays had been and at the Subjects charge, yet if against the Statute I leave how far practice shall be an Argument.

But for Shipping for Writs de Navibus congregandis, those are nothing, for the matter is whether they shall be paid before they go, and many of the Ship Writs are of that nature. No doubt but the King may command ad congregand² Naves to use them upon occasion, but the matter is at whose charge, and for all the Writs that are to find Ships, I hope those Writs are not concluding.

My Lords, For those Writs that are sumptibus propriis a Writ, and no more without execution is not a practice sufficient to make a Law: nor more than in a common evidence when to prove a Right by usage.

Now whether or no they have shewed a general execution by obtaining and doing it at their own charge, or Money levied upon them, I leave it to your Lordships, I see no proof. It may be such Writs might be, but that there was such an execution of them at their own charge, or money levied on them, we see no such thing. And if Writs were to find Shipping in those times, it is like the Moneys, were returned by the Country, and so the Receipt might shew it, especially of the In-land Counties, where nothing could be had from them but Money.

But, my Lords, to examine on those grounds whereby a practice must make a Law.

If this charge be within the words of the Law, no practice can take this out of the way of exception.

The practice that must either shew what was the Common-Law, and so generalis consuetudo, or which must declare the meaning of a Statute by a constant consent, which must be of those that could consent, and those which did not express a dissent.

We are now upon enquiry as on practice, though the King cannot generally lay a charge, yet whether he can do it in this Case to make an exception of Law. It must be done by use and practice; as to make a Law: practice doth not make Common Law, but as it is a proof of a constant consent.

For all Laws are made two waies: First, by express consent in Parliament, or by use from time to time, whereby it doth appear this was excepted, and the use becometh a Common-Law, so as still if a use do make a Law, such use it must be as must prove a tacite consent.

Next, as the use must bind the Kingdom, so it must be general over all the Kingdom: It is not enough to be at some times, and seldom, but it must be semper eadem practice.

And lastly, It must be reasonable, I shall examine on those Rules, for these are undoubted Rules to examine a Law by.

The Writs of H. 3. E. 1. and E. 3. in all those times, the practice as to this will not make a Law; here will be no proof of a consent. First, for H. 3. to 28 E. 1. here the Subject, for as before the Complaints which begot the Charter of King John was upon the charges; so afterwards till 25 E. 1. the Law of the liberty of the Subject was not settled: For though King John did grant his Charter, yet the Pope did dispence with him, and he broke it, so it did rest till 9 H. 3. So all this time the Subjects of England, were under power, and what in that time he might do by Dureffe was not a consent.

Then 9 H. 3. He makes a Charter, yet from time to time he broke it, though he desired to be excommunicated, if he did it, and so it rested until 25 E. 1. and therewith much ado was gotten a Confirmatio Chartar², yet this satisfied not all till 28 E. 1. Magna Chart. not observed. I could shew diverse Cases point blank against these.

The Statute 28 E. 1. saith expressly that this Charter was not observed. And it was once a punishment for those that were the breakers. Now when Acts of Parliament declare that the Law of the liberty of England, was not observed, I shall not need to shew any Record how it was broken.

So that all the practice in Henry the thirds time, though much, yet that will not serve the turn, for

Anno 1637.

for that Government was more of force than Law.

But for that of Henry the third's time, I shall give a further answer. The very Courts of Justice were shut up then, and it was in flagrante Bello.

And for E. 1. all the main ones considerable, were immediately before the making of that Statute, if rightly apprehended, they did particularly occasion that Statute: so that the Subject did deny it; and here is a dissent.

After 28 little considerable, and Edward the First, when he made 28 E. 1. when the Charter was confirmed, yet he had his salvo jure Corone, which would not please the Subject, and afterwards notwithstanding he made some grants in Parliament, yet sometimes he did revoke them, your Lordships know what a great revocation he made; but as some of our Historians observe, when he had occasion of War and Money he did grant, but otherwise did not, so that in all his time the Subject did not consent, but as much as he could he did dissent, and in 25 you see how the practice did alter for command of Ships.

Next to E. 2. for his time, we see how he went. In the beginning he sends but a Mandamus regantes. In the end of his time whether his Government was more of Law than of power, I leave to your Lordships. That little practice that way (if it do come home) is not sufficient to make a Law who was under will.

Tempore E. 3. For him in his best time, you see how he went, he laid not the charge on the Subject at the First, afterwards there is no Age wherein there were so many complaints as in his time. And from the first to the last, and not only in this of Shipping, which as often as it was, there was still complaint, but in impositions on Merchants, whereupon Latimer was punished, so that in point of charge the Subject did inforce him upon it in time of necessity. So that in those times the practice will not be any Argument against us.

That of 10 E. 3. he confessed that he laid too heavy charges on the Subject, and did ask forgiveness, so here was no assent, but a several dissent by their several complaints.

And if I take off these three Kings Reigns, I take off all the force of practice concerning Shipping: For from that time afterwards, you shall find very little, for what cometh afterwards is but for matter of Arrays.

The next thing is, That every practice that must bring in a Law, must be constant and continual so long together as may bring it into a custom. Now out of what your Lordships have heard, if you conceive that in the time of those three Kings, that they had one way and the Subject another, then there is no constant practice to lay it on the Subject.

And for Arrays, I conceive them to be no part of the Case.

And for the next, If practice make a Law it must be general through the Kingdom, for this is our Case. We are in an In-land County, and observe how few Writs we have that went over the whole Kingdom. Nay, have you any that proveth it home indeed, that they went to some In-land County, but that it went through all the Kingdom you shew not.

Now if you will have a practice to bring in a Law, you must not bring your practice into one part, but over the Kingdom, and not a practice by pieces, at one time one part; and at another time another part, for one part of the In-land alone will not be justifiable, for that were to lay a charge on the one for the maintenance of the whole, and that is against reason, and the reason. Car. 13. of this Writ so to charge the whole Kingdom, you must shew that they went over the whole Kingdom, and were obeyed by the whole Kingdom, for obedience in some part will not bind all.

So once or twice will not do it, for the Writs which have been produced, many of them went to the Sea Towns only. Next, My Lords, admit that the practice had been constant from King John's time down to Henry the third, so to this day, under favour, as the Case standeth, your Lordships cannot find such practice as could now introduce a Law.

The custom which must be of a Mannor, you must not shew the beginning of it, that within time of memory the same was not so true if the time had been long; and I cannot shew when it hath not been, that is time out of mind.

To examine this upon the Rule, it hath been said from the time of H. 2. Danegelt was taken; true, it was taken de facto, but not de jure.

The Subject was not at that time charged both with Danegelt and Shipping too; then our course of charging the Subject to find Shipping, must begin since that time.

But peradventure it will be said as Sir Henry Spelman in his gloss, when Danegelt was done this other should come in.

But peradventure it will be said, This is enough to shew that this begun but in memory, then it is but to see by what warrant of Law this begun.

If Danegelt had not been legal, then this to come in lieu of that which was not legal, is not sufficient. Now for Danegelt, it was not legal, and so fallit fundamentum. If it had been legal, yet not so pursued in the course as is legal, so that there is one ground for it, either on right or wrong.

That Danegelt, when it went, it went over all the Kingdom, and in a proportion to all, yet this was commonly to Sea Towns, but sometimes to some In-land Towns.

If Danegelt were on the Land and certain, this on the person and uncertain.

This respects both Lands and Goods, the other not; there is no such assurance of equal charge in this as in the other.

If Danegelt had been legal, yet whether this coming in lieu of Danegelt, being of a far different nature be legal, I leave it.

Next, to examine it upon another Reason, upon the Reason of the practice. If the practice went over the whole Kingdom from time to time, there was the more equality; but if the practice went over the Kingdom but by degrees, sometimes to one part, sometimes to another, though over all the Kingdom at times, yet this is not sufficient to make a Law, for that Act which is unreasonable in itself, and not agreeable to Justice, will never make a Law, for a Law will never arise out of an Act illegal. Now, my Lords, when a charge is laid upon a part of the Kingdom, which the whole should bear, it is not reasonable. I will not deny but in Mannors, where you are to have a Custom, a Custom sometimes on one piece, and sometimes on another, this may be good, though it go not over the whole Mannor, because in this Act there is nothing against Justice, for here one man doth not bear for the whole, but otherwise in our Case.

My Lords, I shall go further, as for the In-land Towns, so for the Sea Towns, we do not find a general practice of all Sea Towns, sometimes on on some, if on all, yet not all oftentimes.

My Lords, Admitting Arrays would be material in this Case, as I conceive they will not, yet under favour, they will be no Precedent for defending of the Sea; the Case doth differ.

For though the King be Lord both of Sea and Land, and hath in them both the sole Dominion: So in the Sea he hath the whole property, and in a manner all the considerable profit and privilege. The Subject hath but the passage of the Sea, and the minima to take Fish not considerable in point of benefit, but for the Land that is our own, we have a property in it, that is our own, and the land of the Kingdom is the House of the Kingdom. As for the charge of the land to find Shipping, there will be a great deal of difference between Sea Towns and In-land Towns. As they that live in Sea Towns are in more danger from the Sea: so they have more profit and privileges, and that is the reason of that in the Parliament, 13 E. 3. that the Sea Towns should do it in regard of their profits and privileges.

And for the Command to find Ships, the positive Law is to make those provide Ships which are chargeable as your Sea Towns; and for In-land Towns to find Arms, because both are not fitted alike, there is no reason why they should be charged alike.

Upon this Reason is the Case of Beverly put before 2 R. 2. where the complaint is, that they were charged for Shipping in being a dry Town, they say they were charged indebitum.

10 E. 3. Shoreham they plead they never found Arms but Shipping and a good discharge. And in Mat. Paris upon War with France, the Sea Towns complain and desire help; so that the burthen lies on them, if on any.

My Lords, I have thus gone over in the general way as well as I can, and endeavour to answer the practice. To have gone over all, would have required longer time than your Lordships can spare.

The Reasons only now rest to be examined.

For if no full Authority nor sufficient practice, Reason alone will not Argue against a Fundamental Rule: For we are not now to examine on reason what is fit, and what not, but to see what is the truth.

The first reason is, that Salus populi suprema lex. The Question is not, What we are to do by necessity, but what is the positive Law of the Land. The Question must be now as before, What power is in the King? and our Fore-fathers in that time of Peace and Government, did leave in the Crown not in case of necessity and publick danger, when with them Salus populi was suprema lex, and upon that they did ground the Rule of Government.

In this Case, whether or no in their consideration they did conceive for the publick good to leave the power in the King, or not to lay a charge on the people, there the Rule came in Salus Reipublice suprema lex, and that which they looked on most was the benefit of the multitude. So, my Lords, it is not now to dispute, whether better or worse, but that it was.

And to shew that there is no such great necessity as can countervail the possibility of prejudice the other way.

If there do come such a danger, then the Subject is at that time under a Law of preservation of life, liberty, and all which make the Subject as willing to obey as submit to Government in the Creation. This Law is of a higher force than any positive Law can be.

But admit that this cease of this Rule, that all positive Laws of property yield to the Law of necessity, I admit nothing, though I might admit much and not prejudice the Case. Though no positive Law do charge, yet in case of eminent danger, if I should say my private property is become publick, it is no mischief, for so it is in some cases of the King: For at this time of danger, the King and Subjects are under a Law of absolute necessity and publick safety. In all humane reason, when the danger is in proxima potentia, we may prevent it thus, as if another mans House be on Fire, mine may be pulled down to stop it. So that we may see by what grounds we do go in case of absolute necessity.

If the King do command any thing concerning the property of Goods in respect of danger. The execution may not be by any positive Law, meerly which in such cases do cease in furor belli, for those are Acted by Formalities, & inter Arma silent leges.

And in these cases, as the King may command my property, so may the Subject command the property of another. The Books are so, 8 E. 4. for hindring the landing of an Enemy, Bulwarks may be built on my Land without assent; so the power is not only in the King in these cases of necessity, but in a Subject; and the Books say not that the power is only in the King, but I can do it, and the Law of necessity is the War-rant.

Then, my Lords, it resteth considerable in this Case, what shall be said to be a time of necessity; I speak still by way of admittance, for I grant nothing.

It must be in a danger now acting, or in proxima potentia. As fire, though not burning, yet ready to burn, that is, there must be a War, furor Belli.

Note, That when the King makes proclamation of War, or the King in the Field, and that indeed was not Mr. St. John's meaning; it was taken further than he meant it.

It must be in such a danger when this power is of necessity to be used, as in case of Fire, there must not only be fear of Fire, for one House must be first actually on fire before the House can be pulled down; withal such a danger, that if this be not pulled down, the other will be lost.

And as in case of an Enemy, a subject out of fear of an enemy cannot build a Bulwark but when he is a coming, so that none of these cases will match our case.

The property yieldeth not in fear of danger, but such a danger as help must come in nunc aut nunquam.

This time is not when the King will think that there is occasion to exact this power, as in the Case in 88. Though the State and Queen did command the burning of those Goods and provision if an enemy landed, which was a lawful command, and justifiable to be done, so they did land, but could not command them to burn their Corn before an Enemy did come; if he landed, then to burn the Corn.

Your Lordships know a King may command in case of danger, destruction of all Suburbs, rather than an Enemy should come in. But if there be a fear only of War, that the King should command it, how far that is justifiable, I leave. All this difference appears out of the Case of the Gravesend Barge, Duffield's Case, 12 Jac. If there be a Storm, or a Leak in a Ship, that the danger be actual, it is justifiable for the Master to throw

Car. 13.

Anno 1637. throw out the Goods: But if he see a Cloud arise, and out of a fear of a Storm throw out the Goods, I doubt on a Jury which way this would go with the Barge-man: But if a Storm do come, or Leak spring, in that case the Barge-man may do it.

So you may see upon what Law my Property yieldeth.

That Position generally taken as it is laid, may be of a great deal of consequence, for it doth not rest solely there upon yielding of the Law of property: For if all positive Laws do cease in that danger than the positive Law of my liberty, and person also. Now whether or no you conceive all Laws of liberty and person cease in this danger, when the danger was but conceived and not actually, that I leave. If that Rule be general, then why not the other?

So we may see the difference from our Case: For in that Case there is no manner of loss to the Subject, for he shall have allowance for their loss, or make suit to Parliament, and they can recompence it; for what is taken for the publick good, is but borrowed.

As in case of Shipping, if my Goods be cast out to save the Ship, every one of the Ship is to bear a proportion: so in our case, either the King must do it, or else the Parliament, so there is no prejudice.

So upon the whole, my answer is, Admit the Rule of Salus populi suprema lex; yet the Law of Property doth not yield, until an actual enemy, or Flagrans Bellum. It is not enough that there be but an apprehension.

There were divers other reasons urged, but those two of Salus populi suprema lex, and private property must yield to publick safety, were the two rationes Cogentes, the other were but a pari & a simili, and all those I shall pass over, which were only for convenience, as the granting of Toll, or a Corporation to make Ordinances for the good of the City; all those will not come home in this matter. My Lords, in all these Cases a Minore ad majus non valet, negativum valet.

But there are only two reasons urged, which do require an answer. The trust that the Law puts in the King in great matters.

The shutting of the Ports.

The Droit Royal of War and Peace.

For the shutting of the Ports, there is more difference in point of prejudice of the King than the Subject. The King cannot shut the Ports but to his own prejudice. Again, the shutting of the Ports, without cause of necessity, the King hath the loss as well as we, for by that he loseth his Custom; and by shutting them, he can gain nothing at all. And besides there is no Law at all that hinders him from that: But there is a Law saith that he shall not charge.

The next, is the Droit Royal of War and Peace.

It is one thing to say the King can make War and Peace, another thing to say he can charge.

In War and Peace the King is equally charged with the Subject; nay, more and for those things there is no great reasons, but that in the first frame of Government, they might be well suffered.

For that case touched of the King's power over Coinage, in that case there was a necessity to counterpoise the like thing in another state: In that case the King loseth, and we lose.

The King may dispence with Penal Statutes, and make them as none; Doth any Law say he shall not do it?

The Reason differeth in that Case, there is a common necessity that there should be a power in some body, for Acts of Parliament are but leges temporis. It is one thing for the King to have power in point of favour, and another thing in point of charge; so in case of pardon there is no hurt, if he do pardon, God forbid he should not have power of mercy.

My Lords, There are in the case two points more, which I shall move.

Whether or no, Admit the King could command the Subjects to find Ships, he can give power to the Sheriff to make Assessment? The ground is upon this, that in all cases of publick charges the Law takes a special care to make an equality. In Parliaments of old they were always careful to make provision that way, as upon Fifteenths and Subsidies. And in Danegelt, they went in such a way as there could be no inequality, they went by Taxing of Hides. Now if the Law do make this a legal way of charge, it allows the like way for Assessment that is allowed in other cases, such a way as wherein there can be no inconvenience. Now how a Sheriff hath that knowledge to lay it on mens Estates and Land, I cannot tell.

My Lords, Not to leave a power in the King to lay an Arbitrary charge: But in the Sheriff to lay more or less on any man, though the Law may trust the King, yet it is a Question whether it will trust the Sheriff.

Nay, I ask, If a Sheriff be an Officer of Law in this Case, yet the King may command any man, as well Assessments are usually made by others, and not so much by the Sheriff: So as I conceive this is a thing that doth properly belong not to the Sheriff, he is not an Officer sworn; And it resteth not only in the Sheriff, but in the Under-Sheriff: So that if the Law doth trust the King; yet whether or no this be the way, I leave it. If a hundred be charged, they have waies to lay it on themselves.

The next thing is this, Admit a Levy may be well made, whether the Money thus paid, may be brought into the Exchequer by a Scire facias? I do think that this is the first Writ that ever was in that kind; I do not find it regularly.

My Lords, I think it is hard to find where there is a Writ that commands and prescribes the manner of Levy. It not only gives you power to Levy, but sets the way of Levying. By Imposition, by Distress, by Selling; For my part, I know no Case that can match it.

Anno
1637. Sir John Bankes Knight, His Majesty's Attorney-General his first Days Argument.

May it please your Worships,

There was a Scire fac' brought against Mr. Hampden and divers others, to shew cause why those Sums of Money Sessed upon them by the Sheriff of Buckingham, should not be paid and answered. It beareth Tiste 22 Maii 13 Car. and a Scir' fac' Returned: Mr. Hampden demandeth Oyer of the Original Writ 4 Aug. and of the Certiorari, Mittimus and several Returns. The Writ of 4 Aug. which went out to provide a Ship of 450 Tun, with Victuals, Men, Munition, &c. The Writ giveth power to the Sheriff to make an Assessement upon the County, and giveth power of Distress and Imprisonment in case of Non-payment. He demandeth Oyer of the Certiorari, which consists of two parts; the one to certify the Sums assessed; the other, to certify the Names of the Defaulters. And the Names of those that made Default were returned; and Mr. Hampden amongst others. He demandeth Oyer of the Mittimus, which doth recite the Tenor of the first Writ.

Upon Oyer of all these, both of the Writ 4 Augusti of the Certiorari, Mittimus, and Scir' fac', and their several Returns; Mr. Hampden hath Demanded in Law.

The Case that ariseth upon the Record is thus: The King is Lord of the Sea. That's part of the Record. The Sea is infested by Pyrates and Turkes, who commit Depredations, and take Goods of Merchandizes both of the Kings Subjects, and others that traffick there, and carry them into Captivity. There is preparation of Shipping, and imminent danger; for so the Writ reciteth, A Danger that the King's Dominion of the Sea should be lost, or at least diminished. There was a further Danger, that Salus Regni periclitabatur: Whether in this Case the King, pro defensione Regni, tuitione Maris, securitate Subditorum, & salva conduetione Navium, &c. may command his Subjects per totam Angliam, by Writ under the great Seal to provide Ships at their own Charge and Costs. And this, when the King in his own Judgment conceiveth such a danger as doth necessarily require this Ayd. That, under favour, is the Question upon this Record.

Their is in this Record, whereof your Lordships are Judges, four Writs. (1.) 4 Augusti, 11 Car. which goeth out of the Chancery for the setting forth this Ship of 450 Tun. (2.) The Certiorari 9 Martii, 12 Car. (3.) Mittimus, 5 Maii, 13 Car. (4.) 22 Maii, 13 Car. which is the Scir' fac'. The second and the fourth Writ, which is the Certiorari and the Scir' fac', they are returnable. The first Writ and the third, which is the Writ 4 Augusti, and the Mittimus, they have no Returns; but they give Command, and require Execution should be done prout de Jure, & secundum consuetudinem Regni Anglia fieri consuevit.

The first Writ, which is the Ground of this Business, standeth upon two Parts; a Preamble, and the Body of the Writ. The Preamble, that containeth, First, A Direction. Secondly, The Motives and Causes of the issuing of this Writ.

The Body containeth six, The Direction that is unto the Sheriff of the Countyr of Buckingham, Car. 13. necnon unto the Bayliff and Burgesses of the Borough of Buckingham, and probis hominibus of all the County. The Motives and the Reasons inducing this Writ, are Nine in Number.

(1.) Quia Pyrata & Maris grassatores, &c. That these commit Spoils and Depredations by Sea, and take the Goods of the King's Subjects. (2.) Because they carry the King's Subjects into miserable Captivity. (3.) Because of the Preparation of Shipping that is made undique to infest the Coasts. (4.) Quia periculum imminet, &c. (5.) Quia pro defensione Regni, tuitione Maris, &c. (6.) Quia pro debellacione, repulsionem quorundam hostium satagend' &c. (7.) Quia progenitores nostri Reges Angl' Dom' Maris temporibus, &c. (8.) Quia onus defensionis, &c. (9.) The most prevalent, Quia hoc per legem & consuetudinem Anglia, &c. The Body of the writ containeth several Mandates to the Sheriff and Head-Officers, quod fide & ligeantia, &c. sicut nos & honorem diligitis. The Mandates are six. (1.) To provide a Ship of 450 Tun, well Armed, and furnished with Provision; and that was to be in readines by the first of March, to continue for the space of 26 Weeks ad proficiscend' cum navibus nostris pro tuitione Maris, &c. (2.) Mandate was a Command unto the Sheriff and the Head-Officers, that they shall meet within 30 days, and set down what shall be taxed upon the incorporate Towns. (3.) A Command unto the Head-Officers of those Incorporate Towns, that within their Bayliwicks they make an Assessement upon particular persons, and compel them to pay the same. (4.) A Power unto the Sheriff to Assess all within the Residue of the County juxta statum & facultates. (5.) A Command for the Levying of those Sums by Distress, & quos rebelles inveneris, to imprison their persons. (6.) That no part of this Sum collected shall be converted unto any private Use; but if any Money be remaining, it shall be paid inter Solvenda.

My Lords, The Reasons expressed in this Writ, might justly satisfy any mans Judgment without further Argument; but I shall clearly manifest there is no Clause or Particle in this Writ, but is verified by many Records, and is secundum Legem & Consuetudinem Anglia. The Question that is made is of a high and transcendent nature: It concerneth the King, in both his ordinary and absolute Power; Whether the King in those Cases where he in his Royal Judgment shall conceive a Necessity for Defence of the Realm, may command Shipping in this kind? Whether by his Royal Power he can do it, or must require the Aid per Commune Concilium in Parlamento. And I Perceive his Majesty might do it, not only by his Kingly Prerogative, but Jure Majestatis. This Power is not only inter Prerogativa Regis, sed inter Jura Summa Majestatis. I find by many Records that these Writs have issued out in all Succession of Times. In the times of the Saxons before the Conquest; but I never find that ever this Power was judicially questioned in any Court at Westminster. I find question made touching Assessements, whether they have been equal; touching the Levying, whether within the Warrant of the Officers? touching the discharging of some by reason of a Grant of Exemption? but to question the main Power, whether the King by his Royal Power might command this for the Defence of himself and the Kingdom, was never disputed. But his Gracious Majesty who Anno 1637. hath declared himself that he will Rule his People according to his Laws, for the satisfaction of the People; and to clear his Justice and Judgment doth suffer these Writs to go forth, to which some Demurred, and to be questioned in this Legal way to be determined by your Lordships, to which I hope you will give a clear end.

My Position shall be thus; That the King, as he is King of England, pro defensione Regni, tuitione Maris, &c. When his Majesty in his Royal Judgment conceiveth it a time of such Danger, as doth necessarily require the Ayd commanded in this Writ, that he may command and compel his Subjects per totam Angliam, to set forth Ships with Men and Munition, and double Equipage; and this may be done as well by the King's Writ under the Great Seal, as by consent in Parliament. For the proof of this Position, I shall reduce what I have to say, to these Heads:

First, That this Power it is inter Jura summa Majestatis, innate in the Person of an absolute King, and in the Persons of the Kings of England: That this Power is so inherent in the Kings person, that it is not any way derived from the people, but reserved unto the King, when positive Laws first began; and that in this Case the King is sole Judge of the Danger, and how this Danger is to be prevented and avoided. This is my first Ground.

The second is this; That this Regal power it is not confined to the politick Advice, that the King must be in Cathedra sitting in Parliament; but that it hath been always done either per ipsum Regem, aut per Regem & Concilium, aut per Dominos suos, aut per Regem, when he shall please to call a Consultation of Merchants and Portsmen, experienced in the Service.

My Lords, Upon this Head I shall present unto your Lordships, That this power is so inherent in the King, that during the Time of Parliament, and in those years when Parliaments were sitting, that these Writs issued out by a Regal Power, without any Power and Ayd in Parliament; and that Advice was not thought necessary in former times.

In the third Place, I shall shew unto your Lordships, That this Power is implied out of his Sovereign Title given unto him by the Common Laws of England.

In the Fourth place, I shall insist upon Precedents, and herein I shall desire you to take notice that these Writs have not issued out at the first upon any sudden Advice; but that there was a great search made first by my Predecessor Mr. Noy, a man of great Learning, and profound Judgment; other Searches made by the King's Council, and some others; and a great Number of Records were considered of, and maturely, before these Writs issued; so nothing was done upon the sudden. And we that are of the King's Council did think it fit that most of these Records should be cited in the first Argument, by Mr. Solicitor, to the end that the Council at the Bar might give an Answer in their Reply. Many other Records have been added by Mr. Solicitor; and many more I shall cite, which have not been remembered.

My Lords, in the vouching of these records, I shall observe 8 things. 1 That the Records we insist upon, they are not grounded upon any private Customes, upon any Charters, upon any Covenants; but upon the Laws of the land, and there is not in any of these Records any recital, that these writs went out upon any of those grounds.

2. That in all ages before the Conquest, and in the time of Will. the first, that these writs have issued, per ipsum Regem, per Regem & Concilium, and did not issue by any advice in Parliament.

3. That these Records and Writs were sent out not in case of Hannibal ad portas, or an enemy discovered, or sudden invasion, but in case of rumors of dangers, and in that a danger might happen, so not in approach of an enemy; but in case of preparation to be provided against an enemy. 4. The thing is this, That the King did command Shipping to be set forth, and in those years, wherein there were Parliaments, and sitting Parliaments, and by His Regal power, without advice of Parliament. 5. Is this, That great Subsidies and Aids have been given unto the King in Parliament, pro defensione Regni, in the same years that Writs went forth for the defence of the Kingdom. 6. Is this, That those Aids have not been required, only from the Maritime parts, the Ports, nor from the inland Counties, as this case is Buckinghamshire, and per totam Angliam. 7. That many times when these writs issued there hath been no such causes declared as hath been in this writ. I shall observe that in many of these writs, no cause at all set forth in them, but only that they should repair to the Place of Rendezvous, and receive further direction. 8. place I shall verifie every Clause of this writ by many Precedents. A Mandamus and not a Mandamus Rogantes Shipping at the charge of the County and assessment by Sheriffs as Commissioners, and a penalty greater, not only Distress and imprisonment, but extent of Lands, seizing of Goods till the King was paid. These are the things I shall observe out of the Precedents when I come unto them.

My Lords, In the fifth place, when I have laid these foundations, I shall then dispel those mists that have been raised, remove those Forces that have been mustered, and answer the Objections of those Gentlemen that will not be defended by the Kings Writ under the great Seal. And in this give a particular answer to the Acts of Parliament, that they have cited, to the Records that they have insisted upon, to the Reasons and Authorities. And I shall answer their exceptions that have been taken unto the several Writs, Records and proceedings thereupon. In the Sixth place I shall collect some conclusions and reasons out of the Premises, and cite unto your Lordships some Judicial Records, that may satisfy your Lordships in point of Judgment. These are my Materials, I shall proceed unto the Building.

My Lords, My first ground was, that this power was innate in the person of an absolute King, and in the person of the King of England. All Magistracy it is of nature and obedience, and Subjection it is of nature, and before any positive Law or any Law written or any municipal Law, people were governed by the Law of nature, and Practice did Rule according to natural equity: This appears in the Report of Sir Edward Cook, written by him when he was Chief-Justice, 7 Report fol. 13. I will not take occasion to discourse, either of the Law of nature, which doth teach us to love our Country, and to defend it, and to expose the hand to danger, rather than the head should suffer; nor of the Law God, which commandeth Obedience and Subjection to the ordinances of Superiors: nor of the Law of Nations, which both agree, that there must be protection, and without aid of the people there can be no defence: nor of the imperial Law, which saith, that in cases pro communi utilitate the King may statuere alone.

1637. My Lords, I will upon this Subject confine myself to the Law of the Land, and insist upon such Records, and such Precedents, and such Reasons, and such authorities as I find both by Records of former times and by our Books. 1. In the original government of this Nation I do not find but that it was not a Monarchy: I find the contrary; that there was a great number of Petty Regiments. And when Julius Caesar did invade this Realm, he writeth that there were four Kings in Kent, and other places; and Srabo lib. 4. saith the like.

So those times will not be material. During the domination of the Romans from Julius Caesar, which continued 500 years, the Romans had their Prefects here in England; no man will doubt but that they may command what they pleased: Notitia urinisq; Imperij fo. 161. that in their time there was special Officers called Comites, &c. Officers appointed by Sea, and other Officers by Land. Those that succeeded the Romans were the Saxons, and in their times both by ancient Grant, and by Edicts of the Princes of those times, that this Naval Power was commanded by them for the defence of the Realm. 3. To begin with King Ina, Anno Dom. 725. King of the West Saxons. This King in that year made a grant unto the Abbot of Glassenbury, Quod &c. sint quieti ex omnibus Regis exactionibus & operibus, quod iudici solent [except] expeditiones Arcium & Pontium, constructionem sicut in antiquo, &c. Which shews that these expeditions were accustomed to be done. Wuldredus, King of Kent, he in the year 742. granted unto His Churches, quod sint libere ab omnibus secularibus servitijs, except expeditiones Pontium, &c. so in that grant these expeditions were excepted.

Etheldredus, King of the Mercians, Anno 749 granted Monasterio de, &c. except ut supra: So as in this time the services were common, and were done by a dicto Regis, that the Churches should be free from all services, except these three of expedition, of building Castles, Bridges and Forts, a quibus nulli unquam laxari possunt.

Egbert, Anno 840. commanded a great Navy to be provided, and that was for the defence of the Realm, and safeguard of Ships.

Ethelwald that was King of the West Saxons, Anno 854. granted to the Church that it should be free from all Services temporal, except Regalibus Tributis. In the time of King Alfred, who was the first Monarch and King of all England, one who was a Privy Councillor in his time, who writ his Life and the Story of his Time, and he in the ninth Page saith, quod Rex Alfredus iussit Gall, longas Navas & Cimbas adificare, and agreeing with this and the History of Asser Menevensis, Florentius Wigorensis 316. Huntington 351. wherein your Lordship may see by the Records, that it was done ex precepto Regis per totum Regnum.

This King made a Law (which is not remembered by Lambert in his Saxon Laws) to this substance, that no man upon Summons by the Horn or Word of Mouth should sit still in matter of Theft, Bloudshed or going to War, whatsoever his expedition should require; and there he doth mention it to be upon pain of forfeiture of Life. The King Edgar who stiled himself Anglie Basilus, he in the year 959. provided a mighty Navy of 3600 Ships, as saith Wigornensis and Math. of Westminster; and he gave a command that every year at Easter a Navy of 3 or 4000 Ships be set out and divided into three parts, East, West Car. 13 and North. The Ships in those times were not so great as now they be. The same Edgar in the year 973 granted to the Abby of Thorney, all manner of immunities, and that it should be free, except those three defences of building of Bridges, Castles and Forts. And the same King in his Charter to the Church at Worcester, granteth unto them to be free ab omnibus exactionibus, except constructionem Pontium, Arcium, &c. My Lords, by all these several grants, and what hath been done by those Kings, it doth appear; that these three fundamental services were reserved unto the Crown, saving some two or three Abbeyes which had some particular exemption. In the year 1008. which was remembered by Mr. Solicitor, there was then a great Navy prepared by King Ethelred. The words are thus, Rex Ethelredus per totam Angliam ex 310 Hidis Navem unam, &c. preparare fecerit. That was for every 310 Hides of Land to build one Ship, and every eight Hides to find a Man and a Corslet, and to meet at Sandwich for defence against the Danes. This appears in Huntington 360. Math. of Westminster 387. Hovenden 426. Malmsbury 100. In this Record these things are observable. Rex parare facit & Rex iussit, then per totam Angliam, all England was to be charged. By the Glossar. of that Learned and judicious Antiquary, Sir Henry Spelman, it appears that virgata terra continet 24 Acres, quatuor virgata continent unam Hidum, & 5. fadum militare; upon casting up of this it doth appear, that there be in England 363600 Hides, every 310 Hides being to set forth one Ship, the whole number amounteth to 45450 Men; but it is not the number, but the matter that is done by the Kings Commands per totam Angliam.

In the thirtieth year of King Ethelred he made an Edict which Mr. Attorney caused to be read in Court, saying, he had it out of an old Book at Cambridge, quod instaurant tiel number de navas per singulos Annos, &c. I read it to this purpose, to shew, that in the 30th. year of his Reign there was a Naval Expedition to be always ready at Easter, and sheweth the Penalty of such as did depart without Licence.

King Canutus, Lambert, fol. 117, 118. ex sapientium Concilio, &c. ordained a Command among his temporal Laws, Cap. 10. quod pr. sidia fiant, &c. Commands Shipping to be provided, and Fol. 118. a Penalty upon all those that did refuse to pay 120 s. which was a great sum in those days. That which I do observe out of these two, were these; 1. That they were made by the King, by the advice of his Lords; that there was to be yearly preparation for Shipping. Those that departed out of the service were to incur the forfeiture of all their Estates, If these Edicts were Acts of Parliament, they stand unrepealed, and if no Acts, then they stand by Command from the Kings power.

My Lords, I have shewed unto your Lordships the practice as it was before the time of William the first. He did not abrogate the former Laws, but was sworn to observe them. Nay, it was said, that he did confirm Antiquas Leges & consuetudines Anglie; So as then, if these were the Laws, and this the power that the ancient Kings of England had before this time, he did ratifie and confirm it, but not diminish it. This power of commanding of Shipping for the defence of the Realm, it is a principal part of the Royal Power. This Kingdom it is a Monarchy, it consists of Head and Members, the King is the Head of this Poli-

Anno 1637. W W tique Body, it consists of Clergy and Laity. The Head it is furnished with intire Power and Jurisdiction, not only to minister Justice in causes Ecclesiastical and Temporal unto his People, but likewise for defence of both, and he may command the power both of the one, and the other.

This power I find to be mentioned in the Register of Original Writs, written before the Conquest; 127. b. it reciteth, that Nos considerantes, quod ratione Regia dignitatis nostra, ad providendum salvationem Regni nostri circumquaque astringimur. It appeareth by Stamford in his Prerogative, 1. Cap. That as the King is the most excellent and worthiest Part or Member of the Common-Wealth; so is he also the Preserver, Nourisher and Defender of his People. I find it in Fortescue, which they have cited, that the Common-Wealth without this Head were but a Trunk, as the Natural Body is a Cadaver. I find it in Fitz. Herbt. Nat. Brev. Fol. 73, or 173. That the King of Right ought to defend the Realm, as well against the Sea, as against the enemies, that it be not surrounded nor wasted. How is this defence against the Sea and Enemies of the Kingdom, is the King bound to defend the Realm by Sea Walls at his own charges? No, the power of the defence is a superintendent power in His Majesty, to authorize Sheriffs and Commissioners to see it done; but by his power, yet at the charge of the People, Register 127. b. It appeareth there, where the King commandeth his People by his Writs, the one directed to the Sheriff, the other to Commissioners; and in both willeth and commandeth, quod distringat A. B. & alios, to distrain the Land of all those that may receive damage to repair the Sea-Banks, as well as the Ter-tenant. This Writ was before any Statute; for the Register was before the Conquest; and the first Statute that concerneth Sewers was made 6 H. 6. so it is by the power the King had at Common Law, and not upon any Statute; and this was to the Sheriff, as well as to Commissioners; and that it was done at the charge of the Country, and not at the Kings charge, Pat. 23. E. 1. m. 4. dorf. agreeth with the Register. The King doth there recite quod ratione dignitatis Regis, &c. & per juramentum sumus astricti ad providendum salvationem Regni, and there he giveth power to Commissioners to distrain the people to make defence against the Sea at their own charges, Pat. 2. E. 1. pars secunda m. 5. dor. in the Case of Wiseman, 2 Rep. fo. 15. The King ex officio ought to govern his Subjects in peace and tranquility, 7 Rep. fo. 9. protection of the King is general over all the Kingdom. There is reason why it should be thus; for the King of England he hath an entire Empire, he is an absolute Monarch: nothing can be given unto an absolute Prince, but is inherent in his person, as may appear both by Books, Records, and Acts of Parliament, Bract. lib. 2. fo. 55. b. Sciendum, &c. Dominus Rex super omnes qui ad Coronam pertinet. This appears likewise in the Statute 24 H. 8. there it is declared, that this Realm of England is an Empire, and hath been so accepted in the world, Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21. 1 Eliz. c. 1. 1 Jac. c. 1. the Crown of England is affirmed to be an Imperial Crown, and Acts of Parliament are proofs of the highest nature, 16 R. 2. c. 5. that the King holdeth his Empire immediately of the God of Heaven, and at his Coronation the Crown is elevated as a signification thereof: This is likewise acknowledged in the Irish Reports, fo. 60. Rex Anglia est absolutus Monarcha in Regno suo. Fortescue saith, the King of England, as well as any other King or Emperour, hath all his liberties within his Kingdom in Imperio suo. The Law of England maketh the King of England not as his Subjects are a, Natural Body, but a Politick Body, freeth him from all imperfection or infirmity; he is immortal, and never dies, the King ever liveth, Com. 177. 11 Rep. 7. 21 E. 4. and other Records.

My Lords, as he is an absolute Monarch, so all these jure summa potestatis, are given unto his person by the Common Law. First, he hath Supreme Dominion both by Sea and Land: this is proved by the Mirror, the greatest part whereof was writ before the Conquest; some things added to it by H. Horn in the Reign of E. 4. he holdeth that all Lands, and all Jurisdiction, and all Dominion is derived from the Crown; that whatsoever was not granted from the Crown remaineth in the person of the King. This Supremum Dominium is so inherent in the Kings person, that if the King grant away his Lands absque aliquo reddendo, yet the Tenure must still remain to the King.

8 H. 7. 12. 30 H. 8. 45. Dyer. This Dominion it is not only upon the Land, but it is upon the Sea; and so the King he hath not only a Dominion at Sea, but he is Dominus Maris Anglicani, he is both owner of the Sea, and soil under the Sea: And so it was lately resolved by my Lord Chief Baron, and the rest of the Barons in the Exchequer, in the Case of Sutton Marsh, that the soil of the Land, so far as the Sea floweth and refloweth is the Kings, and the King is seized thereof Jure Corona, Mirror 8. Bra. fo. 8. Temp. E. 1. Avowry 46 E. 3. Com. 3. 6. that not only the Dominion of the Sea, but the very soil belongeth unto the King.

Next place, he hath besides his Supremum Dominium, a Sovereign Jurisdiction, and that extends both by Sea and Land: 1. For creation of all his Majesties great Officers and Judges, creation of the Admiralty time out of mind, 20 H. 7. fo. 8. 12. H. 7. 17. power to make Justices could not be granted; and all these powers resumed in the Statute, as inherent in the Crown, 12 H. 7. 17. there it is held by Fineaux, that at the beginning all Administration of Justice was in one hand, that is, in the Crown: And surely this Jurisdiction by Sea did not begin in the time of R. 1. when those Laws were renewed by him at his return from the Holy Land: But there were Admirals in England, and the Admiral Law by Sea long before 27 E. 1. A famous Record in the Tower, that the Commissioners for the Emperour, Spain and France, did appear before the Kings Commissioners, and did acknowledge the Sovereignty of the King of England upon the Sea did belong unto him time out of mind. And for further proof of this, it appeareth likewise in that learned Book of Mr. Seldens, Mare Clausum.

My Lords, the next inherent power of the Crown are 1. Pardons. 2. Restitutions. 3. Pardoning of condemned persons, which none can do but the King himself, 1 H. 4. fo. 5. 20 H. 7. 8. The fourth is, Jus nummi percipiendi, a setting of a Royal Stamp upon his Coyn, the advancing of the value of his Coyn, and the debasing of it, 21 E. 3. 6. That the King only can put a value upon it, 5 Rep. 114. That the King by his absolute Prerogative may make any Forreign Coyn lawful Money of England by his Proclamation, Davis Rep. fo. 20.

The next, Jus sum³ Majestatis, is that of concluding cluding War and Peace, which is absolutely inherent in the Kings person, which he may do without calling his Great Council, 19 E. 4. 6. That all the Subjects of England without the King 7 Rep. 25. cannot make War, Bellum indicere belongs not to the Subject; and to make Aliens Denizons, is a point of high Prerogative.

My Lords, this Trust that the King hath for making of War and Peace, and for the defence of the Realm both by Sea and Land, it is a great Trust inherent in the person of the Crown: No man ought to mistrust where the Law doth trust. There is an Objection; If it should rest in the power of the King, he might do it where there is no ground for it, and without cause, and cause Forces to be mustered, and Ships provided, where there is no eminent danger, in such a manner as it might be grievous unto the people. These are Objections clearly against presumption of Law; for where the Law trusteth, we ought not to distrust. The King, as appeareth by all our Books, is the Fountain of Piety and Justice, and will do right unto his Subjects, 1. Com. 240. All Justice is derived from the King, 13 E. 4. 8. The King can do no wrong, Bract. l. 3. c. 9. 8 H. 6. 20. Royal Power de aver Correction de luy m^e; he is the sole Judge, and we ought not to question him, Bract. Rex non habet ultorem nisi Deum, 11 Rep. 72. The King is the Fountain of Justice and Common Right: And the King being the Lieutenant of God cannot do wrong, 17 E. 3. 59. The King could not be made an Instrument of coven and fraud, but the Patent was void, Litt. Com. 99. 5. Rep. 14. That Religion, Justice and Verity are the sure Supporters of Crowns and Diadems, 24 E. 3. 42. Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, 72. At the Common Law, if the King commit a man by his Bouche, he is not Repleviable. The Law doth not distrust where the King committeth a man; but it is upon just cause, and we are not to doubt it: And therefore at the Common Law, West. 1. c. 15. a man committed by the King was not repleviable: Nay, if we were committed by his Council, that was his Representative Body, not repleviable: Shall he then, when the Law hath committed this power unto the King, who is the Fountain of Justice and Equity, who is trusted by the Law of the Realm, and the Commonwealth, mistrust him? Shall we think that succeeding Kings will do that which is not fit to be done? I say if the Law trust him, we ought to trust him. At the Common Law, if the King commit a man per Bouche, he is not repleviable; but for a further Reason, those that are his Delegates or Judges, are not to be mistrusted. That which the Judge doth, as in his Office, shall not be assigned for Error. If it be so in the Delegates power, much more in the Primitive and Fountain. 5 Ma. Dyer 163. The Court of Kings Bench did receive a Record of Nisi prius; the Postea returned by the Clerk; and the Death of the Justice of Assize assigned for Error, and could not be received. And so 1 Ma. Dyer 89. A Writ of Error to reverse a Fine, prout in Dyer.

That is the reason of the Book, 7 H. 7. fol. 40. 10 H. 7. 28. Fitz. Herb. Nat. Br. 126. faith the Books, he cannot assign for Error, nor shall not be admitted to alledge any thing contrary to the Office of a Judge, as to say the Judge did not give right Judgment, or the Clerk did not make right Entries, M. 7. E. 1. coram Rege. And that is the reason why a man of non compos mentis in a Fine, and suffering a Recovery, it shall not be assigned for Error against the Acts of a Judge, 8 Rep. fol. 121. Doctor Bonner's Case, Record by a Judge or Justice of Peace not traversable. Car. 13.

Good my Lords, Then if by the Laws of this Kingdom, one shall not be admitted to receive an Averment against any Acts done by your Lordships, the Judges, against any Acts done by inferior Judges; surely in this, where the King is absolute Judge, it shall not be averred, to say it was no cause of danger, or that is done by the King which ought not to be done.

Bract. lib. 1. ca. 24. est in Corona Regis facere Justitiam. The King is so absolutely trusted with this Defence, that a Subject cannot make a Fort or Castle upon his own Freehold without the King's Licence. That appeareth in old Magna Charta, fol. 162. Enquiry made of those that do build Forts and Castles without the King's Licence, Rot. Parl. 45 E. 3. N. 34: 6 H. 4. 19. and in a Book of Long. 5 E. 4. fol. 129. That a Subject cannot make a Fort or Castle without the King's Licence, not in his own Ground.

My Lords, The King hath so discharged this Trust, that though there were no account unto his Subject, yet these Ships that have been commanded, was but ad proficiscend' cum Navibus nostris. The King hath been at greater charge with these Ships gone out, than ever any King of England was, as will appear by those vast Sums of money the King had spent these years, besides what hath been contributed unto by the Subjects.

My Lords, I have done with my first Position, that the Kings of England have done this before the time of Will. the first: That it was an inherent Right in the Person of the Kings of England, and that the King is the sole Judge both of the danger, and when, and how the dangers are to be avoided.

It hath been objected, that the King of England may do it, but how? It must be according to the Institution of the Laws of the Realm. There must be a Concurrent power, a Politick Advice in Parliament; and so it may be done: But the King, either by His ordinary Power, or absolute, without the assistance of the great Council, He cannot do it, as hath been objected.

Therefore in the second place, I shall come to the second thing I did propose, and that was, that the King, as he was King of England that he alone, for this Common defence of the Realm, without the aid of a Parliament, may statuere, &c. That the King, by advice of his Council, when he please may do it: That he may ordain several ways by the institution of the Common-Law, by his Ordinance, by his Proclamation, by his Patent, by his Writs, and in Legal matters by his Judges. That this may be done by him; (1) It is agreeable to reason; for Kings were before Parliaments, and then surely they might have done it. All Justice doth flow from the Crown; originally, as it was in Moses, so it was in the Kings of England, only in the Kings person: But afterwards the King bid depute his Deputies, and gave other Powers. This is no conceit of mine, 12. H. 7. fo. 17. 9. pro Fineaux. there was a time when there was no municipal Laws, when positive Laws were not established, when Kings did Rule their people according to natural equity; and then surely the King might ordain, no man will question it; since there have been Positive Laws, and municipal Laws, the Kings of England they have ordained, as by those several records cited appears. It appears by the practice that hath Anno 1637. hath been since the time of W. 1. that the Kings of England in all those writs, that they have ordained, have prescribed the time for the issuing of those writs; the number of the ships, the times of meeting, the names of munition, and to stay for the defence, quam diu nobis placuerit. I have made a Collection of what hath gone out by the King himselfe, what per Regem and His Council, and what by the advice of his Council, and with advice of Merchants and Partsmen. But they are so infinite, and so many of them, I will not trouble your Lordships with the repetition.

These ordinances concerning the defence, they are suitable and agreeable to the ordinances the King maketh in other cases, wherein the King alone doth ordain, as by his Proclamation, Clauſ. 24. E. 3. par. 2. m. 2. dorſ. The King by his Proclamation commanded all Earls, Barons, Knights, Esquires, and other men at Arms, that none of them should depart into Forreign parts. F. N. B. 85. He agreeth it, and saith the Book, he that shall transgress this Proclamation, shall be fined for his disobedience. And this command may be under the great Seal, Signature, or Privy Seal: For, saith the Book, the Subject is to take notice of any of the Kings Seas. So in all Ages, he hath commanded no Victuals, should be transported, Clauſ. 24. E. 3. M. Dorſ. 4. H. 8. 11. H. 7. 23. The King granted a Proclamation for Recreations, as by Justing, &c. And if one of the two that is fighting be killed, it is no Felony; But if done without the Kings Proclamation, it is Felony, 5. Rep. 114. The King, by his absolute Power, may make any Coin of Money currant, by his Proclamation.

Next place the King may ordain by his patent alone, 49 E. 6. fo. 15, 18. The King did grant a Privilege unto the Scholars of Oxford, that they should have the choice of Inns in Oxford, which was before there was any fair Colledge in Oxford: saith the Towns-man, this is my Free-hold, the King cannot do it; Say the Judges, this is by the Kings Patent, and is in Favour of Learning, and therefore a good Ordinance. So the Justices in Eyre may take up the principal Inn. Is there any thing more usual, than for the King to give Power to the Corporation to make ordinances for common good? 49 E. 3. 162. shall it be so in the Creature, and not in him that makes the Creature? A case or two upon every one of them. The King may Ordain by His Writ, and that appeareth 9 E. 3. 16. A Writ of Cessavit against the Tennants of Northumberland: The Tennants have been oppressed by the Scots; they petitioned the King, and said, that they were not able to pay their Land-lords their Rents, by reason of those incursions upon them by the Scots, and desires stay of Suit; and there it appeareth that the King did ordain by His Writ, those Suits upon those reasons should not proceed against the Tennants, for Non-payment of their Rents: out of the same Reason are the Writs of Protection.

Then the King and his Council may ordain; for that I find M. 4. H. 3, Fitz. Dower 179. Writ of Dower there brought by a French Woman; the Tennant of the Writ pleaded, That there was an ordinance of the King and His Council, quod nullus de potestate Regis Franc. respondeat in Anglia, antequam Anglia respond. de Jure suo in Francia. That is, that no English man should be compelled to answer any French man or woman in a legal Suit till the English were answered in France to their Suits; there 39 E. 3. 7. per Thorp.

The King and his Lords may make an ordinance which shall be binding as a Statute, Rot. Fra. 72 Car. 13. E. 3. M. 6.

The King by the advice of his Council, did ordain quod omnes Mag. & alii qui habent terras, & tenementa continui morat, &c.

Upon this ordinance I can shew above 40 writs that have gone out unto the Nobility, Clergy, Arch-Bishops and Bishops, and to all the Kings Subjects too, for the maritime parts, Rot. Fra. 22 E. 3. M. 16. & 50 E. 3. M. 47. Dorſ. 24 E. 3. M. 6. That of 24 is to those In-lands within six Miles of the Sea. 40 E. 3. M. 37. The Writs awarded to most of the Maritime Counties, upon pain of the seizure of their Lands and Goods: So likewise for Provision for the Army the King and His Council have ordained, both for Markets to be kept within such a distance of the Army, and Wine sold there, and no where else, Rot. Sco. 10. 12 E. 2. M. 13. Dor. So they have set down the number of the men of Arms, that every Town should be charged with, Clauſ. 13 E. 3. pf. 1. 14 Dorſ. with a command, that they should destroy the Commonalty of that County, for the Wages of those Men at Arms.

My Lords, If the King may at all times of danger, by his Proclamation, by his Patent, by his Writs, by the Advice of his Council, surely in Cases of necessity it is much more, for necessitas est Lex temporis, where a Defence by Sea and Land is necessarily required, M. 12. Car. opinion, That men might be compelled to bring in their Provision to the Market, whether they will or no, 5 E. 4. 6. 14 H. 7. 29.

Jurors are by Law to hold together till they give their Verdicts; yet otherwise if the House be like to fall over their Heads, 38 H. 6. 11. Upon a Præcipe the Tenants may be excused, if he could not pass the Waters.

My Lords, I find that in legal Matters, the King, by the Advice of his Judges, who are his Council, may ordain that the Judges are the Kings Council in Legal Matters, 19 E. 3. 174. Fitz. Judgment. 27 H. fol. 5. Court of Kings-Bench called the King's Council. 6 E. 1.

The King and his Judges make certain explanations upon the Statute of Gloucester, as appeareth by Magna Charta; and what was done then by the Judges Advice, is the force of a Law at this day. So as you see by the Laws of England, as well in other Cases, as Cases of Defence, the Law hath given the King of England this power to ordain for the Good and Safety thereof. I find that in all Ages, and in all Times, all the Incidents to a Defence, as well as this principal part, have been given unto the King himself, as he is King of England. (1.) For the Murage of Towns, that the King hath commanded the Murage of Towns to be done at the Peoples Charge. And shall his Power extend to particular Cities and Towns, and shall not he command for the Defence of the wooden Walls of the Kingdom? Rot. Alur. 12 E. 3. par. 2. M. 10. The King commandeth by Writ a place to be fortified towards the War, and every man having Rent there to contribute, or be compelled by distress; this was commanded to be done by the Writ, Par. 12. E. 3. par. 3. M. 5. appeareth it was done. The King imposed a certain Rate upon all Goods and Merchandizes that came unto Kingston upon Hull; and commanded that this should be employed to the walling of the Town; and this was de voluntate Regis. This appeareth 19 E. 3. par. 1. M. 12. There was the same Command for Dover, and other other Towns; same Roll. m. 22. Pat. 12. E. 3. par. 3. m. 14. Dor. A Writ for the repairing of the Walls of Winchester at the Subjects Charge, Rot. ibid. m. 15. The King by special Grant gave power to the Mayor and Burgesses, to Asses the Inhabitants for the Defence of the Town, Claus. 1 R. 2. m. 12. Oxford was commanded by the King to be fortified at the Inhabitants Charge. Cl. 12. E. 3. par. 3. m. 32.

The King commanded particular Subjects to fortifie their Castles at their own Charges in time of danger, Pat. 18 E. 3. m. 9. The King taketh the Castles of the Subjects into his own hands in time of danger, ad evitandum damna & pericula qua nobis evenire possint. Claus. 13 E. 3. par. 1. m. 36. dorf. The King by advice of his Council did ordain that the Town of Southampton pro salvatione ejusdem, should build a Wall.

My Lords, If the King may command the walling of the Town at the Charge of the Inhabitants, he may likewise command the defence of the Kingdom by Sea; so for other Incidents of Defence; as for erecting of Beacons upon the Sea-Coast, Rot. Vasc. 11, 12 E. 3. m. 29. de communibus insigniis, &c. Claus. 1 R. 2. m. 4. dorf. de ordinatione per Regem & Concilium pro Vigiliis faciend. So likewise the King in all Ages hath commanded the imbarquing of Ships for the defence of the Realm, and for all publick Service. This appeareth, Claus. 14. H. 3. m. 17. dor. All Ships arrested that could carry 16 Horse, Rot. Scot. 10 E. 3. m. 2. dor. Omnes Naves pro defensione, &c. Rot. Alm. 22 E. 3. m. 23. par. 1. & 12. For imbarquing of Ships for the defence of the Realm. So likewise the King commandeth and appointeth who shall be Officers, who shall be Admiral of the Fleet, who shall be Custodes Marit. as appeareth, Pat. 19 E. 2. m. 7. dor. and in the same Roll, m. 10. Pat. 15 Jo. m. 6. Pat. 48 H. 3. m. 5. Claus. 23 E. 3. m. 5. dor. and an infinite number more. Then that the Countrey paid the Charges of those who had Custodes Marit. that appears Fra. 12 E. 3. m. 31. dorf. Claus. 13 E. 3. par. 1. m. 14. dor. The King, when there was Cause, he moderated the Expence, Claus. 25 E. 3. m. 16. The King did order how much, and how long the County should pay for wages, and commanded the stay of those who would have been gone before their time: And this appeareth, Pat. 48 E. 3. m. 4. Claus. 48. H. 3. m. 2, & 3. dorf. Then it appeareth by many Records that this Guard of the Sea-Coasts was to be accordingly as the King should order and direct, sometimes per Regem, & per nos & Concilium, &c. And this appeareth, Claus. 23 E. 1. m. 5. dorf. Claus. 13 E. 3. par. 2. m. 14. Dors. & Pat. 23 E. 1. m. 1. Sometimes the King out of his Royal power hath been pleased to give Discharges unto particular men to be discharged from this Custod. Marit. This appeareth, Claus. 23 E. 1. m. 5. dorf. Ports discharged, because their Ships were in the Kings Service, Claus. 8. R. 2. Discharge for the Abbot of St. Alban, Pat. 12 E. 3. par. 2. m. 8. Pat. 12 E. 3. par. 1. m. 14. Discharges de Custod. Marit. Then the power of the punishing of those men, who should neglect those Commands, hath been always in the King, and to be punished by his Commissioners, or by his Writs, and that in a high manner. That there hath been Commands by Distress, by Imprisonment, upon seizure of Lands, Goods, and Forfeitures of all that they had; and this appeareth, Pat. 48 H. 3. m. 5. dor. Claus. 48 H. 3. m. 3. and a great number in the time of E. 2, & 3. The King hath so far medled in this Business, that though it hath been the Money of the Countrey, yet the King hath appointed the Pay-master. Claus. 48 H. 3. m. 2. in the case of danger the King sendeth forth a Writ de veniendo ultra debitum; so when a Service was due, as by the five Ports, to find Ships, yet in time of danger command laid upon them, ultra debitum Servitium, as appeareth Rot. Sco. 10 E. 3. m. 20. Cl. 16 E. 2. m. 13. So all Arrays for mustering of Men between sixteen and sixty have been in all Ages, and by the Kings Command to be in, and continue in readines, so long as the King shall please, Rot. Alm. 12 E. 3. par. 2. m. 6. Dor. So, my Lords, it doth appear by these precedents that have been cited, by these Records, and by these Book-Cases, That the Kings of England in all Ages have given command, and made Ordinances by themselves, by their Council, by their Judges, by their Peers, and these Ordinances have been obeyed.

My Lords, I promised upon this Head to make it good, that in these times, and in these years, wherein there were Parliaments, that though the Parliaments did determine concerning the Land Forces, and the going of the Kings Army into Scotland, that yet the Parliament sitting, the King hath commanded the setting forth of Ships by his writ; this was ever left unto the Royal power: for the proof of this there was 24 E. 1. a Parliament, as appeareth in the Prinred Books; yet we find in that year, the King hath commanded the setting forth of ships at the charge of the Subject, Pat. 24 E. 1. m. 17. commanded to take up 100 Ships; and in P. 24 E. 1. ex parte Reg. Rem. Exch. Rot. 22. Command, pro Custod. Marit., 9 E. 2. Parliament holden at Lincoln; and yet in the same year writs went out to provide Shipping, as appeareth by Rot. Pat. 9 E. 2. par. 2. m. 8. The King recites certain inrodes made upon the Men in Northumberland, Et quod de Comuni Concilio held at York, Ordinavimus, &c. and Assigns the Earls of Pembroke, and Bishop of Norwich, ad requirend. Norfolk & Suffolk, juxta discretiones vestras Subsidium facere per Naves, &c. per tempus 3 vel 4 mensium. At this time there was a Provision by Parliament for the Kings Service by Land, and for his Armies to meet him at New-Castle, and for two Reasons, why Navale Subsidium should be necessary: 1 To hinder the bringing of any Victuals into Scotland. 2 For the free intercourse of Trade, so as you see in this year, wherein a Parliament was holden, this Navale Subsidium was commanded by the Kings writ without any Act of Parliament; though this Writ was for Norfolk and Suffolk, yet the like was for Dorset, Somerset, &c. It appeareth likewise 10, 11 E. 3. which were those great years of sending out of Writs, that then Parliaments were holden: And so it doth appear by the Printed Book of statutes; yet in that year of 10. Claus. 10 E. 3. m. 37. Do. A Writ directed to the Major and Bailiffs of Bristol, with a Command, that all Ships, of 49 Tun, & ultra, should be seized, 10 E. 3. M. 21. Do. Command that the Ships should be sent forth to the preventing of danger; and that no Forreign Ships come in to aid the Scots, Membr. 21. Dor. same Roll, Command to the City of London to set forth Ships at their own Charge, Sco. 10 E. 3. m. 21. Do. Writs to the Sheriff of to send Horse-men and Foot-men to the County of Southampton. So there were men drawn out of their own County, and the refusers were called there Rebels, Rot. ibidem m. 21. de Navibus pro defensione Regni.

My

Anno 1637. My Lords, there was something more observable in this year of E 3. for some of the Writs that went out beareth teste 3 Octab. Sco. 10 E. 3. m. 7. and mentioneth a Parliament, but did not go out by any Ordinance of Parliament; so that the awarding of these writs, 10 E. 3. were the Parliament sitting, and by the Royal power, which is a strange argument, there needeth no aid of Parliament; for the King to command his forces; 11 E. 3. was likewise a Parliament, 25 appeareth in the Printed Book of statutes: writ dated 10th. Januarij. 17 E. 3. m. 2. D. per ipsum Regem; Ships are commanded pro guerra super mare Vasc. 16 E. 3. m. 6. Do. Proclamation to several Counties, that all Ships be in readines; 12th. Year of E 3. Parliament at Northampton, Claus. 12 E. 3. pars 2. m. 1. same Roll, pars 2. m. 32. and yet this same year the King commanded Shipping at the charge of the Counties, as appeareth Parl. 12. E. 3. pars 1. m. 12. Cl. 12. E. 3. pars 3. m. 29. and in the 13 year of E 3. was likewise a Parliament holden; and that appeareth Parl. 13. E. 3. m. 9, 10. Printed statutes make no mention of a Parliament then.

My Lords, In this Record these things are observable, cited, and made use of by the Defendants Council, a strong Record as any can be against them.

In that Parliament, the King he did pray the advice of the Commons in Parliament, touching his wars with France, and the guarding of the Sea-Coasts: The Commons they make answer, Prient les Commons pue ils ne Council doner ab choses de quel ne pas Comzance, &c. They say further, and they grant, That the Maritime Towns ought to make the Guard upon the Sea without Wages taken, and the In-land Commons upon the Land.

Two things are observable in this Record:

1. When the King doth descend so low as to pray the Advice of his Commons in Parliament, and assistance for the guarding of the Sea; the Commons disclaimed, and said they have no Jurisdiction, &c. And yet the Defendants Council did press that now the King should ask the Advice of the Commons in Parliament, a thing disclaimed, 13 E. 3. to have any Jurisdiction.

2. By this Record the Maritime parts ought to guard the Sea at their own Cost; this, though it be granted in their Petition, it was not granted by the King: For it appeareth in the same year, Rot. Alm. 13 E. 3. m. 13. dorf. that King Edward in that year heard of some Preparation in France, commanded Ships for three Months, Cl. 13 E. 3. par. 1. m. 14. That in several Counties Men were distrained for payment of wages for the Archers, and others that guarded the Sea-Coasts. It appeareth by these Records, that both the Guard of Sea and Sea-Coast was done juxta ordinationem nostram, Order made by us and the Council. Rot. Alm. 13 E. 3. m. 15. Do. The King appointed the Arch-Bishop of York, Heug de Perfi et al. for that purpose, &c. So My Lords, I have done with the second Ground, that is, That the King is sole Judge of this, without his Parliament.

That the Commons in Parliament have disclaimed to have any Conizance of it.

That in the same year where Parliaments were holden, the same years the same Writs have issued without Advice in Parliament.

The third thing that I did propose, was those Supreme Titles which the Common Law of England giveth unto the King, which may inforce this. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 24. faith, That the King is Vic- carus Dei, His Power surely, as was agreed, is Jure Divino; God is the God of Hosts, and the King is a model of God himself, 43 E. fo. 18. The King is the Cheif Guardian of the Commonwealth: The Sheriff hath posse Comitatus under the King, the Kings Vicegerent in his County; he hath this power not only for the execution of legal process, but for the defence of the Realm, 12 H. 7. fo. 7. The delegate power of the Sheriffs, is as well for defence, as for execution of process; shall the Sheriff do it and not the King? 10 H. 3. fo. 1. 8 H. 7. fo. 1. The King is the Conservator of the Law, 20 H. 7. fo. 4. Rex est Capitalis Justiciarius totius Anglia; he is not only to maintain Justice in the Courts of Justice, but to protect and defend his people. Stamford Prerogative Cap. 1. The King is the most worthy part of the Body of the Commonwealth, Preserver, Nourisher, and Defender; and by this they enjoy their Lands, Goods, and Lives, 11 Rep. 7. 6. Magdalene Colledge Case. Rex est Medicus Regni, & sponsus Republica: It is the part of a good Physitian, as well to prevent Diseases as to cure them; and an office of a good King, as well to prevent danger as to remedy it, Com. fo. 160. He is the Soul that animates the Body of the Commonwealth, and we ought to move as he moves, 11 Rep. fo. 72. The Fountain of common Right; therefore we have no reason to stain the Fountain. I am now come unto my fourth Proof, which is my Precedents; wherein I shall be somewhat long.

The End of Mr. Attorney-Generals
first day's Argument.

Mr. Attorneys Second days Argument,
Decemb. 1637.

May it please your Lordships to remember I shewed by Charters, Aids, and by a great number of Precedents, that this Royal Power was in the King of England before the Conquest; and that though some were exempted from the setting forth of Ships, by Grant unto some particular Men, on some particular Churches; yet these three fundamental Services of Expedition, repairing Castles, and making of Bridges, were always exempted: Then I shewed by a great number of Precedents, that not only the Principal, but all Accessories that concern the Defence of the Realm, both by Sea and Land, hath been always commanded by the Kings Writ, for the fortifying of Towns and Castles, and the Murage of Towns, the appointment of Admirals of the Fleet, and those that should be Guardians by Sea and Land, the Imbarging of Ships, and Arrays of Men, erection of Beacons, and discharging of others upon just cause, by punishing of those that were Rebels; and all this was done by the Kings Command, per ipsum Regem aut per Regem & Concilium, without any Aid in Parliament. Likewise I have made it appear unto your Lordships, That the King is the Sole Judge of this Defence, that the King is not to be mistrusted in the execution of His Office as King, nor your Lordships as Judges are to be mistrusted.

I have then shewn out of Precedents, That in those years wherein there hath been Parliaments, and sometimes sitting, the Parliaments Writs have issued per ipsum Regem aut per Regem & Concilium. I shall now proceed to make good the other particulars culars which I have opened unto your Lordships.

Anno 1637. 1. That these Precedents which have been shewed, and which I shall shew unto your Lordships, that they have not been grounded upon any particular Covenant, Charter, or Custom, but upon the Law of the Land, and upon such Reasons as are irreverfable, and binds all the Kings Subjects, as well Clergy as Laity. For this I shall remember Claus. 48. H. 3. M. 3. the Writ doth recite, Quod tam milites & liberi tenentes & omnes alii, &c. ad defensionem Regni teneantur, Claus. 9. E. 3. M. 11. pro defensione Regni omnes teneantur, Sco. 10. E. 3. M. 12. quia consonum rationi est quod omnes tangit per omnes supportari debet. And the same Roll M. 20. Dor. Ex ligeantia ad defensionem contra hostiles aggressus inimicorum manus apponere ad iurices, Alm. 12. E. 3. M. 1. Dor. omnes & singuli tenentur, &c. se & sua exponere, same Roll, M. 12. Dor. omnes & singuli ad defensionem Regni sunt astricti. And I think every man will acknowledge himself to be bound out of his Allegiance, Alm. 13. E. 3. M. 13. Dbr. ex ligeantia ad defensionem Regni & vestrum & vestrorum, same Roll, M. 17. And there be several Writs unto all the Bishops of England, quod invenerint homines ad arma pro defensione; Francke Almaine Tenure was no Plea against this Service, Rot. Franc. 46. E. 3. M. 34. There was a Writ directed to the Bishop of Canterbury for the Arming and Arraying of all Ecclesiastical Persons within his Province; the like to the Bishop of York, Sco. 8. E. 2. M. 15. for the Arming and Arraying of all Ecclesiastical Persons within his Province; the like to the Bishop of Durham in the same Roll; so it extends to all the Kings Subjects, and to the Clergy as well as to the Laity: Nay, it doth appear that these Towns and these Ports, that were obliged to do particular Service, that yet in case of an extraordinary defence, that there the Writs went out not only to perform the ordinary Service, but Services ultra debita. The Cinque Ports, by the Charter of E. 1. were to set forth 52 Ships at their own Charge for 15 days; yet we find by divers Writs, and in several Kings Reigns, that the Cinque Ports have been required to do further Service, Arrests have been of their Ships ultra servitia debita, Sco. 10. E. 3. M. 2, 3. Do. 28. Dorf. There was a Command, That all their Ships of 40 Tun should be arrested for the Kings Service; and so likewise same Roll M. 22. That all the Ships of the Cinque Ports, tam majores quam minores, should be arrested, *Malm. 13. E. 3. m. 13. Dorf. omnes naves qui transire poterint, arrested to the Cinque Ports; so then to tell us of particular Rolls, that these and these Towns were obliged to do these Services; this, under favour, is no Argument, for though they be obliged to do these Services, yet upon other occasions to take all their Ships ultra servitia debita, Claus. 16. E. 3. m. 13. Do. The King writeth unto divers Earls, Barons, and others, in this manner, quod sint tam citius, quam poterint parati, beyond your Services with Horse and Arms, and come to our Town of New-Castle upon Tyne; so as this Writ was directed to all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and all the Kings Subjects; but not only with their due Services, but beyond their Services, to be at New-Castle; so as your Lordships see the Motives, and the Grounds, and the Reasons of these Writs are universal, they concern not a particular Port and Subject, but all the Kings Subjects; and they are ligeantia sua debita; so as that is the first thing I would observe unto your Lordships, That these Writs and Precedents are grounded upon the Law of the Land, and not upon particular Trust.*

The second thing is this, That all these Writs have issued by the Kings Mandate, either by the King, or by the King and His Council, without Advice in Parliament, of which I have made a Collection, which is better for me to attend your Lordships withal, than to cite them, because there are above 500; wherein I have distinguished what hath been awarded per Regem, and what per Regem & Concilium, and where the Advice of particular Merchants and Port-men were required, Sco. 11. E. 3. m. 2. Do. 19. E. 3. pars prima m. 26. Do. And in these the Advice of particular Men were called to assist the King and His Council. Now, my Lords, if before the time of William the First, and since, and for so many hundred years together, that this hath been done, shall not these Precedents make a Rule? that Precedents that are not against the Law, nor contrary to the Rules and Reasons of the Law make a Law; That appeareth by 4. E. 4. f. 43. The Chancellor sent forth the Writ of Error, the Judges took exception both to the Matter and the manner, saith the Book, because it hath been always so, the Precedents make a Law, 33. H. 6. f. 20. An absurd return made by a Sheriff, yet because Precedents to warrant it a good Return. 2. R. 2. f. 7. where a Duty was to be paid to a Corporation of Major and Commonalty, the Duty being to be paid to the Body, and an Acquittance to be had from them; but because it had been used, the Major alone to make the Acquittance, a good Acquittance, 2 Rep. Lanes Case. The King shall not part with His Interest without the Great Seal, but yet a Lease for years, under the Seal of the Exchequer, good by Custom, 4 Rep. 9. That the Precedents of the Court are good against the express words of a Statute: Having so many Precedents, I will not trouble you any longer, though I have reserved a special place for the answering of Objections; yet to such Objections as fall materially in the way, I shall give an Answer, though reserve the Answer of the main Objections unto the fifth place. It hath been said by Mr. Holborne, That here hath been a discontinuance of time, and that since the time of 50. E. 3. none of these Writs have issued: Shall discontinuance of time take away the Kings Right? If there have been no use within time of memory, yet if this have been an Inherent Right in the Crown of England, shall the Crown lose it by discontinuance of time against the Rule of Law? 10. H. 4. fo. 6. Where the King is the Founder of a Bishop or Abbot, and is by common Right to have a Corod: though not used, that the King hath not demanded it in time of memory, yet the King shall not lose it, N. B. 5. Writ of Right brought by the King, where you must alledge Seisin, will you bind the King to alledge a Seisin in Him and His Progenitors? For if once the King had a Seisin, protract of time shall not discontinue it, 12. H. 7. fo. 20. The Stat. of Mortmaine confineth the Lord to enter within 2 year and a day, but it shall not bind the King, for He may do it at any time, 35 H. 6. fo. 26. If a Villain do alien the Land, it barreth not the King, Plenarie after 6 Months no Plea against the King, 6 Rep. 20. No discontinuance of time if the King hath a Right, 7. E. 4. 30. If an Alien and another man purchase Lands together, and the Alien die, the King shall not be prevented by Survivorship, and in personal Goods you shall raise no Prescription against the King, 35. H. 6. fo. 27. There is no man can pretend a Title to the Kings Goods, for Waifs, Straves, or Wrecks, for no Prescription can invade the Kings Profit: But then they fay,

Anno 1637. say, that the Precedents are not in all times, for we have not shewn, nor cannot shew, that in all times these Writs have issued. A strange Objection in all times. My Lords, it is a casual Service. In all times, God be thanked, not that occasion or necessity of this Defence: Will you have us shew Precedents for a Casual Service? 4. Rep. 10. If a man hold to do service to his Lord, to go with him into the war of the King, this is out of the Stat. of Limitation; for it may happen not once in 200 or 300 years, therefore the Law doth not require we should have a Seisin for this, for it is Casual, that is the reason, 33. H. 8. Br. Fealty 15. That for Homage and Fealty, casual Services, they are not of the Statute of Limitations; so as now by the same Reason, that they would tie us to Precedents, where there was no occasion; by the same reason the Tenants are to do Homage, or go into Wars when there was no occasion. But besides, he is much mistaken, for these Precedents did not end with E. 3. 7. R. 2. m. 18. 13. H. 6. m. 10. 14. pars 1. m. 14. a great number of Ships commanded then in the Kings Service; but it hath been said, that the people have always petitioned against it, and there hath been a decrying by the people; they have petitioned in Parliament, and these things good by a Custom, must gather strength by consent; and that further, when Petitions have been preferred, the King hath not denied the Petition expressly.

My Lords, I shall shew, when I come to a particular Answer to these Records and Petitions, that they have mentioned, That notwithstanding these Petitions, this Service hath been always continued; And for the answer that he speaketh of, that they have not been denied: These are the words, Le Roy adviser; we may know whether this be an express denial or no; so though the King take time to advise of the Petition of His Commons, this is no Argument, but that it is a mannerly kind of denial; besides, in these very years of 13. E. 3. the Writs for the Shipping business went out by the Royal Power for the same year; then it hath been said, that we can make no Precedents for this, for though Writs have gone out, yet it doth not appear that these Writs have been put in practice, nor any execution of it; but the Services have been done, as appeareth by the Monuments of Times; then it doth appear by other Records, that the Wages of Mariners were paid by the Country this very year, Cl. 20. E. 3. m. 6, 7. It doth appear, that some particular Men that had particular discharges, either because they were in the Kings Service, or in Gascogne, or lived in the Sea-Coasts, that they pleaded their discharges, and had the same for that reason, 23. E. 3. m. 14. So as, my Lords, upon this second Ground, that these Writs have gone forth thus constantly in several Ages, that there being such a number of Precedents, that the discontinuance hath been ever when there was no occasion: That the Precedents of the Courts of Justice make a Law, and discontinuance cannot take away the Kings Title. This is the second that I do insist upon, that these Precedents make a Law.

The third thing I shall observe upon these Precedents is this, that these Writs have gone forth, not only in cases of an actual War, or in cases of an Invasion, when the Fleet hath been upon the Sea, but by way of preparation beforehand, when the Enemy meant to come, and in contingent Cases when the King might conceive any danger might ensue; but in these Cases

Writs have issued, that will appear, Clof. 48. H. 3. m. 2. the Writs are here in Court, cum necessitas ad defensionem Regni esse promptum, &c. Cl. 23. E. 1. m. 5. dorf. There was several Writs directed unto divers Earls, Bishops and others de Custod. Marit. the words are thus, Quia volumus quod partes Marit. in Com. Essex, &c. contra inimicos diligenter custodiend. forsan si in partes illas venire contingent, 24. E. 1. Remembrancer in the Exchequer upon information given, that there was a thousand men in Flanders made preparation to come unto Tarmouth to burn the Town, Writs sent forth by the Treasurer and Barons ex officio to be in readiness, in case there was Invasion, Par. 9. E. 2. pars 2. m. 26. Writs directed to all the Port-Towns between Southampton and Wales, to let forth Ships at their own charge for the better defence of the Kingdom, and against others that commit depredations upon the Sea, as well to our men of this Kingdom, as to others coming to our Kingdom, Scot. 11. 12. E. 2. m. 8. The King by several Writs directed unto several Commissioners in several Counties, reciteth the provision made for his Army in Land at the last Parliament, and saith, nos considerantes ad expeditionem prad. tam ad impediend. Scotos quam pro Custod. maris, &c. and so commandeth for that purpose, that Ships should be sent forth out of several Counties for these two causes, the one to hinder Victuals going into Scotland, the other for free intercourse of Trade. It appeareth 10. E. 3. that the Ships of France were not upon our Sea-Coasts, but were in Britain in France; and yet the King upon relation that they had an intention to invade the Realm, did send forth for the providing of Ships in most parts of the Realm, this was only upon information, Scot. 10. E. 3. m. 30. ut audivimus M. 13. m. intelleximus, M. 16. 22. quod auditum, M. 18. do. 12. do. 5. do. in portibus transmarinis parat. So by these Records this preparation of shipping was only upon information, Fra. 26. E. 3. m. 5. quia vulgaris opinio est nostrum Regnum Angl. invadere, therefore commandeth shipping by Sea, and Forces by Land, Fra. 10. R. 2. m. 23, 24. quia cert. rumores quod Francia infra breve tempus cum magnis armat. hoc Regnum invadere, and for the rest commandeth the custody of the Sea and Sea-coasts; so as it doth appear by these Records, that upon an information or conjecture of the King, that he may send forth those Writs, and command his Subjects to be in readiness in case that danger may happen, better so than to receive a blow, and then to make a preparation for defence, we should buy that with repentance, prudensissima ratio qui timor Belli, &c. preparavit; and surely when the King sees those preparations abroad, the great Armies in adjacent Countries, great reason we should be in preparation: This is not only consonant to Precedents, wisdom of Times, policy of State, but to the reason of our Common Law. If a man be in fear that another man lieth in wait for him to do him a mischief, shall he stay till he receive a wound? 17. E. 4. 4. in this case he may have a Writ to bind him to the Peace, 13. H. 7. fo. 17. If a man have a Warranty for his Land, shall he stay till he be impleaded? No, a Warrantia Charta lieth till he be impleaded: If Lord and Tenant in ancient Demesne, and the Lord will require more services of his Tenant than he ought to perform, shall the Tenant stay till there be a Distress taken? nay, he shall have his Monstraverant, F. N. B. 40. E. 3. fo. 45, 46. and this only upon a verbal demand of services; shall then the Common Law of Eng-land land secure the Subject not to stay till a present danger, but shall have his Warrantia Charta Mon- straverunt before Distreſs taken, and shall not the 1537. Common Law provide for the King, that he in his expectation of danger make his preparation, so surely these Precedents are according to reason of Law.

Next thing that I did observe out of these Precedents was, that in these very years, where there have been Aids granted to the Crown, pro defensione Regni, in this very year these Writs have issued out by the Royal Power, Claus. 48 H. 3.
m. 2. 3. do. there was then a Tenth given by the Clergy, pro defensione Regni, and yet in that year he did command the defence of the Realm both by Sea and Land, and that appeareth Pat. 48 H. 3.
m. 6. dorf. and Cl. 48 H. 3. m. 30. In 22 E. 1. the King had given unto him in Parliament pro subsi- dio guerra, a tenth of all moveable Goods which was to be collected in 23^d year, as appeareth Pat. 22 E. 1. m. 2.

My Lords, this very year wherein this was paid, he commanded a great number of Shipping for the defence of the Coasts, and that ap-peareth Pat. 23 E. 1. m. 6. Writs were directed unto divers Counties, Suffex, Southampton, Dorset, &c. commanding them to be aiding and assisting to William Thornton in the taking of all the Ships of those Counties, Pat. 23 E. 1. m. 7. Commission Radulpho de Salvico ad providend. de Navibus, ut quod prompti sint quodocunque mandamus, so to be in readiness with all Ships in those parts that were of forty Tun, m. 5. same Roll Writs directed to most of the Sheriffs of England to be assisting to John de Barwick to the chusing and sending forth of Archers ad proficiendum in Flea nostra, so as they were not only brought out of their own Counties, but out of all the Counties of England, ad proficiendum. My Lords, this 23^d year wherein this great aid of tenths, part of all the moveables were granted, Pat. 23 E. 1.
m. 7. the King writeth to all the Archbishops, Earls and others, reciting, that he hath committed the Custody of the Sea to William de Stroaks, ita quod idem Willielmus vos omnes, naming the Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, &c. Compellere, &c.
prout necesse fuerit; so as you see the greatest Subject is not exempted from these Commands, but should be auxilantes, respondentes & intendentes, Claus. 23 E. 1. m. 5. do. the King commanded the Bishops of London and Norwich for the safeguard of the Sea-coasts, Pat. 23 E. 1. m. 1. a Command unto all Archbishops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Knights, and others, commanding them to be aiding unto Adam de G. ita quod idem Adam com- pellere possit quoties necesse, &c. So Claus. 23 E. 1.
m. 5. do. the like Command: so as, my Lords, in those times which was 23 E. 1. when there was an aid granted by Parliament, it doth appear those great defences both by Sea and Land were commanded.

My Lords, 10 E. 3. in a Parliament holden at Nottingham, there was a fifteenth granted to the King for three years, and so it was recited in the Record, and appeareth likewise Pat. 12 E. 3. m. 2.
pars 3. Claus. 12 E. 3. m. 28. pars 3. it appeareth that a tenth and fifteenth granted to the King in Parliament, and this was sam pro defensione quam arduis negotiis, 12 E. 3. The Prelates, and Lords and Commons, at a Parliament holden at Westminster, gave the King ten thousand Sacks of Wool, said to be given pro defensione Regni, as appears Rot. Alm. 12 E. 3. pars 1. m. 1. In the same year there was granted likewise pro defensione Reg- ni medietas Lanar. the moiety of all their Wools,

m. 31, 32. dorf. 2.

In the same year of 12 E. 3. the Clergy they gave the King in Parliament medietat. Lanar. usque vigint. mille Saccar. as appeareth Cl. Roll. 12 E. 3.
pars 3. m. 15. Cl. 12 E. 3. pars 2. m. 1. dorf. And in this twelfth year of E. 3. the King collected a tenth and fifteenth that was granted unto him by the Laity in Parliament for two years, as appear-eth Cl. 12 E. 3. pars 3. m. 30. 1. & 28. And besides all this, the Clergy gave the King a tenth Cl. 12 E. 3. pars 3. m. 30. These I cite more particularly, because no memory of them in the printed Statutes. Were all these Aids granted 10, 11, 12 E. 3. pro defensione Regni, and shall the King in those very years send forth Writs for defence of the Sea and Kingdom? Now, my Lords, in this twelfth year wherein all these great Aids were granted, Rot. Alm. 12 E. 3. 1 pars m. 12.
 that Walter de M. was appointed Admiral of the Fleet towards the North, and appointed Commissioners ad assidendum Villas bonis & Catallis ad contribuendum, &c. and commanded all Sheriffs and Officers to be assisting; so as by this Record it doth appear that in these twelve years Ships and Forces were commanded, Cl. 12 E. 3. pars 1.
m. 17. dorf. Commanded by the King, that the men of Surrey and Suffex should have their goods seized, and persons imprisoned, if they refused to contribute towards the charge of shipping. Alm.
12 E. 3. pars 1. m. 2. a Commission to William de
 B. and others, ad assidendum omnes homines juxta statum, &c. and to seize their Goods and Chattels to contribute for the wages of Mariners for the Ships; so as your Lordships see by that Record, though there be Aids, Tenths; Subsidies and Fifteenths granted by the Clergy and Laity, yet in that very same year, if an extraordinary occasion, though Ships not upon the Sea, the King hath commanded the defence of the Sea and Land at the charge of the Counties: I have done with the fourth particular.

The fifth particular is this, this Aid, and these Contributions, they have not been required only from the Maritime Towns, but from the Inland Counties per totam Angliam; and this is materially to be insisted upon, because we are now in an Inland County, the County of Buck: My Lords, that this was done before the Conquest, your Lordships have heard; for Alfred that first Mo-and universal throughout the Realm, concurring with those ancient Precedents and Councils since the time of Will. 1. Cl. 48 H. 3. m. 2. for where a Record is to be applied unto several purposes, I must mention the Record: Again, it appear-eth by the Record, that Bedfordshire which is an Inland County, was charged with the guard of the Sea-coasts, and paid for wages, same Roll

m. 3. intus m. 20. dor. Rutland, Oxfordshire, and Dorsetshire, Inland Counties, charged for the same services, Pat. 48 H. 3. m. 7. Cambridge and that they should do prout per Concilium nostrum or-

1637. and Writs went out for Ships into divers Counties, and amongst other to Buckshire, Pat. 26 E. 1. m. 21. when there was a complaint that the Subjects did suffer upon undue services, the Commissions that are directed for enquiry, directed to all the Counties of England, as well Inland as Maritime, 23 E. 1. Pat. m. 5. that men to furnish a Fleet were drawn and commanded from the most parts of the Kingdom, Sco. 10 E. 3. m. 14. Inland Counties charged with shipping for the defence of the Kingdom, as Cambridge, Huntingdon, Nottingham, and Derby, Cl. 13 E. 3. pars 3. m. 14. do. and there Oxfordshire is charged with Custod. Marit. Sco. 12 E. 3. m. 12. do. Bedfordshire, Buck (your County) and Derbyshire charged there with the same defence, Cl. 1. R. 2. m. 18. There Cambridge and Hunt. were to provide a Barge at their own charges, and yet Sea-faring men there have none; and like Writs were directed to Nottingham and Derby, though they had none, yet they had money and means to provide them, Fra. 1. R. 2. m. 18. The King sends his Writs into most Counties of England, as well Inland as Maritime, reciting, that the King of France was gone with an Army into Flanders, that Callis was in danger, and commandeth all Knights, Esquires, and Archers, and every of them, according to his Estate and Faculty, to be sufficiently arrayed and armed, and come to the Port of Sandwich ad proficiscend.

My Lords, in this Record there was a mention of Bucks, Bedford, Hunt. Cambr. Notting. Derby, Leicester, Rutland, Northampton, and Berks, all these Inland Counties; the words of the Writ are, quod omnes tenentur pro defensione Regni, Clauf. 9 E. 3. m. 12. per omnes supportari Alm. 12 E. 3. m. 12. vel 20. quod, &c. All and every of our Kingdom out of their Allegiance to be ready to defend the Realm, 13 E. 3. dorf. a great number of others: By all which it doth appear, 1. That the service was commanded from those Inland Counties. 2. That the same reasons which are given, extend to bind the Inland Counties as the Maritime Counties.

Pat. 23 E. 1. m. 6. For the taking of Ships in the County of Suffex, Devon, Middlesex, and other Counties, if so be the Maritime Counties be in danger, surely the In-land Counties cannot be in safety; we are in an Inland County, and Entry of Enquiry upon any part, it concerns the safety of us all.

And by the Rule of the Law, every one that is to receive a Benefit, is to give a Contribution, as the Case of 16 H. 6. fol. 13. All Feoffees, whose Lands were liable unto a Statute, the one shall have Contribution against another.

If four or five Cognizors in a Recognizance, all shall have Contribution one against another, 46 E. 3. Parceners upon whom a Warranty descendeth, they shall be equally charged.

If a man bind himself and his Heirs in an Obligation (having Lands partly by his Father, and part by his Mother, and descend to several heirs both equally charged, as it is the third Rep. 13. Herbert's Case, so I go upon these Reasons, that it is consonant to Reason of Law, besides these Precedents, that where a danger to all, and receiving a benefit by all, to be equally charged.

My Lords, To illustrate by further Reasons, that though the In-land Counties and Maritime Counties be charged, I find that the Ports by the Charter of E. 1. were to find 57 Ships. I find when the necessity of the Service did require it, then all their Ships were seized into the King's Service, I find likewise that when there hath been a disability in the Ports to perform the Service, as now they are; for then the main part of the Trade was in the Port-Towns, but now it is gone from thence, and come to London, and few Ports have the Trade, but London, Newcastle, Bristol, Hull; and shall it not now be required of the Inland Counties, since a disability in the Ports? Fra. 21 E. 1. m. 23. I find there that Plymouth and some of the Port-Towns did bear more than London; for Plymouth found four Ships, Dartmouth six, Bristol four, Newcastle three, Norwich and Tarmouth four. London two, Hartlepool two, Sandwich two, Dover two, Rye two, Shoreham and Aundel two; and other places found but one; it appeareth Alm. 13 E. 3. m. 13. dorf. that Tarmouth furnished at their own Cost four Ships, Kingston two, Boston two, Lynn two, Harwich two, Ipswich two.

My Lords, Are these Ports able to furnish the King with so many Ships in these days, to do these Services? The Wealth of our Portsmen in those days was worth the whole Town as it is now; admit the Maritime Towns were bound unto it, yet if a failing of the ability, that they cannot do it, shall it not elsewhere be required? that is agreeable to the Rules of the Law, before Commission for Sewers, where particular men are bound to defend the Sea; yet before any Statute in case that the man was not able, the Service was required from the County, for by it they might have either gain or loss; this appeareth by the Rules of the Common Law before any Statute-Register 123. quod distringat omnes, &c. When one man was to maintain the Bark of the Sea, if not able the rest that have benefit by it, were to be distrained for it, 5 Rep. fol. 99. 10 Rep. 140, 141. Case of the Isle of Ely, agreeable that all men that have salvationem & dampnum, shall contribute.

To this purpose are those two Records remembered by Mr. Solicitor, Parl. 7 H. 4. n. 18. that where there was a Subsidy granted to the King for the defence of the Realm; it was assigned to certain Merchants, yet with a Salvo, unless a Royal Power come, Fr. 6. R. 2. m. 8. Certain Merchants had the custody of the Sea, except Regal. potestatem, so the conclusion is, if an ordinary defence, there may be no cause to go into the Inland Counties; but if a Royal power or extraordinary danger, though not eminent, the King may require an extraordinary Contribution per totam Angliam. But this hath been objected against, and some Records have been vouched; that is, say they, we will shew you many Precedents, wherein Navale Subsidium hath been required from Inland Counties, and they have been discharged thereof, as Pat. 2 R. 2. par. 2. m. 42. dorf. The Town of Beverley petitioned, because they were to contribute, (being an Inland Town) towards the finding of a Ship for the Town of Hull, and was discharged thereof. This is truth, but not the whole Truth; for the Town of Beverley was discharged by reason of a Charter of Exemption granted unto them in honorem Sancti Jo. Beverley, the Kings Confessor; upon that Charter they were discharged. They have objected likewise for the Town of Bodman; They were discharged a Custod. Maris, an Inland Town in Cornwall; for this, Cl. 13 E. 3. par. 2. m. 14. was vouched for it; that the Town was discharged of this Contribution: for Answer unto that, it Anno 1637. it will appear that one Trussel was Admiral then of the Fleet, and was by his Commission to be furnished from the Ports at their own Charges, for three Months.

My Lords, this appeareth, Cl. 13 E. 3. par. 1. m. 35. and so that Town, an Inland Town, was to be discharged.

My Lords, Likewise there was other Discharges upon that reason; as, Norwich was discharged for finding of Men for Manning of Ships, because the Admirals Commission did not warrant it, Scot. 10 E. 3. m. 15. for it only extended to the Ports; but yet Norwich was charged to find Ships, Cl. 13 E. 3. par. 1. m. 14. So Colchester was discharged from finding of a Ship; but because they were not within the words of the Writ, as appeareth, Cl. 13 E. 3. par. 1. m. So as to tell your Lordships a Story of a great number of Land-Towns discharged de Custod. Maris. and not to give your Lordships the reason, its nothing to the purpose.

So, My Lords, having verified this fifth point, by these Precedents, and justified by these Reasons, and answered these Objections, I shall now come unto the sixth Matter upon this Record; And that is,

That though no cause be declared in the Writ, no danger manifest, nor against what Enemies, that yet the Kings Writ hath commanded Shipping both for defence of Sea and Land: And in the Kings wisdom the danger hath been reserved in his Breast, and not communicated to his People by his Writs.

I find that ancient Precedents have been so, that it hath been reserved unto the King himself, and those whom he did depute. That appeareth, Cl. 14 Jo. m. 2. The King directed his Writ to Herbert, with a Mandamus to make ready all Ships for our Service when we shall command. Not a word of a Cause declared, or an Enemy proclaimed; same Roll, m. 6. The King by Writ directed into other parts, causeth all Ships that could carry 6 Horses or more, to be sent unto Portsmouth; and the like Writs were directed to other Ports, Pat. 15 Jo. m. 4. The King appoints a Guardian upon the Sea-Coasts, and commandeth all men that they should be Intendentes; and other Writs in the same Roll directed into many Counties with a Mandamus, 17 Jo. Cl. m. 7. dorf. Writs for the taking of Ships, and bringing them into Thames-Mouth, without shewing any cause. All this was done in the time of King John.

In the time of H. 3. Pat. 13. H. 3. m. 5. A Writ commanding the Sheriff of Kent and Sussex to arrest all Ships in those Counties, to be at Portsmouth, to be ready to go into that Service we shall command. And it appeareth in the same Roll, that these Ships were able to bear but six Horses. So in the Clause, Roll. 14 E. 3. m. 13. To our Bayliffs of Portsmouth, and Keeper of our Navy, to make ready one good Ship, and be ready to go in the Service of the same King, whether and when he shall command it, Cl. 23 E. 1. m. 5. dorf. The King declares, that he will have the Sea-Coasts in Essex guarded against Enemies; and there commandeth them to be obedient unto such a one who had the Custody. Pat. 23 E. 1. m. 2. The King writeth unto all the Archbishops, Bishops, Sheriffs, Knights, and others, to be assisting unto William de S. who had the Custody of the Sea: So as by this appeareth, the King did give no account to his Subjects, either of the Service, or of the time when.

Scot. 10 E. 3. m. 13. The King commanded all Ships to be arrested, and Men and Mariners to be sent unto the Admiral of the Fleet; ad presens, &c. same Roll, n. 5. Do. a matter fit for the Council, and not for the People to know; same Roll m. 20. that they should do prout vobis, &c. The King oweth no account unto his Subjects of those things, 24 E. 1. m. 19. The King having commanded O. S. to take up 100 Ships fit for his Service, commandeth the Sheriff of Northumberland and others to be assisting; same Roll. m. 17. Command to the same effect for all Ships that should be taken between Lynne and Barwick; it was likewise in the time of E. 2. 9 E. 2. Pat. pars 2. m. 26. Ships taken up at the Charge of the inhabitants to defend the Sea against Malefactors, Cl. 12 E. 3. m. 11. Do. a Writ directed to the Mayor and Sheriff of Sandwich, to make ready all Ships within their Ports of 40 Tun Ita. &c. that they be ready within three days warning to go, as we shall more fully declare, the Service that was to be done, not mentioned, so it appeareth by other Writs to other Towns, in the same Roll, 17 E. 2. m. 11. Do. Pat. 14 H. 6. pars 1. m. 14. Rex pro quibusdam arduis Causis &c. doth assign John Haxman to take up all Barges of 10 men and upwards; so in all these times of King John, H. 3. E. 1. E. 3. E. 3. and H. 6. Writs have gone out generally, that the Service hath been concealed; and for instruction referred unto the Council.

It standeth with reason, for resolutions of War are not to be communicated; His Majesty hath a separate Council of War from the Body of the Privy Council.

Now, My Lords, for the objection that hath been made against the first Writ 4 Aug. 11 Car. that is, the King hath not declared cause for the issuing of those Writs; The King hath not communicated to J. S. and J. N. what the employments must be; he must satisfy the Council at Bar, which we ought not to communicate to His Privy-Council, but is reserved for his Council of War: This is a writ to command obedience from his Subject, and upon such Reason as may satisfy any reasonable Man; and if fewer Reasons, it had been the better agreeable to all former Writs: For the next matter out of the Precedents, which is, that during the times of Parliament, that these Writs have issued, I have made that good upon my former Head.

The last thing I observed upon the Precedents was this, that there was no Cause, no Particular in this Writ of 4. but was warranted by many Precedents; and in this the King doth jubere per legem.

1. For the Direction; it is as in this Writ, sometimes upon one, or probis hominibus of such a County; sometimes the Direction is to Commissioners, sometimes one way, sometimes another; and of this of the Precedents themselves, when your Lordships come to see them, I shall speak; they would have the King descend so low as to give them a reason why they do it: Some Reasons are expressed in the Writs; as, Quia periculum imminens, quia pro defensione Regni, tuitione Maris, securitate Subditorum, salva conducti-one Navium, &c.

My Lords, All these are expressed in the Records, 9 E. 3. m. 12. Sco. 10 E. 3. m. 21. Alm. 12 E. 3. m. 1. 12. Alm. 13. E. 3. m. 13. I find in these writs the same matter, power of Assessment, levies by distress, and by imprisonment; nay, seizure of Lands and Tenements, Goods and Chat-

Chattels that are expressed in the former Writs; and that it was of the charge of the County, both Inland and Maritime: This appeareth Rot. Sco. 8 E. 3. M. 9. 4. de Navigio providendo Pat. 9 E. 2. m. 26. pars 2. de Navigio providendo pro Custodia Maris, many of these, Sco. 10 E. 3. That the wages of the men that went into the Ships, and guarded the Coasts, were at the Charge of the County; this appeareth 10 E. 3. m. 2. Do. 60. Men appointed and sent to Portsmouth, and they refuse to go without VVages; but a Command came from the King, and commandeth the Counties to pay them VVages, 10 E. 3. M. 21. Do. ——— and His Predecessors not bound to bear any Charge, though pro communi defensione, Alm. 12 E. 3. pars 1. m. 2. those of Lynne, who refused to contribute towards the charge, were assessed by commissioners, juxta quantitatem, and were compelled to contribute; so in the Close Roll, 11 E. 3. M. 1. the like pro Custodia Marit. I might be infinite in these Particulars: but I will not tire your Lordships. Here they have made some objections, though to answer the main Objection I am not yet come.

Object, They say this power of assessing the People for sums uncertain, ought not to be no more then Escuage uncertain, and must be assessed in Parliament; and this Assessment for Defence ought not to be by Commission, nor the Kings VVrit.

1 For the Authority, which is Littleton, he saith fo. 23. Que communment ditq; Escuage serra assesse per Parliament. I do not find by the Register where these VVrits are, neither do I find them grounded upon any Act of Parliament; Some that are grounded upon Acts of Parliament, do recite them: But what if it be by Parliament, a Service that is to be done by the Tenant to his Lord; what if this be so, that it must be assessed in Parliament? your Lordships know, that the Tenants must do according to the original Duty of them: and if this be, that the Lords shall not assess them in Parliament, Is that an argument from a Tenant to a Lord to this case? This is a Service commanded not by Tenure, but by a King from his Subjects; this is suitable to the Reason of Law in other cases for those ancient aids which the King doth require for the making of his eldest Son a Knight, or pur file marrier: are not those certain at the Common Law? must there be an Act of Parliament to assess those aids? the Books are otherwise; but the King at the Common-Law might require an Aid uncertain, and might Sess it as he please. Glanvil lib. 9. Cap. 8. Brit. fo. 57. Cap. 27. Bract. lib. 4. Cap. 19. so as at the Common-Law they were uncertain, 11 Rep. 68. D. It is said there, the Stat. of Westmin. 1. Cap. 15. which puts reasonable aid in certain, doth not bind the King a Fortiori; we must not tie Him to a certainty, for the Defence of the Realm. No man can tell what the Proclamation must be, or the charge thereof; If they can shew an act of Parliament that limits the King for Defence of the Realm, they can say something.

But they say the Sheriff is no proper Officer, nor sworn to execute this Writ; This is as wide as the other; for, My Lords, the Sheriff is sworn to execute all writs that shall be delivered to him for the Kings service; and surely this Writ, if it come unto him, he must at his peril execute it.

First, The Direction of those Writs have been many times as well to the Sheriff, as to the Commissioners. Scot. E. 3. m. 13. Cl. 15 E. 3. m. 17. The King commanded the Sheriffs of several Counties to furnish men with Arms, Victuals, and other Necessary Provision both for Sea and Land, 23 E. 3. m. 5. dor. 24 E. 1. Rot. 7, 9. ex parte Rem. Regis, 11. The Land of the Sheriffs and other Officers were extended, because of their negligence in the doing of their duty in those Writs, 25 E. 1. ex parte Rem. Reg. A. Com. went out to enquire of the Execution of the Officers in the duty of their places. Besides these Writs at the Common Law, this is seconded by the Authority of the Common Law, Reg. 122 (or 127) the Writs that go out unto the Sheriff (for they go out unto the Sheriff as Commissioners) it is left unto the discretion of the Sheriff or Commissioners, as occasion shall require, Rep. 191. Br. de Part. before any Statute that was made concerning it.

That VVrit went generally out unto the Sheriff; so that in all Times and Ages it hath ever been in these Cases, where no certainty left to the discretion of the Sheriff and Commissioners.

My Lords, For the manner of the Levying per distinctiones, and by imprisonment of those that that do refuse. Is this new? It hath been so in all the Precedents that have been vouched both by Distress and Imprisonment. For the Distress, If the King make a Corporation, and give them power to ordain for the Commonwealth, and they make an Order, that if they shall not pay the same, they shall be distrained, and is not this adjudged a good Ordinance? 5 Rep. 64. Clarke's Case, Tr. 7 H. 7. Rot. 3. There is a Benevolence granted to E. 4. for his Voyage into France. One T. R. did deny payment, and he was distrained for his proportion.

They except to the penalty of the VVrit; The penalty of former VVrits have gone higher inter Communia in the Exchequer. There was a Mandamus to assess those employed in the provision for Shipping, and this Mandamus was sicut nos & honorem & salvationem Regni diligitis. In that Roll that is so often remembred, Scot. 10 E. 3. m. 11. dor. Quod &c. their Lands, Goods, and Chattels remain seized into our hands. And m. 2. under pain of forfeiture of Life. 11 E. 3. m. 2. To cast those into prison that did refuse, Cl. 12 E. 3. m. 18. dor. Writs directed unto Henry Hufsey, and others, to punish those who refused to contribute, and to imprison them, and seize their Lands and Goods into the King's hand. Cl. 13 E. 3. par. 1. m. 36. dor. to seize into their hands the Lands and Tenements of the Refusers, Rot. Franc. 21 E. 3. par. 1. m. 11. The King commands Ships under pain of Life and all his Estate to forfeit, Fr. 10 R. 2. m. 23. super, and to imprison those that are contrary, under forfeiture of all they had. So as your Lordships see Mr. Holborn was very far mistaken.

My Lords, In the next place, they have laid hold of the distance of Time; they say there was seven Months between the Test of the Writ, and Time of the Rendezvous; that the King might have called a Parliament, and there might have been an Aid granted, and the Service performed in a Parliamentary way; but they may remember the forty days between the Return and the Test of the Writ, the time spent in presenting a Speaker, the Solemnity used before they begin their Grand Committee, their reading of a Bill thrice, their Debate about it, the passing of both Houses before it be granted; after all all this be done, and the Parliament ended, a time for the levying of the Money must be had; and when it is levied, time for the Return of it; and when it is returned, time for the expending of the Money; and the preparation will go slowly on till the Money be returned. 48 H. 3. m. 4. dor. There was a Command for guarding of the Sea-Coasts, Cl. 23 E. 1. m. 5. dor.

That the Ports of Yarmouth commanded to find Ships for a certain time, Sco. 11; 12, 13 E. 2. they are put down in that Roll 8. That there was a Command Navale subsidium for three or four Months.

So as, My Lords, both for the time of Preparation, and for the time of the Continuance, it hath ever been reserved unto the Wisdom of the King.

My Lords, for the Spanish Invasion that hath been so late in our Memory, I find by the Books kept in the Council-Chamber, that the Preparations were in October Anno 87, against the coming of the Spanish Fleet in 88, which did not set forth till June. I find no Parliament called that year: And by the Letters and Orders from the Council-Board, those Ships and Defence that were made, was adsumptum of the Subject: So as, my Lords, by this that hath been said, it doth appear unto your Lordships, that there was not any Clause in this Writ, either for the Direction, Motives, Mandates and Penalties, but are warranted by former Precedents in a higher degree. My Lords, these are the Precedents that I have collected and reduced unto these several Heads. I shall now remember unto your Lordships divers others, and in the first place observe, That William the First came not to abrogate any former Law, but was tworn to observe Antiquas Leges Anglicanas: That appeareth in Lambert 125. prout. So every man by this Law, that was but a confirmation, must provide pro viribus & facultatibus.

I find in the Grant, that William the First made unto his Abby of Battel of his own Foundation, a Charter to be free from Danegeltis & omnibus auxiliis: If they had not been freed, they had been Subject, I find Pat. 7. Jo. m. 3. The King authorized Walter Scot, and others quod omnes naves, &c. which they should find, to arrest and command all to assist, as they love Us and our Peace in our Realm, 14. Jo. M. 6. As your Lordships have heard all the Ships were arrested that could carry six Horses, and to be at Portsmouth, m. 2. All the Ships of the Ports were to go in His Service, without expressing for what particulars, Cl. 12. Jo. 7. Do. commandeth all the Ships to be brought unto the Thames Mouth: so here was not a laying down the continuance of it.

So H. 3. time, Cl. 14. A. 3. m. 12. Dorf. All Ships taken that could carry 16 Horses- Cl. 15. H. 3. m. 17. Dorf. Command for the furnishing of Armed men with Victuals and other provision for 4 days: And there was the like Command to the Sheriffs in several Counties, Cl. 26. H. 3. The King commandeth the men of Yarmouth to have their Ships ready with Men and Arms: The same Roll to find ten Ships to go to Piccardy, Pat. 48. H. 3. m. 3. Do. Writs to the several Port-Towns, that no Ships should go beyond Sea, but all to stay at home, m. 5. Dorf. Those who returned from guarding the Sea-Coasts with leave, were punished by imprisonment, seizure of Goods and Chattels, m. 4. same Roll, Dorf. Provision to be made till further use be had; so it was not confined unto time, but unto occasion, as need should require. And there be divers others in the time of H. 3. upon other occasions which I have remembered; in the time of E. 1. 21. E. 1. m. 23, It appeareth there, that all the Port Towns were appointed by the King and His Council, how many Ships every one should set forth, Vasc. 22. E. 1. m. 11. Dorf. N. 6. The King of England in that Writ doth stile Himself Superior Dominus Regni Scotia, &c. and sendeth His Writs to the King of Scotland, to let him know the King of France had taken part of Gascoigne, an Inheritance of the Crown of England, that he should, in Fide & Homagio, be at London with Horse and Arms, &c. This Writ is very observable; the King of England is Superior Dominus Scotia; a part of Gascoigne was then lost: The King of Scotland was required by this Writ, as well as requested, to give Him Aid, for the Recovery of those Grounds taken from Him in Gascoigne.

My Lords, this power is not confined only to England, but it reacheth (as great Lord) into Scotland, also into Ireland, Vasc. 22. E. 1. N. 5. Dorf. The King by His Writs commandeth divers Earls and others in England and Ireland to do the like, to send Men to London with Horse and Arms, the same Rot. Vasc. M. 13. Dor. All that claim to be of the liberty of the Ports so commanded, Par. 23. E. 1. M. 1, 5, 7. All Ships of 40 Tun were to be furnished and provided for the Kings Service, Cl. 23. E. 1. M. 5. Dorf. Every man is compelled to contribute; same Roll M. 4. Dorf. that did not inhabit in the Maritime Towns; yet if they had Land there, they must contribute, resident or not resident, within or without their Liberty, all must contribute.

My Lords, in that VVrit which is Cl. 23. E. 1. M. 5. Dorf. I will observe these things. 1. A Command to all Bishops, Abbots, Lords Spiritual and Temporal, quod sint intendentes, respondentes ad Custodiam Maris. 2. In contingent Causes, Causa, &c. 3. VVrit saith, Quod omnes ad Arma, &c. Secundum statum, &c. ad transfretandum cum nobis; and possession of Goods and Lands to be taken for the Custody of the Sea, as in former times they were accustomed; so it is to be done in this manner; as in times past. 5th place, the VVrit was directed unto several Sheriffs per Corpora, Bona & Terras to distrain. Next 24 E. 1. M. 15. the King commanded the Arch-Bishops, Bishops, Barons, all the Commonalty, to defend the Maritime Parts, Cl. 24. E. 1. M. 19. pro Custodia Maris. There was another of Simon de Sp. which I remembered before, 24. E. 1. Rot. 76. Another of the like, ex parte Rem' Regis, Cl. 15. E. 1. M. 26. Dorf. The King moderateth the Expences of the Countrey, when the danger ceaseth, Cl. 25. E. 1. M. 12. The King commanded the Sheriffs in several Counties, and others, to bring all the Ships to be ready for our Service whensoever we command, M. 26. same Roll; the like Command de Custod' Maris Pat' 31. E. 1. M. 20. power given to Thomas de B. to raise Forces in Cumberland to resist the Scots, and those that did refuse, to seize their Goods. In the time of E. 2. Cl. 2. E. 2. M. 21. The King commanded divers Towns to set forth Ships against the Scots, and afterwards by special Writ some of these were discharged, Rot. Pat. 9. E. 2. pars 2. M. 6. Pat. 16. E. 2. M. 11. A VVrit directed to Sir Thomas Weston and others, to array all between 16 and 60, or to take their Goods and Lands if they did refuse, pars 1. m. 7. of the same Roll, 16. E. 2.

Cl. 20. E. 2. m. The King doth there declare, That those who stay at home ought to contribute to set forth Ships, and for the VVages of the Men

Men employed, Cl. 20. E. 2. m. 6. Writs directed unto the Scholars of Oxford; they were not exempted, but commanded to keep South gate safely, Vasc. 18. E. 2. m. 18. The King writeth to the Arch-Bishop and others, commanding them to have Horses and Men in a readines as often as need should require. For the time of E. 3. Cl. 2. E. 3. m. 13. m. 22. Dorf. The King writeth to Southampton, and to 78 other Towns for their Shipping of above 40 Tun, 3 E. 3. Pat. pars 2. m. 6. The King commandeth the Sheriff of Cornwall to distrain Knights, and others, that abide on their Lands upon Maritime Parts, and imprison.

Those years of 10, 11, 12, 13 E. 3. have been remembred, 21 E. 3. The King concerning the Defence of the Sea and Sea-Coasts, gave special Rules to be observed, both for the Number of the Ships, for the Quality of their Persons, and for the Proportion of their Wages, as appeareth Pat. 19. E. 3. pars 1. m. 26. 21 E. 3. pars 1. m. 26. & 17. where there was special order taken for the guarding of the Sea and Sea-Coasts at the Charge of the Inhabitants, Franc. 21 E. 3. pars 1. m. 11. Command to the Sheriffs of London to arrest all Ships in London to be sent to Callice to resist the Enemies against us, then about to come, Fra. 35 E. 3. m. 9. N. 26. The King reciteth, That France made a Preparation to invade the Realm, and gave a Power to some to raise Forces, and commanded the Sheriff to raise Posse Comitatus to assist the Commissioners, 26 E. 3. Pat. pars 1. m. 7. The King by His Writs to several Counties, commanded, That all Men between 16 and 100, to be in readines to resist the Scots, Franc. 25. E. 1. N. 31. Command unto all Officers and Ministers to assist Andrew de Gulpho in the raising of Forces for Shipping, and to bring them to Portsmouth; so as in that Roll likewise your Lordships see that the Inlands were commanded for Shipping, Franc. 28. E. 3. m. 6. The King appointed R. C. and R. A. to arrest all Ships of 20 Tun and upwards, between such a distance, and to bring to Southampton, Seco. 29. E. 3. m. 13. That several Writs were directed to the Bishops of Durham, and Carlisle, and others, for the arraying of Men, Fra. 40. E. 3. m. 37. The King sent forth divers Writs, commanding quod Domini, &c. with all their Forces they should assist to the safe-keeping of the Sea-coasts, to resist the malice of the Enemies, Fra. 50. E. 3. N. 47. Dorf. Command to make Proclamation, that all having Land upon the Sea-Coasts, should repair thither with their Families; so as in all Ages and all Times Writs have issued both for the Defence of Sea and Land.

In the time of R. 2. Parl. 6. R. 2. N. 42. That was objected as a Record against the King, but maketh clearly for Him, Que dit, que le Roy Person Assemblies en Parlement est desire de vivre des Revenues del' Corone Car Escheates, Mariages, & Forfeitures, sunt par le defence nostre Roy in Resp' le Roy volet de faire en ceo Case; come per le advise des Seigniors, &c.

Your Lordships see they desire of the King to live of His Revenues; that the profits of Wards and Mariages of the Realm might be kept for the Defence of the Realm. The King giveth them this Answer, That He will do and abide in this Case, by the Advice of the Lords of this Realm, as shall be most for His Honour and Profit; so no reason to make any inforcement out of this Record, that profit of Wardships, &c. goes for Defence, because the King giveth no absolute denial unto it, saying, that the King will do as he shall be advised by His Lords.

Fra. 7. R. 2. m. 18. That the Lords beyond the Seas be arrayed and armed according to their State and Faculty, Pat. 8. R. 2. pars 2. m. 15. A Command, that all between 16 and 60, be in readines, Fra. 10. R. 2. m. 23. Arrayes throughout all England; and so in the time of H. 4. Parl. 5. H. 4. N. 24. For the Arraying of all men throughout England, and those that were impotent, and could not go, to contribute unto it, 3. H. 5. m. 36. Dorf. Pat. 13 H. 6. m. 10. General Commissions for the Arrest of Ships, without declaring the Cause, Pat. 14 H. 6. assigned, Jo. de N. to arrest all Ships in the Port of Southampton, to do Service as the King should command: There was no cause declared, Pat. 28 H. 6. m. 2. 13. Commissions to array, and those arrayed to keep in array with diligent watches; and the like Writs awarded into other Counties, 1 H. 7. 1 pars. The King writeth to Sir Fitzhughe to array Archers and Horsemen; so that it appeareth by those Precedents in all Ages, that those Defences have been made by Sea and Land, not confined to Port-Towns, and Maritime Places, but per totam Angliam.

Next place I shall give a particular Answer to some Objections as have been made (as have not fallen in my way) unto the Acts of Parliament, Reasons, Records, and some Book-Cases.

The End of Mr. Attorney-Generals second days Argument.

Mr. Attorney-General's Third days Argument, Decemb. 18. 1637.

May it please your Lordships,

THE Matters that I did purpose to insist upon this Day, was the answering of the Objections, I shall use no Preamble, no Repetition to induce what I have to say: But in the answering of the Objections, I shall first give answer to the several Acts of Parliament insisted upon; then unto the several Records and Reasons that have been urged; and in the last place, I shall answer the Exceptions that have been taken unto the Writ, 4 Augusti, Mittimus, and form of Proceedings.

The First Act that they have insisted upon is that of William 1. Call it what you will, an Act or a Charter: The words of it are verbatim in Matthew Paris. Volumus & concedimus quod omnes liberi homines sint quieti ab omni Tallagio, &c. Surely this Act of Parliament or Charter, it doth no way trench upon this Royal Power: For as in the beginning of my Argument I opened unto your Lordships, that this Power was inherent in the Kings of England before the Conquest. Here is only a Confession, that they shall be free ab omni injusta exactione: Now this is no unjust Exaction, for it is of common Right. And then the other part of this Law doth explain it, for it saith, quod sumus fratres Conjurati, &c. So for the Defence of the Realm: by the same Law they would urge to take away this Power by the same Law it is reserved.

Next place they insisted upon, was the Charter 10 Jo. or on Magna Charta, as they call it, which indeed is mentioned in Matthew Paris, and may be under the Great Seal: The words of that are thus Nullum Scutagium vel auxilium, nisi per Commune Concilium, nisi ad prim' filium militem faciend' & maritand' fil', &c. This Charter is, as was acknowledged by themselves, granted at Runnymede, when the Banners were displayed, when there was War or Rebellion between the Barons, Commonalty, and the King. It was not assented unto the King sitting in Parliament; for Parliaments are not called with Arms, and in the Field: It was in truth an enforced Act from a distressed King; shall this bind the Crown? I shall remember the Acts of Parliament made 15 E. 3. and there only were things that were in Parliament enacted derogatory to the Crown, as this is, that no Peer should be questioned but in Parliament, that no Great Officer be removed but in Parliament, that no Clergy-Man shall come before Temporal Judges; these were things that were much derogatory to the Prerogative of the King.

15 E. 3. That King the same year, when he was better advised, did make a Charter, which is in Print, for the recalling of this prejudicial Act of Parliament still in force. It appeareth by the Parliament Rolls, and printed Books, where the King declareth it was drawn from him with an unwilling mind, and was prejudicial to the Prerogative of his Crown; and therefore by that Charter it was repealed: But, my Lords, this Charter 17 Joh. if this should be in force, why hath there been no confirmation of it in so many Parliaments since? The Statute of Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. hath been confirmed 31 times, why no confirmation of the Charter 17 John, and why have we not heard of it since that time? Reason for it, because it trencheth too high on the Prerogative of the King and Crown: But take the words as they are; what be they? Nullum Scutagium nisi per Commune Concilium Regni nostri: If it were an Act, doth this extend to take away any thing that belongs of common Right unto the Crown? And that hath been the Exposition of, my Lords, the Judges of Acts of Parliament, that Aids due of common Right are not taken away by general words of Commune, &c. And therefore these Aids due of common Right, as this is, are no way taken away: besides, for the Statute of Magna Charta, it is made 9 H. 3. cap. 29. Nullus liber homo capiatur, aut imprisonetur, nisi per Legem, &c.

The general words of this Act of Parliament doth no way impeach the Royal power; for this Royal power, it is Lex Terra: Besides in these Precedents, 14 H. 3. 15 H. 3. 26 H. 3. 48 H. 3. and all the succeeding Kings remembered in all them, that these Writs went out to provide Shipping at the charge of the Inhabitants: So surely, if they had been taken away by Magna Charta, the Writs after Magna Charta would not have used it.

Obj. But then there hath been objected the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo; if it be 25 E. 1. as it is printed, or 34 E. 1. or as the Petition of Right doth recite it, Temps E. 1. Be it when they will; I say, under favour, there is nothing in that Act doth take away this power: The words are thus, Nullum Tallagium vel auxilium, sine voluntate Episcoporum, Baronum, Burgensium, &c. Mr. Solicitor, in his Argument upon probable grounds, did make question, whether this was an Act of Parliament, yea or no? 1. In respect it was not enrolled amongst other Acts of that time. 2. Because the penning of it may seem rather to be an Abstract. 3. Because when the other Acts of those times were sent over to E. 1. to be sealed and confirmed, no such Act was sent over. My Lords, I will not lay hold on this, but will admit with them, that as it is recited in the Petition of Right to be an Act of Parliament, Car. 13. so I will admit, (yet to waive nothing that hath been said) but by way of admittance, I give this Answer.

First, That it taketh away no Aids that are due by the Laws of this Realm; yet the words are general, Nullum Tallagium vel auxilium, nisi assensu Parliamenti, &c. Here is not in this Act of Parliament so much as an exemption of an aid to Knight the Kings Son, or to marry his Daughter; yet in this the Law is resolved, that these Aids are not taken away: And so it is declared, 25 E. 1. c. 11. which doth reduce these Aids unto certainty; so as your general words of Nullum auxilium will not do it: If this be an Aid due by the Law of the Land, then I say this is not properly an Aid, but a Contribution of King and People for the defence of the Realm: It is ad proficiscend' cum Navibus nostris; then I say, that this Power is inter Jura Summa Majestatis, one of the highest Prerogatives of the King, and shall never be taken away from the King, 12 H. 7. Stat. quia emptores terrarum doth not extend unto the King to take away his Tenure; if you will have such a high Prerogative taken away, you must shew it in the Acts of Parliament: Nay, my Lords, I say that in the time of E. 1. this Royal Power is expressly reserved by Act of Parliament unto the Crown, and therefore in after times never intended to be taken away.

First, I shall enforce it out of the Statute of 25 E. 1. c. 5, 6. that doth recite, that Aids and Taxes which have been given unto us before time towards our Wars, and other business of our own grant and good will, howsoever they were made, might turn to a Bondage, &c. We have granted that we shall not draw these Taxes into a Custom, &c. and do grant, that for no business henceforth we shall take such manner of Aids, but by a common consent of the Realm, &c. saving the ancient Aids due and accustomed. This Aid is not taken to be an Aid, for this was never given unto the Kings of England, but taken by Royal Power, Stat. 25. speaketh of such Aids as have been given, and excepteth such Aids as have been due and accustomed; and by the Precedents shewn, it appeareth those have been due and accustomed: It hath been desired in fide & Ligeantia, and with a Mandamus, 2 E. 1. cap. 1. This Statute doth confirm the great Charter, and the Charter of the Forrests: But in the end of it in the Parliament Roll, that notwithstanding all these things before-mentioned, both the King and the Council, and all they present at the making of this Ordinance, will intend the Prerogative of his Crown be saved unto him.

A further Answer to the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo, the practice that hath been since the time of E. 1. in the time of E. 2. E. 3. R. 2. and the practice since, doth shew plainly, that it was never intended by the Statute to take away this Royal Power: But then a thing materially objected, if the Records had warranted what had been said, and that was Rot. Parl. 29 E. 1. and then it was said, that though there be a saving, 25 E. 1. & 28 E. 1. yet here is no saving in this Act; so then Act 29 E. 1. all was lost.

My Lords, to this I say there is Nul tiel Record; and therefore I shall desire that this which they call an Act, 29 E. 1. I may attend your Lordships with: By this Record it doth appear, that it is only a Record of the perambulation of the Forrest, and no repealing of any former Law; neither is any thing enacted by that Law derogatory Anno to the Crown.

Next Statute objected, 1 E. 3. cap. 5. words are these, that no man shall be charged to arm himself otherwise than in the time of the Kings Progenitors, and that none be compelled to go out of his Shire, but where necessity requireth, and sudden coming of strange Enemies within the Realm: So this Statute it is relative to what hath been formerly done, and what hath formerly been found done, appeareth by the Records of King John, E. 1. that the Subjects were to set forth Ships for their defence at their own charge; then those Writs went out in E. 1. time, as hath been shewed; and then this Statute alloweth in two cases, one where necessity requireth, the other upon sudden coming of strange Enemies; and this Writ requireth no other, but where necessity is in the Kings judgment.

Obj. Next Statute 1 E. 3. cap. 7. was objected, where men of Arms were conveyed into Scotland and Gascoigne without wages; the King saith it shall be done so no more; the Statute mentioneth Scotland and Gascoign, forreign Wars, and so forreign to this business; for though Scotland was subject to the Dominion of England, yet it was a divided Kingdom, 8 R. 2. continual Claim Com. 376. That a Fine shall be paid by a Stranger, because he was in Scotland at the time of the Fine levied, Bract. 436. 2ⁿ Abjuration into Scotland is good, 6 R. 2. Protection, 46. that Scotland is out of the Realm: Therefore this Statute that speaketh of Gascoign and Scotland, speaketh of forreign Wars, not of defence.

Next, 18 E. 3. cap. 7. Men of Arms, Hoblers and Archers shall be at the Kings wages: This Statute likewise speaketh of going out of England; but he that is upon the defence of the Kings Seas, is not out of England; for that 6 R. 2. Protection, 46. The sending of Ships for the defence of the Coasts is no going out of England.

Obj. Next Statute 15 E. 3. cap. 8. no man shall be constrained to find men of Arms, Hoblers or Archers, otherwise than those who hold of such services without common consent. My Lords, this Statute of 25. doth not take away any former Laws in that Statute of 4 H. 4. c. 13. These 3 former Stat. of 1 E. 3. 18 E. 3. 25 E. 3. are recited in the Statute of 4 H. 4. and enacted they shall be firmly holden and kept in all points: So if these Statutes must be kept firmly in all points, then the Statute of 25 E. 3. doth not repeal any of these: Now that of 1 E. 3. cap. 5. reserveth a power unto the Crown, where necessity requireth, and when sudden Enemies come, 26 E. 3. those Ships were sent forth, and commanded for the defence of the Realm at the charge of the Subjects, Rot. Fra. 26 E. 3. m. 4, 5. Fra. 28 E. 3. m. 6. so as clearly there is no part of this Power impeached by this Statute of 25.

Then they have objected Parliament Roll, 2 R. 2. A. 3. Earls, and Barons, and other Sages of the Realm declared the great mischief by Sea and Land, therefore declared they could not remedy this mischief, but by charging of the Commons, which cannot be done without Parliament.

This is no Act of Parliament, it is but a Parley or Discourse, and Communication between the Lords and Commons; it was in 2 R. 2. in the Nonage of a young Prince, who did not assent, for there was no Royal Assent unto it, so no proof in this case.

Next Record 9 R. 2. Parl. N. 10. there was a tenth and half, and fifteenth and half granted to the King, upon condition contained in the Schedule, which is, that the King should assent that the Officers should be named in Parliament, and servants appointed for dispende of the money.

If the King will accept of the Subsidies and Aids upon condition, doth this take away the Royal Power? There is no more done in this than was in the Parliament 21 Jac. for there the Officers and Treasurers were appointed by the Houses of Parliament: But then further it doth appear, that this was granted pro viagio Johannis Regis de Casteel, &c. so that it was not granted for the custody of the Sea, but for this voyage. Next place, they insisted upon the Parliament 9 H. 4. N. 2. tenth and a half, and fifteenth and half granted with protestation, that this should not be returned for example; this is nothing, no more than the other. A Parliament grants a Subsidy upon condition it should be thus and thus employed; and the Protestation can no way prejudice the Crown in this 7 E. 4. Parl. N. 7. Objected there the Kings Speech, that is, there entered upon the Roll, that he will not charge his Subjects but in great and urgent occasions. My Lords, this is nothing but a gracious Speech of the King unto his Subjects, that he would charge them but in such cases as should concern the defence of the Realm. The Statute next objected was, 1 R. 3. cap. 20. that the Subjects from henceforth shall in no way be charged by any such Exaction or Imposition. This is no benevolence, but a legal due.

Next they object the Statutes of Tunnage and Poundage granted to the Crown for the defence of the Realm. In answer to that, there is no Act of Tunnage and Poundage that is now in force; neither are any duties taken to the Crown upon any Act of Parliament. Those Statutes of Tunnage and Poundage that have been granted, they make for the Crown; and therefore if your Lordships look the Statutes 1 El. 1. Jac. it was given towards the Kings charges for the defence of the Realm, and safeguard of the Sea; it was given towards the charges; it is not intended of any extraordinary defence; so as, my Lords, these Acts when they were of force did give this but towards the charges. It is so now, for this which is done, and those Contributions levied, are but towards his charges; and that will appear upon account, that his Majesty for these three or four years hath expended more upon the Sea than any his Progenitors; besides an acknowledgment in those Acts, that this defence could not be done without the intolerable expence of his Majesty; these Aids are of necessity, and not to be lacking at any time.

My Lords, In the next place they insisted upon the Petition of Right, 3 Car. It was never intended that any power of the King by his Prerogative should be either taken away, or lessened by it. I dare be bold to affirm, for I was of that Parliament, and was present at the debates, that there was never word spoken in that debate of taking away any power of the King for the shipping business: Besides, it is declared, assented unto, and denied by none, that there was no intention by the Petition of Right to take away the Prerogative of the King: The King did grant no new thing, but did confirm the ancient and old liberties of the Subject. My Lords, these were 1637. were the Acts of Parliament that have been objected and insisted upon, on the other side. Next place for an answer to scandalous Objections, it hath been said by Mr. Holborn, that these Statutes of 25 E. 1. 28 E. 1. that at the time of making these Laws they were positive, no such salvo in them of the Kings Prerogative.

The Acts before H. 4. were penned by the Kings Council, and those Clauses of a salvo crept in by the Kings Council, these were bold and presumptuous Assertions. The Acts of Parliament made in that time of E. 1. that there should be any Clauses added by the Kings Council, that should not be added to the Record. I have here the Parliament Record, that these Exceptions are recorded as fully as any part of the rest of the Record, and those Laws confirmed since; therefore to make any such Assertion against Records ought not to be done. He may object the same against Magna Charta, which is for the liberty of the Subject.

Next place they have objected out of the Parliament Book, 33 E. 1. that upon a Petition made to the King to have restitution of money taken, that the King did ordain the Treasurer should give satisfaction; I shall desire it may be read, and you shall see those moneys, for which direction was given were for goods taken for the Kings use.

Parl. 33 E. 1. fo. 105. do. per Scrut. pro guerra, &c. Respons. per Regem, Rex ordinavit per Concilium quod satisfactionem faceret, tam citius poterit; so this Record was for moneys taken meerly for the Kings use, therefore reason satisfaction shall be given. Perambulat. Forest Rot. 20 E. 1. de libertatibus Angl.

14. Febr. Lincoln; so here is no taking away of any former Act of Parliament, it referreth to what shall be futurely amended and revoked.

Next Parl. 8 E. 2. m. 8. Fryers of S. John of Jerusalem did Petition to have satisfaction of 2354 l. taken by the King out of their Treasury, Now because this Record was vouched two days together, I desire it may be read, and upon the reading it will appear to be upon another purpose; Sur le Roy, &c. there was cause and reason why the King should make satisfaction.

Next Record, Pat. 26 E. 1. m. 21. and that was highly magnified by them, that there was several Commissions went out to enquire of Gravaminibus of Woolls, and other particulars de Custod. Maris; and in this it was affirmed, that (as all the Kings Council took their Notes) these Clauses were omitted out of the Writs that concern the forfeiture of Lands, Goods, Chattels, or Seisures: This Commission maketh nothing to this purpose, for like Commissions daily come, where there are Taxes laid upon men heavier then they ought to be.

Commissions granted to enquire of Grievances in this kind, wherein an answer was, if any thing unjustly be taken, it shall be restored: But not a word to impeach this Royal power. And, my Lords, for the penalties in the Writs, Pat. 31 E. 1. m. 20. power to seize the Lands and Goods of the Refusers, 20 E. 2. m. 10. under forfeiture of all his Goods, 10 E. 3. m. 5. do. Claus. 12 E. 3. m. 18. do. That the penalties and Commands were as high in this Commission as before.

Obj. Next Objection, that the Kings of England have always consulted with the Parliament concerning the defence of the Realm, and that the Aids and Subsidies for defence have been granted by Parliament.

Car. 13.

Ans. This is no Argument to impeach this Royal power; for if in time of War the King will consent unto it, shall this take away his Royal power? In the time of E. 3. and R. 2. did that take away the Kings Royal power, that he may not ordain Standards of the money himself? He may by his Royal power erect Courts of Justice, shall that take away this from his power, because the Court of Wards was erected by Act of Parliament?

Obj. Next Record cited was Rot. Alm. 12 E. 3. pars 1. m. 22. That E. 3. was so penitent for what he had done, that he sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury to pray for him, and that the people would forgive him for laying those Taxes upon them, which his Wars compelled him unto, and he would never do the like.

You shall see it was only to pray for him for his Voyage into foreign parts, and so caused the Record to be read, beginning thus, De excusando Regem versus Populum, ending de Gravaminibus, dated at Barwick upon Tweed: Your Lordships see by this Record nothing, but the desire of a prayer. 1. To pray for the King for his Voyage beyond Sea, the other concerning the Charges or Impositions: Surely this Contribution commanded in the shipping besides, was none of these Charges, Talliages or Impositions: This his desire to the Archbishop was not only in the twelfth year of his Reign, but the like 25 E. 3. 26 E. 3. and 50 E. 3. so as surely those prayers of the Archbishop were for other Causes, and not for this, which was for the defence of the Realm.

Obj. Next Objection, Fra. 7 R. 2. m. 13. That the King assigned Tunnage and Poundage to Henry Earl of Northumberland for guard of the Seas.

Ans. My Lords, It doth appear by the very Record it self, that this was only for an ordinary defence, and not for an extraordinary defence.

Obj. Then they insisted upon the Parliament Roll of 13 H. 4. n. 43. the Office of admeasuring Linnen Cloth, a half-peny upon the Buyer and Seller, and other Fees upon long Cloth, the Parliament 13 H. 4. declares to be a void Office, and that accordingly Judgment was given 13 H. 4. Out of this he would conclude, that therefore there should be no new Office; that an Office granted with a Fee is void in Law.

Ans. For Answer unto this: 1. The reason why that was a void grant was this; it appeareth 4 E. 1. that the Office of all Woolls and Linnen Cloth was one entire Office: If the King will grant that to another man which was to trench upon the former Office, a void Patent: Therefore a strange conclusion, that because this Office was void, therefore no new Office to be granted, 22 H. 6. fo. 9. The Office of surveying the packing of all Cloth, good Office, 27 H. 8. fo. 28. The King granted to one to be his Surveyor of his Honor of— a good Office Fitz faith, because it had no Fee, therefore it was a void Office; and now at Bar it is said because it hath a Fee, it was a bad Office. If this reason may hold, all ancient Offices may fall, 39 H. 6. Office to be Marshal of the Kings Bench, 12 H. 7. 15. to be Warden of the Fleet. Nay, it taketh down all Offices that have been erected for the publick good, and upon just cause, as Offices of Subpans in Chancery, Star-Chamber, &c. All those within time of memory must be shaken by this.

Obj. Next

Anno
1637.

Obj. Next place objected, that these Contributions, they are in substance Impositions, and that the King should not impose upon the Subject by his Charter, or by his Writ, but it must be done by common consent in Parliament: Your Lordships have observed in all my discourse, that I have not insisted any way upon any power of Imposition, neither is it the question in the business, for no mans property is invaded, no seizure of any mans Goods, unless they will incur for contempt, and by a wilful contempt the Subject may lose his property.

Therefore Dyer fo. 16. and 13 El. fo. 296. If the King will command his Subject to come into the Realm, and he will not, he shall forfeit for his contempt all his goods; or if he be attached to appear in the Courts of Justice, and not appear, he shall forfeit his goods, 34 H. 6. 49. 9 H. 7. 6. If a man will wilfully contemn the Kings Command by his Writ, he may be distrained; this incurreth not by an Invasion of his property, but in respect of his contempt. Parl. 50 E. 3. m. 24. Lord Latimer he was sentenced for perswading the King to lay Impositions. My Lords, I have looked upon the Record, and there the cause of the sentence is declared, that he himself laid the Imposition, and did take upon him Royal power, and therefore he was justly sentenced; and for the sentence of Doctor Manning, nothing to this purpose. This Writ denieth not the property to be in the Subject, but saith, the Subject hath the property, and therefore commandeth the Sheriff to distrain him if he will not pay.

And for the Commission 2 Car. for the borrowing of moneys for the Palatinate, this was for the recovery of the Palatinate, not for the defence of the Realm, and besides called in by special Order.

Next place they objected and shewed divers Records, that the King hath paid the wages of divers Marriners and Souldiers, and I do agree it; is that an Argument, that he may not command the Marriners to be sent out at the charge of the County to furnish the Kings Ships? this is against the Records that I have remembred. So likewise they have cited 21 E. 3. Rot. 77. ex parte Rem. Regis, the King commanded the Constable of his Castle of B. to build Ships, and the King to pay for them; so he doth at this day, he hath built the Sovereign of the Sea, and hath paid for it.

They have objected Doctor Cowels Book which was called in; I wish they had read the Proclamation, three Causes expressed: 1. Because he had writ things derogatory to the Crown. 2. For 3. For speaking irreverently of the Common Law, just to light upon the men who do not spare to wade into all the deep mysteries of Princes, who are Gods upon Earth.

For their Objection, that the King hath a Revenue belonging unto his Crown, for the defraying of all ordinary and extraordinary charges, and for the guard of the Sea. As Tenures by Knights service, Esuage, Wards, Marriage, Ancient Demesne, &c. Tunnage and Poundage, service of the Ports, and profits of the Sea.

My Lords, it is not for us that are Lawyers to look into the secret of the Kings Revenue, he hath high Officers, as Treasurer and Under-Treasurers that look unto the secret of his Estate, and they know well whether his ordinary or extraordinary Revenue do answer more than his Annual expence. The Story of Adam might deter men from looking into the secrets of Princes.

For his Tenures, that Knights-service Tenure was originally instituted for the service of Scotland and Wales, 19 K. 2. Fitz. Guard. 165. and old Tenures fol. 10. duties called Tunnage and Poundage are not given now unto the King by Acts of Parliament, and when they were given, it was for the great charges of this great defence.

And besides those Acts of Tunnage and Poundage only concerned the ordinary defence, the sending forth of the 75 Ships out of the Cinque-Ports, it was but for fifteen days at their own charges; and for the profit of the Sea of Sturgeon and Whales, a proper defence for a King: And for the service of the Ports, you may remember by the Records shewn, they were commanded ultra debita: But then they have granted one Case, and I think but one, that the King may ordain a Toll in a Fair or Market, or grant Pontage, or the like, because there is an ad quod dampnum, and therefore shall be an enquiry si Patria gravatur. The King may grant a Fair without an ad quod dampnum, if in his judgment, &c.

Rot. Sco. 1 E. 3. m. 8. Writ directed to the Treasurer to pay for the Shipping at Tarmouth. My Lords, it doth appear particularly in the Record, that I. S. was Admiral, and going into Scotland, so the defence was for a Foreign War.

It hath been mightily insisted upon, that here needeth no Command to furnish Ships by the Kings Writs, every man by the Instinct of Nature will do it, where a necessity, or Royal power, or Command needs: Surely this Argument is made by the people, or to please the people; what will the consequence of it be, but the introducing of a Democratical Government, when every man shall be his own Defender? The God of Hosts chose Captains and Leaders to go before his people, and commanded them but to give the people this liberty. That every man shall do as he please, and make a defence by an Instinct of Nature, is a strange Position. But it hath been said in these Cases, it is better to sustain a mischief than an inconvenience; by this inconvenience every mans property is taken away from him, as often as the King pleaseth, and what proportion he pleaseth. This though a Maxim in Law, yet it goeth unto particulars; but the loss of a Kingdom is both of Liberty and Estate; this is not to be reckoned among the mischiefs, for this mischief destroyeth both Head and Members; therefore I do marvel to hear the Rule of Mr. Holborn, suffer a mischief, rather than an inconvenience.

Next Objection, Parl. 2 H. 4. n. 22. per faire Barges, this was the Petition to the Commons, that the Commissions granted to Burroughs, Cities, and towns, for building of Barges should be repealed; the Kings Answer for the present they should be repealed, but for the future, for case of necessity he should advise with the Lords: It doth not appear that these were granted for the building of any Ships for the Defence of the Realm.

These are Objections that have been made out of the Acts of Parliament, out of the Records and Reasons they have insisted upon; now I come to the Exception and objection against the Writs and Proceedings in this matter.

1. They say, there was no sufficient danger represented by the Writs 4 Aug. They say the supply ply by a Mittimus doth come too late, and that the words of the Mittimus are not a good affirmative, quia salus &c. and it doth not appear there was any danger 4 Aug. 11. For this I have given it an Answer, that it was not necessary to represent the danger in the Writ. The King he hath secret intelligence, he hath his Espies abroad, His Ambassadors beyond Sea, he knoweth the danger we know not, nay, he knows that which is not fit to be discovered; and those dangers by preparation perhaps diverted another way. It's not fit by a publick Writ to reveal the dangers.

But, My Lords, For the satisfaction of His people he hath expressed sufficient cause enough in the VVrit. Quia salus Regni periclitabatur, &c. they say there was no danger represented at that time when the VVrit went out; that is mistaken, for the VVrit of Mittimus doth recite 4 Aug. and saith quod quidam pradones Pirati, &c. which shewes the danger was the cause of the issuing of those VVrits; then they expect this same word salus; it is a Physical word and signifieth health, and you must have no Metaphors in VVrits; surely the Gramarians can tell that salus is taken pro incolumitate, as well as for health, as safety, Metaphors are usual in VVrits; Idare be bold to speak there are more Metaphors in the Register, than in any Book, Register 61. Turba, &c.

Then they have left no stone unrolled in this Case. Now they say the Kings Testimony by His VVrit is not sufficient, for that under favour it is Teste meipso; without exception we are bound to give credit unto it, 1 Eliz. fol 105. Ne exeat Regnum, the King affirms I. S. will go beyond Sea. Saith the Book, this averment of the King in his VVrit it is not Traversable, you shall not aver against it. The case remembred by Mr. Solicitor, which was mistaken by Mr. Holborn in the answer Hill. 20 E. 1. Coram Rege Rot. 14. He said these words vouched in the Record, were but the saying of the Kings Council, and not the opinion of the Court; clear otherways, for it was the saying of the Judges, and then agreed quod Dominus Rex est Superlativum Recordum & precellens; will your Lordships give credit to the Certificate of the Marshal of the Kings Host?

To the Certificate of the Captain of a Company if the Men be in the Kings Service, 11 H. 7. fol. 5. to the Certificate of a Bishop in case of Bastardy, to the Certificate of a Mayor and Aldermen by the Recorder, 5 E. 4. 30. 21 E. 14. 16. and will you not admit to the Certificate of the King by his Mittimus?

Next exception was taken to the Scir' Fac', that this Scire' Fac' ought not to go forth to this as a debt to the King.

2. Reasons for it: 1. The VVrit of 4 doth direct a form of levying, which is by distress or imprisonment of those that are Rebels.

It is no debt to the King, and therefore ought not to be levied by Scir. Fac.

My Lords, for this, this Duty is a Duty to the Common-wealth. It is pro defensione, Regni The-sauris publicis respicit Regem; whosoever shall detain any publick Duty, he may be questioned by the King as the Head of the body; for that it appeareth 27. Aff. pl. 17. It was declared, that J. S. and J. D. had levied 100 Marks on the County for the array of certain Archers, which money did not come for the profit of the King. Out of this I observe two things. 1. This money that was for Archers, the money was levied on the Body of the County. 2. Recovered by an Indictment at the Kings Suit, 27 Aff. pl. 17. 11

H. 4. fo. 2. the Fee of the Knight of the Shire that serves by Parliament, they are reckoned amongst publick duties; therefore the Goods of a stranger may be taken within the Town to pay those Fees: If the Money be not paid, the distress may be sold, for it is for a publick Duty, 11 H. 4. 2. so is the Book Reg. 19. 2. the King commandeth the Sheriff to levy those Fees, as well within his Liberty, quam extra. Hill 20 E. 3. Rot. 57, coram Rege Juratores Hundredi de S. they make a Presentment, that J. S. and J. D. Chief Constables of paid Wages to Archers which went not beyond Sea.

So as by this record, it appeareth, these publick duties are recoverable at the Suit of the King, Quia ad opus Domini Regis, Pat. 14 E. 1. M. 1. 14. the King commandeth an account to be taken of the murage, and how the Sums have been employed, P. 15 E. 1. coram Rege 70. Do. Rippon was besieged, they gave Hostage; Promise made by the Town, that those Hostages should be redeemed; they were not, complaint made unto the King, and came to the Kings-Bench; and these Monies being 700 l. that was promised by the Town, for the bringing back of those Hostages, was ordered to be paid, because it was for the publick Service: So for other things that are pro communi utilitate int' Co'ia, Hill 5 E. 4. Rot. 4. Aurum Regina, due unto the Queen, may be levied by Process out of the exchequer in the Kings name; nothing more usual. This Scir' Fac' it is grounded upon the whole matter, the Writ 4 Aug. Car. and Mittimus, and commanded that the Defendants should shew cause, why they should not pay the Monies assessed upon them for the publick Service.

My Lords, I have done with the objections, I shall come to the judicial Records, 24 E. 1. ad Custodiam Maris. Bark-shire, an Inland County, refused to contribute; and Names of those that made Default were certified into the Exchequer.

It appeareth by the Records cited, that process went out of the Exchequer in the strictest manner, a Capias in manus of their Lands, Tenements; Goods, and Chattels, and that their Bodies with Horse and Armour be sent to Portsmouth; for, besides the doing of their Services, the seizure of their Lands and Goods, 24. the same year ex parte Rem' The-saurar', on the other side J. de S. gave information unto the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Barons, in absence of of the Lord Treasurer: of the Preparation of Men in Flanders, (this being remembred before to another purpose :) It appeareth after consultation had, they did resolve to send forth 2 Writs, one was to the Town, the other to T. H. Custas Maris, to call all for defence of the Maritime parts; ex parte Rem' Regis, 24 E. 1. Rot. 80. Henry Hussy was seized of the Mannor of W. in Bark-shire, he was assessed to find a Horse pro Custod' Maris; he complained in the Exchequer, he had not the whole Mannor, and yet was assessed to find a whole Horse; he did not come and say, I ought not to be taxed; he submitted to the power, and desired a mannerly contribution, 25 E. 1. Rot. 72. The Abbot of Robertsbridg Case remembred on both sides divers times; under favour, the joyning of the issue in the Record, is a very full proof in this Case; he brought a Replevin against J. S. for taking of his Goods, an Inland Town in Kent, he pleadeth the Confirmation between our King and the King of France, & Leyborn assigned keeper of the Sea, the Plaintiff was assessed unto 7. l. 7. d. Anno 22. 13. l. 23. 15. Anno 24. and the Defendant being Collector, did distrain. The plaintiff did not say in the Bar of this, he ought not to be taxed; but he was seised ad inveniend, &c. for such Lands.

The Defendant, saith the Plaintiff, did hold other Lands in the County, and for that Land he was Seised; now this, doth admit the Power of taxing, Hill. 16 E. Rot. 23. coram Rege. The Jury of Norfolke did present, that Jo. Russel and others, 8 E. 3. were Hobellers elected in the Hundred of T. and staid at home; they plead, not guilty; the Jury find that Jo. Russel did perform the Service, but Jo. S. did not perform, therefore committed to Prison, and paid a Fine to the King. By this Record it appeareth, the Money paid to the Archers and Hoblers was at the Counties Charge.

Methinks the disclaimer, that is by the Commons, 13 E. 3. Parl. N. 9. 11., is in nature of a Judgment in this case, for there they did disclaim they had no conuſance; and there likewise upon their own confession, that the Maritime Parts ought to defend at their own Charges, as the In-Land Parts the In-land Counties: This Confession, 13 E. 3. is a strong argument, Parl. 21 E. 3. Rot. 20. when the Commons did petition de garde le Mare answer soit garde fait; and that was at the Charge of the Country, as your Lordships know.

20 E. 3. Diverse Ordinances made, which Ordinances made had the force of a Law. The King and his Council did ordain quod omnes illi, &c. which have such a quantity of Land, should be seised to find one Archer. Decem libr. terre Hobeller viginti libr. 2. Hobellar. 25 libr. unum hominem ad Arma. This appeareth, Fra. 20 E. 3. par. 1. m. 17. in the County of Bedf. and Buck. In the same year, another Ordinance, that those that did reside with their Families, cum toto posse, within six Miles of the Maritime Parts, were excused for finding of Men without.

My Lords, upon the occasion of this Service, there were divers Refusals made. Certificate by Mittimus of their Names into the Exchequer; as in this Case: J. T. and W. G. were certified for Defaulters amongst others: upon this, the Court of Exchequer, they award Process against those Men, and others, which was a Cap. in manus: seizure of their Lands and Goods; they came in, and pleaded, they resided infra sex leucas, with their Families, and all their Powers: Issue joyned upon this, Jury impanelled; and it appears, those that were found within six Miles, Judgment quod sine die; but for others imprisoned and fined, for so much Land as they had without the six Miles, for that they were charged. If I should number unto your Lordships all the Judgments in this kind, I might speak here till to morrow morning.

P. 22 E. 3. inter Com. in the Exchequer. P. 22. E. 3. m. H. 22 E. 3. P. 25 E. 3. M. 25 E. 3. P. 27 E. 3. P. 28 E. 3. And there is in a great number of other years of 29, 30 H. 4. And my Lords, according to those Judgments, Trin. 21 E. 3. R. The Writs went forth for discharging of such as have resided upon their Lands within six Miles, 21 E. 1. Pipe-Roll, discharged, because they were in the King's Service: So as, My Lords, out of these Records thus much may be collected; 1. They affirm the King's power in the assessing and levying. 2. Then they are grounded upon those Ordinances made by the King and his Council. 3. Process went out of the Exchequer, and not in the King's Name. M. 22. E. Parl. coram Baron. Issue joyned, whether J. S. had Land to the value of 40 l. to find Hobellers: If he had them, he was to do it.

My Lords I have now done with the Judicial Precedents. I have cited some few among many other. It is now time, after so long Premises, to draw to a Conclusion.

Wherein your Lordships have heard, 1. That the King of England, that he is an absolute Monarch, and that by the Common Law of England all those Jura Summa Majestatis are inherent in his Person.

This Supremum Dominium for all the Land that any Subject holdeth, it is derived from the Crown; and as Plowden putteth it, 12, 13. That there is a Tacite Condition in Law annexed upon his Grant, that his Officers may do Justice, to execute his Process severely upon his Grant.

This Tacite Condition may be subject unto a common Defence; Supreme Jurisdiction both by Sea and Land, was never yet impeached, and from him lieth no Appeal, And originally, by the Institution of the Laws of this Realm, what was once in his hand, was never granted from him; he hath absolute power of concluding War and Peace. All these are in him, as he is an absolute Monarch, and holdeth his Kingdom under none but God himself. It hath appeared, that the principal part of this Kingly Office consists of the Defence of the Realm: That as his Jurisdiction is by Sea and Land, so is his Defence: And this hath been made appear unto your Lordships both by Precedents before the time of William the First, and since, pro communi utilitate; and in cases of necessity, the Kings of England may ordain by their Proclamation, Writs, Patents, by the Advice of Council and Judges in Legal matters, that the King is the sole Judge of this Danger, both for the prevention of it, and for the avoiding it. Therefore for us to distrust that he will command too great a Power or Aid, it is a presumption against a presumption of Law. It hath appeared likewise, that all the Incidents of Defence are inherent in his Majesty; we cannot build a Fort or Castle on our own ground without Licence. Your Lordships have heard the Precedents particular and general: The Precedents which have universal Reasons, quod omnes ex debito astricti sunt. Writs awarded by the King's Royal Power in time of Parliament, when Parliaments were, and in those years when great Aids and Subsidies were granted to the King, many times no cause declared, nor the occasion discovered. There is no Act of Parliament made to take away this Power; and the Judicial Precedents which your Lordships have heard, have affirmed this Royal Power.

My Lords, If there were no Law to compel unto this Duty, yet Nature, and the inviolate Law of Preservation ought to move us: These Vapors which are exhaled from us, will again descend upon us in our Safety, and in the honour of our Nation. And therefore let us obey the Kings Commands by his Writ, and not dispute. He is the first Mover amongst these Orbs of ours, and he is the Circle of this Circumference, and he is the Center of us all, wherein we all as the Lines, should meet; he is the Soul of this Body, whose proper Act is to Command.

But I shall need to use no perswasion to do Justice in this Cause; and therefore shall humbly desire Judgment for the King.

Anno
1637.

Baron Weston his Argument.

IN Easter Term last, there was a Writ of Scire fac went out of the Exchequer, directed to the Sheriff of Buckingham, reciting, That whereas divers several Sums of Money specified in a Schedule annexed unto the Writ, by virtue of the Writ 4. Aug. 11. Car. was sessed upon several persons in the Schedule named, towards the provision of a Ship of War, mentioned in the writ; which Sums so Assessed, and being not paid, by VVrit of Certiorari, 9 Maii, 12 Car. under the Great Seal of England, the Names of those several persons and Sums assessed, are certified into the Chancery: and by Writ of Mittimus, Dated 5. Maii, 13 Car. sent into the Exchequer, and there to be proceeded upon according to the course of Law; the Sheriff of Buckingham is commanded to warn the Parties named in the Schedule, to appear, and shew cause why they should not be charged with those several Sums of Money assessed upon them.

Hereupon, Mr. Hampden appeareth, and demandeth Oyer of the Writ 4. August. of the Certiorari and Mittimus, and their several Returns: They being all read unto him, he saith, That these several Writs and the Returns thereof, and the Schedules thereunto annexed, do not contain any sufficient matter to charge him to pay the 20 s. and thereupon Demurred.

Mr. Attorney General saith, That they do contain sufficient matter to charge him; and hereupon the Demurrer is joyned.

The Demurrer being joyned, the Record was read in the Exchequer: The Cause appearing to be of great weight, it was Adjourned unto this Place in the Exchequer-Chamber, to have the Advice of all the Judges of England.

Upon this Record, I am to deliver my Opinion, and I take it that there is sufficient matter to charge Mr. Hampden for this 20 s. and so I give Judgment for the King.

Here hath been twelve days spent in the Arguing of this Case at Bar; I will confine my self unto two hours and less, though not tied unto any time. The way to be short, is shortly to find out the Points: But I must first observe in what state this Cause cometh to Judgment before us.

There is a Rule in Law, if a man shall demur, generally unto the Writ, he doth confess all other matters in Fact that are alledged: The Reason of it is apparent; because matters in Fact are to be tried by Jury, and matters of Law, by Judges; so, in this Case, all the danger alledged by the Writ, is confessed, and the matter in Law is that which we that are Judges, are to deliver our Opinion upon.

It hath been Objected by Mr. Holborne, That we are tied unto the Writ 4. Augusti; for that VVrit is the Ground of all, and upon that doth all the rest depend. It is true, If he had relied upon this Writ, it had been so: But his Demurrer is this; That the VVrit and the rest of the Proceedings with the Schedule, do not contain matter sufficient; so that now they have not put unto us the VVrit 4. Aug. alone, but all the rest, to give Judgment upon.

For the VVrit of Mittimus, it is confessed, that in that there is an Expression, That Salus Regni periclitabatur, which is not in the former.

To this he hath taken exception, That Salus Regni periclitatur, the danger is at the present time of the Mittimus, and doth not say, periclitabatur in 4. Aug. 11 Car. And therefore this Expression now in the Mittimus, cannot make good the Defect thereof in the VVrit Aug. Car. 13.

To this I answer, That the demurring to all, hath confessed all; and yet the matter in the VVrit is sufficient to express the Danger.

The Second Objection, That Salus signifieth Health, and not Safety; that the Physicians term it so; but Salus signifieth Safety, as well as Health; so it is Englished in Cooper's Dictionary, and so it is taken by Poets and Historians, for Safety.

The next Objection was to the VVrit 4. Aug. That if there were a Danger, it must be plainly expressed in the VVrit: The words are, Datum est nobis intelligi, &c. How cometh the King to understand it? the danger must be expressed.

Sol. For this, I hold it more fit for a Statesman to give an Answer than my self; that the King should discover his Intelligence; whether it be fit to make known to all the world the danger the Kingdom is in. But yet I find, that in the said Writ, 4. August. there is expressed both dangers by Pyrates on the Sea; the Dominion of the Sea like to be lost? That these are dangers to the whole Kingdom; for the Certiorari, I find it directed only to the Sheriff. That the VVrit of Mittimus is directed to the Court of Exchequer, and therefore he could not take notice of these VVrits. VVhatsoever I shall take advantage of, it must be contained in the VVrit 4. Aug.

In this VVrit, three things, as Dangers, are expressed.

1. The danger by Pyrates. 2. The danger in loosing the Dominion of the Narrow Sea. And, 3. The great Peril in this time of VVar.

For the Pyrates; I shall not meddle with them: they are but petty Robbers, still running away. The Ports must defend themselves against those; the Inland County is in no danger of them. I will not insist upon the Dominion of the Narrow Seas; though that is considerable; for in the Defence of that, consists much the preservation of the Kingdom: But I shall insist on the Danger of the Kingdom, expressed in the VVrit 4. August. Thus, consideratis etiam periculis undique, &c. there is danger, there is peril round about us, and it is by reason that there are now times of VVar; we see Danger on every side.

There are two things trouble this Point. 1. The Subjects suspect that this is only a Pretence, and that the Kingdom is not in danger.

2. That there being great Sums of Money raised upon this occasion, that this in the end will be drawn to be Annual and perpetual; but if they were satisfied the Kingdom was really in danger, likely they would be content to pay the Money till the danger were over.

Sol. For my part, I Answer to these two Objections; that it is an unworthy Supposition: I must be satisfied, and I am, that the Kingdom was in danger, for two things; one Reason is, because it is so expressed in the Writ 4. Aug. It cannot be denied, but that the Kingdom may be in danger; it hath been Conquered, and so it may be again; therefore it is necessary that it should be foreseen and prevented, and some must do it; and who better than the King, that hath the Care and Charge of the Kingdom? He saith the Kingdom is in danger, and hath so declared it by his Writ; why I should not believe it, when the King hath declared it by his Writ, I know not.

My

Anno 1637. 2. My other Reason of the Danger is, that it is so de facto; It cannot be unknown unto any Man, that, for these three or four years last past, great Navies have been at Sea, and great Forces on Land: If we should have but an ordinary Defence at the Sea by Shipping, no man can suppose, but that those Navies being so great, may land where they will, and in as many places as they will; what a spoil would they make before such time as any resistance could be made against them?

Object. They object here, that these Navies which are at Sea, they are engaged in Wars one with another; we are safe enough, we need not fear.

Sol. I answer, I think they are engaged in good earnest: But who knoweth how soon these wars may end? they may end by Mediation of Friends, or by the death of some one Person; and when there is a great Navy at Sea, and forces at Land, how easy is it to remember an old Quarrel, or to pick a new one.

These things perswade me the Kingdom is in danger, and a very just cause to make preparation for defence: And if every man will be so perswaded, they will not deny the payment of the Money, till such time as an ill use be made of it. An Example of this nature hath happened in former times.

In H. 7 time, it appeareth by a Record on the Kings part, Pat. 1. H. 7. pars 3. Do. There were wars between the King of the Romans and the King of France; they were both Friends unto H. 7. they ow'd him no ill will; yet by reason of these wars, great Forces at Sea and great Forces at Land; the King durst not trust them, but sent forth His Proclamations, to command that Watch and Ward be kept over the Sea-Coasts; and Commandment to all His Subjects, that upon a short warning they should be ready for defence of the Kingdom: so this may be well an example for the course that is now taken for Defence of the Kingdom.

I shall now come unto those Reasons, and unto the Records that have been objected on either side; I shall begin with the Kings Side, because that layeth a charge upon the Defendant. It hath been objected, That some of them are not warranted by the Records.

First, say they, here is a Ship commanded to be provided, and Money must be levied; but in the end, when this great sum of Money is collected, it must be disbursed no man knows how; no such thing in the Record.

Sol. To this I answer, The Record saith, A Ship must be provided, and the Sheriff is to rate the County secundum facultates, towards the same; not a word of any Money to be paid unto the King. It is a Ship that the Sheriff is to build, and to sell Money towards it. They have said besides, Here is in the Writ a Command for the Imprisonment of the party, and his Liberty is taken away dearer than his Life, and his Goods, wherein he hath an absolute property, shall be taken away; these things, they say, are not warranted by the Writ, nor by any thing in the Record.

I answer, It is not warranted by the Proceedings in this Case; for the Scire fac' is not to shew cause why the Parties Goods should not be sold, or be imprisoned, but why he should not be charged with the Money assessed upon him. They say, the general Defence of the Sea lieth upon the King, because he hath wherewith to do it.

Ans. I would willingly disburden my self as much as I can of these Objections. A general

Answer I shall give unto these Particulars.

They say, The King hath personal Services, the Services of Tenants by Knight-Service, Escuage, Castle-Guard, Grand Sergeancy, Petty Sergeancy: Is the King bound by these to the Defence of the Kingdom? He that doth look on their Originals will not say so, for these are Tenures reserved upon the several Grants made by the King, and no other reason is there, that the King by this should be tied to defend the Kingdom; then it is for the Lords that are Subjects, that have the like Tenures, that they should be bound to the Defence of the Sea.

They say, He hath besides these, Wards, Marriages, Reliefs, Fines, Issues, Amerciaments, Pre-miere Seisin, Fines of Alienation, Respits of Homage; all Fruits of the Tenure: And therefore must go towards the Defence of the Kingdom.

Ans. I answer, These Profits are casual; besides, if he be not bound in respect of his Tenures aforesaid, he cannot be bound by the Fruits of them.

Object. It's objected, the King hath the Profits of the Sea, as, Royal Fishes, Whales, Wrecks at Sea, Treasure Trove, Royal Mines, &c.

I answer, These he hath by His Prerogative, and not for Defence of the Kingdom; neither are they fit for a Subject to have. You see He hath particular Services; as Services from the Five Ports and other Places, as Maulden, Colchester in Essex; and besides, He hath all manner of Customs; and in regard of these He is bound to provide for the Defence of the Sea.

Sol. It is true, the King must for an ordinary Defence use the Means the Law hath allowed him, but that is not now the Question; it is for an Extraordinary Defence the Question now ariseth. If it were asked any man, whether they do think in their Conscience, that the King is able of Himself, out of these, to prepare a Royal Navy, without help from the Subject; none so senseless to think it.

There be some other things to which I shall give a general Answer.

It appeareth by many Records, that the King hath paid Wages unto Souldiers, and sometimes hath hired Ships; and unless there hath been a consideration, the King would not have done it.

To this I answer, That it was for Ordinary Defence, and he is bound to do it; and if He engaged Himself to repay unto them their Charges, I can say no more but this, Every honest Man that makes his Promise will perform it, and so is the King bound to perform His Promise: That which Honesty binds others to perform, Honour binds the King to.

I shall come unto those things, to which a more particular answer is to be given.

The Charge lyeth general upon the whole Kingdom, which I shall divide into three Parts.

1. The Ports.
2. The Maritime Counties. And
3. To the In-land Counties. And to these three I will apply the Records.

1. For the Ports they are of two kinds, The Cinque Ports, and the Ports at large: What Services are due by the Cinque Ports, are expressed in Libro Rubro in the Exchequer, That they were to find 57 Ships, and 24 Men in every Ship, and that for 15 days, which cometh unto 1188 men.

The Ports at large are tied to no certain Service: It will appear by most of these Records which I shall apply, that the Cinque Ports have been charged with more than their due, and the Ports

Ports at Large equally with the Cinque Ports.
Anno Pat. 15. Jo. m. 6. The King sent His Writ un-1637. to the Cinque Ports, and thereby commandeth Quod omnes Naves parati, &c. & Homines, &c.
 He doth not here tie them to a Number, but all must go, if there be 500.

Cl. 17 Jo. m. 7. Here the King sent His Writ
Baronibus suis de Rye, a Member of the Cinque
 Ports, Quod venire faciatis omnes naves apud Cinque Portas. This was general as the other; All the Ships, not tied to the number of 77.

Cl. 14 H. 3. m. 13. A Writ went out unto Port- smouth, being a Port at Large, to provide a Galley & eam munire faciat cum hominibus & quod sint prompti & parati ad proficiscendum, cum necesse fuerit;
 so here is a particular Charge upon Portsmouth, not bound unto it to provide a Ship with all manner of Munition.

Cl. 25 E. 1. m. 5. do. A Writ went unto Garn- sey, a Port at Large, to make a Ship ready as often as need should require, de contributione facien- da pro Navibus quocies opus fuerit, Pat. 9 E. 2. pars
 2. m. 26. A Writ goeth forth, and that was directed, Ballivis, & probis hominibus Com' Southamp- ton, to make provisionem navigii sumptibus propriis, no Promise of the King to pay this again.

Cl. 20 E. 2. m. 7. A Writ goeth unto the Sheriff of London, (and that reciteth a Charge formerly laid upon this City and upon Kent) for finding of 12 Ships, London to find 9, and Kent to find 3;
 and 40 Men to be in every Ship, & sumptor illor'

Cl. 20 E. 2. m. 8. A Writ directed to the Bailiffs of Tarmouth, which is none of the Cinque Ports, and this was charged with two Ships at their own Charges; and the like Command in the same Roll, for all Ships of 50 Tun and upwards to be all ready.

Seco. 10 E. 3. m. 12. That Writ reciteth the General Obligation that they are bound in, to defend the Kingdom, almost in the same words mentioned in this Writ: It reciteth, That every man should be felled juxta statum & facultates; so there was a Contribution: Then cometh in the Clause, Ultero illius pecunia summam debet pro servitiis suis. It is true indeed, the King did pay towards this, but it is expressed to be of His meer Grace add Favour.

10 E. 3. m. 2. do. A Writ unto Winchelsey, one Member of the Cinque Ports; and this was Quod omnes naves sint parati, both of the Ports, & alia- rum villarum.

And the Reasons are expressed, Because without their Help, the King was not able to defend the Kingdom; and appointeth them by that Writ, that the Ships should be ready victualled for thirteen weeks, whereas the ordinary time was but 15 days.

Vasc. 12 E. 3. m. 8. There a Writ goeth forth, directed unto the Sheriff of Kent, to the Major and Barons of the Cinque Ports, whereby they were all commanded to look unto the Custody of the Sea Coasts; here is the Maritime Towns and Port Towns joyned together.

25 E. 3. m. 22. do. A Writ to Southampton ad Con- gregandum naves; in the same Roll, m. 8. more Writs to other Towns.

Pat. 12 E. 3. pars 4. m. 3. There was a Command, That all that dwell within the Isle of Tha- nes, every one from 18 to 60, should be ready to defend the Sea Coasts, and this was juxta statum & facultates.

Ann' 13 E. 3. m. 12. Tarmouth charged with four Ships, 24 Men in a Ship, whereas usual but 21.
 Now I think they are come to six score men in a Ship. There are an infinite number of Rolls to this purpose to charge the Port Towns.

I come now to my second Division, which is Maritime Towns.

Pat. 48 H. 3. m. 4. do. A Writ went to the Sheriff of Norfolk, reciting, that Ships and Souldiers had staid there long, and that they were intended for departure, because their 40 days were past; Command was given unto them, that they should stay, Donec aliud inde mandatum fuerit.

Cl. 23 E. 1. m. 5. do. There was a Writ directed unto the Sheriff of Southampton, Dorset, and Wilts; These 3 Counties are all Maritime Counties, and were commanded, that they should raise 300 men to be at Winchester to defend the Sea Coasts.

Pat. 24 E. 1. m. 17. A Writ directed unto the Sheriff of Lincoln, York, and Northumberland, to assist certain Commissioners to take up 100 Ships, with a competent number of Men; these are to Maritime Counties.

The like VVrit goeth to the Sheriff of Suffex and Southampton, and this for the Preparation of Ships, and to take them where ever they they are to be found.

Pat. 25 E. 1. m. 6. VVrits went to Southampton, Devon, Cornwall, Dorset, and many other places that were Maritime Towns, for arresting of Ships and raising of Men: But the Rolls I might most insist upon are only these, I'll but name them.

Pat. 24 E. 1. m. 16. ex parte Re' Regis, & Rot 78.
 Cl. 25 E. 1. m. 26.

Cl. 13 E. 3. pars 1. m. 14. do.

Seco. 10 E. 3. m. 22. By all which it appears, that not only the Ports, but the Maritime Counties, have contributed towards the Charges of the Defence of the Kingdom. And the other side do hardly deny, but that the Maritime Towns may be charged.

I will open it plain, that it is for their ease to bring in the In-land Counties: This Cause is not of so great consequence as it is conceived, for if the Port Towns and Maritime Counties may be charged, then it bringeth but in the In-land Counties.

In England and Wales there are Fifty two Counties, Thirty three of these are Maritime Counties, so the In-land Counties are but Nineteen at most; and they contribute but to a fourth part of the Charge for the Defence of the Kingdom.
 And so much to my second Division of Maritime Towns.

To the third Division, which is of In-land Counties that they have been charged; I shall make that appear, that the greater part of them have been charged formerly for this manner of Defence.

Object. They object, that the County of Bucks is an In-land County, that Mr. Hampden dwells there, and therefore no reason he should contribute to the Defence; no In-land County ever did it, say they.

There may be two Reasons wherefore in former time the VVrits (for the most part) went to the Ports and Maritime Counties; Because they have the Benefit of the Seas by exportation and importation of their Goods. And secondly, Because they are continually in danger of Pirates and Robbers, and far nearer for a suddain Defence than the In-land Counties are. But this cannot be held for a sufficient Reason, that they only that are near the Danger should be put to defend the whole Kingdom. I am sure the Inland Counties receive a great Gain and Profit by the Commodities from the Port Towns, and they are

Anno
1637. are the more in safety the stronger the Sea Coasts are kept: And therefore no reason, but that they should give towards the Charge of the Defence of the Sea. For all the Writs, save one Commission, have gone to be for the general Defence of the Kingdom. Then no reason but Inland Counties should be charged. If they say they did never do it, it is a strange prescription, that because they never did it, therefore they will never do it. A man cannot excuse himself, that because he never paid Tithe to such a Vicar or such a Parson, that therefore he will never pay it.

I shall go to the Records that do charge the Inland Counties. Cl. 48 H. 3. m. 2. directed unto the Major and Bayliffs of Bedford, an Inland County; it doth recite, that divers of this Town were called to go with the King towards the Sea Coasts, contra hostilem invasionem & nunc necesse est, & causa forent ut levaretur fac & expensas, &c. and appoints at what rate they should levy it; The Horsemen were allowed 8 d. a day, and the Footmen 4 d. a day.

Cl. 48 H. 3. m. 7. A Writ directed unto the Sheriff of Huntingdon; the Men of that County were commanded to go to London, and from thence unto the Sea, for the Defence of the Kingdom.

Scac' ex parte Rem Regis, 24 E. 1. Rot. 78. Dor. A Writ is directed unto the Sheriff of Bark-shire, and this is to distrain men to make good the Custody of the Sea Coasts. Fr. 26 E. 1. m. 9. Like Writs were directed to Essex, Hartford, Nottingham, Darby, Huntingdon, Cambridge, &c. and almost to all the Inland Counties, pro custodia maritima, all to come to London, and to go from thence to the Sea Coasts for defence thereof.

Cl. 13 E. 3. pars 1. m. 14. do. A Writ goeth out to Oxon, ad distringendum, for Wages, pro custodia Maritima; one man was distreined, he pleaded he had been charged in Wilt-shire, and ought not to be charged in another County again; and for this distress there went a Superfedeas.

Rot. viagii 1. H. 4. mem. 10. A Writ was directed to the Sheriffs of Nottingham and Darby, two Inland Counties; and this was to proclaim, quod omnes homines inter 16 & 60 parati sint, &c. to go with the King within the Kingdom to what parts he pleased.

Cl. 1 R. 2. m. 18. Writs were directed to the Major and Bayliffs of Huntingdon and Cambridge: this Roll is cited by the Council of the Defendant, and in part it maketh for the Defendant, and in part against him; the Effect of it is this: The Writ directed to the Bayliffs of Hunt; and this recites, a former Writ to provide Barges, called Ballanger, with forty and fifty Oars apeece, like unto a Galley, at the charge of the most Rich men; and this was ad custodi' Maris; and the like Writ went unto the Town of Nottingham, Gloucester, and Warwick, and divers other places: These Vessels were not devised then, I find them used in E. 3d's time.

In the Parliament Roll 2 E. 4. N. 22. The Commons did complain, that a Commission is gone forth for the making of these Barges; true, upon a Petition of the Commons, the King, faith he, will advise with his Lords; there is no more done, but upon this they cease. I have now done with the Precedents on the Kings Side; I shall now come to that which hath been said on the Defendants part for their discharge: And first for the Acts and Petitions in Parliament, which are weighty and considerable.

1. For the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo, which was in the Time of E. 1. It hath been doubted whether this is a Statute or no: I see no colour of doubt, but that this is a Statute; it is printed among the Statutes, and ever accounted for a Statute; and in the Petition of Right, it is recited. And to say it is no Statute, because the Parl. Roll is wanting, if it should be disallowed, it would draw a great inconvenience with it, for private men might imbezle the Records, and then if the Records were wanting, the Acts of Parliament should be void.

It is an Act of Parliament no question; but the question is, whether the Provision required by this Writ be within the meaning of this Statute; I conceive it is not: For there are two words in this Statute observable, Talliage and Aid; by no Aid here will you take away the Aid par file marrier, par faire fitz Chevalier; by no Talliage will you have it so, that the King shall demand no sum of Money, then if you will give it this large construction, it will take away all Fines and Amerciaments which are due unto the King, all Lawful Impositions; and surely this was never the intent and meaning of this Statute; but it was only to take away all Taxes and Talliages that were unlawful, if they were lawful, this Statute medleth not with them. Now that no Talliage is to be taken, it appears in the Parliament Roll, 13 H. 4. N. 42. where an Office was granted by the King with a Fee for the measuring of Linnen Cloth, that the Subjects should pay unto Him a certain sum of Money for every piece measured; whereupon at the Parliament the Commons Petition, That this was an unjust Imposition, and they did desire that they might not be charged with this kind of Talliage; which, as was apparent, was unjust, and so they had present relief against it.

Next Act of Parliament, 14 E. 3. the second Parliament of that year, (three Parliaments being held that year) the Commons they grant unto the King a certain sum of Money for the great Business he had on this side the Sea, as well as beyond. But after a cessation of the Troubles, then the King is to be at the charge for future Defence: Thereupon the King granteth this shall not be had in exemplum, and that they shall not afterwards be taxed without Parliament. And this is the strongest thing that I have heard objected: It requireth a good answer, the words are plain; no Charge, no Question; but this is a Charge, I looked into the Petition of Right, and it is not there mentioned, nor among those Acts of Parliament that are in the Margent; but the reason why it is omitted, I know not.

I observe by this Act of Parliament a subsequent Clause, that will go far to the answering of this Objection; for in Acts of Parliament, nor in the Petition of Right, there is no mention made of the Defence of the Kingdom: If the King had been bound to defend the Kingdom, could the Parliament have accepted this as a kindness at his hands? 14 E. 3. This Act was made, yet the Aid continued, none of these VVrits found till 24 Rot. Franc' 24 E. 3. m. 9. N. 26. There went out Commissions to array men for the County of Suffolk, Somerset, Dorset, &c. for the Defence of the Maritime Towns: This is now within eleven years after the making of the Statute.

Franc. 26. E. 3. m. 5. The like unto the Earl of Huntingdon, Considerantes quod omnes Incole tenentur de Jure ad defendendum in periculo, and that they shall array the men of this County, and bring them ad custodiend. Mare; and by this it is recommended for the erecting of Beacons which is is the first Direction of that nature; so here is a new Charge, and this within eleven years after the making of the Statute. The same year like Writs to the Sheriff of Nottingham, Darby, Salop, Barkshire, Middlesex, Buckingham, Northampton, &c. So all these Writs go almost into every County of the Kingdom; and divers other Writs of the like nature, as Fra. 28 E. 3. m. 34. but, as I said, in no Act of Parliament extant, nor in any Writ that ever went forth that I can find; there is not any thing appears to charge the King for the Defence of the Kingdom, and in all of them no distinction made between your Port Towns, Maritime Counties, and In-land Counties; but that all in general are chargeable. And for the rest of the Acts of Parliament, they are all mentioned in the Petitions of Right, and therefore I pass them over. There is in the Acts provision against Loans and Grievances, but this Clause for the Defence of the Kingdom, I find it mentioned in no Act of Parliament, but this of 14 E. 3. before mentioned.

I will now come to the Petitions in Parliament.

Parliament Roll 13 E. 3. N. 9. 11. It was there declared unto the Commons, that the French had environed the Island of Guernsey; and all this was for default of a Navy upon the Sea, and therefore it was needful to consider how this might be regained: It was answered by the Commons, That concerning the Right and Guard of the Sea, they desired to give no Advice, saying, They have no cognizance of things concerning the Sea, but if there be occasion, the Cinque Ports are to be charged: Said further, That in the Marches of Scotland, they were to defend the Kingdom against the Scots; but that this kind of Defence should lie upon them, was never heard of.

I will give you an Answer unto your Acts of Parliament and Petitions in Parliament by putting of a Case, I will admit that you have an Act of Parliament, as strong as you can make it, that the whole Charge for the Defence of the Kingdom should lie upon the King and not upon the Subject, in case of any sudden Invasion. Admit there were a greater Power at Sea than the King is able to make defence against, then, I pray, whether should this Act give way to the present necessity, or the Kingdom should be lost? Is it not better to endure a mischief than an inconvenience? Then if you say, the Acts of Parliament should give way to necessity, then you have answered all that you have objected. This is not the only cause of necessity, I shall put you another Cause, when Acts of Parliament must give way to necessity; That if a man be attainted of Treason, he is thereby disinabled to inherit by Act of Parliament; but if the Kingdom should descend to such a man, then the Acts of Parliament should give way to it, and there needs no Act to avoid it; and shall not the Acts of Parliament give way unto necessity for the defence of the Kingdom? What though there have been Petitions in Parliament, to have it decreed that this kind of Charge should not be laid upon the Subject: Admit it had been so decreed in Parliament, yet by the Law of Equity they ought to be changed, and in all reason they are to be charged towards the Defence, and that for three respects.

First, for the Reason given in the Writ, Quod omnes tangit per omnes debet supportari, which is but Equity.

2. Next Reason, That the King is trusted with the Defence of the Kingdom, and therefore fit he should have means to do therewith. But you say, He may call a Parliament, and they will give him Means. 'Tis true, this thing in question, if done by Parliament, had been done by the happiest means. But because he might have it by Parliament, must he therefore have it no other ways? The question now is, whether it may be done without a Parliament or no? what is done, is done by the Great Seal, which is the next Authority unto a Parliament. VVhat if an Enemy had come before the Parliament had met, or before they had granted any Aid, should the safety of the Kingdom depend upon such contingencies, God forbid; will you have Forces on both sides, and restrain the King to this power by Parliament, which may be so dilatory, that the Kingdom may be lost in the mean.

3. Many inconveniencies might happen both to the King and Subject, if this should be suffered, if the King should be restrained of His Royal Power; it would turn to his contempt both at home and abroad; and all this while the matter is not so great, it is but parting with a little Money secundum Statum & Facultates, and not all that a man hath, for the King desires not that. It is true as Mr. Holborne hath said, That in former times they have been careful not to leave too much power unto the King; but you would leave Him so little, as would have him in contempt both at home and abroad. The worst that comes to the Subject, is but to yield their help to the King at such times of danger, with a small part of their Estate, and then it would make Foreign Nations that know of it, afraid of us, which now by this occasion have encouragement to attempt that which otherwise they would not.

It hath been objected, That if the King may raise Moneys in this manner without a Parliament, many inconveniencies may follow, it would be a means to keep back a Parliament.

To this Objection I answer, It is no means to keep back a Parliament, for there are many other means of calling a Parliament besides for the Defence of the Kingdom; as for making of Good Laws, redressing of Grievances. The King may be engaged in a Foreign War, and then the Subjects must help Him; but to call a Parliament always, is not necessary: For when the Kingdom was in the greatest danger that ever it was in, as in 88, and in the Rebellion in the North, yet then no Parliament was called in either of these Dangers.

2. Next Objection: If this course be admitted, the King may pretend a Danger when there is none, or a great Danger, when a small, and so may raise a great Sum of Money, and the Subjects shall have but little profit.

I shall give three answers to this Objection: 1. If this power be in the King, and that power be just and equal, then it is not to be taken from Him, because He may imploy it otherwise; if he misuse His power, the fault is His own.

2. Next Answer, That this Objection cannot be made, unless you suppose injustice in the King; make what Laws you will, if the King be unruly, He will break through them.

3. The third Answer: If it so fall out, that the VVrit going out upon this pretence, and that great Sums of Money are levied, and the Money is imployed to another use, it were a great inconvenience; but in this case there is no such fear, for the VVrit is expressly to make a Ship: And if they would have taken any advantage upon that, the Council ought to have pleaded it, and the Judgment

~ Judgment ought to appear there upon Record :
Anno There appears no Money in this Case to be coming 1637. unto the King's hands : But it is said in the Writ, Volumus autem, &c. We will that no part of the Money be converted to any other use than to the Provision of a Ship.

Object. 3. By the same Reason the King commandeth his Subjects to provide one Ship this Year ; by the same reason he may command two Ships next Year.

To this I Answer, If the Danger be greater, the Defence is to be greater, then the Supply must be greater ; but no man can suppose that that the King will impose that on his Subjects, when there is no need.

I shall now come to the two last Exceptions :
 1. That the Power cannot be given to the Sheriff by the Writ Aug. 4. to Tax every man secundum statum & facultates ; that this is too great a Power to be committed to the Sheriff.

To that I Answer, That I conceive the Sheriff to be the most indifferent man for that purpose ; for if there were Commissioners or many men appointed for doing thereof, they might perchance be partial to their Friends ; and the Sheriff having all the Free-holders Names, and the Bayliffs for his Ministers, that know the Estates of most men ; therefore without all doubt he is the fittest person.

For the Exception to the Scir. fac. it hath been objected, that the King cannot by that course levy Moneys ; because the King having no Interest in the Money, he cannot levy it by Scir. fac. neither doth it appear in the Writ to whom this Money is to be paid.

Sol. I confess, this Point, though not spoken unto by the Defendant, is of most difficulty. Though no person certain be named, to whom this Money is to be paid ; and the Sheriff is only to levie it according to the Writ ; and the King providing a Ship, I suppose the Scire fac. may issue for it ; for if a common person claim any thing, or be wronged or debarred from his Right, he hath by the Law a Writ for his Remedy ; and shall not the King have the like Remedy for this Ship, being for the general Defence of the Kingdom, with which he is intrusted, to prevent a Wrong to be done to the Commonwealth ?

But in this Case the Scire fac. is not for Mr. Hampden to shew cause why he did not pay the Money to the Sheriff ; but why he doth not pay the Money Assessed towards the making of this Ship ; which for ought I know, when it hath done the Service, is the Subjects again, at whose Charge it was provided ; for they might have either hired a Ship, or bought a Ship. In F. N. B. it is held, the King may (for the good of his People) send forth Writs for removing of Common Nuisances, and for repairing of Bridges, and the like ; and why may not the King send forth Writs for so necessary a Service, as to defend the Kingdom ?

Cl. 1 R. 2. m. 7. A Writ went out to the Mayor and Bayliffs of Oxford, to repair the Walls and Ditches about the Town ; and why not as well to repair the wooden walls of the whole Kingdom, as the walls and Ditches of a Town ? The King hath Charge and Power over all, to see all done.

But it hath been said, that when this Money is gathered, we know not what is become of it.

I Answer them with the Common Roll in Scac. 24 & 25 of E. 3. Where a Commission went forth to levy Money for Maritime Defence ; but what was done thereupon, is not expressed : But at that time there was a Cause adjudged in the Exchequer, a Norfolk Cause ; where divers being commanded to go to the Wars against the Scots, and had thereupon Armor and wages allowed them, afterwards comes a Counter-Command to some of them not to go ; and two men that had wages, went not ; whereupon a Writ went out, and they ordered to repay the Money ; and the Jury found the one guilty ; but the other going to the Wars afterwards by a second Direction, was quit, and the first gave Security for Repayment of his wages, being 30 s. and also for the Armor.

It hath lastly been Objected, That this Taxation ought to be secundum Legem & Consuetudinem Angliæ, and this ought not to be by Writ, but by Parliament.

To this I Answer, That from King John's time, till H. 4. his time, there hath been an Usage and Custom to send forth Writs of this nature ; and since that time till now, not the like Command.

About H. the 4th. his Time, began your Tunnage and Poundage ; so long as he had that, the Defence was made at his own Charges.

There is no Act for taking this Charge by Writ away ; it is become a general Custom : and the general Custom makes the Law of England ; and we are to examine and try new Causes by the Reason of the old Law, and now compare what hath been done in former times.

I shall make an end : For my own part, I am perswaded in my Conscience, that there is imminent danger : I am satisfied in it, both by the King's Writ, and that which is apparent ; and there is a necessity, that this danger should be prevented. I do conceive this Writ to be grounded upon this danger of Necessity, and that the danger appears sufficiently in the Writ ; therefore I conceive that the Proceedings are Legal, and that there is good and sufficient Cause to charge Mr. Hampden, and that he ought to pay the Twenty Shillings Assessed upon him.

FINIS.

Judge Crawley his Argument.

THE Record hath been opened ; therefore I shall spare that Labour.

I conceive the Case in question to be this ; Whether the King, by his Right of Sovereignty, may Charge the Subject in Case of Necessity, to contribute with him to the necessary Defence of the Kingdom, without the Subjects Consent in Parliament ?

Mr. St. John, who I take to be the Mouth of the Defendants Council, confesseth, that this Question is not so much de Re, if a Necessity ; but de Modo, if done without a Parliament.

This is one of the greatest Cases that ever came in Judgment before the Judges of the Law. The Kings Right and Sovereignty in a high point, is concerned ; the Honour and Safety of the Kingdom is concerned on the one side, and the Liberty of the Subject in this particular, and the Property of his Goods on the other side.

This is the first Cause of this kind that ever came to Judgment, that I know of. Kings have not suffered their Right of Sovereignty to be debated 1637. debated at the Bar, as now it is; for these are Arcana Regni, not fit for publick Debate: The Use of the Law was to have Cases debated; as saith one, No man knows what Metal the Bell is of till he hears it Ring. This Bell hath been rung roundly, very laboriously on both sides.

The Subjects have objected, That they may bring Actions against Officers of the King, for the Assessements by virtue of this writ: But for that I find no Precedent, save only one; which is in 25 E. 1. The Abbot of Roberts-Bridges Case: And he was taxed double for this Matter of Defence for Sea and Land, in two several places; and therefore he brought his Action to be discharged in one place. But in Cases of this Nature, they Petitioned in Parliament to the King for Redress; as appears by many Precedents.

In Bracton, who writ after H. 3. his Time, and who inclined unto those times, when the Liberty of the Subject was strongly maintained; he saith, fol. 5. Totum Regnum petiatur quod, &c.
They used to Petition the King. But now you have Actions brought against the King's Officers in the King's Bench, Common Pleas, and here in this Court: And it pleaseth the King to bring this Scire fac. to the end the Right of this Cause may be tried by the Judges of the Law.

In the Eleventh Report, and in my Lord Cook's Commentaries upon Littleton, fol. 110. saith, That the Laws and Customs of the Parliament are obscure.

Lex est Consuetudo Parliamenti, querenda est ab omnibus, ignota à multis, & cognita à paucis. As Tully said of one that would define Anima; said, it was Musica Harmonia, who was a Musitian: Homo non multum recessit ab Arte sua. I, for my own part, will keep my self to mine own Art of the Books of the Law and Statutes; and if I use the Help of others, I hope you will pardon me for that. I will briefly expound my Order and Method throughout the Case.

First, I will remove some few impertinent Discourses, which are not in the Record, as being out of the Ring of this Bell.

Secondly, I shall propound, That the sole Care of the Defence at Sea and Land (Jure Regis) ap-pertains to the King, and none other, and that he is the sole Judge of this.

Thirdly, That the sole Charge of the Defence in ordinary Cases, regularly and legally apper-taineth to the King.

Fourthly, That the Extraordinary Charges of the Defence ought to be supplied by Parliament; and upon this Rule, Quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus debet supportari.

Fifthly, If the Defence be of Necessity, and the Danger great, and so great as the King's Revenue is not sufficient to supply the Occasion, then the Rule comes to be in use, Qui sentit Commodum, sentire debet & Onus. And if it be general, Quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus debet suppor-tari.

Sixthly, In the Defence where all ought to joyn, the Sea and Land ought to assist and contribute one to another.

Seventhly, I say there are some particular Cases, in which this Charge of the Defence cannot be imposed by Parliament.

Eighthly, That the King solely is intrusted by the Law to impose this Charge on the Subjects.

Ninthly, These being my Generals, I shall come to my Minor, and conclude, That this Charge is justly imposed without Parliament.

As to the first Impertinency; you speak of Car. 13.
Tonnage and Poundage: Is there any such Grant on Record? Shall we take notice of a thing that is not in Rerum natura? I say, I wish it had been granted; for qui aufert Medium, destruit Finem;
He that taketh away ordinary means of Preservation, is the Author of Ruine and Destruction:
You see it is taken, you cannot tell by what right.
If this were material, you wrong your Clients;
you pleaded it not: and if not material, you wronged us, and your Auditors, and your selves to talk of it.

You say, This Ship-Money hath been Charged for these three years together: Is this Discourse within the Record? If not, you speak without book.

You say the King hath imposed great Sums of Money upon Merchandizes: But what is this to this?

Then you talk of a Property the Subject loseth hereby; but this rather to abuse the People without either colour or shadow; it was ad faciendum, or rather inficiendum populum: if you at the Bar had not spoke it, Argumenti gratia, it could not have proceeded, but out of the depth of Malice or Ignorance, or both: If one be found guilty of Murder, and the Judge knoweth the contrary, what shall be done? he ought to acquaint the King therewith; for it is the King's Right of Sovereignty to pardon; but the Judge hath no such power: I say the sole care apper-taineth to the King only, and he is the sole Judge both of the Defence at Sea and Land, Fitz. N.B.
fol. 113. Le Roy de droit fit sauer et defender son Realm, cie bien vers la Mare, comé vers les Enemics, Register, fol. 127. Rex, &c. pro eo quod nos dignitatis nostre Reg. ad providend. salvationem Regni nostri circumquaque sumus astricti, Fortescue. c. 37.
Omnes Potestat. Regia deferre, &c. in defensione & tuitione Regni; I think no man will oppose
this.

But we will come unto the Third; the sole Charge of the Defence regularly and legally ap-pertains to the King, Bract. fol. 1. In Rege qui recte regit, necessaria sunt hic duo, Arma & Leges, &c. with which Words accords Justinian in his Proemium to his Institutes, from whence that is taken.

In Plowden 315. in the Case of Mines, one Reason why he saith Royal Mines belong unto the King, is,

Because he is the Head, and the People his Members; and he is to preserve the Subject two ways; by Arms to defend them against all Hostility; and by Law to preserve them from Enemies, 3 Rep. 11. The Bodies, Lands and Goods of the Kings Debtors were liable to Execution;
Quia thesaurus Regis est pacis vinculum, & Bellorum Nervi, 11 Rep. The King's Treasure is the Li-gament of Peace, the Preserver of the Honour and safety of the Realm, and the Sinews of Wars, and is of high estimation in Law, in respect of the necessity thereof: That the imbezling of Treasure-Trove, though not in the King's Chest, is Treason; and Treasure, and other valuable things are so incident to the Crown, that they cannot go from the Crown; He hath on the Land Wardships, Escheats, Amerciaments, &c. for the maintenance of his Honour and Digni-ties Royal: For the Sea, he hath Sturgeons, Whales, &c. these do little towards an Army to defend the Sea. The Reason wherefore the King hath the Customs, is for the protection of Mer-

Anno

Merchants upon the Sea against Pyrates and Enemies of the Realm: so I shall conclude this Point, that the ordinary defence both for Care and Charge of Sea and Land appertaineth unto the King.

Next is this, which is my Fourth: That extraordinary Charge of Defence regularly ought to be supplied by Parliament, and cannot be done without. Albeit Subsidies be of Gift and Grant, yet this is of Right and Reason, The King is Pater Patriæ; if the Son give unto the Father, when he wants, it is his Duty; 19 H. 6. In the Rector of Cheddington's Case; whether the King may grant a Discharge of 15th.; if the King may grant a Discharge to one, he may do so to all, fol. 63. It is against Law the King should not have Subsidies of his People in Case of Necessity and Danger: The same Law that willeth the King should defend the People, the same Law tells us we should grant unto the King Aids for the Defence. This is to be done in Parliament regularly; and that this extraordinary Charge cannot be imposed but in Parliament, these are their Objections.

I come now to the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo; which without question is a Statute, being in our Printed Books; and in the Petition of Right, 3 Car. it is recited as a Statute, and established. The Words of that are, Nullum Tallagium sine assensu Parliamenti. And 14 E. 3. c. 1. There the King expresses himself; He will not impose any Charge or Aid on the Subject, but in Parliament. Fortescue reciteth this to be the Law, No Charge without Parliament. And Bodin, Lib. 1. fol. 97. saith, That the Statutes of England are as a Buckler to defend the Subjects against the King, for laying any Charge upon them, but by Parliament: and in his 6th. Book magnifieth this Kingdom for the due observing of this Law. Other Kings have in this Point no more than the King of England; for that it is not in the power of any Prince in the World, at his Pleasure to raise Taxes on the People, no more than to take another mans Goods from him. And yet nevertheless, if the Necessity and Danger of the Commonwealth be such, as it cannot stay for the Calling of a Parliament, the King in his Wisdom and foresight, may lay a Charge without their Consent; and this is by the Law, Jure Gentium. The Rule of Law and Reason holdeth, quod omnes tangit, &c.

And so I come unto my Fifth Head: If the Defence be of necessity, and the King's Treasure doth not suffice to defray the Charge, then instead of the Rule, Quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus debet supportari: This Rule succeeds; Qui sentit Commodum, sentire debet & Onus. If the Treasure of the King will not defray the Charge, I do not conceive he is bound to sell or pawn his Crown, or his Lands: Some Princes have been so courteous to do it, and paid it again. You say at Bar, he must spend all and more if he had it: I will put this Case (in the 10th. Rep.) One is bound at the Common Law by Prescription, to repair a Wall against the Sea; yet in Case of Necessity, in avoydance of publick Mischiefe, the Prescription ceaseth; yet in this Case, Reparation must be done, then cometh this Rule, Quando Impotentia excusat, tunc qui sentit Commodum, sentire debet & onus: And if he be not able to do it, the Charge being so extraordinary, shall he not have Contribution? The Law compelleth not Impossibilities: So the King is bound to defend the Kingdom by Land and Sea; but if the Defence be so great, as the Danger tends to the subversion of the Kingdom, and the King not able to make Defence, the King and his Subjects ought to contribute to this Charge in due proportion: Ubi est eadem Ratio, ibi est eadem Lex. If the Law make this provision for a small Level of Ground, a fortiori for the Commonwealth in time of Necessity and Danger.

Sixthly, In this joint Charge of Defence, the Land ought to assist the Sea: Nay, it is not possible any Island should be defended without the wooden Walls of the Navy at Sea. Cannus the Dane entred Thames Mouth with an Army, and afterwards went and Landed in Dorsetshire; and again Shipped his Men, and entred in Severn; then entred in Worcestershire; then he saileth back again to other parts of the Kingdom; so he that is Master of the Sea, may make great spoil of the Land at pleasure. The Netherlands having a great Navy, the Spaniards fortified strongly, as soon as the Wind serveth, set Sail, and were 80 Miles off before the Spaniards could March with their Forces to make Resistance: They presently got a strong Place, and afterwards sailed suddenly to another Place, and took that also. These are now Examples for Islands to have the Mastery of the Sea.

Our Grand Army at Tilbury in 88, what good had they done, if the Spaniards had been Masters of the Sea?

It is not possible for an Inland County to be safe without a Navy at Sea; as appeareth in Sir Walter Rawleigh's History of the World; and if the Sea must defend the Land, why should not the Land be contributory for defence of Sea and Land? There are several Precedents, where Writs have gone to Inland Towns, to charge them to go unto the Custody of the Sea. Cl. 48 H. 3. 24 E. 1. 26 E. 3, &c. Writs have gone into Berkshire, Oxford, &c. Inland Counties, to command them to contribute towards the Defence of the Sea.

To the Seventh; That in Case of instant danger, the Imposition cannot be by Parliament: I will here in consider the Nature of the Danger, as Mr. Solicitor readily pursued it. If it concern the Essence, Subversion, Destruction and Ruine of the Kingdom, Quando Hannibal ad Portas; for the Senators then to sit down in their Robes, is rather a Charge, than ought else. It is no time then to call a Parliament; no well advised man will think it fit.

Here are Pericula visa; the Danger is certain, none will say it is fit to call a Parliament.

This Kingdom of England hath been 4 times conquered, and therefore we have reason to foresee the danger: first conquered by the Romans; then by the Saxons, then by the Danes, and lastly by the Normans.

The Moralists did make three parts of providence. 1. Memoria Præteritorum. 2. perspicientia presentium. 3. providentia futurorum. It much concerns the King, the head of the Commonwealth to be Circumspect in the Prevention of publick danger: Conjectures and Probabilities are to be regarded; Now, put the case, upon a probable and a violent presumption, a potent Enemy is prepared, and ready to come; Is it not fit that there should be a defence prepared instantly? Besides, there may be Just Reasons of State, why an Enemy is not fit to be revealed in Parliament; for if great preparations be, and very probable against us, then to discover them an Enemy, is to give them occasion to become a Challenger; no man can know the Certain event of things future: one one may be a freind in shew, to the Kingdom, or a Neutral, not yet openly discovered; yet we may be mistaken in our opinion of them.

I leave this to your Consideration, whether it be fit or no to discover our thoughts in Parliament of an Enemy.

The Eight, that in these cases of necessity and danger, the King Jure Gentium, may charge the Subject without his Consent in Parliament, by his Regal Prerogative; for in the King there are two Prerogatives; Regale & Legale Prerogativum; which concern his Person, Lands and Goods.

Now for the Prerogatives Royal of a Monarchy, they may be resembled unto a Sphear; the Primus motor is the King; It is observed that every Planet but one, hath a little Orb by it self, that moveth in its Petty compass; so the Centre is the Common-wealth, the King is the first mover.

I will repeat some of these Prerogatives; for they are by all Laws and by our Laws.

1. The first Regal Prerogative is this that containeth all the rest; that the King may give Laws unto his Subjects; and this doth not detract from him when he doth it in Parliament.

2. To make Peace and War 19 E. 4. 6.

3. To Create Supreme Magistrates.

4. That the last Appeal be to the King.

5. To pardon offences.

6. To Coin money.

7. To have Allegiance, Fealty, and Homage.

8. To impose taxes without Common consent; These I say are the Principal; I have many more of them, and allowed, and in case of necessity the King may impose without Consent in Parliament.

Comines fo. 179 saith, That if the Cloud be seen but afar off, the King without the consent of the Subjects cannot tax them; but if the Cloud be over head, the King may call certain wise persons unto him, and tax his Subjects.

You say, If the King move a War offensive, it is time enough to call a Parliament: If Defensive, this cloud is seen long before, But (Oh good Sir) is this always true? is not the cloud sometimes even over the head, before descried: Read him, and he will tell you, in time of peace we ought to fortifie; But in these cases where the danger is eminent, saith Bodine Lib. 1. C. 47. the King ought not to expect a Parliament; but is to raise Monies suddenly: and such impositions laid upon the Subjects are Just and necessary. This is the opinion of those Writers, who wrote not according to the Law of any one Kingdom; but according to the Law of Reason: I could vouch these two Authors concerning the right of Sovereignty, which they give to Kings, to impose charges on the Subjects without Consent of Parliament, in time of necessity.

Obj. But what if the King will levy mony upon pretence of defence, in time of danger, and dispose it otherways, and the danger not so apparent.

Sol. I say, so Pious and Just a King will never pretend a danger, if it were not revera; And if any man will think the King will charge himself and his Subjects to no purpose, far be it from my thoughts to think so.

This money thus taxed, is employed accordingly, for the defence of the Kingdom; together with the Kings own money which he would not do upon pretences.

Again, the King is Pater Patrie, therefore by the Law of nature he is intrusted with the Defence of the Kingdom. And this power to tax his people is but a Consequence of that.

To say, in time of extraordinary danger and necessity boni viri sunt sibi leges, I say for every man to be his own Judge, is for every man to do what he listeth, Mr. Holborn tells you, if it rest in a Kings power thus to tax the Subjects, whereas Mr. Hampden is now taxed at 20 s he may be the next year at 20 l; for, saith he, if he may when he will, then he may what he will: Its an ill consequence you make; you magnifie Parliaments: great reason we have for it, let us do so too of Kings, let none think dishonourably of Kings, no question they will regard the Laws of God, and to make such objections is not so well handled.

Now we come to Precedents and Acts of Parliament for Precedents, my Brother Weston hath taken pains to repeat them. Two Precedents the Defendants Council have much relyed on.

Rot. Parl. 2 R. 2. pars 1. I have here the record, and in truth it were a great ease to the Judges, and to the cause, to Avouch them truly. This of R. 2. was in the Kings Minority, and no order being taken for provision for the defence of the Kingdom against the next Summer, and nothing was found in the Kings Treasury; and for conclusion, they say, they cannot this mischeif remedy without a Parliament, whereupon a Parliament was called, and the King in the mean time having monies lent him, he gave security to repay it. Consider this, the King at this time was but an Infant: It was a very troublesome time, many of those that were Parliament-men made default to attend, excusing themselves, they had other businests. This then that was done, was but a meer Resolution in troublesome times; this is no such binding businest, that it should be so much made of.

Parl. 2 H. 4. N. 22. A Commission went forth for the providing of Barges, and the Commons Petitioned to avoid this charge, that the Commission may be repealed: Admit the King upon this, Call in the Commission; shall this be a disclaimer of the Kings Right? he saith he will speak with his Lords, this is only a satisfactory answer: besides the King was but an usurper. Now to say that this answer of the Kings is a Resolution in the case, is a great mistake.

He that will go through this Load of Precedents that have been vouched on both sides, he had need have more time, then Mr. Holborn, who spent 4 days. You have alledged Precedents both before the Conquest and since, that of the Danegelt, though a heavy yoke, yet it was necessary to be born, whether it was granted by Parliament or no, Non Constat, I say it is a good Precedent and I hold it good without Parliament; some distressed Kings, as King John: Hen. 2. and R. 2. they did indeed do that by borrowing, which they might take by right.

Now to give answer to the Statutes of 25 E. 1. 14 E. 3. and the Petition of right 3 Car. Admit, I say, there were an expresse Act that the King (were the Realm in never so much danger) should not have aid from his Subjects but in Parliament, it were a void Law; will any man say such an Act shall bind: This power is as unseparable from the Crown, as the pronouncing of War and Peace is; such an Act is manifestly unreasonable, and not to be suffered, saith Doctor and Student; to follow the words of the Law, were in some Cases against Justice, and the good of the Common-wealth; wherefore in some cases it is necessary to leave the words of the Law, and to follow that which

Reason and Justice require; and to that intent Anno Equity is ordained which is no other but an excep-1637. tion of the Law of God, or the Law of reason from the general rules of the Law of man, which exception is secretly understood in every general Law. This power of imposition without Parliament, appertains to the King originally, and to the successor ipso facto if he be Sovereign in right of Sovereignty from the Crown; you cannot have a King without these Royal Rights, no not by Act of Parliament.

Again, these Acts bind not; for a favourable construction in Case of the King is to be had, Doctor and Student 27. not possible to make any general rule of Law, but shall fail in some particular case: If a Law were made in a City, that no man under the pain of death should open the Gates of the City before the Sun-rising, yet if the Citizens before that hour, flying from their Enemies, come to the Gates of the City, and one for saving of the Citizens openeth the Gates before the hour appointed by the Law, yet he of-fendeth not the Law, for that Case of necessity is excepted from the said general Law by Equity; so for the Statute in E. 3. time, not to give any relief to a Sturdy Beggar upon pain of imprisonment; yet if one relieve him with Cloaths in extremity of cold in Winter to save his life, he shall be excused by the said Statute, by such an Exception of the Law of Reason and Equity, as aforesaid.

Improbabilities are to be excepted out of Laws; Nemo tenetur ad impossibilia, Poverty and Impossibilities (as one answered) were more mighty Goddesses than either force or love.

But now you will say, where is this danger?
 how doth this necessity appear? if you will find it, you need not enquire for it by Sea or Land, but In this very Record; the Writ sheweth it, the most favourable construction for the King is to be had, as in Plowdens Com. 336. Case of Mines of Gold and Copper.

Now all this while I have been in the general, and in a manner in Propositions, I come now to Application: before I descend unto it, I shall shew upon what part of the Record I shall ground my self, though in the Mittimus it be salus Regni periclitabatur, and said to be Metaphorical, for that it asketh no great Answer; it is good enough as in the Writ of Oyer and Terminer, Om- nes qui habent damnum vel salvationem are bound to contribute, will you tye the King to the language of I. S. may not he express himself in what legal manner he pleaseth? you say this phrase of Salus Regni, &c. is to be general: If it be alledged, and you demur upon it, you confess this for the most advantage for the King, as in the case of Mines; it is not alledged in the Scire fac. this might have been made a good question. But without all these, I conceive the Writ 4. containeth matter sufficient; that Writ of 4. containeth the cause for this great preparation, and expresses them in particular; what if it were no more but this, least we should lose the Dominion of the Seas? what is it to be called Dominus Maris, and not to maintain it, but to suffer this Princely Honour to perish, and others to become Masters of it; what havock and confusion would follow? And this is the true intention of the issuing forth of this Writ.

Next consideratis etiam periculis; that is, the danger so evident and so great in these Warlike times, that of necessity defence must be made both by Sea and Land.

Next is great oppression used at this time, Da- tum est nobis Intelligi quod predones, &c. That the Pyrates do take and spoil our Merchants goods, and carry our men into Captivity; what will you say to this? let them take our men, and let us have a Parliament, and we will bring them home again; the Land was never without Thieves, nor the Sea without Pyrates.

Next Paratum periculum & preparans; now these Ships go for defence of the Sea against this danger, & vestrum & vestrorum. The Writ saith the whole Realm is in danger both by Land and Sea; you have confessed this in your Demurrer.

But you complain you are hurt; because you have seven Months liberty, a Parliament might be called in that time.

Now in this time of imminent danger, is no stay to call a Parliament.

You say it hath continued for three years; put the case the danger continue for three years, and ceaseth, and then the King ceaseth to lay a charge, and the danger begins again next year; what shall not the King require Aid as the danger encreaseth.

And now to conclude without repetition, it appeareth by this Record, that the whole Kingdom is in danger both by Sea and Land of ruine, destruction, dishonour, and oppression, and that the danger is present, imminent, and instant, and greater than the King (without the aid of his Subjects) can well resist, whether then must the King resort to Parliaments? No, we see the danger is instant, and admits no delay; Shall we go home, and sit together in careless security?
 not so, but let us resort unto our pious and just King, whose Prerogative and Right of Soveraignty is to defend the Realm, and to maintain his Subjects Liberty: And so I give Judgment for the King.

Finis Argument. Juslic. Crawley.

Judge Barkley his Argument.

IN August 11 Car. there issued forth out of the Court of Chancery his Majesties Writ, directed to the Sheriff of Bucks, and to the Bailiffs and Burgesses of the Borough and Parish of Buckingham, to the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Burgesses of the Borough of Chipping, Wiccomb, ac probis hominibus in eisdem Burgis, and to all his Majesties Subjects, in omnibus aliis Villis, Burgis, &c. in Dom.
Com. Buck.

The King by that Writ recites, that he had intelligence quod predones quidem Pirata & Maris
Grassatores congregati fuerunt Naves & bona ac Mercimonia non solum Subditorum nostrorum, verum etiam Subditorum amicorum nostrorum in Mari quod per Gentem Anglicanam ab olim defendi consuevit, that they did daily commit unsufferable mischiefs to the Merchants, and carry them into miserable Captivity; and that his Majesty did Conspicere present remedy were had. And besides, his Majesty considering periculis qua undique his guerri- ne qua poterimus accelerare convenit; and his Majesties resolution being defensione Regni, Tutione

ductione Navium, & Merchandizum ad Regnum no-

1637. exteras transcend. (auxiliante Deo) maxime providere, eo pro quod, his Majesty and his Predecessors were Lords of the Sea, and was loth such an Honour should perish in his time: And besides, the King calling to mind the just rule, quod omnes tangit per omnes debet supportari prout per Legem & consuetudinem Regni Anglia fieri consueverit; for these causes his Majesty by his Writ commandeth the Sheriff, and all those to whom it was directed, ex fide & Ligeantia sicut nos & honorem nostrum diligitis, that he should providere unam Navem de Guerra of the burden of 450 Tun, furnished with Men, Munition, &c. that this Ship so furnished should be ready at Portsmouth by the first of March, for the space of 26 Weeks, at their costs and charges, ad proficiscend. cum Navibus nostris, and to go with his Majesties Subjects to attend those to whom his Majesty should commit the custody of the Sea; and this to be provisione Maris & defensione vestrum & vestrorum. After this there cometh a Commission to the Sheriff, and to the Bayliffs and Mayor of the Boroughs and Parishes aforesaid, or to any two or more of them, whereof the Sheriff to be one ad assidendum omnes homines in iisdem Burgis & Parochiis & Membris ejusdem, & terre tenentes in eisdem, to contribute towards the providing of a Ship, and this Assessment to be made secundum statum suum & facultates suas: And to distrain and cast into prison quos rebelles et contrarios invenerit in premissis.

Last of all, for further direction, his Majesty forbids the Sheriff to lay any more upon his Subjects than is necessary for the service, et quod si plus quam sufficiat collectum fuerit, his Majesty commands it should be restored, and the Sheriff is not to appropriate the money to any other use than the Writ commands.

9 Martii 12 Car. there issued out of Chancery a Certiorari, and this was above a year after the Ship should have been ready at Portsmouth: This Writ reciteth the Writ 4 Augusti, and for that the King is informed that some of his Subjects have refused to pay those sums assessed upon them towards the providing of a Ship of War, commands the Sheriff to certify the names of such persons so refusing, and the sums assessed upon them; the Sheriff he makes a return, and certifieth John Hampden Esquire was assessed at 20 s. and refused to pay the same.

After this 5 Maii following there issues a Mitimus out of Chancery, with this Clause in it; Quod quidem breve, pro eo quod salus Regni nostri Angl. et populi nostri ejusdem periclitabatur Edicta Cancellaria nostra emanari curavimus inter alia Brevia ad hujusmodi provisionem et assessamentum faciend. per singulos Com. Civitat. Burg. &c. By this Mitimus the King most justly and honourably commandeth the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer that they should pro levatione, collectione et receptione omnium et singularum pred. denar. summar. de predictis contributionibus adhuc non solut. fieri fac. prout de jure et secundum Legem et consuetud. Regni nostri Angl. fuerit faciend.

After this, and in May last, the Barons in the Exchequer very judicially awarded the Writ, (which is the Exchequer Writ of Grace) a Scire Facias into Buckinghamshire, against those whose names were in the Schedule, and had not paid the sums assessed upon them: And by this Scire fac. they were to shew cause why they should not be charged with the payment of the sums of money assessed upon them; upon this Scire Facias Mr. Hampden is returned garnished, he appearing hath demurred generally; the words of his Demurrer are, Quod materia in eisdem Brevibus content. minus sufficient. in lege existet. ad onerandum ipsum Johannem Hampden de aut solutione pred. summe vigint. solid. super ipsum modo et forma pred. taxat. aut assessat. &c. He doth not say that the matter is not true, but is not sufficient in Law; by which words he doth acknowledge the matters contained in the Writ to be true: Mr. Attorney hath joyned with him in Demurrer; upon this Demurrer, one grand question and some inferior have been stirred: Because I have time little enough for the grand question, I will omit the inferior.

The grand question is, whether as the Case is, the Charge imposed by the King on his Subjects for provision of Shipping without consent in Parliament be good in Law yea or no; this is a question of extraordinary weight, and infinite consequence, the greatest that ever came before Judges (as I think) of ordinary Courts of Justice; and therefore qui ad pauca respicit facile respondet: But he that will answer this question, must respicere multa et ardua.

Upon debate of this question, elaborate, learned and strong Arguments have been made on either side.

I have laid this question to my heart, and all the Arguments made I have diligently attended, and read over the Record considered of the Authorities and reasons of Law; and upon all my pains, and deliberation, and judgment, I have concluded with my self, and am satisfied in my Conscience, and so I hope I shall satisfy others, that as this case is, I say in this special Case the charge imposed is good in Law, and that Judgment ought to be given against Mr. Hampden, and for the King.

And for my better method herein, I shall divide my Argument into four Heads.

1. First, I shall state the Case, and settle that which is the proper question: The true stating of a Case conduceth much to the right answer of it.

2. In the second place, I will consider the Fundamental Rules of the Common Law applicable to the stating of this question.

3. I will consider the Acts of Parliament, and Answers to Petitions in Parliament, and Magna Charta, which concerneth his Majesties proceedings in this Case.

4. I will answer the material Objections made on the other side.

Touching my first Head for settling the question in this case, I hope none will imagine that it is drawn by consequence to to be the question in this case, whether the King can at all times, or upon all occasions, impose upon his Subjects without consent in Parliament: He may not, the Subjects are Free-men, not Slaves, to be taxed as Villains, though the King of England hath a Monarchical power Jure summa Majestatis, yet in Judgment is to be secundum Legem et consuetudinem Angl.

The Subjects here have Feodum simplex in their Lands, and in their Goods a property, a meum et tuum, a Birth-right in the Laws of the Kingdom; no new Laws can be put upon them, no old Laws to be abrogated without consent in Parliament: It is his Majesties Maxim declared in print, that the peoples liberty doth strengthen the Kings Prerogative.

Again, though Mr. Hampdens counsel have spent most of their powder in Records, to prove that

Anno
1637. that the Kings Ministers have paid, that the Barons have been commanded to pay, and to make allowances, in case of foreign and voluntary Wars, and in case of particular or ordinary defence of the Realm, as in scouring of the Seas, or in making payment in case of Loans or moneys borrowed, or disbursed in the building of his Castles, in cases where particular mens Ships were lost in the War, for keeping of Hostages in War, or in extraordinary defence, where the King had sufficient aid for that purpose granted in Parliament: in these cases I confess the King ought to make payment upon particular and just account: But these Cases come not home to our Case, for these Cases have just reasons for them, and these Records being taken away, the multitude of the Vouchers on Mr. Hampdens side will be greatly abated.

As for the ancient charge of Danegelt, though it come nearer than any of the forementioned Cases, yet it much differs from the Cases on our parts. It hath been said that this Danegelt was not imposed but by common consent in Parliament, and afterwards was released by Edward the Confessor, and now so long since uncollected, that it is not known what it was.

1. First, I say, it was not granted by Parliament, but it was imposed by the King by a Council with his Baronage, and that doth plainly appear in the Black Book in the Exchequer, and by Gervasius Tilburienfis. Again, for the Release that is by King Edward the Confessor, there are two sorts of Danegelt, the one was ad pacendas Danes, the other ad Coercendos Danes; the first was to give them money to be gone, and not to trouble the Country; yet that ad pacendos Danes was taken by Cnutus a Danish King, and so continued till Edward the Confessors time, for there was then no cause of gathering that Tribute; so that S. Edward the Confessor had just cause to dream he saw the Devil dance upon a heap of Danegold, so raised when no necessity for it; and so he released the same.

The other kind of Danegelt ad Coercendos Danes, exacted Tempestate Belli, as saith Sir Henry Spelman in his Glossarium Cap. 11. & Cap. 28. This Imposition was not released by Edward the Confessor; the words of the Black Book are, that this continued until E. 1. time, noluit hoc solvi, but should be left propter inopinatas causas, tempore belli, &c. The Clergy-men were free from this Danegelt, and the reason of that was quia pro orationibus, &c.

The difference between our Case and that of Danegelt appeareth to be this: (1.) That Danegelt was Annual, ours is due only in case of necessity. (2.) That Danegelt was a Tribute money, ours is provision Shipping and Armour in kind. (3.) That of Danegelt was chiefly against Pyrats, ours against Enemies by Sea and Land. (4.) Ours is general on all without exception, so was not Danegelt, the Clergy was exempted; I will add this to Danegelt, that King Ethelred who was taken to be the first Imposer of it, was a weak and improvident King, he looked to provide against the Danes when they had got the Mastery of the Sea, and not before; and for that cause he was called Ethelred the unready: But on the other side, we the Subjects of England have cause to yield unto his Majesty the Name of Charles the Ready, or Charles the Provident.

4. I say with some clearness, under favour, that the Charge now demanded is not within the signification of the words Aid, Prizes, Taxes, or Talliages, which is most certain cannot be exacted by the King but in Parliament.

Aids, they were helps from the Subjects for making of Castles, building of Bridges, helps for voluntary Wars, or the like; two kinds of Aids, one such as is before-mentioned, (2.) Such as were Aids and Services, as Aid pur File marier, pur faier Fixe Chivalier.

Mises, they were sums of money for the Kings first coming to the Crown, as at this day is yielded in Wales to the Prince of Wales.

Prizes, are taking away part of the Subjects goods for the Kings use without paying for them: Hence Prisage of Wine which is a due unto the King, that is the Kings Butler shall have to the Kings use one Vessel before, and another behind the Mast.

Taxes and Talliages, by them were meant Tenth, Fifteenth, and other Subsidies granted by Parliament; and this appeareth by Brooke T.

Tenth that is on the Clergy, and is to be levied on their Land; and the Fifteenth on the Lay people of goods properly; Tenth part of the goods in a Borough, and Fifteenth part in the Country; and this was levied anciently upon their goods, but now upon their Lands secundum Ratam Terrarum; so that now all know their certainty: In some places, part levied upon goods, part upon Lands, Parl. 11. H. 4. N. 25. Parl. 25. E. 3. N. 12. where you shall find express differences between Aids, Taxes, and Talliages.

What Subsidies are, we know our Case is within none of these.

5. I confess it must be acknowledged that our present Case doth not go so far, as that an assured ruine and subversion doth fall, and that instantly, unless the Charge commanded be supplied this way; that is not our Case, I will now tell you what the state of our Case is.

The State must be made out of the Writs and Records themselves, out of the Writ 4 Augusti 11 Car. and out of the Mittimus 5 Maii 13 Car. in which a further danger is expressed than in the Writ 4. Though the Causes be several, yet they are not to be severed, they must be all of them laid together in the balance; Quod Predones, quidam Pirati & Maris Grassatores Congregati fuerunt, Naves & bona Subditorum deripientes & spoliantes hominesque in Captivitatem mancipantes preparantes ulterius molestandum et ad Regnum gravandum nisi citius Remedium apponatur; Consideratis etiam periculis que undique his Guerrimis temporibus imminet: Ita quod nobis et subditis nostris defensionem Maris et Regni omni festinatione qua poterimus accelerare convenit; out of these Circumstances it appeareth there is apparent peril not without cause Tempora Guerrina. Again we must observe, that in this Case the Command is ad proficiscendum cum Navibus Regis; here is not a quid tibi fieri non vis; here is rather a contributio than Tributio; the King doth not assume part of them to himself, he Commands them to be used for the common defence: And note, the distinction in the words of the Writ, ad proficiscendum cum Navibus nostris; so there they have a distinction from his Ships, their property still continueth in them, and the service being performed, the Subject shall have them again, 1. M. 28. and 29 E. 1. on the Kings Remembrancer side, and Pas. 13 E. 2. ex parte Rem. Regis inter Brevia; there the Subjects are commanded to be at the expences ad Guerram necessariam; this is consonant to Law, and warranted by many Precedents, as the whole Kingdom is concerned, so the Kingdom

Anno 1637. dom in general is charged; as the reasons are general, so the Charge is general, and the King himself is to joyn in provision for the common defence: The final end of all this preparation is pro defensione Regni, Tutitione Maris securitate subditorum nostrorum salva conductione Navium et Merchandizarum: And lastly, that salus Regni periclitabatur.

Obj. Mr. Holborn objects that salus Regni periclitabatur is not to be taken in part of the Case, because it is not in the Writ 4 Augusti, but put in after in the Mittimus; and then Mr. Hampden could not know that in 11 Car. salus Regni periclitabatur, and therefore refuseth to pay the Assesment upon this Writ: Then it is further objected, that the Clause of salus Regni periclitabatur is put since into other VVrits.

Sol. To this I answer: (1.) It is true, it is not in expresse terms in the VVrit 4 Augusti 11 Car. but it is in words equivalent. (2.) If not equivalent, yet this Clause doth enforce the words in the first Writ. (3.) This Clause is by way of explanation and signification, what the reasons were to move the King to send forth the first VVrit; and the Barons were to take notice of that, with other reasons, Dowmans Case; where a Fine is levied, a subsequent Declaration may serve to declare to what use a Precedent Fine shall be.

To sum up what I have said, the state of our Case is Dominium Maris periclitabatur, salus Regni periclitabatur. This defence is pro defensione Regni, tutitione Maris, securitate subditorum, &c. Now whether to set the Commonwealth free and in safety from this peril of ruining and destruction, the King may not of his Regal Authority, without consent in Parliament, impose a charge upon his Subjects to joyn with his Majesty for such time as he shall think fit in the expences for the provision of a Navy, ad Guerram, for the defence aforesaid: This is the question of our Case; I would be loath to upbraid with odious terms, though truly the expression hath not a comparison, the Tenent is so dangerous, as to hold that the Weal Publick must be exposed to utter subversion, rather than to impose a Charge on the Subjects without Parliament for defence thereof, but we must stay and expect till a Parliament be called, in which interim it's possible and probable the Kingdom may be subdued, and brought to final ruine and desolation. Indeed some Jews were of that mind that they would not defend their Country on the Sabbath day, by which means, in proceis of time, it came to be the utter ruine of their Estate.

I come to my second Head, concerning the Fundamental policy and Rules of Law, and reasons of Law for the Government of this Realm, such as are pertinent to the Case.

It is plain, even before the Romans time, the Frame of this Kingdom was a Monarchial Estate, and after the Heptarchy ended, it hath still continued Monarchial, and our gracious Sovereign is a Monarch, and the Rights of a Monarch appertain to him; and yet still with this, so they be secundum Legem & consuetudinem Angliae: And the King is by Oath (as Edward the Confessor was) obliged to confirm the Liberties of the Subject, as it appears by Magna Charta.

Where Mr. Holborn did suppose a Fundamental policy in the Creation of the frame of our Commonwealth, that the King inclining to Error might be restrained, &c.

He was utterly mistaken herein; I agree, that the Parliament is a most ancient Court, where the King and Peers be in person; there indeed the King and Commons may in a fitting manner parler leur minds, and make known their grievances for redress thereof: But for the former policy I deny, the Law doth not know such a King-yoaking policy: The Law is a trusty servant of the Kings; the Law is the Kings Instrument or means whereby he governeth, I never heard nor read that Lex est Rex, but most true that Rex est Lex, because Rex est via Legis, et sentietur habere omnia Jura in scrinio pectoris sui.

There are two Maxims of the Law of England which disproveth Mr. Holborn's supposed Policy.

First, That the King is trusted with the state of the Commonwealth.

Second, That the King can do no wrong; and upon these two Maxims are grounded Jura summa Majestatis, as to summon and dissolve Parliaments, concluding War and Peace, setting the stamp upon Money; and amongst the rest, I must add this of the Regal power, to command provision, in case of necessity, for defence of the Commonwealth, for the preservation of the very Salus Reipublicae, otherwise I cannot understand how the King can be said to have the free and Majestical power of a Monarch.

True, the King is bound to defend his people against forreign Enemies, so saith Fitz. Herbert in his N. B. Defender Son Royalmé against Sea and Land Enemies, Juramentum Regis est Ecclesiam Dei, populi pacem ex integro servare.

Thirdly, Bracton and Glarvil say, that to a King hac duo Arma et Leges sunt necessaria, that a King must have Arms as well to defend his Subjects, as Laws to govern them; if he must have these things, he must be enabled with means to perform these things, and must not be dependant on his Subjects for the same, Quando quis aliquid concedit, concedere videtur et medium sine quo res esse non potest: So that when the Law assigns the defence of the Kingdom to the King, it gives him power also to raise the means sine quo non, without which he cannot do it; and by the Fundamental policy of our Law the King ex mero Jure ought to have it, and the people of meer duty are bound to yield unto the King a supply for defence of the Kingdom; but when the Parliament it self granteth a supply, it is not meerly a Benevolence to the King, but they do an Act of Justice and duty to the King, and yet is a Token of the Commons hearty affection too, Parliament Roll 9 H. 4. N. 7. that proveth the Right of the Commons to grant supplies to the King; and that it is no Benevolence, but a Duty, 19 H. 6. 64. Hovenden 77. le Roy Inherit en Parliament, &c. Que Roy defendra son peuple, que le peuple graunt a leux de leur biens en Ayde de cel defence, que prone Inheritance: Besides, I prove my Opinion unanswerable by the Writs of Summons to Parliament, commanding the Subjects to chuse Knights and Burgeses; the words are, Ita quod, &c. plenam potestatem habetis ad faciendum, &c. Milites, &c. super Negotia ante dict. &c. I deny not but according to the Record 9 H. 4. they may offer their Grievances, but there is a principal Duty belonging unto the Commons to matters agreed on for the Defence of the Kingdom.

Then let the Case be this, the King wanteth present provision for necessary defence of the Kingdom; this provision must be speedily made, or it would be dangerous to stay for a Parliament:

Anno

ment: In this case this is a duty from the Subject; for there is a necessity things must be done, but the Parliament cannot be pursued, Ask what is to be done in this case? is the duty lost for want of this form of Parliament? I do not understand it is: If it were a meer Benevolence, then such Benevolence could not be asked without assent in Parliament.

4. I say, that by our fundamental Law, the Parliament is the most Honourable and Highest Court that is, Commune concilium Regis & Regni, the greatest, most honorable and supreme Court in the Kingdom; yet give me leave to say, that it is but a Concilium of the Kings, the King may call it, prorogue it, and dissolve it at his good pleasure: we must consider it is a great body, it moveth slowly; suddain dispatches cannot be expected; though the Parliament cannot err, the Parliament-men may; some men make scruples where there is no cause; some have sinister ends and breed delay and disturbances.

In H. 4. time the people called one Parliament, Parliamentum indoctorum; and another called (saith my Lord Cooke) the white-Crow Parliament: And in E. 3. time, called the good Parliament, though a Parliament be a good way, yet mora trahit periculum; the rule of festina lente is most dangerous.

5. Dominium Maris is most considerable by every Englishman, It's apparent in the continuance or not continuance of the Dominion of the Sea to the Crown, not only the Bonum esse but the esse of the Common-wealth consists: Slowness therein is a want of such sensibleness as every Subject out of right and great reason ought to have.

Seco. 10 E. 3. m. 3. A writ issued forth to all the Kingdom, Peers and commons, reciting quod considerantes Dominium Maris periclitabatur, &c. si talis honor Lederetur, &c. Igitur omnes homines tenentur pro defensione Regni, contra hostes exponere se et sua; this writ issued to all Earls, Barons and Knights in the Kingdom upon David de Bruse his great Navy at Sea; Reciting, tantis periculis, &c. and those that were remits to assist therein, the King would repute as his Enemies; and that they should treat with the Bishops and other great men for the defence of the Kingdom, and the King will requite them.

6. Of the necessity and danger of the Commonwealth, not to speak of necessity in the general, but of the necessity in point of Government: 2 H.

7. A penal Law is made, and a clause which maketh it; the King shall not dispence with the Law, that clause is void, and a Non obstante, may be of that Non obstante, no reason for this is given, but only because it taketh away the necessary power of the King out of his Hands.

Salus Reipublica est supremum Lex; 36 H. 8. 8 E. 4. In cases of necessity and danger, and for the Publick defence a Bulwark may be erected upon any mans ground without his consent; A woman shall not have a Dower of a Castel of defence, though Dower be favoured in the Law; and the reason is, to divide such a strength of the Kingdom would be dangerous. An Alien Merchant may likewise take a house so long as he tradeth, yet when he ceaseth Trading the King shall have the interest of this house, because it is possible Salus Reipublica may happen to be in danger, if the Alien continue.

If not to be done when Salus Reipublica is in danger, yet if it be pro bono publico, it may be done: 44 E. 3. fo. 19. 5. Rep 63. The Chamberlain of London's case; where it is resolved, that the Inhabitants of a Town, without a Custom, may make By-Laws pro bono publico, and bind those that are absent. Car. 13.

If a house be on fire, to save other houses, it may be pulled down; and also in the case of the Boat to Gravesend, Lawful for the Master to Cast forth the Goods into the Thames, to save the mens lives in the Boat; and he is not by Law answerable for the loss; 10. Rep. one bound by prescription to make Walls and a Damm against Waters, this man so bound unto it, is not able to do it; In this case there is an equity grounded upon Salus populi, and a Writ de Reparatione faciend. may be brought against all those within the Level to contribute for the present repair: If two joint-Tenants be of a house, the one shall have a writ de Reparatione faciend. against the other; where the word Tenetur is observable; now every man hath an interest in the Common-wealth; the King above all others, and therefore may command his Subjects to contribute with him for the saving of the Common-wealth.

13 E. 4. 14. Which concerneth the validity of measuring of cloath, It is said by the Gascoigne, the King may charge the people of his Realm without assent of his Commons, to a thing which may be for the common good: Besides observe that there is no Precedent of any civil Action, brought for any thing done in former time to Judgment, but only that one of the Abbot of Robert-Bridg, Case 26 E. 3. And in that one case, it is acknowledged, that mens Lands and Tenements were agisted; that is, assessed for money to contribute ad Custodiend. Maris; by the Kings command only, without a tax by consent in Parliament, was good in Law; and I observe, when the very case happened, and was in agitation, and gave fair cause of Demurrer, if the Law had been otherwise, for it was at that time, when the Statute de Tallagio, was in making.

Lastly I do observe that upon complaint in Parliament, and upon occasion in former times, no one record can be cited, that when charges have been imposed without Common consent in Parliament, for defence of the Kingdom in an instant time of necessity, that it hath been against the liberty of the Subject: As for that of 2 R. 2. where it was in deliberation before the charge imposed, there it was deemed unjust. Many things are denied to be Lawful before they be done; which once done may be good Law.

4 H. 4. m. 26. 6 H. 4. 9. For the safeguard of the Sea, and Defence of the Realm, they granted a Subsidy; with a Protestation not to charge the Subject any more: Out of this record observe there is not a word that the Subject should not be charged without consent in Parliament; on the other side, there are infinite Precedents aptly Cited by Mr. Solicitor, to prove, that the Subjects have been commanded to provide Gallies, proprijs sumptibus, to Array Souldiers in case of necessary defence, and those Subjects as well in Inland Counties, as in Maritime; among which Writs, 48 H. 3. Rot. Cl. m. 2. 10 E. 3. a Writ to the Town of Bedford, propter fortuitas causas cum necesse sit, quod securitate Regni, &c. Fra. 21 E. 3. pars 2. m. 9. 11. Subsidies for woolls had been granted for a time, they did ordain quod Subsidium levetur usq; such time.

Cl. 1 R. 2. m. 18. A Writ was directed to Cambridge, Huntingdon, &c. to provide several Barges: By this Writ the King did declare that those which had 20 Nobles and upwards in goods should

Anno 1637. ~~~~~
 Contribute and none others; and by distress to compel them unto the same. I Conclude my second general head, with this Tenent by my Judgment approved, that when the good and safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the Kingdom in danger, the King may by Writ under the Great Seal of England, Command all his Subjects at their charge to provide for the defence of the Kingdom, and may by Law compel the doing thereof.

My third general head is to answer the Acts of Parliament, and Petitions in Parliament, touching the case now in Question.

First, for St. Edwards Laws which are fundamental, and are only that the people should have their liberty, Dangelt is mentioned in those Laws: not a word pertinent to this case.

Secondly, I find Magna Charta made by H. 1. to be freed ab omnibus Geldis; which signifieth a sum of money, a German word, yet in this time Dangelt was paid 12d. de Hida. Wita signifieth an Amerciament.

It is said, that Magna Charta was made at Running Mead, said to be a Statute, Nullum Scutagium aut Auxilium capiatur; The words pinched upon, are Nullum auxilium, I will answer this further, together with other Statutes which are Statuta Revera.

As for that of Running Mead it is no Statute, nor ever was taken for any Statute, saving wherein it doth concur with Magna Charta. Where are the 25 Barons appointed by the Statute in King John's Time? That Statute of Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. hath it not in: And it is that Magna Charta of 9 H. 3. and not that of King John, that hath so many Confirmations; so there is something in it, that Magna Charta in King John's time was not confirmed, pressed from unfortunate King John: But I observe, that after that Nullum Auxilium, there followeth a Nisi ad Corpus Regis redimendum: Then I Argue if an Auxilium may be ad Corpus Regis redimendum, then certainly a fortiori, for the safety of the Commonwealth: But Magna Charta 9 H. 3. hath no special words in it, only general words, quod liberi sint & habeant libertates suas: where (Suas) denotes two things. (1) A Right of the Subjects liberty: (2) His liberty; that is such liberties as it is fit for Subjects to have; the words are not omnes libertates but libertates suas.

14 H. 7. fol. 11. The King releaseth to the Prior of St. Bartholomews, to be as free in his Land, as the King in his Crown; yet he is taken still as a Subject, and shall pay a Fine.

This Statute 9 H. 3. cap. 20. proveth the Kings Right to dispose of the Body of his Subjects for the Defence of the Kingdom.

Statute of Confirmatio Chartarum, Que nullas prizes, savants les Ancient Aydes, &c. This Statute is not stood upon.

For the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo, though the King's Solicitor did excellently beat it down to have been no Statute; yet I agree it is a Statute: Nullum Tallagium ponatur sine assensu Parliamenti. These Words indeed are general; but for a true Exposition of these Words, the occasion of the hard pressing of the times are to be considered. E. 1. had great Wars with France, Wales, and Scotland, and Flanders, both at the Confirmatio Chartarum, and De Tallagio non concedendo. In the 22th. Year of this Kings Reign, the King commanded Scrutinie to be made throughout the Kingdom, to supply his Wars; that where they found Money, they took it as a Loan, without the Consent of the Subject, and in Religious Houses also; so that was somewhat against the Law: Bohun and Bigot, Constable and Marshal of England, did stand for the Passing of the Statute De Tallagio non concedendo, without the saving of the Ancient Aids in Magna Charta, as pur file marier, &c. (they continue notwithstanding) also the King's Power to array and send Souldiers, did still continue, as doth appear by the continual practice in that King and his Successors. I doubt not but most have read the notable Remonstrance publicly set forth by King E. 1. in the 25th. Year of his Reign, concerning his proceedings in this Business: There he tells us, He did not take these Monies to build Monasteries with, but for the Honour of the Kingdom, and the Safety thereof.

The next Statute 14 E. 3. the second Parliament of that Year: In which Statute the King willeth and granteth, that the same Grant which is so chargeable, shall not be had in Example, &c. And that the Profits of Wards and Marriages, &c. shall be spent upon the Maintenance of the Realm, and for Wars, &c. Note the general Clause alledged in this Statute, is in the middle part of this Statute, and is not a Clause per se; therefore, certainly I say, this middle part is but temporary: That Statute is not meant to be a perpetual Discharge of all manner of Aids; for notwithstanding that Clause, King E. 3. Afterwards and during his Reign, did as freely charge the Subject for the Defence of the Realm, as before. It is worthy of Observation, that this Statute 14 E. 3. is not mentioned in the Petition of Right, as the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo is: And yet if this had been a perpetual Statute, as great Reason to have mentioned this, as any other.

Next Statute is, The Petition of Right, 3 Car. (This reciteth the Statute of Tallagio, 25 E. 3.) against Loans: Then cometh the Petition it self, That no man hereafter be compelled to yield to grant Loans, Benevolences, or such like Charge, without consent in Parliament: And the King's Answer is, Soit droit fait. In this, his Majesty himself, in his Second Speech, saith to both Houses, and most justly, That it must needs be granted, he had confirmed no New, but only granted the Ancient Liberties: No express Clause in any of these Statutes, that no Charge shall be imposed for any necessary Defence of the Kingdom. Certainly, if such a Clause had been used, I doubt of the validity of it: I believe neither E. 1. nor King Charles would have yielded to such a dishonourable Act: I say, that according to all Rules of Law for exposition of Statutes, the general Words must have a reasonable intendment to the Maker thereof; nam Littera occidit; For to make a Law for the Good of the Commonwealth, and to keep the Letter thereof, will prove the Bane and Ruine of it. The Statute of W. 2. saith, That Tenant in Tail, shall not, neque per Factum, neque per Feoffamentum, do any Act to the prejudice of his Issue; yet if the Disseisor grants a Rent to the Disseisee, for a Release, whereby he may defend the Land, the Issue shall hold the Land Charged.

The Statute of Gloucester, That Tenant for Life and Years, shall make no Waste; yet a Waste whereby the Land is made the better, that is no Waste within the Statute. Dyer, fol. 361.

Anno 1637. 4 E. 4. fol. 3. 14 E. 3. An Information for every Sack of Wool carried out of the Kingdom by Merchants, they were to give Sureties to bring in Bullion, viz. two Marks for every Sack; then Silver Plate was not so common as it is now.

The Defendant pleads two Statutes to discharge him of the finding of Sureties. The first is, 36 E. 3. cap. 11. Where the King, in consideration of a Subsidy of 3 s. upon every Sack of Wool granted by the Commons for three years, grants that after those three years nothing shall be taken of the Commons, except the ancient Custom of half a Mark upon every Sack of Wool. And the other was, 45 E. 3. That no Imposition or Charge should be laid upon Wools without the Subjects Consent in Parliament, other than the Subsidy granted al Roy; yet it was adjudged, that the finding of a Surety to bring in Bullion, was not taken away by the general words of either of those Statutes, because the intent of the Makers of those Statutes, was not to take it away: Besides, every Statute is to be taken for the most Advantage for the King.

Pasch. 13 Jac. Camera Stellata: Whereas by the Statute of R. 3. The Subject should not be Charged by any Charge called a Benevolence, or by such like, yet one Sir Oliver St. John, being brought ore tenus to the Bar, it was Resolved by the whole Court of Star-Chamber, and Judges there, That a Commission to Treat what men would give voluntarily, was not within the Statute; and he was grievously Sentenced. I conclude this with Mr. Solicitor's Saying of W. 1. Quod omnes liberi sint ab omni injusta exactione, &c. You see here are several Wards referring to an Act of Parliament; yet cap. 59. he hath these Words, Quod sint fratres conjurati pro facultatibus ad Regnum nostrum defendendum. This latter Clause sheweth the intention of the first.

I have done with the Statutes; from which I have cleared the present Question.

Besides these Statutes, Mr. Hampden's Council urged the Statute of Winchester; That no Souldiers should go forth of their own Counties without Wages.

This Statute of 1 E. 3. doth not extend to Case of Necessity. I find a Complaint by the Commons, that there were Commissions to Array Men of Arms, and that the King hath not before this time given any Wages, 18 E. 3. cap. 7. Men of Arms chosen to go out of England at the Kings pay; this is when they go for the King's Service out of England: This Service is in England; for the Sea is part of the Kingdom. That of 25 E. 3. is only for particular men.

The Statute 4 H. 4. answers it self, That in case of Necessity, it shall be Charged. Rot. Pl. 5. H. 4. m. 24. It appeareth there, Commissions were directed to Gentlemen, for the conducting of Souldiers unto the Sea-Coasts; wherein there were some Clauses that were perillous: These Commissions being delivered to the Commons in Parliament; the Commons, upon deliberation amongst themselves, did obliterate divers Clauses, and prayed no Commissions of Arrays might go forth, then as in the Copy they had presented; the Tenor of the Copy was enrolled; one Mr. Hampden named therein for a Commissioner, besides Eleven others. And in this Commission of Array, there was a Recital of the Invasion by the Enemy, and burning of certain Places; and that if they should go on or come again, the Kingdom might be in great danger. The King assigned Commissioners to Array men at Arms, that were fit to bear Arms, and to distrain others that had Estates, to find Allowance towards the Charge of those that had Arrayed, secundum statum & facultates suas, and to make Beacons, &c. And this Commission was for Buckingham, and Hampden a Commissioner. Car. 13.

I come to my Fourth General Head; to Answer their most material Objections.

Obj. It hath been Objected by Mr. St. John, 2 R. 2. 10, & 11. That there is Potestas in Curia, & Potestas in Camera, and that Fines must be Assessed by the Judges in Curia, and not per Regem in Camera.

It is true, in Matters that are in a Legal way it is so; but in 8 E. 4. there is Potestas ordinaria, & Potestas absoluta, in extraordinary Cases, as in this, such absolute Power still followeth the person, and presence of Kings, Hil. 2. E. 3. Pl. 6. Book at large, one had Money in his hands to pay Souldiers, and he committed Outrages; and a Writ directed to Attache him, and brought in to the King's Bench; and Scroope Chief Justice said, it was founded upon a Suggestion, and was against Common Law. No doubt, if a man hath Money of the King's in his hands, and Rout the Countrey, no doubt but a Writ may be sent forth, though ordinarily an Indictment goeth before an Attachment; Rex est Capitalis Justic' Angl. The King draweth a power of Majesty along with him, insomuch that in his presence a Lord cannot meddle with his own Villain.

Obj. But you will say, The King hath often paid the Charge of Provision for Wars, and made repayment to the Subjects for their Disbursements.

Sol. If you will go to viewing, I will shew you ten to one, where the Subject hath been Charged without Repayment, when the King had it of Right: But those that were upon borrowing, the Repayment was due and just: But if there be other Sums that were repaid by the King, and he not bound of Right to pay; shall we punish him for his Goodness? The Case of Mines may be fitly applied to this purpose; where all Mines of Gold and Silver are the King's, the Subject hath nothing to do therewith. The Earl of Northumberland's Council shewed, that it was usual for the Subject to have part of the Oar upon getting of the Mine: I Answer, That it was of the King's Goodness, because he gave the People some of the Oar; shall this bind the King? If the Subject hath had it ex gratia Regis, this doth not abridge the King's Right.

23 E. 1. ex parte Rem. Regis, 77. There was a Case; Writs did issue to divers for the making of Gallies; and this was done per Regem & Consilium, not per commune Concilium; this was pro defensione Regni: And although the King saith he will be at the Charge of the making of them, yet it commands them to take Timber wheresoever they find it; though Magna Charta be, Non capere Boscum alicujus sine Voluntate.

Obj. Mr. Holborn objects Disusage for many years, of this kind of Charge for defence.

Sol. Disusage doth not take away the King's Right; as appears by 11 H. 4. And these of Gallies in specie, agree with making of Ships; Gallies were necessary in those times, in these times Ships.

Mr. St. John set down the Means the King had, and Billeted the way how to employ the same for for the Defence of the Kingdom; as in Tenures and Escuage, His Customes, Tunnage and Poundage: I say no more, I would to God all that would serve.

And for that of Escuage, 7 E. 3. it is forinsecum servitium, to be done in a Foreign Realm. The forty days they account to begin, when the King did set foot on Scotland or Wales, or any Country of the Enemies. There are two kinds of Escuage, as appears by the Black Book in the Exchequer, and by Gervasius Tilburienfis, lib. 1. 26. And the one of those kinds of Escuage is laid upon every Freehold within the Kingdom, and a Mark levied upon the Land: That is not your Escuage by Tenures, which Mr. St. John speaks of, but another kind of Escuage.

Again, Lords, Barons, and Earls, they had some held of them by Escuage; if the immediate Lords did not go, they went not neither: Now here is the proper Escuage you would have for the Defence of the Kingdom.

Obj. Oh, but you say this Charge is over the whole Realm, proper only to the Ports to be liable unto it.

Sol. To this Objection I answer, Quod omnes tangit per omnes debet supportari, & qui sentit commodum sentire debet & onus: The In-land men have profit by it, reason they therefore should contribute. And I say, there is most reason to excuse the Cinque Ports, prout 3. Rep. Sir William Herbert's Case, and 11 H. 7.

Again, for the division of Shires, it was in Alfred's time; the Realm is to be considered but as one Body; there are times when all the Shires of the Kingdom are to be considered as one entire Body. It is said in the Scripture, If one Member suffer, doth not all the rest suffer with it? If reason to excuse any part of the Realm, most reason to excuse the Cinque Ports.

But for direct Precedents in the Case, I refer my self to those cited by my Brother Weston, that went to In-land Counties. Besides, upon the Commission of Sewers, it doth appear all that were in the Level or Reach are to be assessed towards the Reparation, so is the Book Pasch. 25 E. 2. Banco Regis Rot. 70. It appeareth Rippon was set about with the Scots, and they gave Hostages to the Scots, till they procured Money to redeem them: It appeareth by the Record, that all they that had Safeguard by those Hostages were compelled to bear their ratable shares for the Redemption of those Hostages.

Cl. 23 E. 1. m. 4. A Writ issued out to the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, sicut lex justissima, quod omnes tangit ab omnibus defendend', This was not by Parliament, for there was no Parliament between 21 & 24 E. 1. That Writ sheweth how the Enemies did intend Anglicanam Linguam delere, and command the Arch-Bishop and the Clergy; to come within a short day, tractandum nobiscum, &c. Though the Parliament be a necessary way to provide for Defence, but while we are arguing perhaps too late to provide.

Obj. Oh, but then, say they, here is an ill consequence befallen the People, to have a Charge laid without Parliament.

Sol. I am sure the danger of the loss of the Kingdom is the greater; chuse the lesser evil, if you have two evils.

Obj. Here is an Annual Charge, the Subjects have paid it since 11. and doubt they shall pay it still.

Sol. Were it Annual, it were against Law; but it is not of it self per se an Annual Charge, but so long as the necessity continueth, the Charge must serve, cessante causa cessat effectus; and truly the continuance of this must be left to His Gracious Majesties Justice.

Obj. Oh, but it was agreed in Hamond ad portu, that's necessity to admit of this Charge.

Sol. Here is the same reason at this time, Flagrante Bello, and therefore the same Law, to avoid further mischief. Security is the most dangerous thing both for Body and Soul.

Obj. The Statute of Tunnage and Poundage is for the Defence of the Sea: That Tunnage and Poundage must pay all the Charges the King can be at, that it is enough to make a Stock for the Kingdom: And that though this be not now granted to the King, yet it is taken de facto.

I answer: My Lord chief Baron knows, that the granting of Tunnage and Poundage doth not stay for a Parliament. In the Petition of Right the King hath expressed He cannot want it: And when the King dies to whom it is granted for Life, the Successors have taken it both before, and until it be granted unto them. And for the words, 1. Jac' penned by the Commons: 1. It recites, That all others the Kings Right, Noble and Famous Progenitors, Kings of England time out of mind, have had Tunnage and Poundage, I cannot say this is altogether true of Tunnage and Poundage, but of Customs time out of mind; So if the Kings of England have had it time out of mind, it is a Right for it time out of mind. They say it is for the Defence of the Realm: The very words of the Statute are, Towards this great loss and charges, which may be laid out by the King. And saith further, Although the same do nothing counter-vail the great Charge of your Majesty.

Obj. It hath been objected, That it appeareth by computation, a Parliament might have been holden within six months time.

Sol. I answer, Say, the King should call a Parliament, sometime spent before the Parliament be set, and then in treating and concluding, when the Parliament hath done; this Command of the Kings 4 Augusti 11 Car. to be done 1 Martii that should be but to begin at the end of the Parliament, they reckoned here without their Host.

Obj. What if it be surmised by the King, That there is a Danger, and no such thing.

Sol. I am sorry to see this; Hath not our King a Conscience as well as King E. 1, and King E. 3. had? Besides, the King is Recordum Superexcellens: Is it not sufficiently proved with a Tesie meipso: Besides, the King saith the Danger is great; he hath the best Intelligence, better than the Learned Judge, or wisest Merchant; you must believe men in their own Arts: It is the Kings Art to know of Foreign Matters and Intentions; we must believe the King in this Art, sua credendum, &c. Let us look into the Records, he hath confessed all this to be true, then ex ore suo, I may give Judgment against Mr. Hampden, & non refert quod sit notum Judicii, sed quod notum in forma Judicii.

To take notice of the Parliament Roll 26 E. 1. m. 21. The King desirous to reform the Gravamina, he sent forth Commissions to do right to every party, and to enquire what was taken by the VVarrant of the King. The words are, That the Kings Pleasure, is the Commissioners should return what was taken by warrant, & que il's si tiendrent a payes per reason; it is no more, but the King will give them a Reason, or it was satisfied in Reason.

Obj. Here have been many Records objected, That

That the Writs in former times were only Rogamus, &c.

1637.

Sol. But they are effectuose Rogamus & requirimus: Seco. 12 E. 2. m. 7. do. & 13. do. there are the words rogamus & requirimus; A Writ directed to London, reciting, that the Scots in finibus Regni had taken the Castles of the Kings, and His Subjects, and had besieged more Castles. The words of the Writ are, Nos considerantes necessitatem, &c. vos requirimus & rogamus instanter, to array 500 men, and send them to York sumptibus propriis.

Obj. You object, p. 26 E. 1. Ro. 35. ex parte Rem Regis, the Letter of one Reynold de Gray, by which it appeareth he was to array 1000 men; he answered by his Letter to the King, that he durst not do it.

Sol. He doth not say, he ought not to do it; besides, it is that he durst not do it without warrant; then with warrant he durst do it. Further he saith, he could not move in those parts without pay; the King had sent him word the Treasurer should ordain payment: For Souldiers it is common for them to cry together, they must have pay, or will not stir: No marvel if Reynold de Gray could not get them stir without pay.

Objekt. In 29 E. 1. a great sum of Money was taken from the Abbets of B. pro urgentissimis negotiis; and repayment was promised, and made accordingly.

Sol. It was then paid, ut exoneretur conscientia; the King made a Conscience in the doing of that Act, which was a Scrutinie.

Objekt. Rot. Alm' 12 E. 3. m. 22. dc. And that is a Letter to the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, wherein the King desireth the Arch-Bishop to move the People to have a good Opinion of Him, to pray for Him, and give Alms, because he had laid Taxes upon them through necessity.

Sol. But it was to the end the King might prosper in His Wars, to desire their Prayers: Let any man judge, if this be a confession of any wrong done by the King.

In 13 E. 3. Parl. Roll 10, 11. A course was to be taken for a Navy to defend the Sea; the Commons say, it belongs to the Cinque Ports: It was desired of the Commons to give a Subsidy, and they should be discharged of the Guard of the Sea; but the Guard of the Land, that belongeth unto the Commons, sans gage; they cannot deny but the Sea must be guarded. Of what strength the Ports were then, I know not, but now they are not able to defend the Sea, then of consequence it must fall upon the whole Realm.

Objekt. Your great Objection is that of 2 R. 2. Parl. Roll pars 1. Rot. 15. The Killing Record, that the People should not be charged but in Parliament: The Grandees were there assembled, Scroope, then Chancellor, made a Speech, That there was no Ordinance made for salvation of the Realm: And the said Council answered, They durst not take upon them alone to make an Ordinance of so High a business, as to lay a General Charge upon the Subject, but advises a Grand Council of the Lords and Commons of the Realm might be called for the doing thereof. Upon this all the Prelates, as well Abbots as other Barons, &c. & autres Sages, met. Oh forsooth, it is said, autres Sages, was the Judges, but by that is meant the other minores Barones of the Realm. It was said in the said Council, This mischief they could not remedy without charging the Subjects, and that cannot be done but by Parliament; and for that end a Parliament was summoned. The Lords did lend Money voluntarily unto the King in that Council, and so did the good People of London; to whom the King (by assent made in the said Great Council) engaged Himself for Repayment thereof. I pray you note, That in this Case, this was before any actual Charge imposed. King Richard the 2d. He was in His Minority: The Law is not clear concerning the Kings Infancy; whether the Infancy of a King be not a disability: The Example of Latimer was fresh in those Lords Memories, they took heed by other mens Harms.

My true Answer is, The thing was done another way; by lending the King Money, provision was made for the Defence of the Kingdom: If it had not been done that way by a voluntary lending of Money, it must have been charged without Parliament; scarce a good Subject that will let the Kingdom be destroyed rather than lend Money without Parliament:

Rot. Parl. 1. R. 2. m. 52. A Command for the making of Barges; here was cause to complain, if this had been a wrong. The Record saith, Because they were good Subjects, the King did confirm their Franchises unto them: Many things may be grievances and yet no wrong; there may be a loss without a wrong. The Commission in R. 2ds time expired with His Death. And in H. 4ths time, the Commons petition, That he would live of His own, and not charge the Subjects for the Defence of the Realm, as heretofore hath been done by His Progenitors. The King answereth, He will advise with His Lords.

Objekt. The last Authority which was objected, was Fortescue, they say, he being a great Judge, he saith, the King of England was Corpus Politicum, that he cannot do what he will, but according to the Law of the Realm, and not impose a Charge on His Subjects without consent in Parliament.

I answer, It is most true, so our Gracious King doth, unless in case of necessity; in such a case Rich Men must then expose their Treasure, Able Men must put on their Arms, others not able, must attend their Prayers, and Judges must press and enforce the Laws to make them to contribute, &c.

What I have said, I have spoken to the best of my understanding, and in discharge of my Conscience; I conclude upon all, That as this Case is the Charge of 20 s. imposed on Mr. Hampden is consonant to Law, and Judgment ought to be given against him, Quod oneretur, &c.

F I N I S.

Judge Vernon's Opinion concerning Ship-Money

THIS is a Cause of great consequence, and is one of the greatest that ever came in question in this Kingdom, and the Records have been infinite that have been cited on both sides; but by reason of want of my Health, and disability of Body, I have not been able to peruse the Records as I intended, and to have prepared my self against this day in which I am to argue; and therefore I would desire time until this day seven-night, to peruse the Records and compare my Notes, wherein (as you may see) I have taken great pains, producing them to the Court) that I may be the better prepared to deliver my Opinion 1637. nion in this weighty Matter; and then (God willing) I will not fail.

But it was answered by the Court, That in regard certain days had been peremptorily appointed at first for their Arguments, it could not be altered now, nor could they give him any further time.

Whereupon he said, Seeing I may not have any further time, I must therefore deliver my Opinion in Brief, according as I have conceived it in my Conscience to be, which is as followeth, viz.

That the King, pro bono publico, may charge his Subjects for the Safety and defence of the Kingdom, notwithstanding any Act of Parliament; and that it is warrantable by Gascoigne, 13 E. 4. 14. And moreover, That a Statute derogatory from the Prerogative, doth not bind the King. The King may dispence with any Law in cases of necessity, 2 H. 7. 11. And so he concluded for the King.

F I N I S.

A short Account of Baron Trevor his Argument.

After he had opened the Record, he said, The Question upon it, was, Whether Mr. Hampden should be charged with this 20 s. imposed upon him as this Case is.

This Case, by reason of the weightiness of it, is adjourned, from the Exchequer hither to be argued; and the Advice of all the rest of the Judges of England is required herein. Many days have been spent in the Arguing of this Case, as it well deserves; six days by the Defendant, and six days on the Kings side. It is some labour in a Case of this extent, to contract my self according to my Conscience and best Knowledge; I shall seriously ponder the weight of this Case, and digest it, as by the Law is warrantable, and so ground my Judgment accordingly: And the Judgment which I shall give in fine, is, That Mr. Hampden ought to be charged with this 20 s. and is to give satisfaction for the same. My Lord Cooke saith of a short Case in his 7th Report, That though it be as short a Case as ever was argued, yet the weightiest in any Court for consequence: So it may be affirmed of this Question; for the Sum is but 20 s. but the weight is of far greater extent, it concerneth the whole Kingdom; Mr. Hampden hath demurred, and hereby hath granted all matters of Fact to be true: The Defendants Council have taken much pains for their Clyent, and (without flattery) so hath the Kings Council.

I acknowledge the laying a Charge upon the People by Parliament is a safe way and a happy way, if time and occasion will permit. Anno 1538, when the invincible Armado (so termed) came against England, the provident care for the prevention thereof was out of Parliament. Alas! it is not Parliaments can keep us safe: Was not that detestable Gun-Powder-Treason 3 Jac. devised to have been executed in the Parliament time? The Wisdom of the Parliament did not discover this utter ruine and destruction, that had like to have happened to the King and Kingdom, and to the overthrow of Religion, but that it was the great Mercy of God that did it.

This Kingdom hath been always Monarchial;

a Democratical Government was never in this Kingdom. In the time of the Britains, 500 years before the Birth of our Saviour, when Brute came from Troy into Britain (as one writes) it had a Politick and Regal Government; this is confirmed by the Letter from the Pope to King Lucius. And our King hath as much Power and Prerogative belonging unto Him, as any Prince in Christendom hath. It is the Kings Prerogative to appoint the beginning and ending of Parliaments; so great a Body can move but slowly; a great part of the seven months would be spent, or the Parliament ended; and then we were but to begin to provide Ships, to rigg, and trim them, to provide Powder, Shot, Cable, &c. Many of these perhaps to be had in Foreign Parts; Master Gunners to be got; ready Money must be had for providing of all these; this will require convenient time before this can be done, what hazard may the Kingdom run all this while, what Policy is there to make State Affairs known to the Kingdom? They may thank themselves, they would not make a Ship for the Service, and then they might have had it for their own use afterwards. When the Kingdom is in danger, the King may command a Supply for prevention thereof; and who can tell better than He, how to prevent this Danger, necessitas non habet legem; the King then must not forbear. The Common Law doth regard the Common Good in particular, as in Pontage, Murage, Pavage. This provision of Shipping hath prevented us of danger hitherto, and I hope it will still: It hath increased the Honour of the Kingdom; it's known not only to our selves, but to other Princes, That our Navies are of far greater Burthen, and better furnished, and greater Navies, than ever was before; all which redoundeth to the Kings and Kingdoms Honour. The Ship (called The Sovereign of the Sea) may be termed, The Sovereign of all Ships.

To conclude, The Sums assessed for this Business, I wish they may be paid by all chearfully; for it is for a general Good, for the Safety of the whole Kingdom, the Subjects are not prejudiced by it, either in their Dignity or Property of their Goods. The Kings Prerogative protects the Subjects Liberty, and the Subjects Liberty the Kings Prerogative; 'tis proper for Kings to Command, and Subjects to Obey. We that are the Judges of the Kingdom have paid it, and therefore 'tis fit our Opinions concur with our Actions in this Case: And so my Advice is, That Judgment ought to be given; that Mr. Hampden ought to be charged with the 20 s. assessed upon him.

Finis Argumenti Baron Trevor.

By virtue of this Writ, Mr. Hampden is assessed to 20 s. for his Lands in Stoke Mandevill in that County, which not being paid, is certified amongst others in the Chancery upon a Writ of Certiorari, dated 9 Martii, Anno 12 Caroli, by a Schedule thereunto annexed. And by a Writ of Mutimus Teste 5 Maii 13 Car. This Writ of 4 Augusti 11 Caroli, and the Writ of Certiorari and the Schedule annexed, is sent unto the Exchequer, with a Command there to do for the levying of the Sums so assessed and unpaid, prout de jure et secundum legem Regni nostri Anglia fueris faciend⁹. Whereupon a Scire fac⁹ issued out of the Exchequer, (reciting the said Writs) to warn Mr. Hampden, amongst others, to shew cause why he should not be charged with this Money. Upon this, he being summoned, appeareth, and demands the hearing of these Writs and Schedule, which being entred, thereupon he demurreth in Law. And whether Judgment upon this whole Record be to be given against John Hampden, that he is to be charged or no, that is the question: For he is the only party in this Case: And there is no cause why any man should say, that the question is, Whether Judgment should be given for the King, or for the Defendant; for, as this Case is, the King is no party to the Record, but only it is a Judicial Process out of the Exchequer, grounded upon the former Records, for the Defendant to shew cause why he should not be charged; which hath been very elaborately argued by the Defendants Council, who demurred that he should not be charged; and by the Kings Council very learnedly and elaborately argued, that the Defendant should be charged.

This Case is a Case of great weight, and the greatest Case of weight that ever we read argued by Judges in this place, and therefore adjourned into this place for advice of all the Judges: For of the one side it is alledged, that it concerneth the King in His Prerogative and Power Royal; and on the other side, that it concerneth all the Kings Subjects in their Liberties, their Persons, and their Estates; for which it hath made some of us to wish and move among our selves, that it might have been by His Majesties Favour heard and determined in another place, by His Majesty and His Great Council of His Realm, where all conveniences and inconveniences might have been considered of, provided for, and prevented for present and future times, and not to be argued only

Anno 1637. only by us who are accounted his Majesties Council at Law; wherein, if any thing be done amiss, the fault must light upon us, as misadvising the King therein: But seeing it hath pleased his Majesty, that the same should be argued and determined in this place (whose Pleasure we must obey) I must give my best Advice upon my Oath, to the best of my skill; wherein, I hope not to trench upon his Highness Prerogative (which we are all bound by our Oaths, to the best of our skills to maintain) and not to suffer to be diminished; nor upon his Royal Power; but truly to deliver what I conceive the Law to be concerning the Case in Question.

Wherein I must confess I have been much distracted, having heard so Learned Arguments on both sides at the Bar, and so many Records and Precedents cited on either side: But they did not so much move me; for the Council have of either side pressed such Reasons & Arguments, and cited such Records as they thought convenient for the maintaining of their Opinions, and perhaps with a prejudicate Opinion, as I my self by mine own experience, when I was at the Bar, have Argued confidently, and as I then thought the Law to be of that side for whom I argued: But after, being at the Bench, weighing indifferently all Reasons and Authorities, have been of a contrary Opinion; And so the Law hath been adjudged contrary to that Opinion, which I first confidently conceived; But that which hath moved me most, and maketh me most mistrust my own Judgment in this Case, is that all my Brothers (who have all argued upon their Oaths, and I presume have seen the Records and Precedents cited on either side) have all argued one way; with whose Opinions I should willingly have concurred, if I could have satisfied my own Judgment with their Reasons; but not being satisfied, I have learned that I must not run with a multitude against my own Conscience; for I must stand or fall unto my own Master; and therefore I shall shew my own Reasons, and leave my self to the Judgments of my Lords, and others my Brethren; and whatsoever shall be adjudged, I must submit unto, and so do wish all others; and do now declare my Opinion to be, that as this Case is, Judgment ought to be given for the Defendant.

My Reasons and Grounds that I shall insist upon, are these:

1. That the Command by this Writ of 4 Aug. 11 Car. to make Ships at the Charge of the Inhabitants of the County (being the Ground of this Suit, and Cause of this Charge) is illegal, and contrary to the Common Law, not being by Authority of Parliament.

2. That if at the Common Law it had been doubtful, yet now this Writ is illegal, being expressly contrary to divers Statutes, prohibiting any general Charge to be laid upon the Commons in general, without Consent in Parliament.

3. That it is not to be maintained by any Prerogative or Power Royal, nor Allegation of Necessity or Danger.

4. That admitting it were Legal to lay such a Charge upon Maritime Parts, yet to charge any In-land County (as the County of Bucks is) with making Ships, and furnishing them with Masters, Mariners and Souldiers, at their Charge, which are far remote from the Seas, is illegal, and not warranted by any former Precedent.

5. I shall examine the Precedents and Records cited to warrant this Writ, which have been all the principal Grounds of the Arguments to maintain the same; and I conceive there is the chief Car. 13. Ground-work; being in my Notes; but I forgot it.

But before I proceed to the Argument, I desire do remove two Difficulties.

1. That by the Demurrer the Danger of the Kingdom is confessed, and so to be a Case of Necessity.

To this I Answer, that the Demurrer confesseth not Matters in Fact, but where the Matter is legally set down; but if it be not a Legal Proceeding, then the Demurrer is no confessing of the Matter in Fact.

This appeareth in the Book-Case of 5 H. 7. fol. 1. And Cooke lib. 5. fol. 69. in Burton's Case That a Demurrer is no confessing Matters of Fact, but where the Matter precedent is sufficiently pleaded or laid down, and so it is holden in all our Books.

2. The second Difficulty is, That this Case is so resolved by all our Opinious under our Hands, that this Writ was Legal, which was much pressed by Mr. Solicitor.

To this I Answer, That it is true, I have set down my Opinion under my Hand unto the first voluntarily, in Decemb. 1635. which was thus;

I am of Opinion, that where the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom is in danger (of which his Majesty is the only Judge) there the Charge and Defence ought to be born by all the Realm in general.

This I hold to be agreeable both to Law and Reason; this Opinion I do still hold, and will alwaies maintain; for where the Kingdom is in danger, the King may command every person of his Kingdom with all his Force and Means to come to defend it at all times, and in all places of his Kingdom where he pleaseth; and the King is the sole Judge of the Danger, and of War and Peace; and if any do not perform his Commands therein, he is fineable and punishable in a deep measure.

The Second Subscription was in Febr. 1636. Which is, That when the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom in danger, his Majesty may by Writ under the Great Seal of England, command all his Subjects of this Kingdom, at their Charges, to provide and furnish such Number of Ships with Men, Victuals and Munition, and for such time as his Majesty shall think fit, for the Defence and Safeguard of the Kingdom from such danger; and that his Majesty may compel the doing thereof, in case of refusal and refractoriness: and that in such case his Majesty is the Judge of this Danger, and when and how the same is to be prevented and avoided.

To this Opinion, I confess, I then with the rest of the Judges, subscribed my Hand, and I then dissented to that Opinion, and then signified my Opinion to be, that such a Charge could not be laid by any such Writ but by Parliament; and so absolutely in that Point one other did agree with me, and dissent from that opinion which was after subscribed; and some others in some other particulars from that which was subscribed; but the greater part seeming absolutely to be resolved upon that opinion, some of them affirming that they had seen divers Records & Precedents of such Writs satisfying them to be of that Judgment, I was pressed to subscribe with them: for that the greater opinion must involve the rest

as it was said to be usual in cases of conferences. And for that the lesser number must Submit to the opinion of the more, although they varied in their opinion; as it is in our Courts; if three Judges agree in opinion against one or two, where there are five Judges, Judgment is to be entred per curiam, if the major part agree, and the others are to submit unto it.

So in Cases of Conference and Certificate of their Opinions, if the greater part did agree and subscribe, the rest were to submit their Opinions: And this (by more ancient Judges than my self) was affirmed to be the continual practice; and that it was not fit, especially in a Case of this nature, so much concerning the Service of the King, for some to subscribe, and some to forbear their Subscription. And that although we did subscribe, it did not bind any, but that in point of Judgment, if the Case came in question judicially before us, we should give our Judgment as we should see cause, after the hearing the Arguments on both sides, we were not to be bound by this sudden resolution.

Hereupon I consented to subscribe, but I then said, that in the mean time, the King might be misinformed by our Certificate under our hands; conceiving us all to agree together, and give him this advice under our hands, and not know that there was any that dissented, or was doubtful; but it was then said, the King should be truly informed thereof; and there upon, we that did assent, did subscribe our hands with such protestations as aforesaid; only for Conformity; although contrary to the opinion I then conceived.

But this being before arguments heard on either side, or any precedents seen, I hold that none is bound by that opinion: and if I had been of that opinion that was subscribed, yet now having heard all the arguments on both sides, and the Reasons of the Kings Council to maintain this writ, and why the Defendant is to be charged, and the arguments of the Defendants Council against the Writ, and the reasons why the Defendant should not be charged to pay the money assessed upon him: And having duly considered of the Records and Precedents Cited and Shewed unto me, especially those of the Kings side, I am now of an absolute opinion, that this Writ is illegal, and declare my opinion to be contrary to that which is subscribed by us all. And if I had been of the same opinion as was subscribed, yet upon better advisement, being absolutely settled in my Judgment and conscience, in a contrary opinion, I think it no shame to declare, that I do retract that opinion: (for, Humanum est errare,) rather then to argue against mine own conscience: And therefore now having (as I conceive) removed those difficulties, I proceed to my argument, and shall shew the reason of my opinion, and leave the same, as I said to my Lords and Brothers: Not one Precedent nor Record in any Precedent time, that hath been produced or shewed unto me, that doth maintain any writ to lay such a charge upon any County, Inland or Maritime.

I will examine this particular Writ and the several parts thereof, and do conceive that it is illegal, and not sufficient to ground this charge upon the Defendant.

1. The motives of this Writ are not sufficient to cause such a Writ to be sent.

2. The command of the Writ, to prepare a Ship at the charge of the Inhabitants, with Munition and Men, is against the Common Law and Statutes.

3. That to lay a charge of finding victuals, and Wages of Souldiers and Mariners, is illegal, and contrary to the Common Law, and divers Statutes in point.

4. The power of assessment given to the Sheriff alone, and to deftrain for this, is illegal and not warranted by any Precedent.

5. The power of imprisoning is illegal, and contrary to divers Statutes, and not warranted by the Precedents.

6. That the Perclose of the Writ, and the practice of it, is contrary to it self, and Oppositum in objecto.

7. If this writ were legal, yet the manner of the Assessment by the Sheriff, as it is certified, is not warranted by this Writ:

quietly this same cannot be demanded of the Defendant by vertue of this Writ.

8. That the Certiorari and Scir' Fac', issued not legally; and so consequently no Judgment can be given against the Defendant thereupon.

For the first point that this Writ of 4. Aug. 11 Car. is against the Common-Law: My reasons are these.

1. Because that this is the first Writ, since the Conquest, that went out to any In-land County, to prepare a Ship with Men and Munition, for ought appeareth by any record that hath been shewed; and where there was never any Precedent by Assent, by the rule of M. Littleton fo. 23. the Law is conceived not to bear any such Writ. And Sr. Edward Cooke in his Commentary upon Littleton fo. 81. saith, that there is no example, it is a great intendment, that the Law will not bear it.

So I conceive here, there never having been a Precedent before of any such Writ to the Sheriff and Inhabitants of a County, to prepare Ship with Men and Munition, upon any occasion whatsoever, that it is against the Common Law to award such Writs.

2. For the common Law of England setteth a freedom in the Subjects, in respect of their persons, and giveth them a true property in their Goods and Estates, so that without their consent or implicitly by a common ordinance, which they consented unto by a Common assent in Parliament, it cannot be taken from them, nor their Estates charged. And for this purpose, the Law distinguisheth between Bondmen, (whose estates are at their Lords will and disposition;) and freemen, whose property none may invade, charge, or unjustly take away, but by their own free consent; and therefore not warranted by Law; which is proved by these authorities

Cooke in his Rep. l. 8 f. 92. in Francis Case, setteth down this Rule, Quod nostrum est, sine facto seu defectu nostro amitti, sed in alienum transferri non potest.

Mr. Lambert, fol. 24. setting down the Laws of England which were confirmed by William the Conqueror, hath these words: Inter alia, volumus & concedimus, quod omnes liberi homines Monarchie Regni sui predicti, habeant & teneant, terras suas & possessiones suas bene & in pace liberas ab omni exactione injusta, & ab omni Tallagio (not mentioned there injusta) Ita quod nihil ab eis exigatur prater servitium suum juste debitum: Hereby it appears, there is an absolute freedom from all Tallage: 17 King John in Mat. Paris, fo. 246. the King doth grant and confirm unto his Barons and Commons inter alia, these Liberties following: Nullum Scutagium vel auxilium pancinus in Regno

Regno nostro, nisi per Commune Concilium Regni nostri, nisi ad redimendum corpus nostrum, filium nostrum primogenitum milit. faciend^o, vel ad primogenitam filiam maritand^o. By this it appears, what was then conceived to be amongst others, their Libertie, and then confirmed, which was, that no aid should be laid upon them but by Parliament; for the Parliament was then called Commune Concilium.

That the Law is so, appeareth by the Treatise written by Fortescue, who had been Cheif Justice of England, then Chancellor of England in H. 6. time, when he wrought the Book entituled. De laudibus Legum Angliae. For fol. 25. 9. Cap. he saith thus, That the King of England cannot alter nor change the Laws of England at his pleasure.

For, Principatu Regali, sed et politico ipse populo suo dominatur: If his power were Royal only, then he might change the Laws, Tallagia quoque & cetera onera eis imponere, ipsis in consultis; but adds, that the King of England, sine Subditorum assensu Leges mutare non potest, nec Subjectum populum renitentem onerare impositionibus peregrinis, And in this 13 Chapter fo. 31. he compares the King and Subjects of England, to the Head and Body natural, Ut non potest caput corporis Physici nervos suos commutare, necq; membris suis proprias vires, & propria sanguinis alimenta denegare sui: nec Rex, qui caput corporis politici est, mutare potest Leges corporis illius, nec ejusdem populi substantias proprias subtrahere reclamantibus eis, aut invitis: Thus he in this place: But in fol. 84. cap. 36. he seems to say, in hoc individuo Rex Anglia nec per se, nec per ministros tallagia, subsidia, aut quavis onera alia imponit Legibus suis, aut leges eorum mutat, aut nova condit, sine concessione vel assensu totius Regni sui in Parlamento suo expresso: Which words seem so general, that in no case he may do it.

So it appeareth by the Book Case, 23 H. 4. fo. 24 that the grant of the King which tendeth to the charge and prejudice of his people in general, is not good, unless it be by Parliament. But it is agreed there, that grants of Tolls, of Fairs, of Pontage, Pikage, Murage, Ferrying, or such like, which are for the profit, good, and ease of the people, and profit of them that will take benefit thereof, and not compulsory to any to pay, but to them that will take the benefit of such fees, and being very small and reasonable sums, the Law doth give allowance to them, but if they were great sums, that tend to the charge of the people, the Law will Judg them void.

This appeareth in Sr. Edward Cook his Reports, lib. 5. fo. 63. in the case of the Chamberlain of London, that an ordinance made by the Common Council of London, where they gave a Custom by their Common Council, to make reasonable ordinances, to bind all within the City concerning Cloaths to be brought to Blackwel-Hall, there always to be viewed, measured, and searched before they were sold, and a penny upon a broad cloath appointed for the Officer that did that service, that such a charge was reasonable, for that it was for publick benefit of the City and Common Wealth: And a pecuniary penalty laid for not performance of that Ordinance, was allowed.

Ibid fol. 64. in Clark's Case, is resolved, that an ordinance made by the assent of the Plaintiff himself, and other Burgesses for the Town of St. Albans, for a small tax upon the Inhabitants of the Town towards the Erection of the Courts, and other necessities for the Term to be kept there; was allowed to be good, and did bind the Plaintiff, being by the Plaintiffs own consent, and for the publick good of the Town.

Also Cooke, l. 11. fol. 86 in Darcies Case, citeth this out of Fitz. Natur. Bre. fo. 122. That every grant of the King hath this Condition in it, Tacit, or expresse, Quod Patria per donationes illas magis solito non oneretur seu gravetur; and as by Grant the King cannot charge his People, so neither can he by Writ lay any Charge upon his People, but by their consent, or where they have apparent Benefit thereby; and that is the reason of the Writ in the Register 127. and Fitz. Nat. Br. fol. 113. Where by Breach of the Sea-walls any Inundation is of the Country, the King, who is Pater Patrie, and taketh care for the Good and Safety of his People, sendeth out his Commission to enquire by whose default any such Breach happened; and to cause all that had Lands or Commons, to be contributory to the making up of the Sea-walls; and this is done by a Jury; but this Charge cannot be laid upon a County or Town in general; but particular men that have Loss or Benefit, or may have Loss or Benefit thereby; and this is done upon enquiry of a Jury before the Sheriffs or Commissioners appointed.

So it is at this day upon Commission of Sewers; as appeareth by Cooke, lib. 10. fo. 42. in the Case of the Isle of Ely, That the Taxation by the Commissioners of Sewers, must be upon every particular man, that hath or may have Loss or Benefit by such Inundations and making up of the Walls, and cannot be laid upon any remote parts which are out of the Level of such Loss or Benefit; and it must be certain, and particular upon persons certain, by reason of Loss or Profit, and cannot be laid in general upon a Town: But in those Cases there is a particular Loss or Benefit, and in particular places, and but in petty Charges; and then where the Law alloweth, that which in reason is to be done, that may be done without a special Statute; for de minimis non curat Lex: But in this Case there is a general Charge throughout the Kingdom, which the Law doth not permit without common consent in Parliament.

But it hath been alledged, That this Charge hath been imposed for the provision of the Publick Safety and Defence of the Kingdom; and may not this be done when every one hath advantage by it?

To this, I say, when imminent Danger and Cause of Defence is, there must be Defence made by every man (when the King shall command) with his Person; and in such a Case, every man, as it is said in the Precedents, is bound per se & sua, to defend the Kingdom: and I think no man will be so unwise, but that he will exponere se & sua for the defence of the Kingdom, when there is danger; for otherwise he is in danger to lose se & sua: But to lay a Charge in general upon a Kingdom, either for making or preparing of Ships or Money in lieu thereof, is not to be done, but by Parliament, when the Charge is to be born in general by all the Subjects.

To prove further, That no man may have his Goods taken from him, but by his Consent, appeareth by a Record in Mich. 14 E. 2. Rot. 60. in the Kings Bench, in a Writ of Error brought upon a Judgment given at Durham; where an Action of Trespas by William Heyborne, against William Keylowe, for entering his House, and breaking his Chest, and taking away 70 l. in Money.

Anno 1637. ney, the Defendant pleading Not Guilty, the Jury found a Special Verdict, That the Scots having entred the Bishoprick of Durham with an Army, and making great Burning and Spoils, the Commonalty of Durham met together at Durham, (whereof the Plaintiff was one) and agreed to send some to compound with them for Money to depart, and were all sworn to perform what Composition should be made, and to perform what Ordinance they should make in that behalf: and thereupon they compounded with the Scots for 1600 Marks. But because that was to be paid immediately, they all consented that William Keylow the Defendant, and others, should go into every mans House, to search what ready Money was there, and to take it for the making up of that Sum, and that it should be repaid by the Commonalty of Durham; and thereupon the Defendant did enter into the Plaintiffs house, and did break open the Chest, and took the 70*l.* which was paid accordingly towards the Fine. The Jury was demanded, whether the Plaintiff was present, and did consent to the payment of the Money? They said, No: whereupon the Plaintiff had Judgment, to recover the said 70*l.* and Damages; for that otherwise he had no Remedy for his Money; and the Defendant committed in Execution for that Sum; and thereupon, the Defendant Keylow brought a Writ of Error in the Kings Bench, and assigned his Errors in point of Judgment; and there the Judgment was reversed; and the Reasons set down in the Record, were,

1. Because the Plaintiff Heyborne had his sufficient Remedy against the Commonalty of Durham for his Money.

2. Because he himself had agreed to this Ordinance, and was sworn to perform it; and that the Defendant did, nothing but that the Plaintiff had assented unto by his Oath; and therefore is accounted to do nothing but by his Consent, and as Servant unto him; therefore he was therein no Trespasser: and therefore the Judgment given in Durham was reversed, because he had assented to that Ordinance, though afterwards he was unwilling, yet having once consented, his Goods were lawfully taken: By which it appeareth, that if he had not particularly consented, such an Ordinance could not have been good to bind him, although this was in a Case of great danger, and for Defence.

2 R. 2. pars 1. The Parliament-Roll proveth this directly; although it be no Act of Parliament, yet the Record is much to be regarded; for it sheweth what the Law was then conceived to be: For Scroope the Lord Chancellor, then shewed to all the Lords and Commons Assembled in Parliament, That all the Lords and Sages had met together since the last Parliament; and having considered of the great danger the Kingdom was in, and how Money might be raised in Case of imminent danger, which could not stay the delay of a Parliament, and the Kings Coffers had not sufficient therein; The Record is, That they all agreed, that Money sufficient could not be had without laying a Charge upon the Commonalty; which (say they) cannot be done without a Parliament. And the Lords themselves, for the time, did supply the said Necessity with Money they lent. Which Record proveth directly that this Charge without an Act of Parliament is illegal.

So upon these reasons, I conclude that this Writ compulsarily to charge the Subjects against their wills, is not warranted by any Books, and therefore illegal.

If this Writ should be allowed, great Inconveniences would ensue, which the Law alwaies will avoid, and not permit any Inconveniences.

First, That if any such Charge may be laid upon the Counties by Writ, without assent of Parliament, then no man knoweth what his Charge may be; for they may be Charged as often as the King pleaseth, and with making as many Ships, and of what Burdens, and with what Charge of Munition, Victuals, and Men, as shall be set down: wherein I doubt not, but if the Law were so, the King, being a very pious and just King, would use his power very moderately; but Judges, in their Judgments, are not to look to present times only, but also to all future times, what may follow upon their Judgments.

That this inconvenience may be, it appears by the Danegelt, first appointed in time of necessity to redeem them from the cruelty of the Danes, which often changed, and still increased: for in Anno Domini 991. when it began, it was 10000*l.* Anno Domini 994. it was increased to 16000*l.* and An. Dom. 1002. it was increased to 24000*l.* and An. Dom. 1007. it was increased to 36000*l.* and An. Dom. 1012. it was increased to 48000*l.* So if this Writ be well awarded, it may bear pleasure what bounds it shall have.

Also there were never but one single Subsidy and two Fifteens used to be granted in Parliament, until 31 Eliz. and then a double Subsidy and Four Fifteens were granted, Sr. Walter Mildmay, then Chancellor of the Exchequer moving for it, and saying, his heart did quake to move it: not knowing the Inconveniences that should grow upon it, he shewed great reasons for his so moving it, being minded the Spanish invasion, and so it was granted.

Afterwards in 35. Eliz. Treble Subsidies, and Six Fifteens were granted: and in 43. Eliz. Four Subsidies and Eight Fifteens; and yet these were not accounted grievous, neither would it have been, if it had been Ten Subsidies; because in Parliament, and convenient times and means appointed for the levying of them.

Tunnage and Poundage were granted to this end, in 13 R. 2. (and have continued ever since by several grants) until this Kings time, wherein it was unhappily questioned in Parliament, but the end thereof was that the Kings might have monies in their purses against time of need for extraordinary occasions; especially for the defence of the Realm, and for guarding of the Seas, as it is especially declared by the Statute of 1 Jac. and former Statutes, and for other necessary uses as the King pleased.

Obj. But it is said that Tunnage and Poundage is not now granted to the King, and therefore the King is enforced to these extraordinary courses.

Sol. Though it be not granted, yet I think it is taken; and I doubt not but to the same intent, and for the same purposes employed, for which it was first granted; which was, for the Defence of the Kingdom, and Guard of the Seas.

Therefore, in Case of Danger and Necessity, every Subject (for Defence of the Kingdom) is bound Ligeantia debito, as some Records say, and ligeantia sua vinculo astricti, as others speak: Se & sua totis viribus & potestate exponere, &c. And in such a Case the King may command the Persons of his Subjects, and Arrest their Ships to wait on his, to defend the Sea; yet with this also (when they go out of their Counties) at the Kings Anno 1637. King's charges, but to command the Subject by VVrit to build new Ships, or to prepare Ships at their charges, or to lay a common charge on the Subjects in general for matter of defence, or avoidance of danger, is not warrantable by the Common Law.

Another inconvenience is, that it is left in the power of the Sheriff to charge any mans Estate at his pleasure, taxing some, and sparing others, as his affection leadeth him, and sometimes by colour thereof, levying more than he need, and enriching himself; which power the Law never alloweth him, although it were in less matters, as to make an Assesment for the breach of Sea walls, but to do it by a Jury, and not by himself alone.

So, for these reasons, I conclude this VVrit is against the Common Law, and so illegal.

I conceive if the Common Law were doubtful in this, whether such a Charge might be imposed by VVrit, yet now it is made clear by divers express Statutes, that the King is not to lay any charge upon his Subjects, but by their consent in Parliament; and that is by many Acts of Parliament in force, and not repealed: And there is no doubt but the King by Parliaments may bind them and their Successors every King being bound by Oath to perform the Statutes of this Realm.

The Statute of 25 E. 1. cap. 5. which is in these words:

Forasmuch as divers people of our Realm are in fear that the Aids and Taxes which they have given us before time towards our Wars, and other business, of their own grant and good will (howsoever they were made) might turn to a Bondage of them and their Heirs, because they might be at another time found in the Rolls, and likewise for the Prizes taken throughout our Realm by our Ministers, we have granted for us and our Heirs, that we shall not draw any such Aids, Taxes, or Prizes, into a Custom for any thing that hath been done heretofore by any Roll, or any other Precedent that may be found.

Ibidem, Cap. 6. Moreover, we have granted for us and our Heirs, as well to Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and other Folk of Holy Church; as also to Earls, Barons, and all the Commonalty of the Land, that for no business from henceforth we shall take Aids, Taxes, nor Prizes, but by the common assent of the Realm, and for the common profit thereof (saving the ancient Aids and Prizes due and accustomed) which are the express words of that Statute. Now what those ancient Aids were, is well known, that they were ad redimendum Corpus, ad Filium Primogenitum Militem faciendum, & ad Filium Primogenitum Maritandum. Which Aids concern not the Subjects in general, but particular men were liable thereunto by their Tenures: so this (saving) needed not to have been; for the Body of the Act extended not to them, but to general Aids of the Kingdom.
